The Year-book and Register of Members (1907) of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, its twenty-third annual issue, has recently been published at the general office, 19, Berners Street. This useful book of reference contains much information beyond the immediate scope of the Society, including a list of choral and orchestral societies, and half-a-dozen pages are devoted to a catalogue of hotels in various parts of the country.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

In the old Sophienkirchhof are buried the remains of Wilhelm Bach, the last surviving grandson of J. S. Bach, and his daughter Augusta. The former, the son of Joh. Christoph Friedrich Bach, was born at Bückeburg in 1759 and died in 1845. In 1843, at the inauguration of the monument to the memory of his grandfather, he, together with his wife and two daughters, was present. The grave, which had fallen into decay, has been restored and fresh ivy planted.——At the second Philharmonic concert next season a new choral work, 'Paria,' by Arnold Mendelssohn, will be produced under the direction of Prof. Siegfried Ochs.——'Romeo und Julia auf dem Dorfe,' an opera by Fritz Delius, was produced here at the Komische Oper on February 21. The libretto is based on Gottfried Keller's well-known short story of the same title. The principal rôles were taken by Herr Willi Merkel and Frl. Lola Artôt de Padilla. The orchestra was under the direction of Herr Fritz Cassirer.

BRESLAU.

British music of late has been largely recognized in Germany. An opera by Fritz Delius, recently produced at Berlin, is noticed above. We learn also of a first and favourable performance in German of Sir Charles Villiers Stanford's clever opéra comique 'Shamus O'Brien' in this city. The composer was present, and was recalled after the second and third acts.

BUCHAREST.

Maëstro Pietro Mascagni has recently given three orchestral concerts here at the Salle de L'Athénée, and by his impetuous conducting aroused considerable excitement. His programmes included Beethoven's C minor and Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphonies, the 'William Tell' and 'Tannhäuser' overtures, while among many excerpts from his operas the 'Cavalleria' intermezzo was of course included.

EISENACH.

In connection with the inauguration of the Bach House as a Bach Museum, mentioned in our last issue, the following scheme has been drawn up. On May 26 there will be a sacred concert at St. George's Church consisting of motets sung by the St. Thomas's choir from Leipzig, the solo cantata 'Siehe ich will viel Fischer aussenden,' and organ pieces; also one or two violin concertos performed by Dr. Joachim. On Monday morning (May 27), previous to the ceremony of inauguration, an interesting service is to be held in St. George's Church similar to those of the Bach period, and it will include one of the Whitsuntide cantatas. The general procession to the Bach House will then take place, and at the ceremony the choir of St. Thomas's Church will sing. On Tuesday, May 28, there will be a gathering of the members of the New Bach Society, at which the superintendent, Herr D. W. Nelle-Hamm, will deliver a discourse on 'Sebastian Bach and Paul Gerhardt.' At this meeting subjects concerning Bach's art will be discussed.

ELBERFELD.

Le Guide Musical states that Miss Maud Roosevelt, a vocalist cousin of the President of the United States, has signed an engagement with the director of the theatre, and that, among other rôles, she will appear as Sieglinde in 'Die Walküre.'

MANNHEIM.

The fine arts prospered here during the reign of the Elector Karl Theodor. When Mozart came to the city in 1777 he found excellent singers at the opera-house, a fine orchestra and an enthusiastic conductor. The orchestra indeed was celebrated throughout Europe, and among its members were Cannabich, the leader, who afterwards became capellmeister, and Karl Stamitz, son of Johann Wenzel Anton Stamitz, who was also connected with Mannheim, and who, as a symphony composer, was an important predecessor of Haydn. Then Franz Xaver Richter, who from 1747 to 1769 had belonged to the Mannheim Capelle as violinist and bass singer, was also as composer a noteworthy predecessor of Mozart. These brief references to musicians of importance in their day will help to show how interesting is the first programme of a Jubilee Festival to be held here from May 31 to June 4. The opening concert is to be devoted to symphonies by 18th century composers—Stamitz, Cannabich, Richter, Haydn and Mozart. The second programme will embrace symphonies of the 19th century by the three B's: Beethoven, Brahms and Bruckner. At the third concert, which is to be devoted to modern choral works, will be performed 'Exequien der Mignon,' by Th. Streicher. The fourth and last concert is to illustrate German Lieder of two centuries—Mozart, Beethoven, Löwe, Schubert, Schumann, Brahms and H. Wolf of course standing for the 19th century. The three composers representing the 18th century are Schulz, Zumsteeg and Reichardt. Schulz (1747-1800) wrote many songs, his 'Lieder im Volkston' being specially prominent. Zumsteeg first attempted the extended form of the ballad of which his immediate successor, Schubert, left so many fine examples. J. F. Reichardt was specially esteemed as a song writer; he set many of Goethe's poems to music.

MILAN.

Maëstro Adolfo Bossi, father of the composer Enrico Bossi, and organist at Como, has been appointed, after competition, organist of the cathedral of this city.

The Italian composer, Umberto Giordano, has all but completed a new opera, 'Marcella,' based on a poem by M. Henri Cain and translated into Italian verse by M. Olinda Guerrini. The work is to be produced in the autumn at the Lyric Theatre.

An early production is expected at La Scala of a new work by Cilèa and his librettist Colantti, entitled 'Gloria.' It is in three acts, and the action takes place at Sienna at the end of the 14th century.——Puccini is said to have given up the idea of completing 'La Conchita,' an opera, the libretto of which, written by M. Maurice Vaucaire, is based on Pierre Louys's 'La Femme et le Pantin.' It is said that the composer feared the subject was too much akin to that of 'Carmen.'

PARIS.

The two principal results of the competitions for the year 1906 of the Société des Compositeurs de Musique are as follows: £20, offered by the Minister for Fine Arts, was awarded to M. Florent Schmitt, for an orchestral work; and £20, Fondation Pleyel-Wolff-Lyon, to M. Thirion, for a pianoforte sonata.

The conférences on the history of music at the Université Nouvelle have been attracting good audiences. M. Chàntavoine, who has recently published a 'Beethoven' in the Alcan series of biographies, of which he is editor, lectured on Beethoven and Programme Music. M. Tiersot's subject was French popular songs, while M. Calvocoressi discoursed on 'The origins of pianoforte music and on the Russian Lied.' M. Antoine, director of the Odéon, has received a new work by M. Brieux, 'Faith,' a sacred drama in six acts, for which M. Saint-Saëns has composed incidental music. The action takes place in Egypt, 4,000 years ago.

A Russsian festival is to be held at the Opéra, consisting of five concerts, to be given on May 16, 19, 23, 26, and 30, with Mesdames Félia Litvinne, Zbrouïeva, M. Chaliapine, and many artists from the Imperial Opera of Russia, and with the Lamoureux Orchestra and choir, under the direction of MM. Arthur Nikisch, Camille Chevillard, and Rimsky-Korsakov. Works will be performed by Tchaikovsky, Borodine, Balakirev, Liapounov, Tanéïev, Liadov, Moussorgsky, and Scriabine.

VIGEVANO.

The first performance of a posthumous opera by Antonio Cagnoni, entitled 'King Lear,' is shortly to take place at the theatre here. The composer, who died in 1896, wrote about twenty operas, some of which were successful, notably 'Don Bucefalo,' produced at Milan in 1847.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

ABERDEEN.—MacCunn's cantata 'Lord Ullin's daughter' was performed by the choir of the Rosemount Parish Church, under the direction of Mr. A. Hendry, on April 12. The work was much appreciated by the audience.

ACCRINGTON.—Elgar's 'King Olaf' was the main attraction of the concert of the Choral Society given in the Town Hall on March 25. The solo parts were undertaken by Miss Margaret Conly, Mr. H. Turnpenney and Mr. Bridge Peters. The singing of the choir displayed a distinct advance on previous performances, and the accompaniments were admirably played by the Hallé Orchestra, who were also heard to great advantage in Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite and the 'Flying Dutchman' overture. Mr. W. S. Walker was the conductor.

ANERLEY.—The Anerley and District Choral Society gave a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy in the Branch Road New School on April 16. The choir sang with precision and good attack, Mr. H. H. Pickard conducted, and the solo parts were undertaken by Miss May Swailes, Mr. Fred Fallas and Mr. William Thornton.

ASHFORD.—Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind' was given at the Ashford and District Choral Society's annual concert on April 10. The orchestra (drawn principally from the Folkestone Philharmonic Society) and choir numbered 100 performers, and, conducted by Mr. J. E. Fletcher, gave an excellent interpretation of the work. The miscellaneous selection included 'Drops of rain' (Lemmens), 'Moonlight' (Eaton Faning), 'Weary wind of the West' (Elgar), and other part-music by the choir. The orchestra played Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overture, German's 'Henry VIII.' dances, and Elgar's 'Pomp and circumstance' march.

AYR.—The second concert of the Choral Union took place in the Town Hall on March 21, when Macfarren's 'Lady of the Lake' was performed. The solo parts were sung by Miss Eva Rich, Miss Jeanie Roxburgh, Mr. Henry Beaumont, Mr. William Thornton and Mr. John Lindsay. The orchestra was provided by the Ayrshire Philharmonic Society, and Mr. Hugh McNabb was the conductor.

BATH.—Elgar's 'King Olaf' was performed by the Choral and Orchestral Society on April 16 in the Assembly Rooms. This was the second performance of the work by this Society, and the occasion was made an 'Elgar' night, the overture 'Froissart' and the Meditation from the 'Light of life' being included in the programme. The solo parts in the cantata were sung by Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Harry Dearth. Familiarity with the work enabled the choir to do full justice to the choral numbers, and the orchestra (led by Mr. J. W. Duys) was also excellent. Mr. H. T. Sims conducted.

BELPER.—Maunder's cantata 'Olivet to Calvary' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' were excellently rendered at the Wesleyan Church on March 27, under the conductorship of Mr. John B. Gough. The solo vocalists were Miss Bernice Woods, Mr. Herbert Gregory and Mr. L. G. Dickinson.

BISHOP'S STORTFORD.—Sir F. Bridge's 'Ballad of the Clampherdown' formed the principal feature of the concert given at the College on April 9. The orchestra, which was formed barely a year ago, is composed chiefly of boys and old boys, and the choir (also composed of the boys) showed evidence of patient training, and entered thoroughly into the spirit of the work. This was the first occasion on which the choir and orchestra have joined forces, and the result reflected much credit on the conductor, Mr. A. G. Tidmarsh.

BLACKBURN.—The second concert this season of the Cecilia and Vocal Union took place in the Exchange Hall on April 10, the programme including Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' Stanford's 'Songs of the sea,' 'The leap of Kurroglou,' by James R. Dean, ballad for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra, and Tchaikovsky's '1812' overture. Miss Perceval Allen and Mr. Francis Harford were the solo vocalists, and Miss Nora McKay played Mendelssohn's Violin concerto.

Brampton.—The Choral Society, which has been reconstituted and increased since its last performance, gave a concert at St. Martin's Hall on April 4, when 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and a miscellaneous selection, including Faning's 'Song of the Vikings' and Mendelssohn's '42nd Psalm' were performed with considerable success. Valuable aid was rendered by the Carlisle Orchestral Union, led by Mr. James Crozier. The solo vocalists were Miss Victoria Hopper, Miss Lister Scott and Mr. R. Metcalfe, who sang the tenor solo in the 'Wedding-feast.' Mr. F. Drakeford conducted.

Brighton.—The Southdown Choral Association gave its first concert on April 10, with a programme consisting of Schubert's 'Song of Miriam' and a selection of unaccompanied part-songs, in which the choir, under the direction of Mr. G. Street, was heard to advantage.

Burry Port.—The annual concert of the choir of Jerusalem Chapel took place on March 26, when Dvorák's 'At the foot of the Cross' ('Stabat Mater') was performed. The choir and orchestra (led by Mr. W. F. Hulley) numbered 180, and the solo vocalists were Madame Ellen Verrinder, Miss May Peters, Mr. Joseph B. Morse and Mr. Trevor Evans, the last-named, owing to the absence of another artist, studied and sang the tenor part successfully within twenty-four hours' notice. Mr. Frank King conducted.

Cardiff.—The Musical Society's final concert this season took place at the Park Hall on April 10, when Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and Coleridge-Taylor's ballad 'The slave's dream' were the main features of the programme. Both works were excellently sung by the choir, enunciation and expression being alike highly creditable, and the orchestra was heard in Mendelssohn's 'Calm sea' overture and Smetana's 'Verkaufte Braut' overture, besides accompanying a Violin concerto of Rubinstein, of which the solo was played by M. Zacharewitsch. Miss Gleeson-White was the solo vocalist, and Mr. Aylward conducted.

Castle Cary.—The Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' on April 11. The choir sang with much spirit and good attack. Miss Ethel Barnicott, Miss Whitelock, Mr. H. Partridge and Mr. R. T. A. Hughes were the solo vocalists. The orchestra was led by Miss Heginbotham, Mr. Algernon Salter playing the violoncello obbligato to 'Be thou faithful,' and Mr. A. Clements conducted.

Caterham.—The Choral Society celebrated its twentieth anniversary on April 17 with a performance of 'The Golden Legend.' Miss Ethel Wood, Miss Helen Blain, Mr. Francis Glynn, Mr. Robin Overleigh and Mr. W. J. Snow were the solo vocalists. The singing of the choral numbers gave evidence of very careful training by the conductor, Mr. Charles Hunt—the 'Evening hymn' and 'O pure in heart' being sung with great expression. Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony preceded the cantata.

Chiswick.—The tenth of the Chiswick Philharmonic concerts, given by the Western District Orchestral Society, took place on April 16 at the Town Hall. The programme included Weber's overture to 'Oberon,' Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, German's 'Henry VIII.' dances and Chopin's 'Andante and Polonaise' in E flat for pianoforte and orchestra (with Miss Rose Richards as solo pianist). Mr. David M. Davis conducted. Part-songs were pleasingly rendered by the ladies' choir of the Society. The solo vocalist was Miss Constance Whetton.

Corsham.—The second concert given by the Choral Society this season took place in the Town Hall on April 3. The programme consisted of Sir Hubert Parry's 'Pied Piper' as its chief feature and a miscellaneous selection, the various part-songs affording the choir ample opportunity of displaying refinement of style and technical accuracy. Variety was provided by the orchestra in Cowen's 'English Dances.' The solos in the cantata were undertaken by Mr. C. F. Spackman (Piper) and the Rev. S. M. Davies (Mayor), and Mr. Lewis Spackman conducted.

Croydon.—The Croydon Conservatoire String Orchestra gave a concert in the large Public Hall on April 12. The programme included Serenade Op. 72, Hofmann; Serenade Op. 88, Blasser; 'Quatuor Slave,' Op. 26, Glazounow, and other interesting works for strings. Miss Muriel Osborne was the solo violinist; Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor conducted as usual.

Dufftown.—The Choral Union gave a successful performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' (Parts 1 and 2), in the Parish Hall on March 22, both choir and orchestra, the latter from Aberdeen, doing excellent work under the conductorship of Mr. F. Whiteley. The solos were undertaken by Miss Bertha Begg, Mr. Percy Knight and Mr. C. F. Anderson, all members of the Union.

Dunfermline.—The Choral Union performed Handel's 'Samson' at St. Margaret's Hall on March 19. The choir, consisting of 150 voices, were assisted by the Dunfermline Amateur Orchestra. Misses Eva Rich and Jeanie Roxburgh, Messrs. Henry Beaumont and William Thornton were the principal vocalists, and Mr. Hugh McNabb conducted.

Eastbourne.—Mr. Smallwood Metcalfe's annual concert was given in the Town Hall on March 25, when the programme consisted of Dvorák's 'Spectre's bride' and Longfellow's ballad 'The leap of Kurroglou,' set to music by Mr. J. R. Dean, organist of St. Saviour's Church. The large choir sang throughout with great expression and restraint, and the important accompaniments were played by an excellent orchestra of forty-five performers, the leading strings and the wood-wind and brass being drawn from the London Symphony and Queen's Hall Orchestras. Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Spencer Clarke and Mr. Albert Garcia were able interpreters of the solo music, and Mr. Metcalfe conducted.

Enniscorthy.—The annual spring concert of the Choral Union was held in the Church Institute on April 4, when the cantata 'King Harold,' by Cunningham Woods, was creditably performed, the conductor being Mr. Edward Challans, and the solo vocalists Miss H. C. Preston, Miss Avis Wilkinson and Mr. Albert Mayston. A presentation of a gold pendant was made to Miss Merrick on her retirement from the post of accompanist to the Society, as a mark of appreciation by the members of her valuable services during several years.

Faversham.—The Faversham Institute Philharmonic Society gave for its fourteenth concert, at the Lecture Hall, on April 11, Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' The choir and orchestra numbered 100 performers, and rendered excellent service under the direction of Mr. W. J. Keech. The principal vocalists were Miss Ethel Wilkinson, Miss Winifred Heath, Mr. J. B. Fearnley and Mr. S. Heath.

Felixstowe.—A concert was given by the combined Choral and Orchestral Societies in Hamilton Hall on April 5, the chief feature of the programme being 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast.' The choir sang with spirit and excellent expression, and there was an efficient orchestra. The programme also included Elgar's part-songs 'The snow' and 'My love dwelt in a northern land,' the march in 'Athalie' and Handel's 'Water music.' Mr. C. W. Fredericks sang the solo in the cantata, and the other soloists were Miss Isabel Bowers and Miss A. Kempton. Mr. J. Job, to whose training the success of the choir and orchestra is due, conducted.

Fleet.—Cowen's 'John Gilpin' and Handel's 'Ode to St. Cecilia's Day' were performed by the Musical Society at the Pinewood Hall on April 18. The spirited singing of the choir reflected credit on the training of Mrs. Hudleston, who conducted. The solo music was undertaken by Mrs. Florence Morgan and Mr. Howard Fenwick. At the conclusion of the concert a presentation was made to Mrs. Hudleston in token of appreciation of her services as honorary conductor.

Floriana (Malta).—Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed by the Musical Union on April 2, in Lamplough Hall, and the amateur orchestra did efficient service under the direction of Mr. Robinson, to whose care the success of the performance was mainly due.

FROME.—Mr. T. Grant's annual concert took place in the Market Hall on April 1, when the programme included the overture 'Masaniello,' the 'Athalie' and 'Tannhäuser' marches, and Handel's 'Largo.' The vocalists were Miss Florence Holdernesse, Miss Bessie Grant, Mr. Herbert Emlyn and Mr. Arthur Barlow. The orchestra (led by Mr. E. G. Oram) was conducted by Mr. Grant.

HALDON.—Sir Hubert Parry's cantata 'The soul's ransom' was sung in St. Michael's Church on March 20 by the Festival Choir. There was a full orchestra and chorus, and the solo vocalists were Miss Biddle and Mr. J. Coleman. Mr. Percy Hughes, organist of Holy Trinity, presided at the organ, and Mr. W. Hoyle, organist of the church, conducted.

HALSTEAD.—The first and second parts of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy were successfully performed by the Choral Society on April 9, the instrumental portions being especially well rendered by the orchestra of thirty-five performers. The miscellaneous selection that followed included Cowen's 'Old English Dances' and Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overture. Miss Doris Simpson, Mr. Merlin Davies and Mr. Greeves Johnson were the solo vocalists, and Mr. W. H. Bullock conducted.

ILFORD.—Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was excellently performed at the High Road Congregational Church on Good Friday. There was a full choir and orchestra, and the principal solo vocalists were Miss Lydia Gillam, Miss Lily Grahame, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Arthur Barlow. Mr. Leonard Robson presided at the organ and Mr. W. J. Walls conducted.

KELSO (N.B.).—The Choral Union gave a fine performance of 'The Messiah' in the Corn Exchange on April 5, under their conductor, the Rev. W. J. Clarke, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Kelso. The choir displayed good attack, tone, and variety of expression, reflecting much credit on the conductor. A week later the Choral Union presented their conductor with a purse of gold and silver-mounted baton as a special mark of esteem.

KETTERING.—The Choral Society closed its season on April 18 with Gounod's 'Gallia,' Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George' and Mendelssohn's 'Capriccio Brillant' for pianoforte and orchestra (Op. 22), the solo part played by Miss Edith Palmer. Miss Ethel Lister was the vocalist. Mr. H. G. Gotch conducted.

KIRKCALDY.—The Musical Society gave a successful performance of Berlioz's 'Faust' on March 20. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, Mr. Charles Tree and Mr. John Mackenzie. There was an excellent orchestra under the leadership of Mr. W. H. Cole, of Glasgow. Mr. Charles M. Cowe conducted.

LEAMINGTON.—Sir Hubert Parry's 'Pied Piper' and selections from 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin' formed the programme of the concert given by the New Choral Society in the Winter Hall on April 11. The choir entered thoroughly into the spirit of Sir Hubert Parry's humorous music (the solos of the Mayor and Piper being sung by Mr. Charles Knowles and Mr. Alfred Heather), and the orchestra, including members of the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, rendered efficient service. Miss Marie Gwynn joined the other vocalists named in the Wagner selections. Mr. H. M. Gibbon, to whom the success of the performance was largely due, conducted.——The Madrigal Society gave a concert in the Winter Hall on April 18, the occasion taking the form of a Shakespearean festival. The choir sang numerous part-songs set to words of Shakespeare by Cunningham Woods, A. H. Brewer, R. J. S. Stevens, H. Wareing, J. B. McEwen, Edward German, A. W. Ogilvy and W. Macfarren, these being interspersed with solos and recitations, all from the works of the great poet-dramatist. Mr. Roberts West, the conductor, deserves commendation for the excellent singing and enunciation of the choir.

LEAVESDEN (HERTS).—The Woodside Choral and Orchestral Society gave an impressive performance of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' on April 10. The solos were undertaken by Madame Henriette Keil, who with Mr. George Scales (bass) and Mr. Franklyn Vernon (humorist) contributed to the miscellaneous portion of the programme. Mrs. Athelstan Clark presided at the pianoforte, and the Rev. Athelstan Clark conducted.

LEICESTER.—Spohr's 'Fall of Babylon' was performed by the West End Choral Society at the Temperance Hall on March 28. The choruses were commendably sung under the conductorship of Mr. S. Pickett, and the solo vocalists were Miss Jennie Ellis, Miss Annie Johnson, Mr. Furness Williams and Mr. John Booth. The orchestra was led by Mr. D. Sansom, and Mr. A. Pickett presided at the organ. ——The New Musical Society (conductor, Mr. Charles Hancock) gave a successful rendering of Smart's 'The Bride of Dunkerron' and Sir Edward Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George' in the Temperance Hall on April 18. The solo vocalists were Miss Kate Cherry, Mr. Joseph Reed and Mr. James Coleman.

LEIGH (LANCS.).—The Leigh Technical School Choral Society gave its ninth annual concert in the Co-operative Hall on April 10, when 'Judas Maccabæus' was performed. The choir did excellent work under the conductorship of Mr. Ellis France, and the solo vocalists were Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Lily Whiteside, Mr. Walter Lawley and Mr. James Horrocks.

LETCHWORTH.—The Philharmonic Society of this Garden City performed Parts 1 and 2 of Haydn's oratorio 'The Creation' and a miscellaneous selection in the Free Church Hall on April 11. The conductor, Mr. H. Gommersall, is to be congratulated on the excellence of the work done by the orchestra and choir. The principal vocalists were Miss Eva Hardy, Mr. Harry Collins and Mr. R. R. Morris.

LOUGHTON.—At the Loughton School concert given in the Lopping Hall on April 4, Anderton's 'Wreck of the Hesperus' was performed, under the direction of Mr. Henry Riding.

NEWPORT (MON.).—The Musical Society gave selections from 'Judas Maccabæus' at its second concert on April 11, under the conductorship of Mr. E. G. R. Richards, the singing of the choir in 'Hear us, O Lord,' 'We never will bow down' and other choruses being specially good. The orchestra played Schubert's overture 'Rosamunde,' and Miss Mabel Manson, Mr. Richard Thomas and Mr. Joseph Farrington were the solo vocalists.——The Choral Society gave a concert in the Tredegar Hall on April 18, with a miscellaneous programme which included Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to music,' Leslie's 'Lullaby of life,' Bach's motet 'I wrestle and pray,' and Mendelssohn's double chorus 'Why rage fiercely the heathen?' The singing of the choir in these pieces gave evidence of their excellent training by Mr. A. E. Sims. Miss Ada Crossley and Mr. Charles Tree were the solo vocalists.

NORTHAMPTON.—The Musical Society gave an admirable performance of Handel's 'Samson' on April 11. The choir, which numbered over 300 voices, was at its best in 'O first created beam' and 'Let their celestial concerts all unite.' There was an efficient orchestra, and the solo music was ably sung by Miss Winifred Marwood, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. Montague Borwell. Mr. C. J. King conducted.

PANGBOURNE.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' in the New Hall on April 12. The choir displayed the results of careful training by their conducor Mr. R. F. Surplice. The solo vocalists were Miss A. Aldridge, Mr. C. H. Mort and Mr. John Key.

PERTH.—The St. John's Choral Society gave a successful rendering in the Parish Church, on March 25, of Sterndale Bennett's cantata 'The Woman of Samaria.' Miss Eva Chadwick and Miss Gertrude Taylor sang the solo parts. Master Albert Midgley presided at the organ, and Mr. Frederick Midgley conducted.

ST. HELENS (LANCS.).—Mr. J. H. Maunder's oratorio 'The Martyrs,' for male voices and orchestra, was given in the Town Hall on April 4 by the St. Helens Glee Club. The chorus-singing of the eighty members was excellent. The orchestra consisted of members of the Hallé Orchestra and Liverpool Orchestral Society (led by Mr. Gordon E. Stutely). The principal vocalists were Master Joseph Green, Mr. J. J. Maltby and Mr. Charles Tree. Dr. S. Bertram Liddell conducted.

ST. IVES (HUNTS.).—'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin' were the principal features of the Choral Society's programme on April 11. The choir of 100 voices had been well trained by the conductor, Mr. Frank Clark, and sang throughout with much spirit, and there was a small orchestra. The solo in the 'Wedding-feast' was sung by Mr. Reed.

ST. LEONARDS.—The Amateur Choral Society gave a successful concert at the Pier Concert Hall on April 11, when they performed Haydn's 'Spring' and Parts 1 and 2 of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.' The choir sang with spirit, their enunciation being excellent, thanks to the able training of Mr. V. Blount, who conducted. There was a small orchestra and the solo parts were sung by Miss Lilian Turnbull, Mr. G. Uttley and Mr. Ager Grover.

SHREWSBURY.—The Shrewsbury Harmonic Society ended its season with a fine performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' on April 11 in the Music Hall, and was ably supported by the local orchestral society, led by Mr. Hubert Salt. The choir, conducted by Mr. J. A. Lea, sang very effectively, especially in the last number. The principal vocalists were Miss Jennie Ellis, Miss Annie Johnson, Mr. George Brierley and Mr. John Booth.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES.—The Choral and Orchestral Society gave a concert on April 11, when Cowen's 'Ode to the passions' was performed, the choir doing excellent service. The orchestra played Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll' and the 'Pilgrims' March' and Serenade from 'Harold in Italy.' Mr. Arthur Wilson conducted.——A concert of sacred music was given in North Terrace Wesleyan Church on Good Friday, when a selection from Haydn's 'Creation' and Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to music' were successfully performed under the conductorship of Mr. D. J. Tingle.

STOURBRIDGE.—The Concert Society gave its ninety-eighth concert in the Town Hall on April 15, when the programme included Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and Mozart's Serenade for strings. The solo vocalists were Miss Dorothy Silk, Madame Amy Dewhurst, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. James Coleman. The full orchestra and choir were under the able direction of Mr. George Halford.

STOURPORT.—The Choral Society gave its last concert of the season in the Parish Room on April 17, when Max Bruch's 'The lay of the bell' was performed under the conductorship of Mr. George Jackson. The choruses were sung with remarkable expression and dramatic power. The soloists were Madame Emily Breare, Miss Evers, Mr. Frank Mullings and Mr. James Coleman.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—The Bach programme provided at the choral and orchestral concert given by Mr. Francis J. Foote in the Opera House on March 27, was of great interest, including as it did the 'St. Matthew' Passion, the Chaconne for solo violin, played by Herr Hans Wessely, and the Concerto in D minor for two violins, in which the artist named was joined by Mr. Spencer Dyke. In addition to Mr. Foote's choir, formed in the autumn of 1904 'for the purpose of studying and performing the masterpieces of music,' a special choir of ladies had been organized to sing the soprano and alto solos, the other solo vocalists being Mr. Thomas Gibbs, Mr. Percival Driver and Mr. Leslie Mackay. There was a complete double orchestra, and Mr. Francis J. Foote conducted.

WELLINGTON (SALOP).—The Choral Union performed Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' on April 10. The chorus singing was very good, especially in 'O gladsome light' and the Epilogue. Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, and the march and chorus from 'Tannhäuser' completed the programme. The band and chorus numbered 160. Madam Aston, Miss Clara Robson, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. F. W. Dawson were the soloists. Mr. T. E. Clarke led an efficient orchestra, and Mr. Malcolm Allison conducted.

WHITBY.—A spirited performance of Cowen's 'John Gilpin' was given on April 17 by the combined Choral Societies of Pickering, Kirby Moorside and Loftus, conducted by Dr. Thomas Ely.

WILLENHALL.—Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' was sung at the parish church on Good Friday, the choir being considerably augmented for the occasion. The soloists were Mrs. J. V. Dewis, Miss Porter, Mr. E. R. Ludlow and Mr. J. Coleman; the organist was Mr. Percy Summerfield; and Mr. H. Colin Perks conducted.

WINSLOW (BUCKS).—The Winslow Musical Society gave their annual concert on April 4, when Cowen's 'St. John's eve' was performed. The soloists were Miss Winifred Marwood, Miss Eva Coppins, Mr. Charles Child and Mr. Montague Borwell. In the second part of the programme some unaccompanied part-songs and Faning's 'Song of the Vikings' were given by the Society. Mr. G. Herbert Thompson conducted.

WOODBRIDGE.—Mr. Lee Williams's cantata 'The last night at Bethany' was performed by the choir of St. Mary's Church on March 28. The singing of the choir and efficiency of the orchestra reflected much credit on the training of the organist, Mr. F. W. Hopson, who conducted, and whose place at the organ was taken by Miss Carter. On the previous evening Mr. Hopson, who is resigning his position to go abroad, was presented with a purse of £40 as a mark of appreciation, and a silver cigarette case from the band of the Volunteer Corps of which he is bandmaster.

WORCESTER.—The Co-operative Choral Society gave its thirteenth concert in the Public Hall on March 26. The Society sang part-songs by Cantor, German, Hatton, Laurent de Rillé and Pinsuti, and a new part-song entitled 'O hemlock tree!' composed by Mr. G. Leonard Wainwright, the conductor of the Society, which was encored. The same Society gave a concert of sacred music on April 7 in aid of the Worcester Infirmary. ——The second concert of the Musical Society took place at the Public Hall on April 16, when the programme comprised Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen,' the music of which sounded as fresh and delightful as ever, and selections from Sullivan's 'Tempest' music and 'Golden Legend.' Miss May Eaves, Miss Olive James, Mr. W. J. Ottley and Mr. F. Lightowler interpreted the solo music. The choir and orchestra, numbering 120, did excellent service, and Mr. W. Mann Dyson conducted.

Dr. Charles Vincent read an interesting paper at the meeting of the Incorporated Society of Musicians (London Section) on April 13, his subject being 'The songs of Shakespeare,' with musical illustrations by Miss Ada Forrest, Miss Bessie Grant, Mr. Henry Plevy and Mr. Francis C. Harford (vocalists), and Mr. Stanley Hawley (pianoforte). The lecturer divided his discourse into four parts: (1) Songs mentioned by Shakespeare in his plays; (2) Songs possibly sung in the original performances; (3) Settings composed since Shakespeare's time in the middle of the 19th century; and (4) Recent settings.

The prize competition offered by Mr. Mark Hambourg for the best pianoforte solo written by a British-born subject, has just been decided. The judges, Mr. Arthur Hervey, Mr. Algernon Ashton, Mr. Michael Hambourg and Mr. Landon Ronald, reluctantly came to the conclusion that there was not any work of sufficient importance to warrant their awarding the first prize of £20. It was therefore decided to choose only two pieces, namely, a Polonaise Impromtu in E, composed by Mr. William Wolstenholme, and a Scherzo by Mr. J. F. Rowe, which have won the second and third prizes for £10 and £5 respectively. The former piece will probably be played at Mr. Mark Hambourg's recital at Queen's Hall on May 15.

Mr. George D. Lamont has been appointed Master of Music to the schools under the Board of the Burgh of Brechin, N.B.

Mr. Ager Grover, solo tenor at the Temple Church, has been appointed a professor of singing at the Guildhall School of Music.

The Maidstone Choral Union, probably one of the best choral societies in the South-Eastern counties, gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal' in the Corn Exchange on April 8, which reflected great credit on all concerned, and notably on the conductor, Mr. F. Wilson Parish. The large choir displayed a remarkably fine tone, spirited attack and excellent enunciation, and there was a full orchestra (led by Mr. A. Easter Smith), largely augmented from London orchestras, their playing being excellent except for an occasional predominance during the recitation part in Mackenzie's cantata. Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Frederica Daniell, Miss Violet Roberts, Mr. Ernest Pike and Mr. George Lauder were able exponents of the solo music, while once more Mr. Charles Fry successfully resumed his original position as reciter in the 'Dream of Jubal.'

Readers of The Musical Times who are planning their summer holidays may be glad to know that this year's Richard Wagner Festival in the Prinzregenten-theater at Munich will be held on the following dates: Der Ring des Nibelungen, August 14 to 19, August 28 to September 2, and September 9 to 14; Tristan und Isolde, August 12, 21, and 26, and September 7; Die Meistersinger, August 24 and September 5; Tannhäuser, August 23 and September 4. Previous to the Wagner Festival there will be performed a cycle of Mozart's operas, including Don Giovanni, August 1 and 7; Figaro, August 3 and 9; and Cosi fan tutte, August 5 and 11.

The Committee of the Leeds Musical Festival have made some alterations in the programme since the outline scheme was given in our April issue (p. 237). For the last concert (on Saturday evening of the Festival week) Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' has been replaced by a miscellaneous selection, which is to include 'Vatergruft' (Cornelius), an unaccompanied eight-part motet (Bach), Pianoforte concerto (Grieg), 'Sea songs' (Stanford), and 'Blest pair of Sirens' (Parry). Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite has been added to the programme, and Dr. Bairstow, organist of Leeds Parish Church, has been appointed organist to the Festival.

Dr. Edward Ferrand Astley, J.P., died, we regret to record, at Dover on April 12, aged ninety-five years. We gave a biographical sketch and portrait of this much esteemed and nonagenarian double-bassist and enthusiastic lover of music in our issue of February, 1902, p. 99. At his organ recital at the Town Hall, Dover, on April 20, Mr. H. J. Taylor, the borough organist, on the instrument presented to the town by Dr. Astley, played an In Memoriam programme of music which included some of the deceased amateur's favourite pieces.

Desirée Artot de Padilla, the famous singer, a pupil of Madame Viardot-Garcia, a protégée of Meyerbeer, and for a few months the intended bride of Tchaikovsky, recently died at Berlin, aged seventy-two.

The Board of Trinity College of Music have presented Mrs. J. R. Blazey with a silver afternoon tea-service in recognition of her services as hon. accompanist to the choir from its formation, ten years ago, to the present time.

Anneau.—(1) The history of the tune 'Leoni' is given as follows in Messrs. Cowan & Love's 'The Music of the Church Hymnary': 'The words of the hymn by T. Olivers were written about 1770, and founded upon the Hebrew Yigdal, or Metrical Doxology, sung at the close of the synagogue service on the eve of the Sabbath. Leoni was then chorister at the Great Synagogue, Aldgate, London. Olivers applied to him for the melody to which he was in the habit of singing the Yigdal, and published the hymn in tract form with the following title:—A Hymn to the God of Abraham. In Three Parts: adapted to a celebrated air sung by the priest Signior Leoni, at the Jews' Synagogue in London.' The form of the melody given in 'The Church Hymnary' (No. 302) is in accordance with that found in 'A Handbook of Synagogue Music for Congregational Singing' (1889), edited by the Rev. F. L. Cohen, who states that this is 'the most correct form of the melody at present in use.' (2) The tunes 'Coychurch' and 'St. Jerome,' by Dr. Gauntlett, are non-copyright. We cannot trace his other tune under the name you give: perhaps you will send us the first line of the melody.

Calcaria.—It would be almost impossible to state the number of times Beethoven's Choral Symphony has been performed by London Societies. In our issue of June, 1906, p. 387, we gave a list of the sixteen performances given by the Philharmonic Society since the work was first introduced into England (by that Society in the year 1826) until the present time.

Pianist.—The term Alla Tedesca means 'in the German style.' Beethoven uses it in his Pianoforte sonatina in G (Op. 79). You would find a good selection of graded studies for the pianoforte in 'Progressive Pianoforte studies,' selected and edited by Mr. Franklin Taylor. The work is published in two forms by Messrs. Novello.

Rex.—We have no personal knowledge of New Zealand as 'a good place for a professional musician,' except that it is an enterprising colony, and a pleasant place of abode. Doubtless you would there find full scope for new zeal and fresh vigour for the exercise of your professional abilities as an organist and choirmaster.

Editor.—'God save our Lord the King' is the form of the first line of the English National Anthem which was in use in the 18th century; it has been superseded by that now adopted. Dr. Cummings's 'God save the King: the origin and history of the music and words of the National Anthem,' gives full information on the subject.

Perplexed.—In the absence of a dictionary of abbreviations (musical) we are unable to elucidate the six letters after Mr. Blank's name. Perhaps he is one of those gentlemen who, to quote the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, has (or desires to have) 'as many letters after his name as would spell Whitechapel twice over.'

Helmsley.—The music is cast in an archaic mould, which accounts for the seeming irregularity of the bars regarded from a rhythmic point of view. The well-known and beautiful plain-song melody Corde Natus, associated with the words 'Of the Father's love begotten,' affords a similar instance of what seems to you to be 'peculiar when performed.'

Crotchet.—(1) Brahms's Pianoforte quartets in G minor and A major were composed in 1862, and published in 1863. They are equally popular, and of similar difficulty. (2) Volkmann's Pianoforte trio (Op. 3) is published at 10*s*. net, and may be obtained of Messrs. Novello.

W. B.—In regard to 'modulation in two-part counterpoint,' we cannot do better than quote the dictum of Sir Frederick Bridge in his Counterpoint primer: 'Modulation into nearly related keys is advisable; but the student must be careful to avoid ambiguity of key.'

W. J. C. (Cape Colony).—We cannot speak from experience as to the system, but we have heard it well spoken of by those competent to judge. Many thanks for your kind words of appreciation.

Presbyterian.—You might find some help in the matter of congregational chanting of the Psalms in '100 Psalms (Bible version) pointed for chanting,' published by Messrs. Novello.

G. M.—For a clear and authentic guide to the proper interpretation of ornaments in pianoforte music you should consult Dannreuther's primer of 'Musical Ornamentation.'

Arnold.—We are afraid that your set of Handel's full scores is not of value, as the Arnold edition has been superseded by the German Handel Society's edition.

Clarinet.—In all probability the tutors and studies used at the Guildhall School of Music are variously selected by the several professors at that Institution.

Ethel.—Many thanks; but we are unable to consider an article on 'Examiners' extraordinary eccentricities exposed.'

Belle Isle.—We regret to be unable to give the residence of Spiro Samara. His publishers, Messrs. Bote & Bock, of Berlin, or Kahnt, of Leipzig, might be able to inform you.

H. G. W.—The volumes you mention have not any particular monetary value.

A. F. E.—We do not know of any pieces composed for violoncello with harp accompaniment.

Choirmaster.—Stainer's 'Choral Society Vocalization' primer, and Lane's 'An Elementary Sight-Singing Course.'

THE ORGAN WORKS
OF
JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH
EDITED BY
J. F. BRIDGE, MUS. DOC., OXON., AND JAMES HIGGS, MUS. BAC., OXON.

IN this, the first complete English Edition of John Sebastian Bach's Organ Works (the Chorale Preludes excepted), the distribution of the parts between the hands is, in all doubtful cases, clearly indicated by the notes that are to be performed by the right hand being printed on the upper of the two manual staves, while the notes that are to be played by the left hand will be found on the lower of the two manual staves. As far as possible care has been taken not needlessly to divide a middle part between the two hands when it can be conveniently performed by one hand continuously. The text has been carefully collated with former Editions, but generally where it differs from Griepenkerl's reading (Peters) it will be found to agree with the more recent Edition of the German Bach Society. Much thought has been given to secure convenient points for turning over, a matter of considerable importance to the performer. (See the "Great" G minor and the "St. Ann's" Fugues.) Suggestions as to the rate of performance and general treatment are given without encumbering the page with too detailed directions, and it is hoped the work in its complete form will be found a boon to the earnest Organ Student.

THE COUNCIL SCHOOL HYMN BOOK

A COLLECTION OF HYMNS, WITH PRAYERS, FOR USE IN COUNCIL SCHOOLS

COMPILED TO MEET THE PARTICULAR NEEDS OF THE NEW EDUCATION AUTHORITIES ESTABLISHED BY THE ACT OF 1902.

PRICES.

a. Words and Tunes with complete Accompaniment, the usual hymnal form, price 2s. 6d.
b. The Words with the Melody only (staff and tonic sol-fa notations combined), for the use of the children, price 1s.
c. Words only (limp cloth), 6d.

PREFATORY NOTE TO THE MUSIC EDITION.

The music of the Council School Hymn Book has been selected for its melodic interest and general suitability to children's voices. These essentials have been kept steadily in view as regards the new tunes composed expressly for the book, wherein many well-established favourites find a place. It will be observed that some of the tunes appear in lower keys than usual in order that young voices may not be unduly strained.

Every care has been taken to make the music of the book acceptable to teachers as well as children, in the hope that daily hymn-singing may become a specially enjoyable feature of school life.

The Hymns (150) chosen are those of proved value and reputation, including such Hymns as embody principles like the love of country and the duty of good citizenship. New Hymns have been specially written for the book by the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Arthur C. Benson, Dr. T. W. Jex-Blake, and others.

Prayers for the opening and closing of school form an Appendix to the book.

To meet the requirements of Education Authorities the publishers are prepared to issue the book with special name and title for different Councils and localities.

ADDITIONAL HYMNS WITH TUNES

FOR USE WITH

HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN

OR ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

272 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Hymns only, Imperial 32mo, Cloth Boards, One Shilling.

Hymns only, medium 32mo, diamond type, cloth, 4d.; paper, 3d.

Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 7s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

NOVELLO'S ANTHEM BOOK

A COLLECTION OF POPULAR ANTHEMS

FOR

FESTIVAL AND GENERAL USE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

Each book of this series contains twelve anthems: some for Festival occasions—e.g., Christmas, Easter, Harvest and others which may be used at any time. Great care has been taken in making the selections, in order that suitable variety may be secured and practical needs supplied.

It is therefore anticipated that in churches were an elaborate musical service is not possible, this publication will find acceptance. In such cases the advantage of having, in one book, twelve standard anthems, which more than cover the requirements of the Church's year, is obvious.

Book 1.

Advent	O King and Desire of all Nations	Stainer.
Christmas	Arise, shine, for thy light is come	Elvey.
Lent	Lord, for thy tender mercies' sake	Farrant.
,,	Enter not into judgment	Attwood.
,,	O ye that love the Lord	Coleridge-Taylor.
Easter	O give thanks	Goss.
Whitsun	Come, Holy Ghost	Attwood.
Harvest	The Lord is loving unto every man	Garrett.
General	O love the Lord	Sullivan.
,,	The day Thou gavest, Lord	Woodward.
,,	Blessed are they that dwell	Tours.
,,	Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace	Lee Williams.

Book 2.

Advent	Hosanna in the Highest	Stainer.
Christmas	Sing and rejoice	Barnby.
Lent	O Saviour of the world	Goss.
,,	Teach me, O Lord	Attwood.
,,	Jesu, Word of God Incarnate	Gounod.
Easter	Christ is risen	Elvey.
Harvest	Great is the Lord	Steane.
General	What are these?	Stainer.
,,	O how amiable	West.
,,	O taste and see	Sullivan.
,,	The Lord is my Shepherd	Macfarren.
,,	God that madest earth and heaven	Fisher.

Book 3.

Advent	Far from their home	Woodward.
Christmas	Four Christmas Carols	Various.
Lent	Turn Thy face from my sins	Sullivan.
,,	O Lord, my God	Wesley.
,,	Jesu, Word of God Incarnate	Mozart.
Easter	Break forth into joy	Barnby.
Harvest	O Lord, how manifold	Barnby.
General	Seek ye the Lord	Roberts.
,,	I was glad	Elvey.
,,	The radiant morn	Woodward.
,,	O praise God in His holiness	Weldon.
,,	Doth not wisdom cry	Haking.

Book 4.

Advent	Arise, O Jerusalem	King.
Christmas	Let us now go even unto Bethlehem	Hopkins.
Lent	In Thee, O Lord	Tours.
,,	Comfort, O Lord, the soul of Thy servant	Crotch, arr. by Goss.
,,	God so loved the world	Stainer.
Easter	Christ our Passover	Goss.
Whitsun	Praised be the Lord daily	Calkin.
Harvest	Ye shall dwell in the land	Stainer.
General	O how amiable are Thy dwellings	Barnby.
,,	O taste and see how gracious the Lord is	Goss.
,,	Thine, O Lord, is the greatness	Kent.
,,	O give thanks unto the Lord	Elvey.

Book 5.

Advent	The Great Day of the Lord	Martin.
Christmas	It came upon the midnight clear	Stainer.
Lent	Incline Thine ear	Himmel.
,,	Lead me, Lord	Wesley.
,,	Rend your heart	Calkin.
Easter	Awake up, my glory	Barnby.
Whitsun	O for a closer walk with God	Foster.
Harvest	The eyes of all wait on Thee, O Lord	Elvey.
General	I am Alpha and Omega	Stainer.
,,	O how amiable are Thy dwellings	Richardson.
,,	Blessed are the merciful	Hiles.
,,	I will sing of Thy power, O God	Sullivan.

Book 6.

Advent	Hearken unto Me, My people	Sullivan.
Christmas	O Zion, that bringest good tidings	Stainer.
Lent	Turn Thy Face from my sins	Attwood.
,,	O Saving Victim, slain for us!	Stainer.
,,	There is a green hill far away	Gounod.

SCHOOL BAND MUSIC,

EDITED BY W. G. McNAUGHT.

This Series, as its title suggests, is intended to meet the needs of School String Bands. It will include arrangements and original pieces of every suitable description.

FIRST SELECTION.

1.	WHERE THE BEE SUCKS ...	ARNE.
2.	THE GOLDEN VANITY ...	ENGLISH AIR.
3.	THE BAY OF BISCAY ...	JOHN DAVY.
	O WERT THOU IN THE CAULD BLAST ...	MENDELSSOHN.
4.	GOOD MORROW, GOSSIP JOAN ...	ENGLISH AIR.
	AULD LANG SYNE...	SCOTCH AIR.
5.	THE ASH GROVE ...	WELSH AIR.
	MARCH OF THE MEN OF HARLECH ...	WELSH AIR.
6.	THE ARETHUSA ...	SHIELD.
	THE MINSTREL BOY ...	IRISH AIR.
7.	FAIREST ISLE ...	PURCELL.
	WELCOME THOU WHOSE DEEDS CONSPIRE (from Jephtha) ...	HANDEL.
8.	HEART OF OAK ...	Dr. W. BOYCE.
	THE HARP THAT ONCE IN TARA'S HALLS ...	IRISH AIR.

The above are all very simply arranged by PERCY E. FLETCHER. The 1st Violin parts do not go beyond the third position, and they are often written divisi in order to fill out the harmony. The viola parts are ad lib., the actual notes being written as the second of the divisi parts for the second violin. The bowing and fingering are carefully marked. The arrangements are complete in themselves with or without the vocal parts, and they can also be used as accompaniments to Novello's School Song edition of the pieces.

1st Violin, 2nd Violin, Viola, 'Cello and Bass Parts, each number and part in a separate cover, price 3d.
Pianoforte Parts can be obtained of each of the above Pieces, price 1½d. or 2d.

THE ART OF COUNTERPOINT

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

BY

EMILY R. DAYMOND,

D.Mus., Oxon.

This book is the outcome of a request made some time ago to the author to write some examples of Exercises in Score-Reading similar to those imposed as tests in the examination for F.R.C.O.

These Exercises (forty-eight in number) comprise two sets of twenty-four examples, each set containing one example in every key, major and minor. The first and easier set is intended to prepare the way for the second, which is of greater complexity.

The author has endeavoured to provide a certain amount of variety both in style and in difficulty, and it is hoped that the Exercises will be of use to candidates for the F.R.C.O. Examination and also to other students who wish to become proficient in Score-Reading.

EXAMINATION QUESTIONS AND HOW TO WORK THEM

BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS,

Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

PREFACE.

This Primer is intended more especially for those who purpose presenting themselves for examination in the theory of music. While the subjects dealt with may be found in all examination schemes for musical degrees and diplomas, it is hoped that the following chapters may prove useful more especially to candidates for the diplomas of the Royal College of Organists.

The object of this book is to stimulate and cultivate method in answering examination questions. Considerable experience as an examination "coach" has proved the success of the method, herein followed, of dissecting the questions, and—by dividing the points for consideration under several heads—thus directing the student's attention to one point at a time.

EXTRACT FROM INTRODUCTION.

The benefits of sight-singing cannot be over estimated. The vocalist becomes independent and self-reliant: he has a wide and varied field open to him: the music he learns does not stale with wearisome repetitions. In course of time he will be able "to hear in his mind what he sees on paper." There will be the possibility of his becoming a musician, for there is nothing so vital to true progress as the power to imagine sounds from notation.

VOICE CULTURE FOR CHILDREN
A PRACTICAL PRIMER
ON THE
CULTIVATION AND PRESERVATION OF YOUNG VOICES
WITH EXERCISES FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS, CHOIRS, SOLO-BOYS, ETC.
BY
JAMES BATES.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the extreme delicacy of the child's voice, yet how often have these frail instruments been irreparably ruined for want of a little knowledge or a little care! Let the teacher sternly discourage anything like "shouty" singing, especially in class or choir, or misguided attempts to sing notes which are too high or too low. It may safely be said that soft singing (of course within the compass of the voice) will never do harm, no matter how continuous, but loud singing will inevitably lead to disaster. The teacher who successfully instils the principles of correct singing, and thereby renders possible the life-long use and enjoyment of a pleasing voice, is conferring on his young charges a boon of inestimable value. This thought should be his constant encouragement in times of difficulty and lack of immediate success.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

1A.	TECHNICAL PRACTICE	(1st Position)	2s. 0d.
2A.	DITTO	(1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. 0d.
3A.	DITTO	(1st to 5th Position)	3s. 0d.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC
EDITED BY ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glees and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

TECHNIQUE
PIANOFORTE PLAYING
BY
FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

AND ALLEGRO
FOR STRINGS
(QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)
COMPOSED BY EDWARD ELGAR.
(Op. 47.)

Full Score, 12s.; Quartet Parts, 4s.; Orchestral Parts, 7s.
Pianoforte Duet Arrangement, 4s.

THE TIMES.

The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenuity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for the orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naïve little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has here adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

This Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

The present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

THE

MACDONALD SMITH SYSTEM

OF TOUCH AND TECHNIQUE.

("FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD.")

"The most striking discovery of the present generation for practical musicians."—Musical News.

HAS YOUR LOVE OF MUSIC

died out because you cannot play the piano as you used? Some lessons in my System of Touch and Technique will more than restore your powers without any hard practice, and this should your age be 16 or 60. The common contention that keyboard practice is the "royal road" to pianistic perfection is a fallacy; complete independent control over every muscle is the key to perfect piano-playing. It is the birthright of the gifted few, but the many must procure it, and the only certain means of so doing is by use of my system "FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD."

TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

NOVELLO'S COLLECTION
OF
WORDS OF ANTHEMS.

Crown 8vo, 822 pp., cloth, red edges, 5s. Red Basil and red edges, 7s. 6d.
Appendix only, paper cover, 1s.

This Book, which now contains the Words of about 2,000 Anthems, besides being admirably adapted for the use of Choirs and Congregations, for which purpose it was originally compiled, will be found most valuable to Organists, Choirmasters, and the Clergy as a Book of Reference for the selection of Anthems suitable for special days, seasons, or occasions, the Indexes having been considerably enlarged. It also contains a list of Anthems suitable for Men's voices, and Anthems with Latin words.

The newly-incorporated Anthems (Nos. 1590 to 1952) have been added to the former edition by means of an Appendix, which is published separately from the complete work. Consequently Choirs and Congregations which are still using the older edition are enabled to supplement their books, and make them complete, by purchasing the Appendix at the price of One Shilling.

NORWICH AND ITS MUSICAL ASSOCIATIONS.

The history of music in Great Britain! If ever it is written there are many places other than London that will bring no discredit to such a record of 'something attempted, something done.' The city of Norwich will be one of those places. Fortunately, a native of Norwich, who is proud to call himself an East Anglian, has already made a very large collection of material towards any history of the art in that part of England upon which, day by day, the sun first sheds its rays—we refer to Dr. A. H. Mann, organist of King's College, Cambridge. For the purposes of this chit-chat—for it claims to be nothing more—on the music of Norwich, Dr. Mann has most generously placed some of his notes at our disposal: to him be thanks for his kindness.

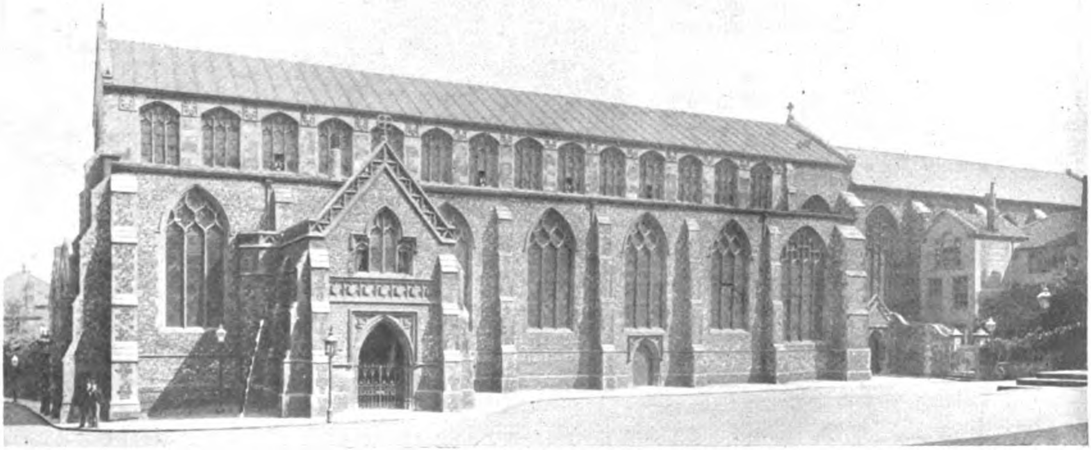
Perhaps the year 1300 may be considered early enough to commence the survey, and how interesting is the information that mention is made of a public school for teaching children to read, and sing! the said school 'to be held in the parvis of St. Martin at Palace Church.' The earliest known English cathedral organist is that of Norwich: in 1333 the Sacrist's roll records a payment of xiiis. iiij*d.* for a robe 'for Adam the organist.' Music rightly held a prominent place in the reception of Queen Elizabeth when she visited Norwich in 1578. As the Queen drew near to St. Stephen's Gate, the waits of the city cheerfully and melodiously welcomed Her Majesty with 'loud musick,' and a song was sung by the 'best voices,' probably the cathedral choir. Later on the musicians played 'broken musick upon their soft instruments.' At a 'princely mask (masque) there was a consort of musick—to wit, six musicians, all in long vestures of white sarsanet girded about them, and garlands on their heads, playing very cunningly.' After they had marched about, Apollo presented his gift, which was an instrument called a bandoret, 'and did sing to the same instrument this short and pretty ditty, as he was playing thereon:

> It seemeth strange to see such strangers here,
> Yet not so strange, but strangers knew you well—&c.

At another entertainment given in connection with this Royal visit 'twelve nymphs danced a dance with timbrels trimmed with bells and other jangling things, which timbrels were as broad as a sieve, having bottoms of fine parchment, and being sounded, made such a confused noise and pastime that it was to be wondered at; besides the strangeness of the timbrels (yet known to our forefathers), which was a matter of admiration, unto such as were ignorant of that new-found toy, gathered and borrowed from our elders.' May not this have been an early use of the tambourine in East Anglia?

The city waits were important folk in those days. At the time of the Spanish Armada a letter from Sir Francis Drake was read at a Court of the City Council, in which:

> he desyreth that the waytes of this citie may be sent to hym, to go the new intended voyage; whereunto the waytes being here called, do all assent, whereupon it is agreed that they shall have vi. cloakes of stamell cloth



ST. ANDREW'S HALL, NORWICH.
(Photograph by Mr. A. E. Coe, Norwich.)

> made them redy before they go; and that a waggon shall be provided to carry them and their instruments, and that they shall have iiii. lb. to buye them three new howboyes and one treble recorder, and x. lb. to beare their chargys; and that the citie shall hyre the waggon and paye for it. Also that the Chamberlyn shall paye Peter Spratt xs. 3*d.* for a saquebut case.

Later on, in the year 1622, the city possessed the following instruments, &c.:

> Fower sackbutts, fower hoboys and an old howboye broken, two tenor cornetts, one tenor recorder, two counter tenor recorders, two tenor cornets, five chaynes, and five flagges.

William Kemp, the celebrated Morris dancer and the friend of Shakespeare, speaks very highly of the city waits. In 1599 he danced the Morris from London to Norwich—dancing on nine out of the twenty-three days he was on the road—and thus eulogised the Norwich musicians: 'Such Waytes (under Benedicite be it spoken) fewe Cities in our Realme have the like, none better; who, besides their excellency in wind instruments, their rare cunning on the Vyoll and Violin, theyr voices be admirable, euerie one of thē able to serue in any Cathedrall Church in Christendoome for Quiristers.'

Concert-giving in Norwich can be traced back to the year 1717. Seven years later the first musical society seems to have been formed. An advertisement in the Norwich Gazette of Saturday, October 31, 1724, reads:

> On Thursday night the Musick Meeting was begun by several gentlemen in Mr. Freemoult's Long Room by Black-Friers-Bridge, who propose continuing the same every Thursday night, meeting between 5 and 6 o'clock: and any Gentlemen that are Lovers of Harmony may next Thursday night be admitted into the said Musical and Friendly Society (according to their articles) either as members, or clubbers.

On Christmas Eve of the same year (1724) the Norwich Gazette contained this information:

> We hear that divers masters of musick design to entertain the curious this Christmas with a set of musical-cards. It seems there's a complete song for the violin and flute on each card; and the music is so legible that it may be play'd a yard at sight; and as this is a work entirely new, 'tis thought there will be a greater demand for these cards than there was for South Sea, or Bubble cards.

A no less curious exhibition is announced in the Norwich Gazette of November 6, 1731:

> This is to acquaint all lovers of musick, that here is come to this city a famous German woman who plays on the well tuned cymbal, sings songs in all languages to it, and hath four small babies that dance on the said instrument. She will wait on any gentleman or lady at their houses, and is to be heard of at her habitation in the King's-Arms Lane.

Among the curiosities of old-time concert-giving which Dr. Mann has unearthed is that of a concert given by Mr. Samuel Blogg for his benefit on January 26, 1759. The announcement apologetically concludes thus:

> N.B.—Mr. Blogg himself hopes for the indulgence of the Gentlemen and Ladies in this attempt, as he has made it his endeavour always to please, by procuring a good Band, and now has an excellent performer on the Hautboy coming from London to oblige the audience.
> To prevent the company getting cold, a large fire will be kept in the room.

To return to the musical societies. In the year 1736 'The Musick Clubb' was started at the Maid's Head, still a famous hostelry, 'where all lovers of musick will meet with good wine and an hearty welcome.' That a society was in existence in 1739 is proved by the list of subscribers to Festing's Opera quinta [the eight concertos] which includes 'The Musical Society at Norwich.' Near the end of the 18th century 'The Catch Club at Norwich' subscribed to J. W. Holder's (of Bungay) collection of canons and glees. About the same time the Anacreontic Society, which existed for many years, gave monthly concerts—in 1799 at the White Swan, the non-residents' tickets being 7*s.* 6*d.*, 'supper and wine' included.

Among Dr. Mann's fine collection of East Anglian books are some word-books of Friday Subscription Concerts given at Chapel-Field House. Symphonies, overtures, a Corelli concerto, a violin concerto, 'Lady Ann Townsend's March,' organ solos—played by Mr., afterwards Dr., Beckwith—choruses and vocal solos, find a place in these programmes of the year 1796. One of them (March 18, 1796) is particularly interesting. The first part consists of 'The Passion of our Saviour, the music selected from the compositions of Jomelli, Haydn and Handel' as thus compiled:

FIRST SCENE:

* Introduction - - - - - - - Haydn.
Chorus. All we like sheep - - - Handel.

SECOND SCENE:

* 'My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?'
Recit. All they that see Him - - } Handel.
Chorus. He trusted in God - - - }

THIRD SCENE:

* 'I thirst' - - - }
Recit. and Air. Thy rebuke hath broken His heart - - - - - - } Handel.
Recit. and Air. He was cut off - - }

FOURTH SCENE:

* 'To-day thou shalt be with Me in Paradise.'
Chorus. God will save all that trust in Him. Jomelli.

FIFTH SCENE:

* 'Into Thy hands, I commend My Spirit.'

* THE EARTHQUAKE.

* Expressed by instruments.

The music of the scenes expressed by instruments is the original version of Haydn's 'Seven last words,' of which, by the way, the title-page of an early English edition states 'This work is calculated for Sunday concerts.' Who compiled this Passion that was sung at Norwich more than a hundred years ago? The second part of the programme consisted of Haydn's Stabat Mater; thus the concert was not only entirely sacred, but of a penitential character.

An important organization was 'The Hall Concert'—important in that it was the immediate predecessor of the present flourishing Norwich Philharmonic Society. The Hall Concert originated with a few persons meeting in the year 1789 to play in the Hall of St. Andrew's, whence it took its name. The number of members at first was only six, but the membership became sufficiently large to attempt the performance of choruses, symphonies, overtures, &c. It was a standing rule of the Hall Concerts that one of the grand concertos for stringed instruments of Corelli, Handel, or Scarlatti should always have a place in the programme. At one time (about the year 1791) a Miss Coppin, daughter of the master of the Workhouse, used to play the drums, a circumstance which caused the performances to be derisively called 'the workhouse concert.' Edward Taylor, afterwards Gresham Professor, seems to have been the handy man of the Society. He used to sing the bass solos and play the bassoon (his own particular instrument), and he always was ready on occasion to take a part on the organ, oboe, or flute, or to beat the drums. In addition to the Messiah, Joshua, Acis and Galatea and other compositions by Handel, Purcell's Tempest and Locke's Macbeth music were performed. Dr. Beckwith would bring some of his choristers from the cathedral to sing Purcell's 'From rosie bowers,' or one of Haydn's lovely canzonets, while the glees sung were the finest that could be selected. As the concerts took place weekly, and the programmes always contained songs with full orchestral accompaniment, they formed a splendid school for the training of amateurs. At the dissolution of the Society, in 1834, Prof. Edward Taylor wrote: 'I deeply regret the extinction of a Society in which I spent so many happy hours, and which was so beneficial in its musical operations. I can never forget how much I owe to it.' On October 17, 1816, a new concert room, specially built for the Society, in St. George's, Bridge Street, was opened. It was in this concert room that George Perry produced, on March 12, 1819, his oratorio 'Elijah and the Priests of Baal.'

For five years after the dissolution of the Hall Concert little appears to have been done to foster the study of orchestral music in Norwich. It was not until 1839 that Mr. Frank Noverre initiated a scheme which in 1841 developed into the Norwich Philharmonic Society. During the first four years of the Society's existence the leader of the band acted as conductor until the appointment of Mr. James Harcourt, who held the post from 1845 to 1880. He was succeeded first by Dr. F. E. Gladstone (for a few months only) and then by Dr. Horace Hill. The present conductor is Dr. Frank Bates. This Society not only gives excellent performances to crowded audiences, but is able to pay its way. With only slight extraneous help the players can accompany such a work as the 'Dream of Gerontius' very creditably, and also such artists as Fritz Kreisler, Mischa Elman, Mark Hambourg, Jean Gerardy and others, thus giving further proof of the spread of good music and the excellence of interpretative ability in a large provincial centre.

A choral society was formed by Edward Taylor immediately after the first Festival (in 1824); it lasted for half a century, when the Festival committee took it over (in 1875) and formed a Festival chorus which has continued ever since, giving excellent concerts under chorus-masters J. Harcourt, Dr. Horace Hill, and Dr. A. H. Mann. Other musical societies that did useful work in their day were the Norwich Harmonic Society, and the Norwich Vocal Society and the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Union (conductor Dr. Bunnett). At the present time the Norfolk Choral Society, formerly the Old Gate House Choir, is the premier vocal organization in the city. Under the conductorship of Dr. Frank Bates (appointed in 1901) the Society, in conjunction with the Norwich Philharmonic Society (also conducted by Dr. Bates) has given some praiseworthy performances, notably those recorded by our Norwich correspondent on p. 401 of the present issue.

Towards the end of the 18th century there existed in Norwich a 'Society for Decayed Musicians,' concerning which little is known. On November 22, 1785, 'a grand performance of vocal and instrumental music from the works of Handel' was given at Mr. Christian's Room 'for the benefit of the Fund established in Norwich for Decayed Musicians.' The advertisement stated that 'The performance will receive the addition of Drums, Trumpets, &c., after which there will be a Ball.' It was further announced that 'The Gallery will be completely lighted and fitted up for the reception of those ladies and gentlemen who may prefer sitting there.' The tickets were 2*s.* 6*d.* each and 'books of the performance' 6*d.*, and 'those gentlemen who mean to honor the performance with their assistance are respectfully entreated to attend at the rehearsal on Monday evening precisely at six o'clock.' There is a touch of ultra-politeness in the 'respectfully entreated' of this summons to a rehearsal. The performance — repeated eight days later — was editorially eulogized in the Norwich Chronicle:

> The performance last Tuesday evening, for the benefit of the Norwich Musicians' Fund, was received with the greatest and most flattering approval by a brilliant and crowded audience; an elegant orchestra was erected purposely for the occasion, and well furnished with as great a number of performers as we ever recollect to have seen at a Norwich oratorio . . . the chorus of 'The trumpet's loud clangour' and 'The dead shall live' ['Ode for St. Cecilia's Day'] exceeded anything of the kind we ever recollect to have heard. We cannot conclude this article without expressing our wishes that the musicians of Norwich may continue to receive that patronage to their fund they have hitherto experienced; as their unremitted attention to entertain the public certainly renders them deserving of it.

'The Ode for St. Cecilia's Day' was performed 'with full accompaniments of kettle drums, trumpets, horns, and double drums.'

The Society of Decayed Musicians at Norwich had a curious rule in regard to complete performances of Handel's works. In the March following the above performance Mr. (afterwards Dr.) Beckwith proposed to perform 'Acis and Galatea' at a benefit concert he was arranging to give (March 29, 1786), but he had to alter his intention, as the following notice to the advertisement of his concert will show :

> Mr. Beckwith most respectfully begs leave to inform the Ladies and Gentlemen of Norwich, that he never knew, or had totally forgotten, an order on the books of the Society for Decayed Musicians, which expressly forbids the members performing at any benefit of an entire work of Handel, he is therefore obliged to substitute a miscellaneous concert in place of 'Acis and Galatea.'

Can any of our readers give any further information concerning this Norwich Society for Decayed Musicians? By the way, the word 'decayed' conveys a less pleasant meaning to us than it did to our forefathers.

The Norwich Musical Festival, as now understood, dates from the year 1824. Seven Musical Festivals had, however, previously been held in the city between 1770 and 1817. These performances generally consisted of miscellaneous concerts in St. Andrew's Hall, and selections of sacred music given in St. Peter Mancroft Church. The scheme of Triennial Festivals owes its inception to R. M. Bacon, an enthusiastic musical amateur of Norwich. The first meeting (1824), attended by over 10,000 people, was a great financial success, the net proceeds, after paying all expenses, being the sum of £2,411 4*s*. 2*d*., which was handed over to the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital. The conductors have been Sir George Smart, 1824-36; Prof. Edward Taylor, 1839-42; Sir Julius Benedict, 1845-78; Mr. Alberto Randegger, 1881-1905. Spohr was present at the Festival of 1839, and conducted his 'Calvary'; two other works by Spohr also received their first performances in England at Norwich, 'The Last Judgment' (1830) and 'Fall of Babylon' (1842). Among the many works composed for, or first performed (in England) at the Festival are: Mozart's 'Davidde Penitente' (1848), Pierson's 'Jerusalem' (1852) and 'Hezekiah' (1869), Molique's 'Abraham' (1860), Handel's Passion Music (1866), Mackenzie's 'Rose of Sharon' (1884), Stanford's 'Phaudrig Crohoore' (1896), Parry's 'Song of darkness and light' (1899) and 'Pied piper of Hamelin' (1905), and Elgar's 'Sea pictures' (1899).

St. Andrew's Hall, in which the Festival performances and other concerts are given, was originally the old conventual church of the Black Friars. It was burnt down in 1413 and rebuilt by Sir Thomas Erpingham in 1428. At the dissolution of the monasteries the church and convent were granted by Henry VIII. to the Mayor and Corporation for the use of the city for ever. One of the finest Perpendicular halls in the kingdom, the main building consists of a nave and two side aisles, more than fifty yards in length and thirty in breadth. The lofty roof is supported by twelve slender Gothic pillars, and the whole is enlightened by spacious windows. Life-size portraits of several royal and noble benefactors to the city and other distinguished persons adorn the walls. At the end of the building are the orchestra and organ. In 1886 Mr. F. Oddin Taylor, J.P., honorary secretary of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival, started a fund to buy up from the Dutch congregation the 200 years' lease of the Choir of the ancient church. The sum of £800 was raised, whereby this portion of the original building was presented to the city, therefore the Choir will never again be separated from the Nave of what is now St. Andrew's Hall. The accomplishment of this design is one of the best things that Mr. Taylor has done for his native city.

Norwich can contribute to the roll of provincial 'organ-makers': Arnald Mynhamber and John Ashwell, both of whom took up the Freedom of the City in 'the 24 of Henry VI.' (1446); John Hayne (d. 1496); Stephen Bretton (1598); John Starling, who in September, 1669, received £1 0*s*. 6*d*. for repairing the cathedral organ 'several times' from the previous January; Mr. Harbart, paid £15 in 1720 for tuning and repairing the cathedral organ for three years; John Holmes (1764); Messrs. Lambert (1771); in 1801 Mr. Crotch is voted six guineas per annum to keep St. Peter Mancroft organ in order; while in our own day the firm of Messrs. Norman & Beard is not unknown.

To the credit of Norwich must be placed the issue of the first important periodical publication devoted to music in England, The Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review (ten vols.), which first appeared in January, 1818, and continued until 1830, the last issue containing a letter from Vincent Novello, dated March 8, 1830, on the subject of Purcell's anthems. An obituary notice of Beethoven, addressed to the Editor and dated August 24, 1827 (vol. ix., p. 161), concludes thus :

> Having trespassed so much on your patience, Mr. Editor, I shall conclude by observing, that Haydn appears to me like a sparkling stream, in which the blue sky, the light cloud, the flower, the trembling leaf, and many other delightful objects of nature, are reflected with delicious clearness. Mozart resembles a majestic river, swollen by tributary streams and gliding on to mingle its waters with those of the ocean; while Beethoven seems like a mountain torrent, breaking over rocks and down precipices, and often rising towards heaven in foam and smoke and mist.

> MUSICUS.

No account, however slight, of Norwich and its musical associations would be complete without reference to the splendid service rendered to the city by Jenny Lind. On January 22 and 23, 1849, she gave two concerts at St. Andrew's Hall 'in aid of the poor of Norwich,' whereby the sum of £1,253 was realized. This benefaction was subsequently devoted to the foundation of 'The Jenny Lind Infirmary for Sick Children,' an institution which has relieved, and continues to relieve, the sufferings of many poor children of the city. During her visits to Norwich (in 1847 and 1849) the great and tender-hearted singer was the guest of Bishop Stanley, father of Dean Stanley. An incident of her visit in 1847 is told in the article on Dr. Bunnett, p. 382 of the present issue. The name of the great singer is not exclusively associated with the Infirmary for Sick Children, as there are in Norwich a Jenny Lind Steamboat Company, and a Jenny Lind public-house!

The native musicians of Norwich form a goodly company. Here is a list, which does not pretend to be exhaustive, of some notabilities:

Dr. Philip Armes, Professor of Music in the University of Durham; honorary organist of Durham Cathedral.

Richard Mackenzie Bacon. Projector, editor, and chief contributor to the Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review; one of the founders of the Norwich Musical Festival.

Dr. John Beckwith, and his son John Charles Beckwith, both organists of Norwich Cathedral.

Dr. W. R. Bexfield, composer of the oratorio 'Israel restored,' &c.

Dr. Zechariah Buck, organist of Norwich Cathedral; eminent trainer of boys' voices.

William Cobbold, organist of Norwich Cathedral; contributor to 'The Triumphs of Oriana'—the madrigal 'With wreaths of rose and laurel.'

Dr. Crotch, first Principal of the Royal Academy of Music; Professor of Music at Oxford University.

Mr. A. R. Gaul, now of Birmingham.

James Hook, composer of 2,000 songs, cantatas, catches, &c.; father of Dean Hook and Theodore Edward Hook, the humorist.

Dr. A. H. Mann, organist of King's College, Cambridge, chorus-master of the Musical Festivals of 1902 and 1905.

Dr. Edward Miller, organist of Doncaster Parish Church; adapter of the hymn-tune 'Rockingham.'

George Perry, first conductor of the Sacred Harmonic Society (London); composer of an oratorio 'Elijah, and the Priests of Baal,' first performed at Norwich, March 12, 1819. What has become of the autograph score?

Samuel Porter, organist of Canterbury Cathedral.

Edward Taylor, one of the founders of the Norwich Musical Festival; Gresham Professor of Music.

Thomas Vaughan, distinguished tenor singer.

To the above list of worthy Norvicensians, musically famous, must be added the name of Miss Sarah Ann Glover (1785–1867), who invented the Tonic sol-fa notation. The system was first made public in a little book entitled 'Scheme for rendering psalmody congregational; comprising a key to the sol-fa notation of music, and directions for instructing a school,' first published by Messrs. Jarrold & Sons, at Norwich, in 1835. The book was issued anonymously because, said the fair authoress, 'It has been repugnant to my taste as a female and private individual to attach my name publicly to a treatise of any kind.' In connection with her 'Scheme,' Miss Glover says:

> Let singing become a branch of national education, not only in schools for the children of labourers and mechanics, but in academies for young ladies and gentlemen, and the main point will be attained towards rendering psalmody truly congregational. A very little practice well directed, would soon produce a sufficient degree of skill, to render this employment highly attractive to the pupils; while it would afford healthy recreation in the midst of sedentary pursuits: independent of this advantage, when it is considered to what sacred purpose vocal skill may be applied, it cannot surely be justly deemed unworthy the attention of the highest class of society.
> A new 'notation of music' has been contrived to facilitate the acquisition of musical science; besides answering this purpose with the unlearned, it may prove useful to the scientific, when combined with the usual notation by points, in promoting the practice of sol-fa-ing, so favourable to the production of accuracy in tune and so convenient to the practitioner who desires to avoid attaching sacred words to an air till all mechanical difficulty is surmounted.

In a letter addressed in 1866 to the late Rev. John Curwen, who developed the Tonic sol-fa notation, Miss Glover said: 'I think it was from Dr. J. Beckwith, my teacher, that I received the first idea of a relationship amongst the six related keys. He illustrated the subject to his young pupil in the following playful manner: C is the father of the family: A is the old lady; G is the elder son; F is the younger son; E is G's wife; D is F's wife.'

Coming to the present day, and in regard to 'Music for the people' during the winter months, Mr. F. Oddin Taylor writes:

> The Saturday popular concerts really started in 1881-82. In 1880 a new organ was placed by public subscription in St. Andrew's Hall, and as a result Dr. Bunnett was appointed organist to the Corporation. One condition of this appointment was that Dr. Bunnett had to give twenty-five organ recitals per annum. These were at first given on the afternoons of Saturday, but in 1887 a change was made, and the organ recital proper converted into an organ recital and concert.
> The concerts are managed by a committee, partly consisting of members of the Corporation and partly outsiders. I have been chairman of this committee since its formation. The attendance during the season—which commences the last week in October and ends the last week in April—averages between 15,000 and 20,000 persons. The season which has just concluded was an exceptionally good one, the attendance being over 19,000, an increase of nearly 6,000 on the previous year.
> The programme is instrumental and vocal, and many well-known London artists have appeared from time to time. The admission is 6d. (front seats), 2d. (back seats), and the concerts generally about pay their expenses, except the organist's salary, which is provided by the Corporation. Any deficiency is met by the Borough fund.
> Dr. Bunnett has been the life and soul of these concerts—taking all the organ work and accompanying the singers and instrumentalists. The committee, which is a specially musical one, decide on the artists and generally on the programme of the season. It is something to be proud of that the last season registers an attendance only exceeded once in twenty years.

The music of Norwich Cathedral formed a prominent feature of an illustrated article on the sacred edifice which appeared in The Musical Times of November, 1904.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

In considering the strictly musical associations of Westminster Abbey, attention may first be given to the organs of the venerable fane. They are mentioned as early as 1242, and some Bohemian travellers in 1466 spoke of the music as 'delightful to hear.' That the organs in olden times were portable instruments is shown by an entry in the accounts of St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, of the year 1508, which reads:

> 1508. For bringing the orgaynes of the Abbay into the church and bering them home agayne - ij*d*.

The late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, in his paper 'The English Medieval Organ,' read before the Archæological Society, March 1, 1888, said: 'Westminster Abbey had, at the time of the Dissolution (1539), ij payre of organes in the quyre and in the jhesus chapell a payer of Organys with a corten of lynen to cover them.'

Some notes on early organs in the Abbey which Sir Frederick Bridge has made and kindly placed at our disposal read as follows:

> The earliest records concerning the organ which I have discovered are two receipts of one 'John Howe, organ maker.' They are, I think, of 1558, the year of the accession of Queen Elizabeth. One of these contains the following items:
> Item. Payed for 2 skins of leather for to leather the bellows of the grate woden organs and leathering the sou boords
> Item. Payed for latten* wyre for to make springs for the grate bass and ten principalls.
> Item for sowder to sowder small pipes which were broken.
> Item for my fee for the tuning of the organs that stand in King Henry the VIIth's Chappel.
> Item for my fee for tuning the organs that standes over the quyre for a quarter ended now at Mychelmas.
> by me John Howe, organ maker.
> The above is interesting as showing that at one time there was an organ in Henry VIIth's Chapel, as well as in the Choir of the Abbey. The former had doubtless been used for celebrating mass during the reign of Queen Mary. Under Elizabeth the instrument was not allowed there, for I came across another payment to the organ-builder:
> Item to the said John Howe for takying downe the Organes in King Henry the VIIth's Chappell, mendyng the same and settyng up the same in the quyre and mendyng the other organes.

The above-mentioned John Howe may have been a relative of Thomas Howe, a distinguished organ-maker of the 16th century. He appears to have been suspected of Papacy, hence he was called 'Father Howe,' under which designation his name appears in the churchwardens' accounts of Lambeth:

> 1568. Paid to Father Howe for his fee for keeping the organes one year - - - - - i*s*.

To return to Sir Frederick Bridge's notes:

> In 1603 there were payments to Edward Hooper for the mending of the bellows and organs with tunings of them, and for 4 pairs of hingells (hinges) for the bellows, also for a shooting-plate for the organ loft door. Hooper was at that time organist of the Abbey, and like many old organ-builders—Father Smith, for instance—he both played the organ and built organs.
> George Pendleton, another organ-builder, comes upon the scene in 1605. His account includes such items as
> For 4 pounds of tynne to foote ye great bass pipe.
> To a porter to help carry the pipe to my house and back again after it was new footed.
> In this same year is another account of great interest; it reads thus:
> 20 die Martie 1605.
> Item to Pendleton for removing and tuning the Instrument against the funerall of the king's daughter - - - - - - - - - x*s*.
> This was no doubt the child of James I., who lies buried in the north aisle of Henry VIIth's chapel. The organ was evidently not very large, and was removed to be near the place of interment. The whole account is interesting, containing, as it does, such items as payments 'for hanging the Chappell with blacke.' In 1606 I think it is most probable that a new organ was built, as there is a payment to John Wright for taking down 'the ould orgayne loft.'

As the name of Dallam appears in the Abbey accounts for a period of about one hundred years, there seems little doubt that one or more members of that distinguished family of artificers built the organ upon which Orlando Gibbons, Blow, Purcell and Croft played. It stood on the north side of the church under the second arch west of the transept, as shown, though faintly, in the view on the opposite page. It is described by Dart as 'a stately organ gilt.' Certain repairs, costing something over £20, were made to the organ by John Burrard in 1625, the account for which is endorsed by Orlando Gibbons in these words, written shortly before his death:

> Mr. Ireland: I know this bill to be very reasonable for I have already cut him off ten shillings therefore I pray despatch him, for he hath delt honestly wth ye church soe shall I rest yr servant
> Orlando Gibbons.

This endorsement, addressed to the treasurer of the Abbey and containing the only known signature of Orlando Gibbons, was reproduced in facsimile in The Musical Times of August, 1904, p. 503.

At the restoration and during the organistship of Christopher Gibbons, son of the famous Orlando, the treasurer's accounts of the Abbey contain the following disbursements connected with the music of the church (1660-61):

To Christopher Gibbon (sic) in discharge of his Bill for Tuneing the Organs xx*s*. and to George Dalham for the same service 5*s*. in all this year - - - - - - -	i*li*. v*s*.
To James ffuller Blower of the Organs - -	ii*li*.
To John Hill for playing on the cornet in the Church - - - - - - - -	ii*li*. v*s*.
To Henry Purcell for Bookes of services for the choristers - - - - - - -	i*li*.

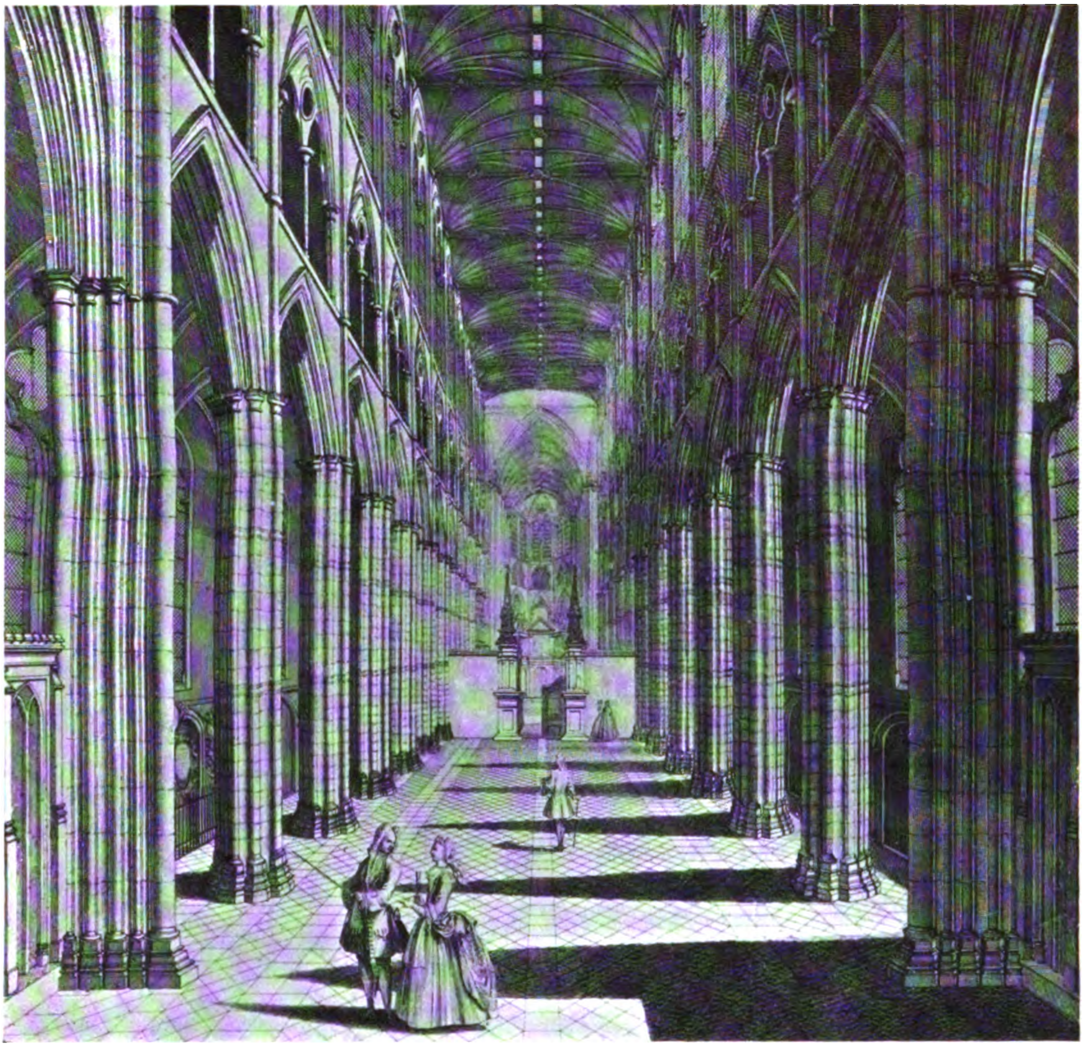
* Latten='a mixed metal of yellow colour either identical with or closely resembling brass.' (The Oxford English Dictionary.)



THE NAVE LOOKING EAST AND SHOWING THE POSITION OF THE ORGAN UNTIL 1730.

THE INSTRUMENT STOOD ON THE NORTH SIDE BEYOND THE SCREEN, AND PROJECTED BEYOND THE PILLARS, AS CAN FAINTLY BE SEEN IN THE ILLUSTRATION, WHICH IS FROM DART'S 'WESTMONASTERIUM' (1725).

From this it will be seen that the organist of that day tuned the instrument and that there was a cornet player. In the first half of the 17th century there are frequent payments to players on sackbutts. The Henry Purcell above-mentioned was the copyist of the Abbey and father of the great composer.

In the year 1694, during the organistship of Henry Purcell, Father Smith was employed to enlarge and improve the organ according to the following agreement preserved in the muniment room of the Abbey:

> An Agreement made between the Deane & Chapter of Westm^{r} & Bernard Smyth organist the 20th of July 1694.
> That in consideracion of the sume of 200*l* to be paid by the said Deane & Chapter to the said Bernard Smyth in mannere followinge vizt. 50*l* in hand 50*l* more upon the 28th day of November next 50*l* more upon the 28th day of May then next ensuinge & 50*l* more residue thereof upon the 21th of Nov. 1695.
> The said Bernard Smyth hath undertaken & doth hereby undertake, That by or before the 11th day of November next ensuinge the date hereof he the said Bernard Smyth shall & will now make the present Organ belonginge to the Deane and Chapter of Westm^{r} exceptinge the pipes & case & add thereto a double sett of keys & 4 new stops, vizt. one principall of mettle, one stop diapason of wood, one nason of wood & one fifteenth of mettle w^{ch} are to be added to the present organ by enlarginge the case backwards And that such pipes as are defective in the present organ shall be made good by the said Bernard Smyth & he is to compleate & finish the same by or before the 11th day of November next.
> And that when the said Organ is compleated & finished by the said Bernard Smyth; It is hereby agreed by & betweene the partyes abovesaid That the same shalbe viewed & approved of by Stephen Crespion Clerk Chauntor of the Collegiate [Church] of St. Peter in Westm^{r} and Henry Purcell gentl. organist of the said Church. And what defaults shalbe found by them or either of them in the composinge & makeing of the said organ shall be altered amended & made good by the said Bernard Smyth.

The following letter shows that Father Smith was not the only organ-builder who wanted a little money 'on account':

> To Mr. Needham, Receiver generall, Westr.
> Oct. 27, 1694.
> Sr—I have an uncle just dead that I cannot come down to you, but Mr. Smith the organ maker is a little put to it for money, & was to have had £50 in advance for mending our organ; but he hath need at present of no more than £20. If you please to see the order of Chapter about it, and can help him it will also oblige,
> Sr y^r very humble servant P. Birch.

In the year 1718 Father Smith's son-in-law and successor in his business, Christopher Schrider, or Schreider (possibly Schröder) appeared on the scene, as the following document, signed by Dr. Croft, bears testimony:

> A proposal of Chr^{pher} Shrider Organmaker
> The Salary for keeping the Organ in tune being but forty shillings p. annum, and no allowance for Cleaning and Repairing the same, and y^e said Organ being now much out of order, and severell of y^e stops wants mending; which if not soone Repair'd will be a great expence to the Dean and Chapter; Therefore I. Christopher Shrider do hereby propose: That if y^e Dean and Chapter will please to allow ten pound for mending and cleaning, and for putting y^e said Organ into good order; that being but a small sum for y^e. Repairs there wanting, and then to fix a salary of five pound p. annum, I will oblige my self to keep y^e Organ in order without any further charge to y^e Dean and Chapter for ten years, and for as many years afterwards as it is possible for any workman to keep it in order; the greatest part of y^e Organ being very old:
> Chr^{pher} Shrider.
> I believe this to be true and the proposalls very reasonable.
> W^m Croft.
> Decemb^r 1, 1718.

In 1727 Schrider built an organ specially for the coronation of George II., for which ceremony Handel composed his masterly coronation anthems. According to the following information, the King presented this instrument to the Abbey:

> The fine organ made by Mr. Schrieder, which was set up in Westminster Abbey, and used on the day of the Coronation, has been presented to the said Abbey by his Majesty. It is accounted one of the best performances of that maker. (British Journal, or the Censor, Feb. 10, 172$^{7}_{8}$.)

The swell was probably added to the organ by Abraham Jordan, its inventor, as a memorandum, formerly in the possession of the precentor, records that 'The new organ built by Mr. Shrider and Mr. Jordan was opened on the 1st of August, 1730, by Mr. Robinson; the anthem Purcell's 'O give thanks'—the 'Mr. Robinson' being the organist of the Abbey and composer of the well-known double chant in E flat. This Shrider-Jordan instrument was placed on the screen, as shown in the view on the opposite page. Its specification was as follows:

Great (12 stops).

	Pipes.		Pipes.
Open diapason	56	Fifteenth	56
Open diapason	56	Sexquialtera, three ranks	168
Stopped diapason	56	Mixture, two ranks	112
Principal	56	Cornet, to C ♯, five ranks	130
Flute	56	Trumpet	56
Twelfth	56	Clarion	56

Choir (5 stops).

Stopped diapason	56	Fifteenth	56
Principal	56	Cremona	56
Flute	56

Swell (4 stops).

Open diapason	32	Hautboy	32
Stopped diapason	32	Trumpet	32

Total, 1,322 pipes.

Compass, Great to Choir, GG, long octaves, with GG ♯, to d^3 = 56 notes.
Swell, Fiddle G to d^3 = 32 notes.

It is interesting to make a comparison between this modest organ—only four stops on the swell (to fiddle G), and no pedal organ—and the present five-manual instrument, of which the specification is given on p. 374.

An amusing epitaph 'On the celebrated Mr. Christopher Shrider' may be quoted: it appeared in T. Webb's 'A new select collection of Epitaphs,' 1775 (vol. ii., p. 76):

> Here rests the musical Kit Shrider,
> Who Organs built when he did bide here:
> With nicest Ear he tun'd 'em up;
> But Death has put the cruel Stop:
> Tho' Breath to others he convey'd,
> Breathless, alas! himself is lay'd.
> May he, who us such Keys has giv'n,
> Meet with St. Peter's Keys of Heav'n!
> His Cornet, Twelfth, and Diapason,
> Could not with Air supply his Weasand:
> Bass, Tenor, Treble, Unison,
> The Loss of tuneful Kit bemoan.

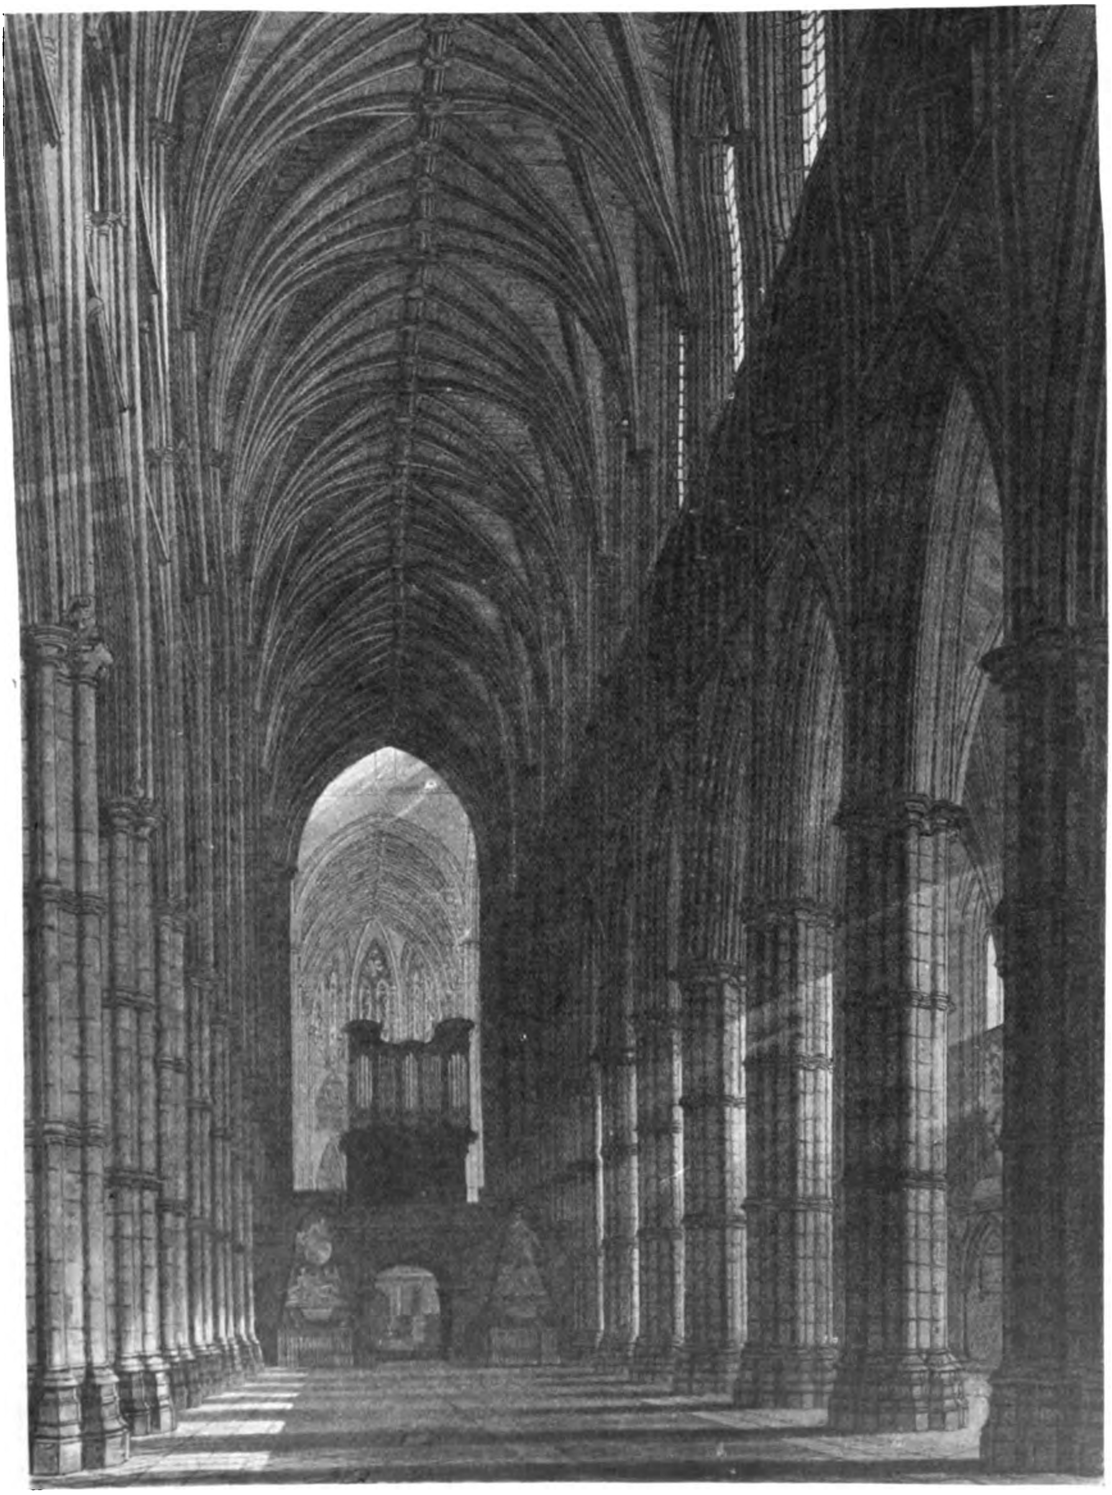
During the organistship of Dr. Benjamin Cooke—that is between 1762 and 1793—the celebrated organ-builder, John Avery, who began work about 1775, added thirteen unison pedal pipes (GG to Gamut G) to the Schrider-Jordan organ. These pedal pipes—open and of wood—although only unisons with the diapasons, were of such large dimensions as to produce the effect of a double diapason; it should be noted that there were no means of coupling these pedal notes to the manuals. It is possible that the organ in Westminster Abbey was one of the earliest instruments in England to have an independent pedal organ—such as it was! If it is true that Dr. Benjamin Cooke composed his well-known Service in G for the re-opening of the organ after the addition of Avery's pedal pipes, we can fix the year, 1778; because the autograph score of the Te Deum is dated 'July 11, 1778,' and the Jubilate 'July 23, 1778.' Later on Messrs. Elliott & Hill added 'pipes of double size, speaking down to GGG ($21\frac{1}{3}$ feet length).' In 1830 a Gothic case (compare the illustration on p. 373 with that on p. 375) replaced that of 1730, but the choir organ case, facing east, remained intact.



THE NAVE, SHOWING THE POSITION OF THE ORGAN FROM 1730 TO 1848.

FROM ACKERMAN'S 'WESTMINSTER' (1813), IN THE COLLECTION OF MR. JOHN S. BUMPUS.

This is not the only organ which Christopher Schrider built for the Abbey. A newspaper called The Old Whig, of December 15, 1737, states:

> They are putting up a gallery for King Henry the Seventh's Chapel, where an organ is to be built by Mr. Schrider, his Majesty's Organ-Builder, as fast as possible, for the performance of a solemn Anthem the night her Majesty is interred.

The 'solemn anthem' above-mentioned is the Funeral Anthem which Handel composed for the obsequies of Queen Caroline, to which reference has already been made in a former instalment of this article.

In the year 1847-48 important alterations were made in the Choir of the Abbey. New stalls were erected, the transepts were thrown open, and an organ, containing some of the old stops, was built by Messrs. Hill. Like its predecessor, this instrument was placed on the screen; but in order to obtain an uninterrupted view of the upper part of the Minster from one end to the other, the instrument was dispersed among three cases. That on the north contained the Great organ (CCC compass); on the south the Swell organ (CC compass); while the Choir organ (GG compass) had a pretty little case of its own placed over the arch of the screen. As at the present time, the player faced the north case. There were only two stops on the Pedal organ—a great open diapason 32 feet, and an open diapason 16 feet, the pipes lying along the organ loft transversely, from north to south, as, indeed, they do now. The Choir of the Abbey was re-opened for divine service on Easter Eve (April 22), 1848.

In 1884 Messrs. W. Hill & Son entirely rebuilt the organ, which was re-opened on May 24 of that year (Queen Victoria's birthday) by Sir Frederick (then Dr.) Bridge. Eleven years later a new Celestial organ—placed in the triforium of the south transept (Poets' corner) and played from a fifth manual—was added, the gift of the late Mr. A. D. Clarke in memory of his wife. The two handsome cases were designed by the late Mr. J. L. Pearson, R.A. The north case was erected as the result of the Purcell celebration in 1895: the south case, erected by the Dean and Chapter before the coronation of King Edward VII., contains the Arms of Purcell—three boars' heads.

The following is the specification of the organ as it now stands:

GREAT ORGAN (13 stops).

The Celestial Organ is placed in the triforium of the south transept, and is on Messrs. Hill's electric system, being connected with the console of the organ by a cable 200 feet in length. The main organ has pneumatic action throughout.

The entire instrument is blown by a gas engine, actuating a rotary blower and high pressure feeders.

Foremost among the musical festivals that have been held in Westminster Abbey is the Handel Commemoration in May and June, 1784. Although it anticipated his centenary by one year—Handel was born in 1685—the event worthily celebrated the hundredth anniversary of the composer's entry into the world. Joah Bates conducted a band and chorus of 525 performers, an organ was specially erected by Green at the west end of the church, and the receipts from the performances (including one concert given at the Pantheon, Oxford Street), amounted to £12,736 12*s.* 10*d.* The surplus (after paying all expenses), £7,286 6*s.* 6*d., was divided between the Royal Society of Musicians (£6,000) and Westminster Hospital (£1,000). King George III., who took a very practical interest in this Handel Commemoration, gave a donation of 500 guineas, and the event brought into existence that most interesting 'Account' of it written by Dr. Burney. Handel festivals were also held in the Abbey in 1785, 1786, 1790 and 1791. A proposal to hold one in 1788 was prohibited by the King, then in a bad state of health and drinking the waters at Cheltenham, the prohibition being on the ground that the Abbey music-making would endanger the Worcester Festival which his Majesty promised to attend and did so with the Queen. Fanny Burney, then in the Queen's entourage, has recorded her impressions of the Worcester meeting in her Diary. At the Handel Festival of 1791 Haydn was present and occupied a seat near 'the King's box' in the Abbey. At the Hallelujah Chorus, when all, with the King, rose to their feet, the old 'Papa' wept like a child and exclaimed with overwhelming emotion, 'He is the Master of us all!' In addition to the amount realized by the Commemoration of 1784, the receipts of these four subsequent Handel Festivals amounted to £51,000, the profits (£26,000) being distributed among the Royal Society of Musicians (£16,000), Westminster Hospital (£5,500), and St. George's Hospital (£4,500).

In the year 1834 a 'Royal Musical Festival,' which King William IV. and his Consort not only patronized but supported by their presence, was held in the Abbey. The music at the four performances—June 24, 26, 28 and July 1—was largely that of Handel, and an organ was specially erected by Gray. Sir George Smart conducted, and the organists were Vincent Novello, Bishop, Crotch, Knyvett, Attwood, Turle and Adams. Clara Novello, then a girl of sixteen—she is still living—was one of the soprano soloists and three others of the Novello family were bass singers in the chorus. Sterndale Bennett played a viola; the tenor section of the chorus included Henry Smart and William Spark; John Hullah and G. A. Macfarren sang bass. Miss Dickens, then a student at the Royal Academy of Music and a sister of the novelist, formed one of the 'cantos' in the semi-chorus, and among the 'masters' of the chorus 'cantos' we find the names of Boardman, Chipp, James Coward and John Hopkins. The band numbered 224 players, the chorus 316, and the semi-chorus 40 voices, a total, excluding soloists, of 580 performers. The punctiliousness of Sir George Smart, the conductor, is shown in his copies of the Festival word-books. He writes: 'Their Majesties [who, by the way, attended all the performances] did not come until ¼ past 12: we waited until their Majesties were seated and began by a signal from the directors' box at 17 m. past 12.' Again, after Part I: '2 m. stop, began 12 m. past 1.' Against the March from 'Judas Maccabæus' he writes: 'The side drum at rehearsal being too weak, we had 2 side drums at performance.' Notwithstanding the fact that all, except fourteen, of the performers were remunerated for their services, the net profits of this Festival in 1834 realized the large sum of £9,000. Would such a result be possible in the present day?

Celebrations in honour of Henry Purcell, the most distinguished of all the Abbey organists, were for many years annually held from 1837, when his anthems were sung at one of the services by members of the Purcell Club founded in 1836. The bicentenary of the composer's death was worthily celebrated at a Festival, in which an orchestra and large chorus took part, under the direction of Sir Frederick (then Dr.) Bridge, organist of the Abbey. Unlike Handel—who during his life enjoyed the privilege of listening to his own music in the stately fane wherein he was to sleep in death—Bach had to wait for 121 years after his death before he received his just due at Westminster. On the evening of Maundy Thursday (April 6), 1871, Bach's noble 'St. Matthew' Passion was sung, accompanied by a complete orchestra, under the direction of the late Sir (then Mr.) Joseph Barnby. Dr. (then Mr.) W. H. Cummings sang the tenor music with such pathos as to touch all hearts, Mr. C. S. Jekyll, then assistant-organist of the Abbey, was at the organ, and Mr. F. A. W. Docker accompanied the recitatives on the harmonium. In this connection the notice of the service—for it was an intensely interesting occasion—in THE MUSICAL TIMES of May, 1871, may be quoted:

> composition; for as Bach in all the music he wrote for the church, used the gifts of his Creator solely for the glorification of his religion, it is only in a sacred edifice that these fervent outpourings of his faith can be truly judged. The Passion-music is purely a religious service; and although the wondrous power displayed in it must be felt by every hearer, whatever may be its surroundings, the solemnity of the subject can only be fully appreciated where the mind has been previously disposed rather to devotion than enjoyment.

The Dean (Stanley) preached an eloquent sermon, in which he dwelt upon the true mission of music in elevating religious feeling, and especially as illustrating the sacred story of the Passion of our Lord. The last words of the notice read:

> We cannot conclude this notice without conveying our sense of gratitude to the Dean for his zeal and liberality in opening a sacred edifice for the admission of the purest sacred music, and for aiding in promoting that religious feeling which such music should inspire by exhorting his congregation to accept this offering of genius with the earnest devotion which prompted its author during its composition.

A second and only other performance of the Passion Music in Westminster Abbey was given, also under Barnby's direction, in the following year, on March 26, 1872, thirty-five years ago.

It would be difficult to exhaust the musical interests of Westminster Abbey. In addition to the famous organists, yet to be referred to, other good men and true deserve mention in connection with the music of the Minster. Consideration of the organists of the Abbey must be deferred till next month.

In the last instalment of this article (p. 300) it was inadvertently stated that Ben Jonson was buried in Poets' Corner: while his monument is in that part of the Abbey, his remains were interred in the north aisle of the nave.

MUSIC AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

By Herbert Thompson.

It is worthy of note that in the current exhibition of the Royal Academy of Arts—a title, by the way, which seems to imply that music is not one of 'the arts'—two of the most prominent works have music as their theme. Mr. Campbell Taylor's large picture, 'The Rehearsal,' apart from the fact that it is a work of exceptionally fine artistic quality and genuine distinction, deals with a musical subject in a fashion to which not even the musical expert can raise any objection. It is a quintet that is to be tried, a work apparently for strings and pianoforte. The leader is a middle-aged man with a sensitive face, wearing his hair à la Liszt, a fashion also adopted by the violoncellist—another admirable study. The second violin is a lady whose profile makes a keen and subtle silhouette against the dark background, and another lady, clad in the same kind of bell-shaped skirt, is at a rather old-fashioned grand pianoforte. The viola player is a sturdy figure, whose unromantic build and matter-of-fact expression serve as a foil to the more delicate types of his colleagues, and one can just picture his solid tone and steady, unimaginative performance of the humdrum part which was customarily given to viola players in the earlier chamber music. The appearance and dress of the musicians point to the first half of the nineteenth century, and the reality of the picture is such that one insensibly wonders what composition is about to engage their attention. The list of possible works for this particular combination of instruments is very limited, so far at least as the great composers are concerned. Neither Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert or Mendelssohn seems to have written a quintet for pianoforte and quartet of strings, so one likes to fancy this may be an early trial of Schumann's famous Pianoforte quintet, which was written, it will be remembered, in 1842. Berlioz, who made Schumann's personal acquaintance at Leipzig in the following year, heard the quintet, and made it known in Paris, and, as these musicians are not Teutonic types, we may, if we will, regard this as a rehearsal of Schumann's quintet by a party of French artists in the early forties. Most probably this is reading into the picture ideas which have never occurred to the painter, but it is a proof of the value of his art that it stimulates the fancy. One word on the purely æsthetic value of this painting may be added. Mr. Campbell Taylor has hitherto painted small cabinet pictures of eighteenth century interiors with consummate delicacy and refinement, so that it is the more surprising to find him filling a large canvas with life-size figures, and making one feel that the scale is justified. His sensitiveness of line and form is as great as ever, but he achieves the necessary breadth by his simple method—by the use of quiet spaces, and by the truth and sobriety of his tone.

* These lists are taken from Dr. W. H. Cummings's Biography of Purcell in 'The Great Musicians' Series.

The other work to which we referred is the popular picture of the year, but there is no need to sniff at it on that account, for Mr. Cadogan Cowper's painting of 'How the Devil, disguised as a vagrant troubadour, having been entertained by some charitable nuns, sang to them a song of love,' happens to be exceedingly well done, and is a keen and searching piece of work. It is what painters call 'tight' in handling, but its intensity gives it a force that avoids the mechanical, lifeless impression which such handling is apt to induce. It is a picture which requires no commentary, or rather, each spectator will have no difficulty in supplying his own commentary. One observation, however, we are tempted to make; the artist's reticence is shown in his abstaining from giving the pseudo-troubadour any of the customary diabolical attributes; his true character is revealed only in the impression he is producing on his audience.

Music has supplied a theme to Mr. Stanhope Forbes, whose 'Andante espressivo' is a rehearsal or performance of chamber music by musicians of a more recent time than in Mr. Taylor's picture, and Mr. Seymour Lucas shows, in 'The Roundelay,' that his long-continued interest in picturesque musicians has not left him. Mr. George Harcourt's large painting entitled 'At the harpsichord—my children' is connected with music only by the title and by the introduction of the instrument named, while Mr. Ernest Sichel makes a number of instruments (including the 'tinkling cymbal') an excuse for a highly-finished piece of still life. Mr. Blair Leighton's 'Tristram and Isolde' has but little of the passion of the story, and still less of the ardour of Wagner's music. Orpheus retains his suggestiveness to the artist, one of the principal things in the sculpture being Mr. J. M. Swan's fine bronze group, which is based on a motive he has used before, while Mr. Thornycroft has a bas-relief and Mr. Meteyard a painting dealing with the myth, and the spouse of Orpheus is the subject of a statuette by Mr. Harold Parker. Mr. Clement W. Jewitt exhibits a statuette entitled 'Music,' and one of the good things among the sculpture is Mr. Jahn's characteristic bust 'The chorister.'

In the way of portraiture Mr. Sargent's portrait of Lady Speyer holding her violin is most suggestive of a strong vitality and, to use an appropriate phrase, of brilliant bravura. Another musician portrayed is the Cavaliere Zaverthal, M.V.O., late bandmaster of the Royal Artillery band, who has been painted by Mr. Trevor Haddon.

Occasional Notes.

In a perfect work of musical art there is no absolute point of repose between the outset and the close. To make an entirely satisfying and complete close is to make what follows superfluous. The perfect management of such things, even in early stages of art, is much more subtle than it looks. A really great master so adjusts the relative degrees of movement and repose that each step has its perfect relation to the context and to the whole. Every discord must have its resolution; but, till the moment of complete repose which brings the work to conclusion, each resolution is only so far complete as to satisfy the mind partially. The problem is so complicated and delicate that it is quite beyond the powers of mere calculation; and its difficulty—combined with hundreds of other artistic problems of similar delicacy—accounts for the great length of time that human instinct has taken to arrive at the status of modern music.

C. HUBERT H. PARRY, in 'The Art of Music.'

The honorary degree of Doctor of Laws (LL.D.)—not that of Doctor of Music, as erroneously stated in our last issue, p. 307—was conferred on Sir Edward Elgar by the Western University of Pennsylvania at Pittsburg on April 13. Amongst others who were similarly honoured on that occasion were Prof. Sir Robert S. Ball, His Excellency Lieut.-General Alfred von Loewenfeld, Adjutant-General of the German Emperor, Sir William Henry Preece, and the Rev. Dr. E. S. Roberts, Master of Gonville and Caius College and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge.

There is no break between the scenes in Wagner's 'Rheingold,' and in this respect Richard Strauss in his 'Salome' has followed the example of his illustrious predecessor. The idea of continuous music seems to have caught on: it is said, for instance, that the young pianist Miccio Horszowski gives recitals of Beethoven sonatas in a similar manner. London audiences are beginning to understand that applause between the movements of a sonata is unbecoming, and, especially in some of Beethoven's sonatas, most disturbing; but to pass straight on from one sonata to another, and possibly in the case of an unsuitable juxtaposition of keys—as for instance between the 'Adieux' sonata in E flat and the following one in E minor—adding some intermediate chord or chords, is a foolish exaggeration of a design which even Wagner, with all his genius, did not convincingly prove to be a wise one.

Mr. Haydon Hare, organist of the Parish Church, Great Yarmouth, has been appointed chorus-master of the Norwich Musical Festival in succession to Dr. A. H. Mann, who has resigned that office. We hope to give a portrait of Mr. Hare in our July issue, together with a view of Great Yarmouth church and some information in regard to that spacious edifice.

An interesting book, entitled 'El oratorio musical,' has been published at Barcelona. The author, José Rafael Carreras y Bulbena, gives a résumé of the oratorio from the 16th century, when Animuccia wrote his Laudi spirituali, down to the present time. The names of Italian, German and French composers are fairly familiar; not so, however, those of Spanish nationality—Porsile, Pujol, Masevi, Figuera, Duran, Terradellas, Martinez, Puig, Casellas, Picanol and Andrevy; Belgium and England are not forgotten, but in the short notice of the work from which this information has been gathered no names are given for these countries.

The preliminary draft programme of the Gloucester Musical Festival (the 184th meeting of the Three Choirs) has just been issued. The following works, in the order of presentation, are to be performed:

CHORAL: Elijah; The Apostles and The Kingdom (Elgar); Christ in the Wilderness (a new work by Granville Bantock); The love that casteth out fear (Parry); Now shall the grace (Bach); Requiem (Verdi); Emmaus (Brewer); Hymn of Praise, and The Messiah.

INSTRUMENTAL: Symphony in C minor, No. 6 (Glazounov); Organ concerto (Horatio Parker): and Variations on the Chorale St. Antoni (Brahms).

The music to be performed at the opening service and the evening concert at the Shire Hall has not yet been selected, but at the latter a new orchestral work by Dr. F. H. Cowen will be produced. Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, organist of Gloucester Cathedral, will conduct the Festival, which is to take place on September 8, 10, 11, 12 and 13.

The Committee of Management of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival offer a prize of fifty guineas for the best setting of a prize libretto to be performed at the Festival in October, 1908. The judges are Mr. Granville Bantock, Mr. Frederick Delius and Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor. Full particulars as to the conditions of the competition can be obtained from the Honorary Secretary of the Festival, Mr. Frederic Oddin Taylor, St. Ethelbert's, Norwich.

A festival service is to be held in King's College Chapel, Cambridge, on the afternoon of June 11, when Elgar's oratorio 'The Apostles' will be performed under the direction of Dr. A. H. Mann. A choir of 200 selected voices will co-operate with the London Symphony Orchestra in presenting the work under the most favourable conditions, while the soloists will be Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss M. Gelland and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies. Full particulars as to tickets, &c., can be obtained from the honorary secretary, Mr. H. A. Chapman, 5, Trumpington Street, Cambridge.

The London Trio are to be congratulated not only upon the success of another series of chamber concerts, but that they have played all Beethoven's pianoforte trios (except the clarinet trio) in chronological order during the past season. In carrying out so commendable a tribute to the great master, the performers—Madame Amina Goodwin (pianoforte), Signor Simonetti (violin), and Mr. W. E. Whitehouse (violoncello)—have given reverent attention to the minutest detail of ensemble and technique due to these beautiful compositions. The programmes have also included trios by Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Smetana, Vincent d'Indy, Arensky and Rabe, in addition to duets and solos by other composers. The resumption of these enjoyable music-makings in November will be looked forward to with pleasure.

The Worshipful Company of Musicians offer various prizes, under the title 'Cobbett Musical Competition No. 2,' for the composition of a short Phantasie in the form of a string trio for violin, violoncello and pianoforte. The first-prize (given by Mr. W. W. Cobbett) is of fifty pounds; the second and third prizes (given by Mr. H. L. Sternberg) are of ten pounds each; and some 'Consolation prizes' will be given from a donors' fund provided by members of the Musicians' Company. Full particulars of the competition can be obtained from the Clerk to the Company, T. C. Fenwick, Esq., 16, Berners Street, W.

Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill announces a series of three concerts of chamber music to be given at Queen's (Small) Hall on the evenings of June 7, 14, and 21. According to the prospectus 'the special feature of these concerts will be the performance of British works (by the younger school of composers in particular), which, having been previously given with success, are generally considered worthy of a further hearing.' The experiment, to which we wish all success, will be watched with interest.

The list of works performed by the Municipal Orchestra of Bournemouth during the season 1906-7 again bears testimony to the enterprise and enthusiasm of Mr. Dan Godfrey, the conductor of those excellent concerts. The 'Summary' of the season's operations reads:

Total number of works performed - - -	238
Works performed for the first time, &c. - -	57
Of the new works, British composers supplied -	30
Total works by British composers, old and new -	47

British composers have every reason to be grateful to Mr. Godfrey for the attention he gives to their creations. The following gentlemen personally conducted their own works at Bournemouth: Mr. York Bowen, Mr. T. A. Burton, Mr. A. von Ahn Carse, Mr. G. H. Clutsam, Mr. Edward German, Mr. Percy Godfrey, Dr. J. W. C. Hathaway, Mr. Joseph Holbrooke, Mr. Algernon Lindo, Dr. J. Lyon, Sir A. C. Mackenzie, Mr. Landon Ronald, Sir C. V. Stanford, Mr. Reginald Steggall, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor and Mr. R. H. Walthew.

Canon Sydney Smith and Mr. C. H. Spurgeon were ecclesiastically the poles asunder, but as parson-punsters there was not much to choose between them. An instance of the ready wit of the famous Baptist preacher is recorded by one who knew him intimately. On one occasion the Precentor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle (where there is no organ) was singing tunes in the vestry for Mr. Spurgeon to select from. 'What is the name of that tune?' asked the pastor. Upon being told that it was 'Redhead,' he turned to a red-haired gentleman who was present and said: 'Brother, here is your tune, it is Redhead.' 'No, sir,' said the gentleman, 'you should say golden.' Whereupon Mr. Spurgeon immediately replied: 'Well, if I say golden, I must also say eighteen carats.'

The death of Mr. James Shaw, referred to in another column, recalls a coincidence in connection with the organistship of Hampstead Parish Church which he held for twenty-one years. Immediately on the first appearance of the late Dr. Temple, as Bishop of London, in the pulpit of that church, the choir commenced to sing 'Where high the heavenly Temple stands,' a most appropriate apostrophic utterance, considering the tall form of the Bishop, though the choice of the hymn was purely accidental.

At the special request of Prof. Georg Schumann the Kaiser has placed at the disposal of the New Bach Society the sum of £400, drawn from the imperial treasury, for the maintenance of Bach's birth-house at Eisenach.

Places bearing the names of orchestral instruments—are any such to be found? Yes: there is Great Hautbois, in Norfolk; Trumpet, near Ledbury; Drum, in Co. Monaghan; Triangle, near Halifax; and on London's northern heights there is Hornsey (Horns in C)!

A country newspaper—we always withhold the name in making these little exposures—in recording an organ recital, says 'the performance was brought to a close with the March in Handel's chorus "Lift up your heads," from the Messiah, composed by Guilmant.'

A newspaper published in a cathedral city mentions a tenor singer 'who accompanied that great divan Madame Adelina Patti on her recent American tour.' From the letter point of view 'divan' is not so far incorrect, and certainly not if applied to Tonic Sol-faists, who are devotees of the soh-fah.

A correspondent, writing from a northern suburb, says: 'The following announcement recently appeared on a church notice-board in this district:

A firm of London music publishers has received a request from a lady for 'a catalogue of their cheap music, both circular and sacred.'

Composed in the year 1867 for the Choir of St John's Maddermarket Church, Norwich.

FACSIMILE OF THE OPENING BARS OF 'BUNNETT IN F' IN THE AUTOGRAPH OF THE COMPOSER.

DR. EDWARD BUNNETT.

Bunnett in F! Who has not heard, or heard of, this setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis? Considering that 365,000 copies have been sold since its first publication, in September, 1869, there is only one answer to this question. And the above number, large as it is, does not include copies of the Tonic Sol-fa notation, or the various collections of anthems, festival books, &c., in which the service has been printed 'by permission.' The origin of 'Bunnett in F' will be stated later: in the meantime, some biographical information concerning the composer.

Dr. Edward Bunnett was born at Shipdham, Norfolk—a village about eighteen miles from Norwich—on June 26, 1834. Having lost in his early childhood both parents, he was 'brought up' by his grandfather, a lover of music and a capable violinist. Even at the age of three the boy had such a gift of absolute pitch that he could name any note that was sounded, and when six years old he could play the second violin part in Corelli's sonatas. One of his earliest recollections of the grandeur of music was at the Norwich Musical Festival of 1842, at which Prof. Taylor conducted Spohr's 'Fall of Babylon,' its first performance. On that occasion Master Bunnett, then eight years old, stood on the plain outside St. Andrew's Hall eagerly listening to the strains which made their way through the windows of the building.

In 1842 Edward Bunnett became a chorister of Norwich Cathedral under the famous Dr. Zechariah Buck. As he possessed a beautiful voice and was a good reader, he soon attained to the distinction of solo boy; moreover, he speedily gained a reputation as a concert-singer. One of Dr. Bunnett's treasures is the programme of a concert given at Norwich on January 23, 1849, at which he sang the second soprano part of Mendelssohn's 'Lift thine eyes' (Elijah) with Jenny Lind and Sainton Dolby—his name, 'Master Bunnett' being sandwiched between that of the Swedish 'Nightingale' and the great English contralto. At this concert Piatti was one of the three violoncellists, Mr. Gaul, father of Mr. A. R. Gaul, played the second trumpet, and Mr. Howlett, Junr., appeared in the word-book as 'Tunist.' On her previous visit to Norwich —in September, 1847—Jenny Lind attended a service in the cathedral, when three choristers—E. Bunnett, G. Cartwright and Archibald Mann—sang Spohr's trio 'Jesus, heavenly Master' with 'a purity of expression which moved her to tears.' So great, indeed, was the effect produced upon her by the fresh young voices, that she afterwards told the precentor 'she could never forget the boys' singing,' and 'old Buck,' the organist and masterful trainer of boys' voices, was delighted when she told him that she had 'never heard children sing so well.' One of the greatest treats of Dr. Bunnett's life was when he and his fellow choristers who had sung Spohr's trio, went by invitation to the Palace to repeat it, so that Jenny Lind, then a guest of the Bishop's, might hear it again. Jenny Lind then sat down at the pianoforte and sang some of her Swedish melodies with infinite charm, accompanying herself.

Even before his voice broke, Master Bunnett officiated at the cathedral organ as deputy for his master, Dr. Buck, to whom he was in due time articled. In 1855, on the expiration of his articles, he entered into partnership with Dr. Buck, a professional arrangement which lasted for twenty-two years, during which time he ably discharged practically the chief duties of cathedral organist. In 1877, on the resignation of Buck, the subject of this sketch naturally thought that he would be appointed organist to the cathedral with which he had been connected for thirty-five years. But this was not to be. The disappointment which he naturally felt was softened by the many expressions of sympathy he received from friends far and near, especially the citizens of Norwich. At a complimentary concert to him, held in St. Andrew's Hall on November 28, 1877, Benedict came specially from London to conduct and to play with Dr. Bunnett Moscheles's 'Hommage à Handel,' arranged for two pianofortes. At a luncheon given by the mayor, Dr. Bunnett was presented with an illuminated address and a purse of gold containing £130, the proceeds of the concert. An equally gratifying event took place in 1895, when Dr. Bunnett celebrated the jubilee of his musical life. On that occasion he was presented with a cheque for £280, subscribed to by the mayor and citizens of Norwich, the county gentry and others.

To return to some incidents in Dr. Bunnett's career. His appointment—which he has just resigned—of organist to the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festivals began with the meeting of 1872, but his connection with the festival extends back to 1845, when he sang as a chorister, and in some capacity or other he has taken part in every festival since that year. In 1877 he was appointed organist of St. Peter Mancroft Church, Norwich, an office he still holds. Three years later the post of Corporation organist was created for him, the duties of which he continues to discharge with zeal and efficiency. The 'Saturday Popular Concerts,' in which as Corporation organist he plays so important a part, are referred to in the article on 'Norwich and its musical associations' (p. 369). Dr. Bunnett has been in constant request for 'opening' organs in East Anglia, and he has given many recitals in various parts of the kingdom. When the new organ in the cathedral was opened in 1899, he was specially invited by the Dean and Chapter to give two recitals, a pleasant instance of letting bygones be bygones. For twenty-one years, from 1872, he conducted the Norwich Musical Union, and for six years, 1890-96, during the summer months, he directed a series of concerts on Lowestoft pier.

It is just fifty years since Dr. Bunnett took his degree of Bachelor of Music at Cambridge, being the first candidate who passed during the Professorship of Sir Sterndale Bennett; twelve years later (in 1869) he proceeded to the degree of Doctor of Music, on which occasion his 'exercise,' entitled 'Song of Praise,' was performed in Trinity College Chapel, conducted by Prof. Bennett, with the composer at the organ. In 1870 he became a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists: he is now a member of the Council.

Although Dr. Bunnett never saw Mendelssohn, he records an interesting anecdote concerning the composer and his contribution to English church music:

> Shortly after the performance of 'Elijah' at Birmingham in 1846, which Mendelssohn conducted, he completed his Te Deum in A. As he was very anxious to fall in with the English style of service, our Precentor of the Cathedral went to town by appointment to meet Mendelssohn, who played over the Te Deum to him. After having made some suggestions the Precentor returned to Norwich, and gave us (I was at that time a chorister) an account of his visit to Mendelssohn, and the composer's reading and speed of the music, &c. I believe we were the first choir to introduce this service into English cathedrals: it was a very great favourite with us.

In regard to composition there can be placed to Dr. Bunnett's credit the following works:

Manuscript: Adagio, allegro, andante and rondo for pianoforte and orchestra (1863); Sonata for pianoforte and violin (1867); Pianoforte trio (1873), performed by Sainton, Edward Howell and the composer; Serenade and rondo for pianoforte and small orchestra (1874); 'Lora,' cantata for solo voices, chorus and orchestra (1876), composed expressly for the Musical Union Society and performed by them; Inauguration ode (1878), composed for and performed at the opening of an Art Loan Exhibition for the restoration of St. Peter Mancroft Church; Jubilee ode (1887), composed for and performed at a concert of the Musical Union Society; in addition to his exercises for the degrees of Bachelor and Doctor of Music.

Printed: Church Services, Anthems, Christmas Carols (five sets), Part-songs, and Songs.

At the age of sixteen Dr. Bunnett began the formation of his musical library, which occupies no inconsiderable place in the house—beautifully situated in the Close, with a view of the cathedral—in which he has lived for fifty-two years. He started his collection with a folio copy of the 'Messiah' which he bought for half-a-guinea, a considerable outlay for a chorister. He subsequently purchased a copy of Boyce's Cathedral music, three volumes, original edition, with splendid margins, for the same amount, ten shillings and sixpence! The collection is particularly rich in English periodicals devoted to music, of which there are over 500 bound volumes on the shelves of his music-room.

In reply to a request for the history of his well-known Evening Service in F, Dr. Bunnett says: 'Forty years ago I was choirmaster of St. John's Maddermarket Church in this city (Norwich). It was a mixed choir of ladies and gentlemen. We wanted something better than a chant for the evening Canticles, and at that time there was nothing between a chant and a cathedral service. To supply this want I wrote the service which has become so popular. It was not, however, till two years after I had composed the service that I sent it to Messrs. Novello asking them to purchase the music. Acting upon the opinion of their musical adviser, they returned my manuscript. I then published the Service (at Novello's) on my own account, a course which I have had no cause to regret, as since its publication in September, 1869, 365,000 copies have been sold, and this is exclusive of the Tonic Sol-fa edition, and of those collections of anthems, special service books, &c., for which I have given permission for its insertion.'

Bunnett in F has had many imitators, but this simple setting of the evening canticles still holds the field: it supplied a want, and the man who embraced the opportunity is the veteran and esteemed musician of Norwich, Dr. Edward Bunnett.

ST. PETER MANCROFT CHURCH, NORWICH.

The church of St. Peter Mancroft, of which Dr. Bunnett has been organist for thirty years, is one of the most interesting of the many churches for which Norwich is famous. Originally founded in 1080 by Ralf de Guader, Earl of Norfolk, the present edifice dates from 1430 when it was rebuilt in the Perpendicular style and consecrated in 1455. Its noble tower, 100 feet high, contains a splendid peal of bells second to none in the country, the tenor bell weighing 43 cwt. In length 196 feet, greatest width 98 feet, the height of the church from the floor to the apex of the roof is 60 feet, and the seating accommodation is for 1,000 worshippers.

On entering the church one cannot help being struck with the fine tower arch, the clerestory windows thirty-four in number, the beautiful open timber roof ornamented with fan groining, and the ancient glass in the East window. Of special interest is the font with its massive cover of 15th century work and the tapestry near it, of the date 1573 and said to be Flemish, formerly the altar piece. The sacristy, east of the altar, is no less interesting, as are also the following:

> A fine inlaid table, temp. Charles I., formerly the sounding-board over the pulpit.
> A ringers' jug, of Norwich pottery, dated 1749, and holding 36 pints.
> Case containing 13th century illuminated manuscript of St. Paul's Epistles with glossary, of great value; and a manuscript copy of the Vulgate, 1340, beautifully written on extremely fine vellum.
> A 15th century treasury chest, containing the Church Registers in twenty-one volumes, complete from 1538.
> A picture of 'The Thorn in the Flesh,' a quaint conception of a toad-like devil piercing St. Paul's leg. This very curious picture, said to be English, is of early 17th century work.
> A curious carved alabaster panel of female saints, found by a sexton in the churchyard when digging a grave; said to be part of the original altar-piece.
> Portrait of Sir Thomas Browne—one of the three originals that exist—author of Religio Medici, and a famous native of Norwich.

The church plate, said to be the finest possessed by any one church in England, consists of seventeen pieces, of which three cups, two covers, and one paten belong to the Tudor period, including the superb Gleane cup, presented to the church in 1633 by Sir Peter Gleane, an eminent Norwich merchant. There is also a small pre-Reformation thistle-shaped cup with cover surmounted by a Roman soldier, the only piece of plate known with the date letter 1543.

An organ was erected in the church in 1707, when the organist's salary was £20. On February 3, 100$^{7}_{8}$, the Vestry agreed

> That the rents of the parish houses (not otherwise appropriated) shall be applyed for the payment of the minister's wages and of the organist's wages till another better expedient be found out.

The first recorded organist seems to have been Mr. William Pleasants (or Pleasant), elected in 1708. He died in October, 1717, and is buried under the west arch (tower) of the church. There is a service by him in an old book in the cathedral. He may have been a descendant of Thomas Pleasants, organist of the cathedral from 1670 to 1689. The next organist of St. Peter Mancroft was Humphry Cotton, who became organist of the cathedral in 1721. Later on the post was held by three Beckwiths in succession—Edward, from 1780 to 1794; Dr. John ('Christmas') 1794 to 1809; and his son John Charles, 1809 to 1819. From 1807 to 1819 two Beckwiths in succession held the organistship of the cathedral as well as that of St. Peter Mancroft, in which church they are both buried. Dr. Beckwith, who was an exceedingly able man apart from his musicianship, was the author of an important contribution to the history of the pointed psalter (see The Musical Times of March, 1903, p. 174). Dr. Beckwith was succeeded by Alfred Pettet, who held the office from 1819 till his death in 1837. Pettet compiled 'Original Sacred Music,' a collection of psalms, hymns, and anthems composed expressly for the work by Attwood, Crotch, Goss, Horsley, Wesley and others. To him succeeded a Mr. Critchfield and Mr. James Harcourt; on the resignation of the latter, in 1877, Dr. Bunnett was appointed and still holds the office.

DR. ARMES.

Dr. Philip Armes has just resigned the organistship of Durham Cathedral, to which he was appointed on November 14, 1862. He retires with the title of honorary organist of the cathedral he has served so well for forty-four and a half years, and with the best wishes of his friends for the enjoyment of many years of happiness. Dr. Armes—of whom a biographical sketch appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of February, 1900—will continue to discharge the duties of Professor of Music in the University of Durham.

THE DEAN OF WESTMINSTER ON CHURCH MUSIC.

At a festival of South London choirs, held at Southwark Cathedral on May 16, the Dean of Westminster preached an eloquent sermon, in the course of which he said:

English people were lacking in the sense of adoration. It was more difficult to praise than to pray. Prayer sprang to the lips of many a man in his distress who had never thought of praising God at any time. We, in England, had hymns which we ought to recognise to the full, for the Church of England stood for intelligible worship. The Jewish psalm and the ancient Christian hymn were full of praise. Their language was often too lofty for our sluggish souls, but they formed a kind of ladder by which we could climb at least a little way. By adapting their language to ourselves we might gradually attain to a habit of worship. The Church with her service was a school of worship. Moreover, we were reminded that night that we had an aid to adoration in music; for since our service was rendered in our mother tongue we had been at work upon its musical adornment and interpretation. Not content with claiming much of the old traditions, we had distinctly Anglican music.

We had sought to commend our worship to the simplest mind and to the most highly cultivated. We had not been ashamed of the popular melody, and we had, on the other hand, elaborated our cathedral music—at once stimulating and keeping pace with the modern musical problem, and so we had all experienced the elevating power of a great hymn of praise, and some of us had learned to rise to high levels of adoration. It was to be hoped that those who were responsible for our church music would bear in mind that their first duty was to help men to praise God better, and to inspire them with a sense of corporate worship.

ORGANIST AND FIRE-ENGINE MAN.

Mr. Monk Gould, of Southsea, writes:

Referring to your interesting 'Occasional Note' in the May issue of The Musical Times on Easter Vestry Meetings, and of one held at Rye in 1857, when the late 'Mr. Charles Thomas was appointed by the churchwardens organist and superintendent of the fire-engines, &c.,' I think I can throw light on the matter if you will kindly allow me a little space.

The old parish church of Rye—a very interesting and spacious building—has two large side chapels, and in one of these the fire-engines were formerly stored, and placed immediately behind the organ. Mr. Charles Thomas combined with the profession of organist the management of the local gasworks and the business of a tailor, and moreover he was a man of considerable standing and repute in the old borough. The fire-engines being under the control of the churchwardens, they doubtless considered their trusty organist to be a fit and proper person to superintend them.

I knew Mr. Thomas well, and my first organ appointment, as a lad of fourteen, was to succeed him as organist of the church on his resignation in 1872. The organ was an old two-manual instrument by a builder named Eagles. It had G manuals and C pedals. The swell extended only to Tenor C, the remaining notes below being permanently coupled to the Great, the effects sometimes produced when playing on the soft Swell and full Great being startling!

As illustrating the performances of my predecessor, one of my earliest recollections as a small boy may be of interest. The organ-blower performed close to the organ stool, following the words of the hymns, and singing them lustily at the same time. Shortly before the conclusion of the last verse it was his custom to indicate the same to the organist—who, disdaining a hymn-book, had plodded steadily through the tune several times—by remarking in a voice audible enough to be heard all over the church, 'H-amen now!'

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

The opening lecture of the extended scheme of lecture-meetings was given by Sir Walter Parratt at Park Hall, Cardiff, on April 25, Sir Frederick Bridge in the chair. The subject was the important one of 'Organ arrangements.' A very large audience assembled to listen to the College President's able address. Its general tone was entirely in the direction of a wise selection of arranged music likely to be effectively rendered by a well-considered presentation on the organ, and set forth by sympathetic tone-colour treatment. Sir Walter played his own illustrations with masterly skill upon the fine organ in the hall.

After the lecture members and friends of the College dined together under the presidency of Mr. G. G. Beale, organist of Llandaff Cathedral, Sir Walter Parratt being received with enthusiasm as the honoured guest of the evening.

The first Annual Report (1907) of the Church Music Society has been issued, from which it appears that 414 members have joined the Society since its foundation on March 20, 1906; of these eleven are life members, 148 subscribing members and 255 acting members. In addition to the publications of the Society, the committee has issued a first list of recommended services, and a first list of recommended anthems, &c., is in course of preparation.

Mr. R. B. Woodward, for nearly forty-seven years organist and choirmaster of St. Helen's Parish Church, Lancashire, has retired from that office, closing his long career there on Sunday evening, April 28.

A very satisfactory rendering of Brahms's 'Requiem' was given in the nave of Canterbury Cathedral on May 2, under the able direction of Dr. Perrin, organist of the cathedral. The soloists were Miss Florence Holderness and Mr. S. Dyson (lay clerk); the orchestra, led by Mr. C. Gunn, numbered about fifty performers and the chorus consisted of about 150 voices; there was a very large congregation. The service music included a new and effective orchestral work entitled 'Overture di Chiesa,' composed by Dr. Perrin; Sullivan's unaccompanied chorus 'O gladsome light' and two excerpts from Haydn's 'Creation' also were performed.

A special musical service was held at Portsmouth Parish Church on the evening of Ascension Day, under the direction of Mr. R. H. Turner, organist of the church, who gave a short organ recital. A special feature of the service was the valuable co-operation of the band of the Portsmouth Division of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, under the conductorship of Lieut. George Miller, M.V.O.

Reviews.

Modern Organ Accompaniment. By A. Madeley Richardson. [Longmans, Green, & Co.]

No fault can be found with the aim of this book, but much of its subject-matter is, to say the least, unsatisfactory from a devotional point of view. We refer to the extraordinary manner in which Dr. Richardson has treated the tune 'Melcombe,' and set it forth as a model of what may be done to other tunes. This 'ornamentation'—save the mark—consists of repetitions of chords, arpeggios, chromatic little runs, and similar vulgar distortions of a dignified tune that are nothing short of repulsive. If this kind of accompaniment to simple hymns is considered desirable, then reverence will be scattered to the four winds. There is more than one indication that 'Modern organ accompaniment' has been hurriedly written and without due consideration of its effect on organists who do not fully realize the sacredness of their office. The musical examples are far from being correct, and the style is not above reproach. Purged of what we consider its dangerous features and thoroughly revised, this manual might serve some useful purpose, but in its present form there are many pages that are disappointing from more than one point of view. Artistic restraint, not restless excess, is to-day much needed in accompanying the music of divine service.

Six Songs for soprano or tenor (Op. 6). English translations by Felix Mansfield; music by Johannes Brahms. Edited by Alberto Randegger. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

As the opus number implies, these half-dozen songs are among the early compositions of Brahms, but they are none the less acceptable on that account. The gem of the set is, perhaps, No. 2, 'Spring' (Der Frühling), a delightfully melodious and invigorating strain that is full of charm. This song has some worthy companions, and the collection is one that should find acceptance with amateurs and professional vocalists who can appreciate a good thing. Mr. Randegger has discharged his editorial duties with his well-known aptitude, and Mr. Felix Mansfield has furnished a singable English text, though the German words also are given for those who prefer the original settings. It is a pity that the names are not given of the two ladies—Louise and Minnie Japha—to whom Brahms dedicated these songs. In this connection it is of interest to know that immediately they were published, Schumann forestalled the composer by presenting the young ladies with a copy of the work, on which he wrote: 'Den Fräulein Japha, zum Andenken an das Weihnachtsfest, 1853, als Vorbote des eingentlichen Gebers. R. Schumann'—(To the Misses Japha, in remembrance of the Christmas Festival, 1853, as forerunner of the real giver. R. Schumann.)

ROYAL OPERA.

The grand opera season at Covent Garden commenced on April 30 with 'Das Rheingold,' the succeeding sections of the 'Ring' being given May 1, 3 and 6. A second cycle began on May 8 and terminated on May 14. The performances, given under the conditions that prevail at Bayreuth, were conducted by Dr. Richter. The most memorable feature was the superb rendering of the orchestral portion, which was remarkable for perfect balance of tone, finish, and significant accentuation of the principal motive. Several finer exponents of the principal characters have been heard at Covent Garden, but in some instances the impersonations were all that could be desired, notably by Mr. Van Rooy as Wotan in the second cycle of the 'Ring'; Madame Kirkby Lunn as Fricka, Waltraute and Erda, and Mr. Knüpfer as Hunding. Brünnhilde was embodied in both cycles by Madame Gulbranson, who sang and acted in a manner that testified to intimate acquaintance with the part, if with some deficiency in distinction. Madame Fleischer-Edel and Madame Egli were respectively satisfactory exponents of Sieglinde and Gutrune. In the second cycle of the 'Ring,' Siegmund was personated by Mr. Cornelius, a new-comer with a fairly musical tenor voice, who sang pleasingly. An excellent impression was made by another new-comer, Mr. Bechstein, who accentuated the humorous element in the character of Mime. Mr. Zador was one of the fiercest exponents of Alberich that have been seen in England; Mr. C. Whitehill gave a dignified impersonation of Wotan in the first cycle; Mr. Jörn repeated his intelligent embodiment of Loge, and other members of the cast were Messrs. Stockhausen, Nietan, Krauss and Raboth. The Rhine-maidens' music has never been more beautifully sung than by Madames Agnes Nicholls, Fiebiger and Tolli, who, with Mesdames Gleeson-White, Edna Thornton, G. Lonsdale and Maud Santley, also sang as the Valkyries. Notable advance was shown in the scenic effects and stage management, but the dragon was a poor fighting beast.

In connection with the 'Ring' performances, two interpretations were given, respectively on May 16 and 22, of 'Die Meistersinger,' commencing, for the first time in England, at 5 p.m. In these Mr. Van Rooy repeated his superb embodiment of Hans Sachs, Mr. Jörn sang acceptably as Walther, Miss Hempel gave a vivacious but somewhat ordinary reading of Eva, Mr. Geis was amusing as Beckmesser, Mr. Knüpfer sang splendidly as Pogner, and Mr. Bechstein and Madame Tolli appeared respectively as David and Magdalene. Dr. Richter conducted, and again the excellence of ensemble was a memorable feature.

On the third night of the season—May 2—was performed, for the first time in England with German text, Mozart's one-act operetta 'Bastien und Bastienne,' composed in 1768, when he was twelve years of age. The libretto, by Weiskern, is an adaptation of Madame Favart's parody of Rousseau's operetta 'Le Devin du Village,' which for some time after its production enjoyed extraordinary popularity. Mozart's music is as simple as the story, but it is graceful and contains many touches indicative of the master's style, the work herein possessing its chief musical interest. Miss Hempel sang pleasingly as Bastienne, and the other two characters, Bastien, the fickle lover, and Colas, the worldly-wise doctor, were respectively well played by Mr. Nietan and Mr. Zador. Mozart's quaint little work was followed by a revival of Humperdinck's delightful fairy opera 'Hänsel und Gretel,' in which the parts of the children were vivaciously sustained by the Misses Fiebiger and Hempel. Madame Reinl was admirable as the Witch, Mr. Zador and Madame Tolli did justice to the parts of the father and mother, and the songs of the Dew-man and Sand-man were beautifully sung by Miss Hatchard and Madame Edna Thornton. It should be noted that both the above works were conducted by Mr. Percy Pitt, who also directed the rendering of Nicolai's 'Die Lustigen Weiber von Windsor,' mounted on May 7, the cast consisting of Mesdames Hempel, Tolli and Fiebiger respectively as Mrs. Ford, Mrs. Page, and Sweet Anne Page, and Messrs. Knüpfer, Zador, Raboth, Jörn, Bechstein and Stockhausen severally as Falstaff, Ford, Page, Fenton, Slender, and Dr. Caius. The reading of the work, with the exception of the part of Mrs. Ford, seemed somewhat heavy to English students of Shakespeare, but it was not without humour and possessed musical excellencies.

Puccini's 'La Bohême' was given, under the conductorship of Mr. Campanini, on May 15. The cast included the first appearances this season of Messrs. Caruso, Scotti, Marcoux and Gilibert, who impersonated the four students, Madame Donalda as the consumptive heroine and Miss Zeppilli as the irrepressible Musetta. Mr. Caruso, who was in splendid voice, sang the sentimental music of Rodolfo with a fervour that excited the liveliest enthusiasm of his compatriots. Two nights later he appeared as the casual lieutenant in 'Madama Butterfly,' Miss Destinn making her rentrée and repeating her intensely pathetic embodiment of Cio-Cio-San. The characters of Sharpless and Suzuki were respectively sustained by Mr. Scotti and Madame Lejeune, the four principal parts thus being played by the same exponents as on the first performance of the work at Covent Garden on July 10, 1905.

Tannhäuser was performed on May 20, when Madame Fleischer-Edel gave an attractive embodiment of Elizabeth. Miss Destinn appeared for the first time here as Venus, giving a reading of the part notable for dignity, and Madame Agnes Nicholls sang delightfully as the Shepherd. Mr. Knote acted with distinction as Tannhäuser, but sang with the hardness of tone of the typical German tenor. Messrs. Knüpfer and Whitehill respectively appeared as Hermann and Wolfram, and the remainder of the cast consisted of Messrs. Nietan, John Harrison, Frederic Austin and Raboth. Dr. Richter conducted, and secured a very fine ensemble. Madame Melba made her rentrée as Mimi in 'La Bohême' on May 21, with her customary success. The remainder of the cast was the same as at the previous performance.

London Concerts.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

A symphonic poem entitled 'Cleopatra' was the first number in the programme of the concert at Queen's Hall on May 16. It is by Mr. G. W. Chadwick, a prominent American composer, of whom Mr. Louis C. Elson in his 'History of American Music' declares that 'he deserves laudation for avoiding the demon of cacophony which has run rampant in some modern music.' If the tone-poem is a fair specimen of his art-work, that praise is well deserved. The title 'Cleopatra' points in the direction of programme-music, but the work can be heard and judged as 'abstract' music, to use a convenient if not very consistent term. Mr. Chadwick, as a pupil of Jadassohn and Rheinberger, did not neglect the study of counterpoint, and in the symphonic poem under notice there are many proofs of his scientific knowledge. The performance under Dr. F. H. Cowen was first-rate.

Mischa Elman played the Beethoven Violin concerto. His faultless technique has almost ceased to cause astonishment, but the breadth, nobility and feeling with which he interprets the music of the great master still remains a wonder. The vocalist was M. Felix Senius, who in 'Un aura amorosa' from Mozart's 'Così fan tutte' showed that he possesses a voice of beautiful quality, and that he knows how to use it. He met with a cordial reception and gave an encore. Strauss's 'Don Juan' was given for the first time at these concerts, and the programme ended with Elgar's genial 'Cockaigne' overture.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

It was a happy thought of the authorities of the Royal Academy of Music to give the students of the operatic class an opportunity of performing Mozart's merry two-act opera 'Così fan tutte,' and the interpretation at the institution on May 17 seemed to be as much enjoyed by the exponents as by a large and appreciative audience. The story turns, it will be remembered, on Don Alfonso's wager with two lovers that their respective sweethearts would prove fickle if submitted to temptation. The two lovers, who accept the wager, were impersonated with dramatic perception by Messrs. Thomas Gibbs and F. Percival Driver, and their respective sweethearts found pleasing exponents in Miss Mary J. Fielding and Miss Josephine Ottlee. No little of the success of the performance was due to the excellence of Mr. Cecil Pearson's embodiment of the Don, and Miss Isabel H. Rawlings showed a lively sense of humour in the important rôle of the waiting-maid. The music is notable by its appropriateness to the lightness of the subject, and it possesses many touches of characterization that make it an interesting example of the genius of the great master.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

Considering the dramatic nature and variety of Dr. Saint-Saëns's biblical opera 'Samson and Delilah,' it is strange that the work does not attract larger audiences when presented in concert form, but the fact remains that even when the cast includes leading singers, it fails to draw an audience sufficiently large to fill Queen's Hall. This experience was repeated on May 11 at the performance of the work by the London Choral Society, with Mr. John Coates and Madame Kirkby Lunn in the name parts, and Mr. Thorpe Bates and Mr. Robert Radford personating the other rôles. Madame Kirkby Lunn gave a highly dramatic interpretation of the seductive and energetic Delilah, and Mr. Coates sang with his usual artistic perception as the susceptible Samson. Mr. Arthur Fagge, who conducted, is to be congratulated on the choral singing, which was distinguished by the proofs of good training if at times it was somewhat lacking in dramatic intensity of expression.

HANDEL SOCIETY.

The chief feature of the concert given on May 14 at Queen's Hall, under the direction of Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, was the performance of Mr. R. H. Walthew's little-known cantata 'Ode to a nightingale,' a setting of Keats's famous poem. Mr. J. Campbell McInnes rendered the solos expressively, and the choir sang intelligently if at times with lack of crispness. The work was much applauded and the composer called to the platform at the close. The third section of Schumann's 'Faust' was also a commendable choice, for this music is little known, and Dr. Saint-Saëns's fantasia 'Africa,' for pianoforte and orchestra, with Miss Dorothy Moggridge as soloist, provided effective contrast. In addition to Mr. Campbell McInnes, the list of vocalists comprised Madame Le Mar, Miss Edith J. Miller, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Charles Bennett.

MR. JOSEPH HOLBROOKE'S CHAMBER CONCERT.

The merry month of May is not the most propitious time for a chamber concert, but a numerous audience assembled at the Salle Erard on May 9, when Mr. Joseph Holbrooke submitted a selection of modern English music, largely consisting of his own compositions. Prominent among these was the first London performance of his Sextet No. 3 (Op. 33) for pianoforte and strings (or wind instruments). The former combination was presented on this occasion, the composer, at the pianoforte, being assisted by the Norah Clench Chamber Quintet. The sextet consists of three movements, the most important of which is the first, an Allegro appassionato, possessing significant themes ingeniously if somewhat diffusely developed. The second number, Larghetto molto espressione, is built up with two melodious subjects which are poetically treated, and the Finale, a Rondo, is remarkably spirited and gay. The work is published and deserves to meet with favour. It was followed by the first performance of three songs, under the collective title of 'Landscapes' (Op. 34), which were tastefully sung by Miss Carrie Crisp, and proved musicianly.

MADAME LISA LEHMANN'S 'GOLDEN THRESHOLD.'

Considerable interest was attached to the production of a new song-cycle entitled 'The golden threshold,' by Madame Lisa Lehmann, at Queen's Hall on April 29, for rumour had it that the gifted lady had rivalled her previous remarkable production, 'In a Persian garden.' With the exception, however, that the text is Eastern in character, there is little in common between the two works. The libretto, derived from poems by Sarojini Naidu, is laid out for soprano, contralto, tenor, and bass solos, duets and choruses. The artistic value of the music greatly varies. In some numbers, such as the baritone solo and chorus, 'The royal tombs of Golconda,' Madame Lehmann has reached a high standard of excellence, but for the most part the music, although always well written, is of a superficial and popular character. The solos were beautifully sung by Madame Evangeline Florence, Madame Edna Thornton, Mr. John McCormack and Mr. Charles W. Clark, who were assisted by a choir of 160 voices, chiefly members of the National Sunday League Choir, with Madame Lehmann at the pianoforte and Mr. Herbert Bedford conducting. The second part of the evening was occupied by a concert version of Madame Lehmann's music to the 'Vicar of Wakefield,' sung by Miss Lydia Obree, Edith Clegg, Master Glandon Williams and Messrs. David Bispham, Walter Hyde, Charles Bennett, Claude Goodchild and the above-mentioned choir.

MRS. MARY LAYTON'S CHOIR.

This highly-trained Ladies' Choir gave a concert in the Queen's Hall on April 25, the proceeds of which were promised to the Victorian Hospital for Children. The choral programme was presented in a refined style. Among the most successful items were the short cantata 'Nature and love' (Tchaikovsky), 'Ophelia' (Berlioz), 'The snow' (Elgar), 'Whither' from 'The voyage of Maeldune' (C. V. Stanford), and the setting of the 13th Psalm (Brahms). The soloists were Miss Margaret Layton, Madame Annie Layton, Miss Edith Kingsford, Miss Mabel Todd, Mr. Gregory Hast and Mr. Alfred Layton. The principals sang Stanford's cycle of songs from 'The Princess,' and H. Walford Davies's 'Nursery Rhymes.'

The reappearance in London on May 15 at Steinway Hall of Madame Sophie Menter awoke many recollections, and that her remarkable gifts as a pianist were not forgotten was attested by the large audience that attended her recital. The verve and conviction of her readings, which won for her such distinction in times long past, characterized her playing on this occasion, and enthusiastic applause followed the delicacy and power of her renderings of familiar works and pieces that included Beethoven's 'The Departure, Absence and Return' sonata, and Liszt's 'Soirées de Vienne.'

Miss Marie Novello, a young Welsh pianist, made a very favourable impression at her pianoforte recital on April 30 at Bechstein Hall. If she was rather inclined to over-emphasis and hurry in certain passages, she has an admirable technique and her interpretations were distinguished by brilliancy and warmth of feeling.

The remarkably gifted boy violinist Franz von Vecsey reappeared after an absence of about two years at Queen's Hall on May 4, and by his playing in well-known works showed that he is making most satisfactory progress. Perhaps the most remarkable feature was the volume of tone he produced from his instrument, which it may be remembered characterized his performances on his first appearance in this country. He was supported by the New Symphony Orchestra conducted by Mr. Thomas Beecham.

The clever little lad, Lionel Ovenden, gave a remarkable exhibition of his skill at a concert at Queen's Hall, on May 7, when he was supported by the new Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Gustav Stephan. On this occasion the boy appeared in the double capacity of a violinist and pianist. As the former he introduced Benjamin Godard's Concerto in G minor, No. 2, a work not previously heard in London. Musically it is not of great value, but the solo part is brilliantly written for the violin, and it afforded Master Ovenden a legitimate medium for the display of his precocious technical skill. It may be added that Mr. Arthur Hervey conducted his tone-poem 'In the East,' and achieved pronounced success.

Mr. and Mrs. Mallinson gave a series of three vocal recitals at Bechstein Hall, respectively on May 2, 6, and 13, on each occasion charming large and appreciative audiences by the poetic and dramatic significance of the songs composed by Mr. Mallinson, and their highly expressive interpretations by his wife.

The Cathie String Quartet gave the first of two chamber concerts at Steinway Hall on May 7, when was produced a new Quartet in D major by Vitezsler Novak, a work of modern character possessing more strenuousness than charm. In direct contrast was Mozart's lovely quartet in D minor, which was interpreted with notable delicacy and sympathy with the music.

Miss Myrtle Elvyn made her first appearance at Bechstein Hall on May 7, and she played again on May 15. On both occasions Miss Elvyn, an American pianist, showed an executive command, intelligence and sweet reasonableness in her interpretations that were very pleasure-giving.

Miss Hilda Wilson brought forward several promising young singers at her pupils' concert on May 8 at Steinway Hall, when she was assisted by Messrs. Lane Wilson and James Davis, and Johann Duys. The most successful of the young people was Miss Lilian Lawe, who sang with much charm.

Of the large number of vocalists who have given recitals during the past month that by Madame Mary Grey at Bechstein Hall on May 10 should not pass unnoticed, for she is an English singer gifted with a soprano voice of peculiarly beautiful quality. Moreover she sang with an intensity of expression and natural charm that captivated her audience.

The Manchester Orpheus Glee Society, on its way to take part at St. Denis in the international competition for choral singing, gave a concert on May 17 at the King's Hall, Holborn. Conducted by Mr. S. Nesbitt, these northern choralists sang an excellent selection of glees and part-songs. Their interpretations were marked by a precision of attack, volume, and beauty of tone that fully sustained the reputation of this Society, and the renderings of MacDowell's 'Dance of Gnomes' and Hegar's 'Phantom host' were thrilling. Vocal solos were contributed by Miss Marion Bailey, and Mr. Durie Pryce played some violin pieces tastefully.

A novelty in the way of recitals was given at Bechstein Hall on May 22, by the first appearance in England of Mr. Sergei Kussewitzky, a virtuoso on the double-bass, and an artist who would seem to carry on the traditions of Domenico Dragonetti, of 18th century fame, and of Giovanni Bottesini, who died in 1889. Mr. Kussewitzky was born in 1874 at Wyschni Wolotschek, Russia, and in 1890 entered the Conservatoire at Moscow with the object of devoting himself to composition; but he was anxious to obtain a scholarship. The only one available being for a double-bass student, he took up that unwieldy instrument, and became so impressed with its capabilities that he devoted himself entirely to its mastery. At his recital in Bechstein Hall he used a double-bass with four strings and of somewhat smaller size than those used in orchestras, but he produced a remarkably rich and sonorous volume of tone, and played with great technical skill, command of expression, and refinement. His selection included two works of his own—a Concerto and a Humoresque, the former fluently written and containing many extremely expressive passages. Mr. Kussewitzky was accompanied by Mr. Fritz Lindemann, an able pianist who played solos by Scarlatti and Schumann with good taste and brilliancy.

Mr. Paul Reimers, who gave a vocal recital on May 24, at Æolian Hall, has a tenor voice of musical quality which is dominated by an emotional and artistic temperament that made his singing of a selection of high-class songs by continental composers most enjoyable. He was assisted by Mr. T. Dettmar Dressel, who contributed violin solos, and by Messrs. Hamilton Harty and Coenraad v. Bos, who were admirable accompanists.

A 'Grand Empire Concert' was given at Queen's Hall on May 24 under the honorary direction of Dr. Charles Harriss, at which Four French Songs of Canada, with accompaniments by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, were performed for the first time in England.

O PEACEFUL NIGHT!

O PEACEFUL night! so calm and still!
The moonlight sleeps on vale and hill:
And soft the brooklet hurries by
With murm'rous flow of lullaby:
Till life awakes adown the dale
Sweet music of the nightingale.
O peaceful night! O dream of day!
Stay with us, stay!

O mystic night! in woodland shade,
Thou know'st a fairy-haunted glade
Where laughing elves, with tiny feet,
Go tripping through the meadow-sweet:
Till in the silent sky afar
Again shines forth the morning star.
O mystic night! O dream of day!
Stay with us, stay!

Suburban Concerts.

The Willesden Green Choral Society gave the second concert of the present season at the Hampstead Conservatoire on April 25, when Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' were succesfully performed. The soloists were Miss Florence Holderness, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Harry Stubbs, Mr. Bantock Pierpoint and Mr. W. P. Rivers (who also played the tubular bells). The chorus and orchestra, led by Mr. H. R. Storr, numbered 130, and Dr. Davan Wetton presided at the organ. The performance was under the direction of Mr. Frederick W. Belchamber.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave the final concert of its eleventh season at the Crystal Palace on April 27, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of praise' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' were performed. The solo vocalists were Madame Siviter, Miss Winifred Helsby, Miss Carrie James, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Thorpe Bates. The organist was Mr. C. H. Kempling, and Mr. Arthur Fagge was, as usual, the conductor.

The combined amateur orchestral societies conducted by Mr. Joseph Ivimey gave a concert in the Assembly Rooms, Surbiton, on April 27. Ample evidence was given by the orchestra of the very able training received from their conductor in the excellent performance of Dvorák's 'From the new world' symphony, 'Faschingsbilder' from Nicodé's suite (Op. 24) and Moszkowsky's suite 'From foreign parts.' The orchestra also accompanied the young Hungarian violinist Joska Szigeti in Ernst's Concerto in F sharp minor (Op. 23) and the Fantasie Brillante on 'Carmen' by Hubay. Madame Mary Conly was the solo vocalist.

The Harrow Mission Musical Society, Latimer Road, brought its second season to a successful close with a choral and orchestral concert on May 13. The programme included Gade's 'The Erl-king's daughter,' Sullivan's madrigal 'When love and beauty,' and the opening chorus from Macfarren's 'May-day.' The orchestra was led by Mr. Evan W. Pole, and Mr. Petty presided at the organ. The solo-singers were Mrs. Helen Trust, Miss Phyllis Davies, Mr. Gwilym Wigley and Mr. Jack Martin. Mr. Orton Bradley conducted.

The St. James's, Hatcham, Choral Society terminated its season on May 15 at the St. James's Parish Schools with a performance of Gade's 'Erl-king's daughter' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George.' Under the conductorship of Mr. Sydney Herbert, an excellent rendering of the cantatas was given. Miss Connie Davies, Madame Palmer and Mr. Ernest Hatchett were the solo vocalists.

THE SOUTH-EAST LONDON CHORAL UNION.

The fifth annual festival concert of the South-East London Choral Union was held at the Great Central Hall, Tower Bridge Road, on May 4. The choir of five hundred voices, selected from the evening schools comprised in the Union, was supported by a band of about one hundred performers led by Mr. W. Waghorn. The programme included selections from Handel's 'Samson,' and the Kermesse scene and waltz from Gounod's 'Faust,' which were sung throughout with great spirit and keen attention to the details of rhythmic and tonal expression. The solos in both excerpts were taken with much success by Miss Carrie Tubb, and Mr. Samuel Masters.

The finest effect of the evening perhaps was the singing of the choir in Dudley Buck's part-song 'Hymn to music,' in which their power of dramatic singing and their mastery of the tenderest pianissimo effects showed clearly how complete had been their training under their conductors, Mr. A. G. Gibbs and Mr. J. Nettleton-Taylor. In addition to these and other choral numbers there were solos for Miss Bessie Abelson and the other principals already mentioned. The orchestra performed the three dances from 'Nell Gwyn' (German) and Schubert's 'March Militaire,' and Mr. J. Charlesworth provided a short organ recital. Miss Florence Fryer was at the pianoforte.

Musical Competition Festivals.

York.—April 22, 23 and 24.

Chamber music and the playing of stringed instruments generally are strong features of this now long-established Festival. The first day's proceedings were given up entirely to this section. There were some first-rate pianoforte trios and string quartets, violin and violoncello solo playing. Miss Willoughby gained the chief violin prize and her trio party was also first in its class. Mrs. Kirk's party gained the string quartet prize. A school string band of thirteen children from the Scarcroft Road School played with excellent effect. Mr. Percy Sharman was the adjudicator. On the second day the children competed. No better instance of the educational results of the competitive movement could be afforded than the experience of York. Dr. McNaught, who adjudicated on this and the following day, warmly extolled the repeated beautiful performances of the choirs that sang.

At the adult competition the Centenary Chapel Ladies (Mr. Rymer) gained a first place by a fine performance of Dr. Vaughan Williams's trio 'Sound sleep,' and the men of the same choir were also equally successful in 'The phantom host' (Hegar), the test-piece in their class. The combined Centenary Choir also won the first place in the Anthem class, the test-piece in which was Bach's 'I wrestle and pray.' The chief contest was for a challenge shield offered to mixed-voice choirs. The test-pieces were Brahms's 'Serenade' and Cornelius's 'Love and youth,' and there was an obligatory sight-reading test. The first place fell to St. Michael-le-Belfrey (Mr. W. J. Green), with 180 marks out of a maximum of 200, the Centenary Choir scoring 178.

The choirs combined to give a short choral concert at which Bach's 'I wrestle and pray' and other pieces were performed with fine effect under the baton of Miss Mary Egerton.

Bury, Lancashire.—April 25, 26 and 27.

This was the second festival held under the auspices of the Bury and District Musical Festival Association. The scheme is a comprehensive one and includes forty-two classes. The numerous entries kept the adjudicators, Dr. McNaught and Mr. R. J. Forbes (who also acted with great efficiency as official accompanist), at work from morning until evening on each day.

There were numerous soloists both vocal and instrumental, and some excellent talent was apparent.

The children's classes were well filled with solo players and singers, but the schools of the district did not send many choral classes into the competition. All the same, the children who had been granted a half-holiday by the local authority came in large numbers as audience. It is hoped that the interest thus excited will do much to induce more school teachers to take a practical interest in the work in the future.

On the open day many excellent choirs were attracted. St. Paul's Choir, Radcliffe (Mr. Howard Morris), was first in one Church and Chapel Choir section, and the New Road Congregational (Mr. George Webb) in another. The last-named choir also won the first place in the female-voice choir class. The Goodshaw Glee Union (Mr. Burrel Peel) was first in the male-voice choir class, and the Salford Select Choir (Mr. Blacow) gained the chief mixed-voice choir prize.

Retford.—April 29, 30, and May 2.

This festival is promoted with great spirit by Mrs. Herbert Peake, of Bawtry Hall. It focuses much of the musical activity of the district and attracts good audiences composed of all classes of the community. The children's day was very successful. Some of the school-choir singing was of a very high standard. The Retford National School boys gave a charming performance of 'O happy the heart of a child' (Waddington).

At a concert the combined choirs sang 'My own country' (Forrester) and other songs under the direction of Mr. T. Hercy Denman, and Lady Mary Forbes Trefusis distributed the prizes. On the second day the village choirs competed in many sections. Welbeck Abbey, Firbeck, Tuxford, Babworth, Blyth, Ranskill, were all first-prize winners. A new feature was a folk-song competition, amongst the competitors in which were some very old men who were just able to sing intelligibly. A prize was awarded to Mr. Daniel Garwood for a song entitled 'Down by the green bushes.' At an evening concert the prize-winners sang, and Miss Muriel Gough, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Pedro de Zulueta sang. Dr. McNaught adjudicated in all classes except the folk-song class, for which the services of Mr. Frank Kidson were enlisted.

On the third day the competitions were open, and Mr. Dan Price adjudicated. The entries were very satisfactory, and some of the performances reached a high standard. The Retford Wesleyans were first in the Church and Chapel Choir class, the Retford Old Amateur Society was first in the female-voice class, the test-piece in which was 'Sound sleep' (Vaughan Williams). Only Mr. Andrews' well-equipped choir tackled Hegar's 'Phantom host' in the male-voice class. The Retford Amateurs (Mr. J. Smith) were decidedly first in the chief choral class, in which the tests were 'The serenade' (Brahms) and 'Love and youth' (Cornelius). The choirs combined under Mr. Dan Price to sing Bach's 'I wrestle and pray.' Mr. Price sang solos, and Miss Georgina Rose also sang.

Wensleydale (Yorks).—May 1 and 2.

The first day was occupied by the children. Not many schools entered, but there were many entries for solo playing and singing. On the day for the seniors there were plenty of vocalists, but the instrumental entries were meagre. In the church choir class, in which the test-piece was 'I will lay me down' (Noble), Bedale parish choir gained the first position, and they were also successful in the part-song class. Mr. T. Tertius Noble adjudicated. Leyburn was first in the female-voice choir class.

Morecambe.—May 1, 2, 3 and 4.

This great festival still maintains its premier position notwithstanding the competing festivals with which it is now surrounded. Practically the Morecambe scheme owes its success to Canon Gorton, Rector of Morecambe, and the late Mr. R. G. W. Howson. It says much for its vitality that although Mr. Howson has passed away and Canon Gorton was too unwell to be present, this year's festival still drew the customary crowd of competitors and large audiences from near and far. There were over 3,500 competitors in the thirty-six classes. The first day was devoted to the children and the Girls' Friendly Society choirs. There were thirty-three entries in the class for church choir boys, the test in which was 'O that thou hadst hearkened' (Sullivan). F. M. Bracewell, of Nelson, and Harold Robinson, of Bradford, were bracketed for the first place. In the chief girls' solo section Dorothy de Lacy, of Morecambe, was first. The Challenge Shield for schools was won by the Keighley Utley Council School (Mr. W. H. Whittaker). The concert as usual attracted a very large audience. The programme included maypole dancing and action songs and numerous other items. It was hoped that Dr. Walford Davies' new cantata 'Humpty Dumpty,' which was written for the festival, would be presented, but the copies were not ready in time.

On the second day twenty-one adult local choirs sang in six classes, and eleven vocal quartet parties, two string quartets and one pianoforte trio also competed. The standard of the choral performance was high. Bentham Female-Voice Choir (Mr. J. E. Constantine), Heysham Male-Voice (Mr. S. Morphet), Lancaster Wesleyan Mixed-Voice (Mr. A. Dowthwaite) were prize-winners in their respective classes. The performance of Beethoven's Quartet (Op. 18, No. 1) by Miss Ada Sharp's Keighley String Quartet called forth high praise from Sir Edward Elgar and Mr. Carl Fuchs. In the afternoon a church choir festival was held in St. Lawrence's Church. Thirteen church choirs took part. Mr. G. H. Sutcliffe conducted, Mr. John Coates sang, Mr. Percy W. Smale was at the organ and the Rev. H. Dams, precentor of Carlisle Cathedral, chanted the service. In the evening a miscellaneous concert was given, at which Mr. Plunket Greene sang twenty-one songs in his customary style and three quartet parties sang selections from Mr. Ernest Walker's 'Five Songs.'

On the third day there was only a concert. The Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. H. Whittaker) and the Manchester Orpheus Society (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt) contributed gems from their repertory. Mr. John Coates sang sixteen songs in his best style, and the Brodsky String Quartet from Manchester played two quartets superbly.

The last day was as usual devoted to the open choir and orchestral classes, which are the pride and great attraction of the festival. Seven female-voice, seventeen male-voice, sixteen mixed-voiced choirs, three string orchestras and two full orchestras had entered and nearly all competed. Some of the competitors came from great distances, Sheffield, Nottingham, and the Isle of Man sending choirs. Mrs. Bourne's fine choir from Barrow gained the female-voice choir prize, and Colne Orpheus (Mr. T. Wilkinson) that for the small male-voice choirs. Mr. Poulter's Douglas Choir was first in the small mixed-choir section. There were six entries in the chief male-voice choir section, the test-pieces for which were :

From the sea	E. A. MacDowell
Yea, cast me from heights of the mountain	E. Elgar
The Desert March	F. Hegar

The splendidly equipped and finely trained Habergham Choir (Mr. A. Hitchon) gained the coveted distinction of the first place, and the Manchester Orpheus (Mr. Nesbitt) and the Southport Vocal Union (Mr. J. C. Clarke) tied for the second place. In the Challenge Shield class the tests were :

Madrigal	(a) Arise, awake ..	Thomas Morley
Part-song	(b) Evening Scene	Elgar
Part-song ..	(c) Let me the canakin clink	J. B. McEwen
Part-song	(d) The Tempest	Cornelius

The competing choirs sang in the following order :

Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society (299) ..	Mr. H. Whittaker.
Nottingham Glee and Madrigal Society ..	Mr. C. E. Riley.
Barrow Madrigal Society (300)	Mrs. Bourne.
Lancaster—Mr. Aldous' Choir	Mr. W. J. Aldous.
Burnley Co-operative Vocal Union (299) ..	Mr. D. Duxbury.
Morecambe Madrigal Society	Mr P. W. de C. Smale.
Isle of Man Choir (301)	Mr. J. D. Looney.

The marks (maximum 320) for the first four choirs as given above show how very closely they were matched in ability. 'Evening Scene' made the deepest impression, and 'The Tempest' was also a strikingly effective piece. Colne (Mr. T. L. Wildman) gained the prize for stringed orchestras, the test for which was a suite for strings by Victor Herbert, and for full orchestras, the test for which was Humperdinck's overture to 'Hansel und Gretel.' Both Colne and Nelson (Mr. C. Townsley) gave fine performances of the latter work.

At the final adjudication Sir Edward Elgar renewed his comparison of the musical life of London with that of the North. There was too much music paid for, and too little home made in the metropolis. Besides Sir Edward Elgar, the adjudicators were Dr. W. G. McNaught, Dr. H. Walford Davies, Mr. Carl Fuchs and Mr. C. H. Fogg (who was also the official accompanist). The arrangements were as usual complete and highly satisfactory.

Keswick.—May 2.

This festival usefully stimulates the various small musical organizations in the district. The classes include solo singing and playing and choirs of all kinds. The Above-Derwent folk gained three prizes, Keswick Wesleyan gained two, and the Crosthwaite Wesleyans one. Botcherly and Keswick School gained another prize against five other competitors. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, of Carlisle Cathedral, was the adjudicator.

Farnham (Surrey).—May 6 and 22.

This festival appeals to only a limited countryside area, but notwithstanding this fact it attracts a considerable following. On May 6 the children competed in eight sections. The prize in each section consisted of a challenge banner. The Farnham West Street Girls' School (Miss Brading) gained a banner for a delightful performance of 'Garden fancies' (Ethel Boyce), and the Girls' Grammar School (Mr. B. F. Ramsey) gained three banners in other sections. The West Street Council School gained the first place for a performance of selections from 'A Garland of song' (Book 167, Novello's School Songs), and in the village schools section, Bisley Farm (Mr. J. Ashcroft), Shaftesbury School (Mr. W. S. Patey), and Kingsley (Miss Susan Lushington) won banners. Mr. Morton Latham acted as conductor. At the concert given by the combined choirs and prize-winners a small band assisted. An interesting item was an arrangement à la Bach, by Mr. Latham, of the hymn tune 'Jesus shall reign,' with contrapuntal interludes for the orchestra between the lines.

On May 22 the adult choirs from the villages and small towns competed. There were forty entries in nine classes. Tilford was successful in two classes; Kingsley also in two classes; Farnham and Alton also took first-prizes. The string quartets gave good performances of Mozart's Quartet in C, and Camberley won the first place. Sight-singing was a satisfactory feature. Dr. McNaught adjudicated on both dates. At the evening concert the choirs combined under Mr. Morton Latham to perform Part II. of 'St. Paul,' Somervell's 'Charge of the Light Brigade,' and Charles Watson's choral ballad 'Martin Sperling,' with orchestra. Mr. Montgomery was the soloist.

Doncaster Intercounty Competitions.—May 7.

A new development of the competition festival movement was commenced on this occasion. The promoters of the festivals held at York, Retford, Brigg, Pontefract and neighbouring centres combined to send their prize choirs to a common centre. Fifteen village choirs and twelve town choirs competed in various forms. In all there were sixty-three entries. A busy day's work was thus provided for Dr. H. Walford Davies, who adjudicated. The chief village choir prize, a challenge cup, went to Rampton (North Notts), and another cup for the towns went to Mr. Rymer's fine Centenary Chapel Choir (York). The Retford and York ladies tied for the first place in the female-voice class for towns, and in the similar class for villages, Rampton was the winner. Wykeham, under the Rev. L. Hunt, gained the village male-voice prize. York Centenary and Mr. Brameld's male-voice choirs were bracketed first in the towns class. The test-piece in this class was Hegar's 'Phantom host.' At the evening concert the town choirs combined to sing under the direction of Mr. Thomas Brameld, and the village choirs under Dr. Walford Davies. The festival was considered to be a great success.

Weybridge, West Surrey.—May 7 and 8.

This was the third festival held for this district. The prime promoter is Miss Christian Egerton. The entries on this occasion were more numerous than before, and the performances were generally on a high level. About 400 children took part in the proceedings of the first day. The junior classes displayed good tone, but were not always well in tune.

On the second day choral societies competed. Esher (Mr. Lewis Thomas) gained several prizes, and Weybridge and Mr. Ernest Read's Guildford Ladies' Choir were also successful in other classes. A good deal is made of the concert music by the combined choirs at this festival. It was evident, however, that the three works set down for practice, viz., the motet 'I wrestle and pray' (Bach), the 'Ode to Music' (Parry) and 'The Charge of the Light Brigade' (Somervell) had in addition to the competition tests overweighted some of the choirs. The motet and the ode were, however, very well done. A strong orchestra assisted, and Mr. Joseph Ivimey and Dr. McNaught conducted. The Princess Alexander of Teck distributed the prizes. There were good audiences throughout.

Witham, Essex.—May 11.

This is a countryside festival appealing mainly to small villages in the neighbourhood of Witham, a small and pleasant town, proud of a history dating back to the time of Queen Boadicea. The festival was established last year chiefly by the exertions of Mr. F. C. Bramwell. So far it has succeeded in attracting and vitalizing a number of small choral organizations, and it has proved the capacity and enthusiasm of some hundreds of singers. The local gentry do not as yet give the scheme sufficient financial support. But in view of the undoubted social utility of the scheme, it is hard to believe that such support will not in the future be forthcoming.

Ten places sent choirs to compete in eight classes. In all there were thirty-five entries. The singing generally exhibited a decided advance upon the standard of the previous year. The following choirs were among the most successful: Excelsior Singing Club, Chelmsford (Mrs. T. H. Waller), Birch (Rev. E. P. Luard), Cressing (Rev. C. H. Bond), Witham (Mrs. Hugh Bawtree), Terling (Lady Rayleigh). An important feature was the performance of Bach's cantata 'Ein' feste Burg' by the combined choirs, with Mrs. Montgomery, Mrs. George Swinton, Mr. Spencer Thomas and Mr. T. Campbell McInnes as principals. In this fine work the chorus greatly distinguished themselves. The fluency of the execution proved that the cantata had been conscientiously studied, although the music was not included in the competition tests. Dr. McNaught adjudicated and conducted. Miss Lycett Mathews was a highly efficient pianoforte accompanist, both at the competitions and the concert.

Pontefract.—May 14, 15 and 16.

This festival is managed with great spirit, and has enlisted the support of the local gentry and the forces that work for popular musical progress. Mr. F. S. Hatchard is the very active president. The children were catered for on the first day, and were able to interest a large audience in their generally good performances.

On the second day the village folk competed. Six villages sent six mixed-voice choirs, four men's-voice, and four female-voice choirs, besides soloists, quartets and trios. There were in all thirty-six entries in thirteen classes. Monk Fryston (Mr. D. Morris) was first in the female-voice choir (test, Dr. Walford Davies's 'The shepherd'). Westbridge was first in the part-song class (test, Stanford's 'Sweet love, for me') as well as in the madrigal class (test, Benet's 'Flow, O my tears'). The choirs, conducted by Rev. Daly Atkinson, combined to give Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' with orchestral accompaniment, the solos being taken by the prize-winners.

On the third day the competitions were open. Thirty-one solo singers, three quartet parties, two church choirs, four male-voice choirs, five female-voice choirs, and only one mixed-voice choir competed. The Pontefract Male-Voice Society and the female-voice choir of the same organization gave first-rate performances of the test-pieces under Mr. Walker, and gained the first place in both classes. The Brotherton Society (Mr. J. Lightowler) distinguished itself greatly in the novice class. At a prize-winners' concert given in the evening Dr. McNaught, who adjudicated during the three days, gave a short demonstration in choir-training.

Buxton, North Derbyshire.—May 15 and 16.

This is a new festival, and in view of this fact the results were most encouraging. Nearly 1,200 competitors took part in the twenty-two classes. The Duke of Devonshire gave his support as president, and many influential residents showed their interest in the scheme. The fine hall of the Pavilion of the Buxton Gardens was made available. The following are some of the chief results:

Male-voice choirs (open). Test: 'I give my heart' (Bishop).—1. Pye Hill and District Male-voice Choir, Jacksdale; 2. Oldham House Male-voice Choir, Matlock.

Mixed-voice choirs (open). Tests: 'Weary wind' (Elgar) and 'Song of the Vikings' (Faning).—1. Matlock Primitive Methodist Prize Choir; 2. Nottingham Part-Song Choir. Mr. Alfred R. Gaul adjudicated.

Northallerton (Swaledale).—May 15 and 16.

This was the eighth Tournament of Song held in this Yorkshire dale. There were plenty of entries to keep Mr. T. Tertius Noble, the adjudicator, busy for the two days. The classes included pianoforte and violin playing and solo singing.

Soloists were a feature of the senior competitions. There were not many entries in some of the choral classes, and for the challenge shield class no choir came forward. Aske Chapel Choir gained an award, and Northallerton Musical Society was first in the part-song class. Six female choirs sang Walford Davies's 'The shepherd,' the prize falling to the Thirsk Society. The Northallerton orchestral class gained one more mark than the Richmond orchestral class. Mr. Arthur Wilson adjudicated in the instrumental classes. At an evening concert 'The Banner of St. George' (Elgar) was the chief item. Mr. C. Clarke conducted.

A report of the Hertfordshire and North Middlesex competitions, held at the Alexandra Palace on May 23-25, will appear in the July issue.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The pupil teachers of the Birmingham central classes gave in the Lecture Theatre of the Midland Institute on April 25 and 26, remarkable performances of Euripides' 'Alcestis' in English verse with complete choral lyrics, impressively set to music by Mr. Henry Gadsby. The choir was represented by fifteen young ladies, who were grouped on the steps leading to the palace of Admetus at Pheræ, executing their evolutions round an altar whilst they sang. The voices sounded sweet and mellow, nor was there a hitch in ensemble or note proficiency, which meant a great deal, considering the choir had to commit to memory nearly three hundred lines in addition to the music. The accompaniments were ably given on the organ by Mr. Raybould, admirably supporting the voices. The whole tragedy was enacted by ladies, all the players and the choir being pupil-teachers of the central classes. The choir-trainer was Miss Holmes, the stage manager Miss Harlow, the whole production being under the direction and management of Miss Bowler, the superintendent of the central classes.

The Handsworth Amateur Orchestral Society, which is making steady progress under the training and conductorship of Mr. J. C. Hock, the well-known violoncellist, gave an interesting concert in the Lecture Theatre of the Midland Institute on April 24. Prominence in the programme was given to Sibelius's symphonic poem 'En Saga,' a remarkably original composition, which, considering its great difficulties, was ably interpreted. Another novelty proved Ropartz's 'La Derobée' from the suite 'Scènes Bretonnes,' and our local clever young pianist, Miss Ethel M. Thomas, gave a brilliant rendering of Grieg's Concerto. The vocalist was Mr. William Bennett, one of our foremost baritones.

A pianoforte recital of considerable artistic merit was given in the Masonic Hall on April 30 by Miss Kathleen Bruckshaw, a pupil of Stavenhagen and Busoni. Equipped with a flawless technique and gifted with an excellent touch and memory, Miss Bruckshaw is entitled to rank as one of our foremost pianists. She has only lately settled here as a teacher and performer.

The local musical season is practically at an end, and with the exception of a three weeks' season of promenade concerts at the Theatre Royal, commencing on May 27, and a series of vocal and instrumental concerts to be given at the Edgbaston Botanical Gardens, under the direction of Mr. Oscar Pollack, there will be little music in Birmingham until the autumn season.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The second annual concert of the Clifton Male-Voice Choir was held on May 2 in Christ Church Parish Hall, and there was a crowded attendance. Under the direction of Mr. Walter P. Price, interesting part-music was ably rendered. In addition to the efforts of the choir there were songs by Madame Eva Hartshorne, Miss Ada Bennett and Mr. Alfred W. Bishop, with pianoforte pieces contributed by Miss Kathleen Abbott—who also acted as accompanist—and violin compositions played by Mr. Arthur Lucas.

Bristol Choral Society gave its last concert for the season on May 4, and there was a large audience at Colston Hall on the occasion. The programme was devoted to selections from two of Wagner's operas, the prelude and the third act of 'Lohengrin' and the overture and third act of 'Tannhäuser' being given in a manner that evoked much applause. There was a choir of 470 voices and a band of sixty, with Mr. A. W. Payne leader. Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Eveline Gerrish (a member of the Society), Mr. Wilson Pembroke and Mr. Arthur Winckworth were the soloists, and Mr. George Riseley conducted with his usual ability.

At Redland Park Hall, on May 7, a concert was given by the choir of the Bristol Free Church Girls' Guild, and the audience appreciated fully a performance of Mr. J. L. Roeckel's cantata 'The Gitana,' the composer accompanying at the pianoforte.

The spacious hall of the Bristol Grammar School was fairly filled on May 11 when Mr. C. W. Stear, organist at the Church of the Holy Nativity and director of music at the school, gave a recital upon the organ, his performance being much admired. At intervals Mr. Ernest Lane played violin solos and Miss Ada Bennett (contralto) sang acceptably.

St. John's Choral Society, whose conductor is Mr. A. Ernest Hill, organist of St. John's Church, Redland, on May 14 gave a concert version of Wallace's 'Maritana.' There was a choir of seventy voices and an orchestra led by Mr. Harold Bernard, with Mr. A. E. Oaten at the organ and Mr. Alfred Ireland at the pianoforte. Local amateurs sang the music of the different characters in the opera in a highly creditable manner, and the work was listened to with pleasure by a numerous audience, the Parish Hall, where the performance was held, being crowded.

Commencing on May 13, a series of choral festivals has been held, under the auspices of the Chew Decanal Choral Association, in the churches of some Somerset parishes in the neighbourhood of Bristol. The Association, formed many years ago, includes over twenty church choirs, and has been the means of effecting material improvement in singing throughout the churches of the Chew deanery. Mr. J. W. Lawson, until recently organist of St. Mary Redcliff Church, Bristol, has trained the choirs.

A performance by the Bristol and Clifton Orchestral Society, on May 15, at Redland Park Hall, was well attended. Mr. Edward Pavey conducted a band of nearly sixty performers, Mr. Ernest Lane being the leader. The principal works given were a Violoncello concerto by Saint-Saëns (Miss Nellie Pavey, soloist), and a Harp concerto by Wilm (Miss Lilian Hawkins, soloist). Miss Taudevin was the vocalist.

The Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society, on May 16, at Knightstone Pavilion, under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook, of Bristol, gave Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and Stanford's 'The Revenge.' There was an efficient orchestra, chiefly Bristol players, with Mr. F. S. Gardner the leader. An excellent rendering of each work was afforded, and the audience manifested great appreciation of the performance. The soloists in the 'Golden Legend' were Miss Edith Evans, Miss May Peters, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Charles Tree.

MUSIC IN DOVER.

The third Triennial Musical Festival was held in the Town Hall on April 30 and May 1, the first evening being occupied with Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' conducted by Mr. H. J. Taylor, while at the second concert a miscellaneous programme was provided. This included Sir Frederick Bridge's choral ballad 'The forging of the anchor,' and the following works composed for the occasion: Three short choruses for female voices with orchestral accompaniment, by E. J. Bellerby; part-songs, 'Sleep' and 'Let the bells ring,' by J. W. Hathaway; choral ballad 'Pan's pipes' by H. C. Perrin; concert-overture for orchestra and organ, by H. J. Taylor; and Spanish Suite for chorus and orchestra, by Percy Godfrey. Each of these works, as also Sir F. Bridge's ballad, was conducted by its composer.

The Dover Choral Union was responsible for the choral work and sang throughout with excellent tone, attack and spirit, and the members of the orchestra deserve much credit for their very efficient service. The solo vocalists were Madame Emily Squire, Miss Esther Franklin, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Charles Tree. At the conclusion of the second concert a presentation of a handsome gold watch was made to Mr. H. J. Taylor on behalf of the members of the Dover Choral Union and the Orchestral Society.

The Wingham and District Choral Society gave its last concert of the season on April 24. Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and a miscellaneous selection, including Haydn's Symphony No. 4 in D, and Mendelssohn's 'Wedding march,' were performed. Masters Dunster and Coombs, Miss E. M. Leicester and Mr. H. Lake were the solo vocalists, and Mr. Alexander Reid, of Canterbury, conducted.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

With its concert of April 23, the most important of our amateur orchestral associations, the Beethoven Society, under the honorary conductorship of Mr. E. Gordon Cockrell, discharged the duty of turning the key on the exit door of our season of music. The programme contained Schubert's Symphony No. 2, in B flat; an Andante religioso by Xaver Scharwenka, arranged from a pianoforte sonata; Grieg's orchestrated Lyrische Suite (Op. 54); and the overture to Reissiger's 'Felsenmühle.' The band missed excellence only in a slight want of finish. Miss Edith Craven, a student of the Royal Manchester College of Music, exhibited quite virtuoso skill in Mendelssohn's Violin concerto, and Miss Tessie Kelly was the vocalist.

At the annual meeting of the guarantors of the Hallé Concerts Society, the chairman, Mr. E. J. Broadfield, announced that special notice would be taken of the circumstance that next year completed the jubilee of the Concerts. The balance-sheet for the season past showed that the receipts have been £12,400, but that there was a small deficit of £112. In paying an earnest compliment to his old friend, Sir Charles Hallé, the founder of the Concerts, the chairman said:

> This has been a memorable half-century for music in Manchester, a period, in fact, of artistic evolution, during which the people of Manchester have learned to know and take delight in music of a kind of which, save a favoured few, they had been previously entirely ignorant. Symphonies were indeed heard at the Concert Hall by an orchestra which was the despair of Mr. Charles Hallé when he first came to Manchester; but even in that exclusive place they were voted inflictions by many among the chattering crowd before whom they were performed; and Mr. Hallé himself was obliged, in compiling the early programmes of his concerts, to accommodate himself to the requirements of the time by performing, with his orchestra of sixty, such things as orchestral selections from operas and instrumental arrangements of old English ballads, and so on. But Sir Charles Hallé educated our community. Unaided by civic funds he gave us for forty years concerts not surpassed in character and quality by those of Continental cities endowed by State or municipal grants. To him, indeed, is due the honour of having made Manchester a musical city, willing and ready to encourage the cultivation of the highest forms of musical art, and of having made it possible for the Society which is honoured by his name to make still further advances, and to secure for the city of his adoption the devoted services of the greatest living conductor as his successor.

The Gentlemen's Concerts are still, it is true, exclusive; but, under the influence of Sir Charles Hallé, whose place is now filled by Dr. Richter, they have become interesting and worthy features of our musical life. Established more than one hundred and fifty years ago, they continue to flourish greatly, as the report of the honorary directors to the meeting of the subscribers on May 13 testifies.

The Brodsky Quartet concerts have this season contributed the sum of £139 to the sustentation fund of the Royal Manchester College of Music.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Durham Musical Society gave its final concert of the season on April 24. The choral items consisted of Mendelssohn's 'Christus,' Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens' and several part-songs, while the orchestral numbers were the first movement of Haydn's Symphony in D and Elgar's Minuet in C. It is probable that this organization will be converted into a Cathedral Choral Society which will devote itself to giving oratorios and other sacred works in the Cathedral.

On May 1 Mr. Kilburn conducted the closing concert of the Auckland Musical Society. The choir sang the 'Summer' and 'Winter' sections of Haydn's 'Seasons' and Edmund Sachs's 'King Cups.' Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Herbert Brown gave a portion of Bach's cantata 'Phœbus and Pan,' Miss Gertrude Walton ably sang an aria of Mozart's, and the orchestra played the Rondo Finale from Brahms's Serenade (Op. 11) and the Allegro from Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony.

The Spennymoor Choral Society, under the direction of Canon Hughes, performed Handel's 'Samson' on May 2. The soloists were Miss Gertrude Walton and Messrs. W. Jackson, G. C. Cradock and W. Peacock.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Two interesting concerts were given by the Norwich Philharmonic Society in conjunction with the Norwich Choral Society, under the conductorship of Dr. Bates, at St. Andrew's Hall on May 2. At the first concert 'The Dream of Gerontius' was performed, the principals being Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Frederic Austin. The semi-chorus consisted of the Norwich Cathedral Choir. The concert attracted a large audience and, having regard to the difficult nature of the work, met with no small degree of success. At the evening concert the chief work was Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' in which both choir and orchestra distinguished themselves. Mr. Gervase Elwes contributed three songs by Henschel, Roger Quilter and Maude Valérie White, and the band Haydn's 'Oxford' Symphony.

Dr. A. H. Mann has recently resigned his position as chorus-master to the Triennial Musical Festivals, greatly to the regret of all concerned. Dr. Mann has been associated with the Festivals since the year 1900, and is succeeded in the post by Mr. Haydon Hare, organist of Great Yarmouth Parish Church and conductor of the Yarmouth Musical Society, and for twelve years past the trainer of the Yarmouth contingent of the Festival chorus. Mr. Richard Lowne, organist of St. Mary's Baptist Church, Norwich, has been appointed assistant chorus-master and accompanist. The rehearsals for the 1908 Festival are now in full swing, and Mr. Henry J. Wood has been down several times to Norwich for the purpose of conducting the practices. The Saturday popular concerts at St. Andrew's Hall have now concluded for the season. Dr. Bunnett has spared neither time nor trouble as director of these concerts. The attendance during the past season has reached upwards of 19,000 persons, and the programmes have been well varied.

Mr. Lemare gave a very interesting organ recital at Norwich Cathedral on Whit Monday, the programme including three Morceaux by the executant, and pieces by Bach, Wagner, Guilmant, Saint-Saëns and Mozart. Miss Lefroy sang 'My heart ever faithful' (Bach). The cathedral was crowded.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Among recent events the concert given by the students of the University College on April 23, under Professor Henderson's direction, is specially worthy of notice on account of the excellence of the voices—the tone of the tenor section being particularly fine—and the careful attention to detail in performance. The chief feature of the programme was Stanford's 'Revenge,' which was efficiently rendered by the students, supported by a small orchestra of about forty instruments. Solos were contributed by Miss Ivy Waterhouse, Miss Lizzie Smith and Mr. J. H. Bamford, and valuable aid was rendered at the organ by Mr. E. Smeeton.

On April 25 a concert was given by the members of the Evening Schools Choral Union, assisted by the Evening School Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Richards. Gade's 'Erl King' was the pièce de résistance, the solos being sung by Miss Grace Parr, Miss Farnsworth and Mr. Morris. Both orchestra and chorus came through this first appearance with excellent results, and all concerned are to be congratulated.

A new cantata, 'Jacob,' was produced at Tennyson Street Chapel on April 28. The work is the composition of Mr. John Cullen, whose 'Awakening' was given by the Sacred Harmonic Society a year ago. The solos were undertaken by Miss Gertrude Crisp, Mr. W. H. Cooper and Mr. Claude Stevenson.

On May 10 a lecture on the 'Development of Choral Music' was given in the University Lecture Hall by Mr. Allen Gill. The subject was treated from its earliest stages to the period of the Madrigal. The illustrations included 'Sumer is i' cumen in,' 'Matona, lovely maiden,' 'Down in flowery vale,' and selections from Palestrina's Masses.

MUSIC IN READING.

A two-days' festival was held in the Town Hall on April 23 and 24, by the Reading Philharmonic Society and the Reading Orpheus combined, to celebrate the forty-fifth year of the existence of the former Society and the twenty-fifth year of the latter. On the first-named date Sullivan's 'Golden legend' was performed with Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Mabel Braine, Messrs. William Green and Charles Knowles as soloists, and Dr. F. J. Read as conductor. On the following day Parry's 'De profundis' and Stanford's 'Elegiac ode' were given, each work conducted by its composer. The solo vocalists in these works were Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Frederic Austin, both artists singing with much refinement and sympathy. Bach's motet 'Now shall the grace' and Beethoven's Violin concerto (solo, Mr. Zacharewitsch) were also included in the programme, a specially interesting feature of which was a Concertstück in D for organ and orchestra, written by Dr. F. J. Read, the solo part played by Sir Walter Parratt, and which created much interest. Mr. Zacharewitsch was also heard in the evening concert in Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor, other features being Saint-Saëns's Symphonic poem 'Phaëton' and Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea,' the last-named sung by Mr. Plunket Greene.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Following the recent successful performance of 'The Apostles,' under Mr. Henry J. Wood's direction, the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society gave an interesting concert on May 7, when the assistant conductor, Mr. J. A. Rodgers, had under his baton a chorus and orchestra numbering 300 performers. On this occasion a sacred work, Parry's 'Job,' was included in the programme. No better justification of the revival of this noble composition could have been found than the impressive way in which it was sung and played, and the engrossed attention with which it was followed by the crowded audience. The choir, who had intimately realized the spirit of the oratorio, sang with breadth and splendidly rich and sonorous tone. The glory of the choir is its luscious mezzo-piano tone and the excellent vocal quality in all grades of expression. In Elgar's 'The Black Knight,' performed on this occasion for the first time in Sheffield, other choral merits were realized, the dramatic scenes of the cantata being sung with grip and point, and some excellent pianissimo singing was heard in the poignant closing sections. A large and admirable orchestra played Tchaikovsky's 'Capriccio Italien' with all due brilliancy, while in Elgar's picturesque score, in the accompaniments to 'Job,' and in the March from Massenet's 'Le Cid' the players gave further proof of artistic and executive excellence. Mr. Frederic Austin, Mr. L. Phillips, Mr. T. W. Green and Master J. Green were the soloists. Mr. J. W. Phillips played several organ solos with much success.

The Heeley Church Philharmonic Society, though small and youthful, is an ambitious body. Its directors are to be commended for selecting Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' for performance at the spring concert on May 9. The choir sang the work with spirit and credit under Mr. N. Whittaker. Mr. G. W. Southey was the accompanist.

The Manchester Orpheus Glee Society, conductor Mr. S. Nesbitt, gained premier honours in three classes of the international competition for choral-singing recently held t. Denis.

MUSIC IN THE SOUTH-WEST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE THREE TOWNS.

The charge of inactivity certainly cannot be brought against musical folk in Devon and Cornwall, and it is gladly recognized that the standard of performance and of judgment is surely tending upwards, though the great distance from London and the hole-in-a-corner position make this progress laborious and often disheartening. Since my last letter a new instrumental society, called the Three Towns Symphony Orchestra, has made its début, and on January 30, conducted by Mr. H. Moreton, it gave a promising account of itself in a programme wisely chosen and including Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony. Dr. Weekes' Orchestral Society gave its second subscription symphony concert on February 6, playing the 'Pathetic' Symphony and Dvorák's Symphony in G, Dr. Weekes and Mr. Walter Weekes sharing the honours of conducting. Mr. Frank Winterbottom has continued his monthly symphony concerts at Stonehouse, and in the plebiscite which supplied the programme of the closing concert on April 23, Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony stood highest in favour. Chamber music has fared rather badly, and only two events have taken place during the period which covers this survey—January to May. The Misses Smith played for the first time in Plymouth Strauss's Sonata in E flat for pianoforte and violin, and that by Brahms in A (Op. 100). Madame Minadieu was heartily appreciated in songs by Mozart, Brahms, Franz Ries and Stanford by those who remember the pleasure she continually gave when residing in the neighbourhood. An experiment was made by Mr. H. Moreton to popularise chamber music by introducing into the series of Corporation concerts on February 16 a performance of string quartets (Messrs. J. Pardew, A. Serle, R. Ball and C. G. Pike), including a movement from Haydn's 'Emperor,' and a Beethoven movement; also (Mr. Moreton being at the pianoforte) a first performance in Plymouth of Stanford's Pianoforte quintet. The appreciation of the audience was sufficiently cordial to warrant a repetition of the attempt.

Turning to choral matters, the first event in point of date was an excellent performance of Cowen's 'The Rose Maiden' by the Mutley and Mannamead Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Manley Martin. The choir sang with good tone and excellent expression, and the soloists were Miss Nellie Ellis, Miss Mary Crocker, Mr. J. Gill and Mr. Fewings Squire. Mr. H. Moreton's Guildhall Choir was responsible for introducing to the west Elgar's 'The dream of Gerontius' on March 16. In spite of the difficulties of the oratorio itself and all that its performance involved, the work of choir and orchestra was highly creditable. The soloists were Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, and Messrs. Alfred Heather and S. Bishop. The Western Amateur Operatic Society gave a performance of 'The pirates of Penzance' on February 5, conducted by Mr. Arthur Serle, and a novelty in operatic performance was the representation on April 24 of 'The pirates of Penzance' by Mrs. Herring Mason's Children's Operatic Society, in which some of the performers had not grown out of babyhood. Mr. D. Parkes' new male-voice choir made its début on April 10, and gave a surprisingly good performance of part-songs and madrigals. The tone was of beautiful quality, the attack, ensemble, and precision excellent, and when culture and study shall have had their effect the choir will bear comparison with any of its kind. Mr. W. Henley (violin), Miss Mildred Jones and Mr. W. Truscott assisted at the concert.

OTHER DEVONSHIRE TOWNS.

Little has been done in choral music in Exeter since the New Year. The two choral societies, Dr. Edwards's Oratorio Society and Dr. Wood's branch of the Western Counties Musical Association, collectively and severally apparently exhausted both their energy and finances over the two days' festival for which they amalgamated last November; and neither Society has been in evidence since that event. Indeed, we hear rumours, from a trustworthy source, that it is not improbable that the two Societies will permanently amalgamate. St. Anne's Choral Society, a young association conducted by Mr. Allan Allen, gave its annual concert on May 8, performing with much success Gade's 'Erl-King's Daughter,' with Miss Adelaide Bayley, Miss Dorothy Davis and Mr. H. Bristowe Dibben as soloists. This season's performance, for a week beginning on February 6, by the Exeter Amateur Operatic Society, of 'Iolanthe,' was the most successful event in the history of this organization, both financially and artistically. The fine chorus-singing was a special feature, and for this Mr. Norman Kendall, conductor, was responsible. The principals were exceptionally good, including Mrs. Wallace Marland, Mr. Charles Bartlett, Miss Winifred Balchin, Miss G. Roberts, Mr. A. Dark, Messrs. W. Pearce, H. F. Green and W. F. Crabb.

The smaller Devonshire towns have been exceedingly busy with choral concerts, and some of the smaller societies have considerably advanced in standard this season. Mr. W. Back at Bovey Tracey obtained from St. John's Choral Society, on February 6, a creditable performance of Cowen's 'The Rose Maiden,' Mr. Furler leading the orchestra, and Madame Adeline Gregory, Miss Dolly Castle, Messrs. W. Smith, H. J. Heath, and A. Mountford acting as soloists. On the same date Southmolton Choral Society (conductor Mr. Michael Watson) rendered the same work with a choir of fifty, assisted in the solo parts by Mrs. F. Gillard and Mr. Robert Courtney. Also on the same date the Torquay Amateur Operatic Society opened a five-nights' performance of 'Utopia, Limited,' to mark the conclusion of its tenth season. The choir of sixty voices was trained by Mr. G. H. Stone, and the principals were Messrs. F. Matthews, G. Stevens, R. H. Reed, W. Parker, W. Bolt, R. Perrett, H. L. P. Coster, A. Watson, W. Mason, the Misses F. Edwards, M. Hill, L. Edwards and M. Bailey. Not far away, in Teignmouth, simultaneously, the Amateur Operatic Society of the town presented with great success to large audiences 'La Mascotte.' The chorus, under the training of Mr. R. Pocock, sang spiritedly, and the principals were Messrs. P. R. Foster, P. S. Cliffe, W. Pearce, W. Hayman, J. Clarke, F. Parker, the Misses D. Langdon, T. Pedrick, M. Short and B. Newcombe.

Cowen's popular 'The Rose Maiden' was again given on February 7 by the Holsworthy Choral Society, which has, we are glad to note, been resuscitated by Mr. H. H. Bennett. This Society and similar ones deserve encouragement, for many members are obliged to walk many miles along country roads to attend rehearsal. At Holsworthy the solo vocalists were Miss Linford Browne and Messrs. W. Foster and G. Bishop. At Brent, on February 11, was performed C. H. Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander' by fifty performers, a good muster for a tiny village. Enthusiasm and accuracy characterized the performance. Mr. D. Parkes conducted, and in the miscellaneous portion of the programme played the pianoforte part in Rheinberger's Quartet in E flat (Op. 38), with Messrs. A. Coombe, H. Lake and Miss Blight. St. Budeaux Choral Society, which has been famed for its vigour and frequent performances, has suffered loss by removal of the conductor, Mr. B. Barnicott. The last concert under his baton took place on February 12, when Bridge's 'The Inchcape Rock' and Stanford's 'The Last Post' were given; and since that date the fate of the Society has hung in the balance, no one having yet been found to take the responsible vacant post of conductor. 'The Creation' was performed by Totnes Choral Society on February 28, under the baton of Mr. Herbert Worth, Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' being also given. Miss Nellie Ellis, Messrs. W. Foster and A. E. Old were soloists, and Mr. A. Coombe led the string band, with Miss Evelyn Hingston at the pianoforte. The month of March being absorbed in the Lenten season, only one event has to be recorded—an excellent performance of 'Elijah' on the 19th by the Ilfracombe Choral Society, which since the return of Mr. Bernard Hahn to the town has been resuscitated under his baton. Considering the new conditions, the choir did remarkably well, and the soloists were Miss Linford Browne, Mrs. W. W. Shute, Messrs. R. Courtney and S. Bishop. Immediately after Easter came the usual rush of events. The young Tavistock Society is now firmly established under Rev. Leigh Murray, and for the highness of its aims deserves encouragement. 'Samson' was very creditably performed on April 3 by 110 performers, with Miss Katharine Smith, Miss Mary Crocker, Mr. John Gill and Mr. A. E. Old in the solo parts. On the same date Mr. A. Raymond Wilmot obtained an unusually good performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' from the Exmouth Choral Society, the chorales and Hymn of the Apostles being finely sung. The principals were Miss Sylvia Yarra, Miss May Peters, Messrs. Thorold Waters and Charles Knowles. In St. Peter's Church, Tiverton, on April 4, 'St. Paul' was rendered under the conductorship of Mr. R. Bareham, with Dr. Wood at the organ, and Miss T. Davey, Mrs. Masland, and Messrs. Gwilym Richards and S. Bishop as soloists. The thirty-second season of the Sidmouth Choral and Orchestral Societies (Mr. J. A. Bellamy conductor) was marked by a good performance of 'Judas Maccabæus' on April 9, the soloists being Miss Edith Kirkwood, Mrs. Arthur Bird and Messrs. A. Collings and J. Lomas. 'Hear my prayer' was included in the miscellaneous part.

On April 10 a new and still small Society at Yelverton sang 'The May Queen' (Bennett), conducted by Mr. Walter Weekes. Mrs. Bruce Spooner is the deputy chorus-trainer of this Society. On the next day Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was given by the Newton Abbot Society, conducted by Mr. A. J. Bown. Mrs. Julian Clifford, Madame Annie Grew, Messrs. H. Beaumont and H. Dearth were soloists. The Axe Vale Musical Society gave 'The Messiah' on the same date, conducted by Mr. W. C. Walton, with Miss Linford Browne, Madame Graddon and Messrs. J. W. Trotter and S. Bishop. On April 24 the Torquay Musical Association—whose concerts are always of a high standard, both in matter and manner—performed the 'Hymn of Praise' with an interesting selection of madrigals in the second part. Mr. T. H. Webb conducted and Madame Emily Squire, Miss Ethel le Marchant and Mr. Charles Saunders were the principals. The orchestra, which has advanced to competency, played several pieces. Okehampton Choral Society is another young but useful band of workers. Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day' was performed by them on April 24, conducted by Mr. S. J. Janes, Madame Cissie Herbert being the soloist.

The yearly concert of the Barnstaple Musical Festival Society is one of real value to the district, for its conductor, Dr. H. J. Edwards, trains his singers so well that the best elements of choral technique combine to produce the best results in their performance. This satisfactory state of things was again evidenced on April 29, when the first and last parts of the 'Hiawatha' trilogy were given with an attractively fresh vocal tone. Miss Evelyn Gerrish and Messrs. S. Masters and S. Bishop were the principals. In the miscellaneous section two new songs for bass solo and orchestra, composed and conducted by Hubert Bath, produced at the last Philharmonic Concert at Queen's Hall, were enthusiastically received by his fellow townsfolk. The fact that only one concert of chamber music has to be noticed exposes the barrenness of the land in this respect, but reflects the greater credit on the Torquay Haydn String Quartet (Messrs. H. E. Crocker, J. Stephens, F. Crocker, C. T. Heaviside), who gave at their second concert on January 10 their patron musician's Quartet in G (Op. 76, No. 1) and also Schumann's Quartet in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1).

CORNISH TOWNS.

Cornwall is not as fertile as pastoral Devonshire even in the matter of choral societies, and more than one small association has recently given up the struggle for existence; therefore those that still retain their enthusiasm render invaluable service. In order of date of performance Torpoint's Society must first be mentioned for a concert performance on January 16 of 'Maritana,' with Miss Minnie Pearse, Mrs. H. Pike, Mr. W. Foster, Mr. G. S. Meadows and Mr. H. Smith in the various parts. At a second concert, on April 10, Cowen's 'The Rose Maiden' was given, the Misses Edith Vaughan and Mabel Trahair and Messrs. T. Gill and S. Smith being soloists. Mr. A. Greet conducted both concerts. The Lostwithiel Choral Society (conductor Mr. A. Greet) performed on February 5 Mendelssohn's 'Loreley,' with Madame Gillespie and Mr. W. Foster as soloists, and on February 6 the St. Austell Society gave Stanford's 'The Revenge' under the baton of Mr. J. H. English.

For some seasons the Falmouth and Truro Philharmonic Societies have amalgamated to give a combined performance in each place under Mr. Herbert Sanders, and on March 18 and 19 respectively the events took place. The work was

'Elijah,' in which the solo parts were sung by Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss D. Watson and Messrs. A. Collings and Dan Price. The small Society (choral and orchestral) at Millbrook gave Roger's cantata 'The footprints of the Saviour' on April 4, conducted by Mr. P. P. Wedlake. Mr. A. C. Faull's Liskeard Choral Society sang 'Hiawatha's departure' on April 5, with Miss Jennie Taggart and Messrs. A. H. Hallett and Charles Knowles as soloists; and on April 11 Camborne Choral Society excelled all previous efforts by a good rendering of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' conducted by Mr. H. V. Pearce, the soloists being Miss Maria Yelland and Messrs. W. Foster and A. E. Old.

The Spring Concert of the Penzance Choral Society took place in St. John's Hall on April 19, when Macfarren's cantata 'The lady of the lake' was performed under the conductorship of Mr. Richard White.

I am glad to record the formation in Falmouth of a 'Ševčik' orchestra for regular practice under the direction of Miss Treweeke. After a small beginning the class has steadily improved in tone and execution, and on February 8 was able to give really enjoyable renderings of a Schubert overture, Cowen's 'Language of Flowers' suite, and a 'Faust' selection. Miss Edith Blight was at the pianoforte. This is the only purely orchestral society in Cornwall.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

The following works by living composers are included in the scheme for the forthcoming season of the Symphony Concerts: 'Taormina,' a symphonic poem by Boehe; Intermezzo by Bossi; a 'Singspiel' overture by Istel: three pieces for small orchestra by Kaun; 'Spring,' a symphonic poem by Scheinpflug; Strauss's 'Macbeth'; Reger's Orchestral Variations; and a Symphony for small orchestra by Reznicek. The tendency of some modern composers is to write for very large orchestras, and this in some instances results in excessive noise rather than in genuine music. In the above list there are two works for 'small orchestra.' Are they signs of a wise reaction?——Massenet's 'Therèse,' recently performed at Monte Carlo, is to be given here next season at the opera house. The libretto, by M. Jules Claretie, is being translated by Otto Neitzel.——The Philharmonic Orchestra celebrated last month the jubilee of its foundation. Its early years were not prosperous. The fame of the Society really dates from 1887, when Hans von Bülow became conductor, but through ill-health he was forced to resign in 1892. His successors were Hans Richter, R. Mozskowsky, Felix Mottl, Herman Levi, E. von Schuch, Strauss and Arthur Nikisch, the last-named having been appointed in 1895.

BRESCIA.

Of Gasparo da Salò and his pupil Giovanni Paolo Maggini, two of Stradivari's great predecessors, the one was a native of this city, and the other early in his career settled here. On April 21 commemorative tablets were placed, one on the façade of the church of San Giuseppe and the other on a house in the Palazzo Vecchio street. On the same day in the Apollo Hall a concert of ancient music was given, the performers playing on instruments constructed by these two makers. The programme included an unpublished Trio by A. M. Benincori (born at Brescia in 1779); a Sonata for viola da gamba by Attilio Ariosti; and one by Porpora; also an unpublished Concerto by Turini, who died at Brescia in 1816. The concert opened with a Canzona gotica by Enrico Bossi, the present director of the Bologna Liceo musicale.

MILAN.

Wagner's 'Götterdämmerung' and 'Norma' are two of the works to be performed during the season 1907-8 at La Scala; the juxtaposition of these two titles justifies the quotation by Le Ménestrel of the proverb 'les extrêmes se touchent.'

PARIS.

The 'Fondation J. S. Bach,' organized by M. Charles Bouvet, has just concluded the fifth of its annual series of concerts. The final programme was entirely devoted to the old English masters—Gibbons, Byrd, Robert Jones, Purcell, Boyce, Arne, &c. The vocal music was sung by the Misses C. Lawley and I. Ainsley, two English ladies, pupils of Mme. Mathilde Marchesi.——Gounod spent many years of his life at St. Cloud, and to commemorate his residence there several of the inhabitants of that town raised funds for a bronze bust of the composer, which has been cast by A. A. Hébrard from a plaster by Carpeaux. The bust will stand in front of the Church of St. Cloud, and the inauguration ceremony, over which M. Dujardin-Beaumetz, Under-Secretary of State for Fine Arts, will preside, has been fixed for June 2.——After many delays Strauss's 'Salome' was performed at Paris on May 8 at the Théâtre du Châtelet, under the direction of the composer. Negotiations were in progress with M. Gailhard, and later on with MM. Isola, for the work to be given in French, but finally the Société des grandes auditions musicales de France arranged for six performances, with the original German text, to be given at the Châtelet. The work for more than one reason has been much discussed, hence it excited intense curiosity, and tout Paris went to see it. Opinions certainly differ with respect to the musical value of this music-drama; but even some of Strauss's staunchest adherents qualify their praise; as yet it appears only to have achieved a succès de curiosité. The composer's talent and skill are unquestioned, but whether he is making proper use of them is, to say the least, very much open to question.——'Ariane et Barbe-Bleue,' Conte Lyrique by M. Maeterlinck, music by Paul Dukas, was produced at the Opéra Comique on May 10. More than one French composer has turned to Maeterlinck for inspiration, notably Claude Debussy, and Paul Dukas, from various notices of his new work, which have appeared, seems to have achieved a genuine success. The excellent performance was under the direction of M. Rühlmann.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

Alton.—Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin' constituted the chief feature of interest at the concert given by the Excelsior Musical Society in the Assembly Rooms on May 8. The choir fully entered into the humorous spirit of the cantata, and there was a small orchestra. The parts of the Piper and the Mayor were sung by Mr. Gerald W. Adams and Mr. Noel Farron. Miss Bessie Wenmoth recited, and the concert concluded with the Evening Hymn from Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.' Much credit was due to the conductor, Mr. J. T. Wenmoth for the excellence of the performance.

Beckenham. — Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was performed by the Choral Society at the Public Hall on April 30. Miss Teresa Blamy, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. Samuel Masters, Mr. Claude Mackness and Mr. Daniel Price were responsible for the solo music. There was an efficient orchestra (led by Mr. D. M. Trytel) and the choir sang with admirable tone and expression, notably in 'O gladsome Light' and the Choral Epilogue. Mr. G. J. Hall, who conducted, may be congratulated on the success of the performance.

Bracknell (Berks).—Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was given by the Bracknell Choral Society on May 15 in the Victoria Hall. The performance altogether reflected great credit on the conductor, Mr. F. C. Faulkner, organist of Holy Trinity Church. The choir and orchestra numbered over 100. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Martin, Miss Pearl Anderson, Mr. George Brierley and Mr. Greeves Johnson.

Bradwell.—Special interest attached to the concert given by the Choral Society on April 27, as the programme consisted of items prepared for contest in the Buxton and North Derbyshire (Competitive) Musical Festival on May 16. Under the conductorship of Mr. Horace Middleton, the choir sang Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and Parry's part-song 'There rolls the deep'; the ladies of the choir sang Elgar's 'The Snow,' and the male section German's 'O peaceful night,' respectively.

Bromley (Kent).—The fourth concert this season of the Bromley Musical Society took place at the Drill Hall, on April 23, when Elgar's 'The Black Knight' received an admirable rendering. The programme also included Beethoven's overture 'Coriolanus,' Gounod's 'Saltarello,' German's 'Gipsy suite,' and 'The wreck of the Hesperus' (MacCunn). The solo vocalists were Miss Phyllis Lett and Mr. Bertram H. Latter. Mr. F. Lewis Thomas, as usual, conducted.

Bromyard.—The Musical Society ended its season with an excellent performance of Elgar's 'The Black Knight' and a miscellaneous selection on April 23. There was an efficient orchestra led by Mr. D. Reggel (of Birmingham). Madame Nora Kirby and Mr. F. Lightowler were the solo vocalists, and Mr. H. H. Dangerfield conducted.

Calgary (Canada).—A May-day matinée was given in the Lyric Theatre under the direction of Mrs. Annie Glen Broder. The programme, which consisted of songs of spring and summer, included the three-part songs for female voices, Elgar's 'Fly, singing bird,' with pianoforte and two violins, and 'Sweet the balmy breath of spring' from Mackenzie's 'Story of Sayid.' Among the vocal solos were Coenen's 'Lovely spring,' 'Summer at last,' from Mackenzie's 'Songs of spring,' and 'Onaway, awake,' from 'Hiawatha.' This was the first concert given by a chorus of female voices in the history of the new provinces.

Cinderford.—The Choral Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on May 16, when 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' occupied the first part of the programme. The choir sang with spirit, under the able direction of Mr. George Kear. Miss S. M. Lewis and Mr. A. J. Ranson were the solo vocalists.

Cobham.—The Orchestral and Choral Society gave a performance of Sir Edward Elgar's cantata 'The Black Knight' on April 29, the rendering being at once dramatic and forceful. At this concert Mr. J. Hullah Brown made his last appearance as conductor of the Society.

Coleshill.—The first and second parts of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' were presented by the Choral Society at its concert on April 23, and received a spirited rendering by the choir and orchestra, conducted by Mr. F. D. Spencer. The programme included the 'Peer Gynt' suite and overture to 'William Tell.' Miss Elsie Edwards, Mr. W. J. Ottey, and Mr. Arnold Griffin were the solo vocalists.

Crowborough. — The Musical Society performed Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on the afternoon of May 1 and the evening of May 2 with much success. The solos were sung by Miss Alice Hare, Miss Emilie Owen, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Rev. A. A. Jackson. The Society has been in existence only a few years, and the musical intelligence and enthusiasm which have been developed in that time are due to the ability of the conductor, Herr E. Grimm.

Eastbourne.—The St. Mary's Choral and Orchestral Society gave a concert on May 7 at the Pitman Institute, when Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' was the chief feature. The choir was well balanced and sang with spirit, and their efforts were ably supported by the orchestra, the whole performance reflecting credit on the conductor, Mr. Ernest P. Sibthorpe, organist of the parish church. Miss Edith Jackson, Mrs. W. Noakes, Mr. Arthur Dynham, and Mr. Walter Denham sang the solo music.

Enniscorthy.—The last concert of the season was given by St. Aidan's Philharmonic Society in the Athenæum, on May 10, with unqualified success. Anderton's cantata 'The Wreck of the Hesperus' was very well rendered, the solo parts being sustained by Miss Mollie Hogan, Mr. W. J. Rathborne and Mr. Michael Kelly. The Society, now in its third year, is in a flourishing state, with Mr. W. H. Grattan Flood as a painstaking and enthusiastic conductor.

Fareham.—Coleridge-Taylor's 'The death of Minnehaha' and 'Hiawatha's departure' constituted the programme of the Philharmonic Society at the Connaught Drill Hall on May 1. Miss Winifred Marwood, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Bertram Mills sang the solo music, and the choir and orchestra numbered 120 performers. Excellent results, due to the admirable training of Mr. Eugene Spinney, who conducted, characterized the concert.

Gravesend.—Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus' was sung with orchestral accompaniment at a special service in the parish church on May 8. The choir did efficient service under the direction of Mr. Howard Moss, and the solo parts were undertaken by Miss Marguerite Herring, Mr. J. Everden and Mr. Alec J. Mann. A feature of the service was the singing of three hymns composed by the conductor, and accompanied by the orchestra.

Hanley.—Mr. Herbert Sherwin's Orchestral Society, combined with the Hanley Philharmonic Society, gave a concert in the Victoria Hall on April 25, the chief feature of which was S. P. Waddington's 'John Gilpin.' The programme included three movements from Beethoven's first symphony, the 'William Tell,' overture, the valse from Tchaikovsky's ballet 'La belle au bois dormant,' and the march and chorus from 'Tannhäuser.' Miss Adeline Johnson, Mrs. H. E. Sherwin (violin) and Mr. Harold Rhodes (pianoforte) were the soloists, and Mr. Herbert Sherwin conducted.

Hanworth (Middlesex).—The Choral Society gave a concert at the Schools on April 26, when the principal feature was Sir J. F. Bridge's 'Inchcape Rock,' in which the chorus and orchestra displayed the result of careful training by the conductor, Mr. H. Egbert Lane. Cowen's 'Bridal Chorus' and Faning's 'Moonlight' also were well sung.

Ilford.—Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' was very well performed by the Choral and Orchestral Society at the Town Hall on April 23, the solo part being sung by Madame Lilian Whittaker. The other soloists who took part in the miscellaneous selection were Mr. W. L. Cockburn, Miss Irene Mackenzie (pianist) and Mr. E. G. Morgan (saxophone). Mr. A. R. Spriggs and Mr. F. E. Wilson were the conductors.

Kenilworth.—The Madrigal Society gave a concert, under the title of 'St. George's Festival,' in the Abbey Assembly Rooms on April 25. The programme was of a distinctly national character, and included Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and 'Pomp and circumstance' march, Mackenzie's 'Britannia' overture, Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea,' Cowen's four Old English dances, and an English choral fantasia by Dr. J. Bill. Both choir and orchestra rendered excellent service under the conductorship of Mr. E. Roberts West, and the solo vocalists were Miss May Eaves and Mr. T. J. Kelly.

Kidderminster.—The chief feature of the concert in the Town Hall on April 24, in aid of the parish church choir fund, was the first performance of a new song-cycle, 'Royalty and Rhyme,' by Miss Ruth Aitken. This cycle, which is dedicated to Sir Hubert Parry, consists of eight bright and tuneful settings of various 'old world' lyrics, written with considerable skill by the composer's sister. The four vocalists who assisted at this performance were Miss Muriel Gough, Mrs. Gilbert Summers, Mr. Ernest Penfold and Mr. Edward Amphlett.

Leicester.—The Quorn Musical Society concluded its tenth season in the Village Hall, Quorn, on May 8, when Parry's 'Pied Piper' and a selection from Gounod's 'Faust' constituted the programme. Madame Florence Smart, Miss Evelyn Firrs, Messrs. C. Dedman, J. Ball and Charles Mott were the solo vocalists, the last-named singing the parts of the Piper and the Mayor in Parry's cantata. Mr. Vincent Dearden conducted.

Loftus-in-Cleveland.—The last concert of the season of the Loftus and District Musical Society was given in the Oddfellows' Hall on April 24. The works chosen were Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day' and Dr. F. H. Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' both of which were admirably rendered by the Society. In the miscellaneous portion of the concert Miss Maggie Davies, Messrs. G. Chandos-Cradock and W. Peacock were the solo vocalists. Mr. James Smith, of Middlesbrough, conducted.

Monmouth.—A successful pianoforte recital was given on May 2 at the Rolls Hall by Miss Enid Payne. The programme included solos by Bach, Handel, Purcell, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Brahms, Chopin, Grieg and Paderewski, which gave evidence of the pianist's versatile talent in various styles of composition.

Newport Pagnell.—The Musical Society gave a concert on April 25, Barnby's 'Rebekah' being the prominent feature of the programme. The work of both choir and orchestra reflected much credit on the conductor, Mr. Donald Reid. The solo vocalists were Miss L. Allen Cane, Mr. Merlin Davies and Mr. W. H. Tarry.

Northampton.—The St. Cecilia Orchestral Society gave its twenty-third concert on April 25 at the Town Hall. The orchestra, consisting of eighty local performers, played Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony, the overtures to 'Oberon' and 'Tannhäuser,' and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' march with much effect under the conductorship of Mr. William Bonner. Mr. Frederick Stock was the solo violinist and Miss Olive Hilder the vocalist. Mr. Ernest Tebbutt was an able accompanist.

Nottingham.—The South Wilford Choral Society gave a performance of the cantata 'King Harold,' by F. Cunningham Woods, in the Meadows Hall, on May 9. The choir sang throughout with agreeable tone and excellent expression, the singing being specially good in the epilogue 'Break, ye waves.' There was an efficient orchestra led by Dr. Alderson, and the solo vocalists were Miss Grace Parr, Miss D. Goddard, Mr. H. Maxwell and Mr. T. Mudd. Much credit is due to Mr. C. S. Harris, who conducted.

Oswestry.—The Choral Society gave its second concert this season at the Victoria Rooms on April 23, when Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed under the conductorship of Mr. A. E. Floyd. The choir sang with much intelligence and dramatic power, and the solo music was interpreted by Miss Bessie Cartwright, Miss Lalla Parry, Mr. Spencer Thomas and Mr. Robert Chignell. The orchestra was led by Mr. B. Ollerhead, and Mr. A. H. Robinson presided at the organ.

Reigate.—The second concert this season of the Choral Society took place at the Public Hall on April 25, when 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and the 'Death of Minnehaha' were performed. The solo vocalists were Miss Oswyn Jones, Mr. John Bardsley and Mr. Frederick Ranalow, and Mr. Harold Macpherson conducted.

Romford.—The Musical Society gave a concert in the Corn Exchange on April 23, and, in celebration of St. George's Day, presented as its chief feature Elgar's 'Banner of St. George.' The choir sang with much spirit and expression, and the orchestra was highly efficient under the conductorship of Mr. John Challis. The solo vocalists were Madame Marie Evett, Miss Maude Scruby, Mr. John Challis and Mr. Frank Tebbutt.

Rugby.—The programme of the Philharmonic Society's Concert, given in the Co-operative Hall on May 16, included Stanford's 'Revenge' and three choral ballads by Coleridge-Taylor, in which the choir rendered good service. The orchestra played the overtures to 'Egmont' and 'Semiramide,' a suite by Massenet and the Hungarian March by Berlioz. Miss Margaret Layton was the solo vocalist and Mr. Basil Johnson conducted.

Selhurst.—The Musical Society conducted by Mr. William E. Partridge gave a successful performance of Stanford's 'Phaudrig Crohoore,' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' at the Holy Trinity Schools, on April 30. The choir and orchestra were efficient, and Miss Edith Lewis was the solo vocalist.

Stevenage.—Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of praise' was performed by the Choral Society in the Public Hall on April 24, under the conductorship of Mr. John Abernethy, and with Miss Lilian Evison and Mr. Henry Beaumont as solo vocalists. The programme included Eaton Faning's choral ballad 'The miller's wooing,' Sullivan's 'O gladsome Light' and Handel's 'May no rash intruder.'

Winchester.—Haydn's 'The Seasons' was performed by the Musical Society in the Guildhall on May 2, and the concert was considered one of the most successful given by this Society—one that reflected much credit on Mr. Charles Gamblin, the conductor, who had trained the choir and orchestra of 100 performers with very satisfactory results. The solo parts were sung by Miss Stella Maris, Mr. Samuel asters and Mr. Robert Carr.

Windsor.—The Windsor and Eton Choral Society gave its second concert this season at the Albert Institute on May 6, with the assistance of the Windsor and Eton Amateur Orchestral Society. The first part of the programme consisted of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' the solo in which was sung by Mr. Spencer Thomas. The miscellaneous selection which followed included Macfarren's 'Three fishers,' Leslie's 'Charm me asleep,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'The fair of Almachara,' and a new miniature suite for orchestra, 'The Pixies,' by Mr. T. F. Dunhill, which was conducted by the composer and met with much appreciation. Miss Gertrude Sichel was the other vocalist. The Rev. Bernard Everett conducted.

Witney.—The Witney Choral Society and the Witney Orchestral Society combined gave a performance of Haydn's 'Creation' on April 23, under the conductorship of Mrs. Florence Weedon. The solos were sung by Miss Mary Fielding, Mr. Thomas Gibbs and Mr. James Coleman.

Woodford.—Leoni's 'Gate of life' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of praise' were performed by the Choral Society at the Memorial Hall on May 2, under the conductorship of Mr. F. A. Armstrong. The choir sang well and the orchestra was efficient. The solo vocalists were Miss Jessie Rihll, Mr. Leonard Gowings and Mr. Claude Dyer.

The following deaths are recorded with regret:

On April 26, at the London Hospital, after an operation, Mr. William Harding Bonner, aged fifty-four. A hard-working, true-hearted, and much-esteemed man, Mr. Bonner was the founder and for twenty-two years Principal and Director of the Forest Gate School of Music, now known as the Metropolitan Academy of Music. He was also the founder and for thirteen years conductor of the West Ham Choral Society. As one who devoted nearly the whole of his strenuous life to popularizing music, no less than for his genial nature, Mr. Bonner will be greatly missed, and his death, in the prime of life, is mourned by a large circle of friends.

On May 12, at Claremont, Ramsgate, James Shaw, aged sixty-five. A native of Leeds and a chorister of the Parish Church there, Mr. Shaw is best known as the organist of Hampstead Parish Church from 1874 to 1895, and for his contributions to church music. He founded the Middlesex Choral Union, which gave concerts in St. James's Hall in 1891-92.

The fourth Annual Conference of the Girls' School Music Union was held at the Froebel Educational Institute, West Kensington, on May 12. Mr. W. H. Hadow was re-elected President. The object of the Union is to advance music in secondary schools for girls, and in furtherance of this object it was decided to hold a series of meetings throughout the country. Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland, who presided at the conference, read an interesting paper on 'Enthusiasm in teaching.' Mr. Hadow and Dr. F. G. Shinn also addressed the meeting; the former dealt with the subject of training the listener, the latter with the advantages of teaching the history of music in schools.

The Cheltenham Philharmonic Society held its second spring concert at the Town Hall on May 15, when a miscellaneous programme was performed. Sir C. Villiers Stanford was present to conduct his own works—Irish Rhapsody No. 1, in D minor (Op. 78) and 'Songs of the Sea.' In the song-cycle for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra, Mr. Plunket Greene was the soloist and had to repeat the ever popular 'Old Superb.' The chorus and orchestra, with Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. James Davies as soloists, gave a capital rendering of Sir Hubert Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin,' and the orchestra, under the baton of Mr. C. J. Phillips, was heard in other compositions.

A society has been formed with the title of The Royal College of Music Union, and under the presidency of the director, Sir Hubert Parry, the principal objects of which are (1) To provide a fresh bond between present and former pupils and the College, (2) To supply members with information as to College events, (3) To keep a register of names and addresses, and (4) Generally to promote meetings and intercourse between College pupils past and present. Further particulars may be obtained from the hon. secretaries at the College.

Messrs. Novello & Co. have issued a graded list of their popular part-songs, which will be found very valuable as a guide to anyone selecting part-music. The part-songs are divided into the following classes: 'Grade I. Easy, no change of key; Grade II. Fairly easy, no change of key, some accidentals; Grade III. Fairly easy, with change of key; Grade IV. More difficult, but not very difficult; Grade V. For special choirs.' Part-songs and choruses with orchestral accompaniments also are given. This list will be sent post-free on application.

Professor Prout gave an interesting lecture-recital on 'An evening with J. S. Bach as a vocal writer' at a meeting of the Incorporated Society of Musicians at 20, Hanover Square, on May 11.

Dr. J. E. Borland read a paper on 'French Opera before 1750' at the meeting of the Musical Association on May 21.

Answers to Correspondents.

S. D. B.—In order to obtain the necessary preparation for passing the examinations you name, we would advise you to place yourself under some experienced teacher who prepares pupils for these tests, rather than attend evening classes at a local 'school of music.' You would then get that personal attention which is so very desirable.

Trinity.—(1) Pronounce 'o' as 'au,' and the final 'e' as 'ay.' (2) 'The trumpet shall sound' is not the best air that you could choose for your examination, because the trumpet obbligato is so essential to its full effect, but as it suits your voice admirably, there is no reason why you should not sing it.

W. W. P.—It is impossible to give a complete list of all the performances given in England of Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri.' The first time it was heard in this country was at the Philharmonic Society's concert of June 23, 1856; but it had been performed in Dublin two years earlier, on February 10, 1854. The work is given more often than you suppose.

Belle Isle.—(1) The composer Spiro Samara can doubtless be communicated with through one of his publishers: for instance, Messrs. Bote & Bock, Berlin. (2) We cannot trace the publisher of Sir G. A. Macfarren's string quintet and string quartets.

H. D. E.—Have you considered the possibility of procuring an electric motor to blow the organ? This acquirement might overcome the difficulty of obtaining satisfactory results in the absence of gas and sufficient water power.

G. G.—Mr. Ernest A. Dicks's 'A Handbook of Examinations in Music' would doubtless help you in your preparation work, but you should place yourself under a good teacher who prepares pupils for examinations.

Organum.—There is no intention at present of publishing in book form the illustrated articles on cathedrals, &c., which have appeared in The Musical Times. Thanks for your kind words of appreciation.

Amateur.—The line placed above the note is an indication that the note should be held its full length, and in pianoforte music held firmly down; the sign should not be confused with the sforzando >.

A. R.—Your inquiry should be addressed to a reliable firm of bell founders: for instance, Messrs. Taylor, of Loughborough.

Mdlle. X.—For a book on the physiology of the vocal organs, see 'Voice, song, and speech,' by Lennox Browne (Sampson Low), and for information on Acoustics, consult 'Acoustics,' by T. F. Harris (Curwen).

W. T.—Notice the advertisements in this and other journals which appear from time to time in regard to choristers at cathedral and other choir schools. See p. 309 of the present issue for such advertisements.

Breve.—The Royal Society of Musicians, Secretary, Mr. Charles Lucas, 3, Wells Street, Oxford Street, London, W.

G. S.—Stainer's Harmony Primer will serve you for a start in your theoretical studies; it might be followed by Bridge and Sawyer's 'A Course of Harmony.'

Da Capo.—Yes, the repeat indications (dots) are intended to be observed, though sometimes they are ignored.

G. C. J.—We cannot trace a setting by Carl Busch of Tennyson's 'The Eagle.'

H. R.—There is no English translation of Beethoven's 'Studien.'

SIX OCTAVE STUDIES
FOR THE PIANOFORTE
BY
WILLEM COENEN.

Price Three Shillings.

"The musical value of some of the pieces is not inconsiderable."—The Times.

"Must needs prove most useful, and are not at all dry."—Daily Telegraph.

"The studies are quite as entertaining to the listener as they are serviceable to the performer."—Musical Opinion.

"Six clever and useful 'Octave Studies.' They are more than usually interesting."—Musical Standard.

"Excellent for practice."—Christian World.

"They afford a very complete course of study. The different numbers are tuneful and attractive, and the variety is great."—The Lady.

"Almost every branch of octave-playing is represented in these tuneful studies."—Church Bells.

"These studies are very melodious, and will make the irksome study of octaves quite interesting to the hard-working student."—Church Family Newspaper.

"Admirably adapted to formulate touch as well as style in this special branch of pianoforte technique."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"Fitted for advanced students. For wrist work, No. 2 is excellent, and No. 6 is good enough for a concert piece. In all there is pretty equal work for both hands."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Six excellent octave studies (legato and staccato)."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

"Can safely be recommended to players who possess the laudable ambition of keeping up their technique."—Western Daily Press.

"Mr. Gaul is an experienced organist, and his series of organ works now in process of publication will doubtless have a great sale. Three numbers are to hand. No. 1, a beautiful Allegretto Pastorale; No. 2, comprising two movements, Communion and Allegretto; and No. 3, comprising six Andante movements, all written in the melodious manner to which the legion of admirers of Mr. Gaul's genius are accustomed. All organists should place these graceful works beside the slow movements of Henry Smart, another English musician whose name is honoured in the organ galleries."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

THE PARISH CHURCH ANTHEM BOOK.

Price, Cloth, Two Shillings and Sixpence.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The Parish Church Anthem Book is the outcome of a desire on the part of many, for a Collection of Words permanent in character, representative as to selection, and moderate in price.

Messrs. Novello's Collection of "WORDS OF ANTHEMS" has been used as a basis in the compilation of this work, but many Anthems have been added, both ancient and modern, which have not been previously published in a standard form.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

TO CONDUCTORS OF SMALL CHORAL SOCIETIES.

One of the greatest difficulties met with by conductors of small choral societies is to obtain an adequate accompaniment to modern works. Usually the pianoforte has to be relied upon, with scraps of instrumentation put in by strings and a few wind instruments. In the absence of an oboe player, an important oboe solo has to be played on the pianoforte, with perhaps the strings accompanying. To prevent such crudities Dr. Ely has rescored his cantata "The Spanish Jew's Tale" for a small band, so that a very effective performance can be given with the following five wind instruments—flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn—strings and pianoforte (to play the harp part only). The orchestration is complete without any filling in by the pianoforte, which ruins the orchestral effect.

THE SPANISH JEW'S TALE

(LONGFELLOW)

DRAMATIC CANTATA

FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

THOMAS ELY,

Mus. Doc. Lond., F.R.C.O.

Price Two Shillings.

"It is a clever work, reflecting the Oriental picturesqueness of the story in the colour of the orchestration and the flow of melody. . . . There is great ability and thought in the work, and many of the melodic ideas have undoubted charm. The different groups of voices are contrasted very happily; and orchestral interludes serve as breathing points, while the preludial passage for the Orchestra is a most effective call to attention. Altogether the work is a striking evidence of Dr. Ely's musicianship and fancy, and it was most creditably performed by the chorus and a very efficient orchestra."—Yorkshire Post.

"It is a clever composition, making a well-considered effort to give point to the text, and the orchestra is handled with freedom and varied effect."—Musical Times.

NOVELLO'S ANTHEM BOOK

A COLLECTION OF POPULAR ANTHEMS

FOR

FESTIVAL AND GENERAL USE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

Each book of this series contains twelve anthems: some for Festival occasions—e.g., Christmas, Easter, Harvest and others which may be used at any time. Great care has been taken in making the selections, in order that suitable variety may be secured and practical needs supplied.

It is therefore anticipated that in churches were an elaborate musical service is not possible, this publication will find acceptance. In such cases the advantage of having, in one book, twelve standard anthems, which more than cover the requirements of the Church's year, is obvious.

Book 1.

Advent	O King and Desire of all Nations	Stainer.
Christmas	Arise, shine, for thy light is come	Elvey.
Lent	Lord, for thy tender mercies' sake	Farrant.
,,	Enter not into judgment	Attwood.
,,	O ye that love the Lord	Coleridge-Taylor.
Easter	O give thanks	Goss.

Christmas	Sing and rejoice	Barnby.
Lent	O Saviour of the world	Goss.
,,	Teach me, O Lord	Attwood.
,,	Jesu, Word of God Incarnate	Gounod.
Easter	Christ is risen	Elvey.
Harvest	Great is the Lord	Steane.
General	What are these?	Stainer.
,,	O how amiable	West.
,,	O taste and see	Sullivan.
,,	The Lord is my Shepherd	Macfarren.
,,	God that madest earth and heaven	Fisher.

Book 3.

Advent	Far from their home	Woodward.
Christmas	Four Christmas Carols	Various.
Lent	Turn Thy face from my sins	Sullivan.

General	Seek ye the Lord	Roberts.
,,	I was glad	Elvey.
,,	The radiant morn	Woodward.
,,	O praise God in His holiness	Weldon.
,,	Doth not wisdom cry	Haking.

Book 4.

Advent	Arise, O Jerusalem	King.
Christmas	Let us now go even unto Bethlehem	Hopkins.
Lent	In Thee, O Lord	Tours.
,,	Comfort, O Lord, the soul of Thy servant	Crotch, arr. by Goss.
,,	God so loved the world	Stainer.
Easter	Christ our Passover	Goss.
Whitsun	Praised be the Lord daily	Calkin.
Harvest	Ye shall dwell in the land	Stainer.
General	O how amiable are Thy dwellings	Barnby.
,,	O taste and see how gracious the Lord is	Goss.

SCHOOL BAND MUSIC

Edited by W. G. McNAUGHT.

This Series, as its title suggests, is intended to meet the needs of School String Bands. It will include arrangements and original pieces of every suitable description.

FIRST SELECTION.

1.	WHERE THE BEE SUCKS	Arne.
2.	THE GOLDEN VANITY	English Air.
3.	THE BAY OF BISCAY	John Davy.
	O WERT THOU IN THE CAULD BLAST	Mendelssohn.
4.	GOOD MORROW, GOSSIP JOAN	English Air.
	AULD LANG SYNE	Scotch Air.
5.	THE ASH GROVE	Welsh Air.
	MARCH OF THE MEN OF HARLECH	Welsh Air.
6.	THE ARETHUSA	Shield.
	THE MINSTREL BOY	Irish Air.
7.	FAIREST ISLE	Purcell.
	WELCOME THOU WHOSE DEEDS CONSPIRE (from Jephtha)	Handel.
8.	HEART OF OAK	Dr. W. Boyce.
	THE HARP THAT ONCE IN TARA'S HALLS	Irish Air.

The above are all very simply arranged by Percy E. Fletcher. The 1st Violin parts do not go beyond the third position, and they are often written divisi in order to fill out the harmony. The viola parts are ad lib., the actual notes being written as the second of the divisi parts for the second violin. The bowing and fingering are carefully marked. The arrangements are complete in themselves with or without the vocal parts, and they can also be used as accompaniments to Novello's School Song edition of the pieces.

1st Violin, 2nd Violin, Viola, 'Cello and Bass Parts, each number and part in a separate cover, price 3d. Pianoforte Parts can be obtained of each of the above Pieces, price 1½d. or 2d.

AND ALLEGRO
FOR STRINGS
(QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.
(Op. 47.)

Full Score, 12s.; Quartet Parts, 4s.; Orchestral Parts, 7s.
Pianoforte Duet Arrangement, 4s.

THE TIMES.

The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenuity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for the orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naïve little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has here adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glees and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

Extract from Introduction.

The benefits of sight-singing cannot be over estimated. The vocalist becomes independent and self-reliant: he has a wide and varied field open to him: the music he learns does not stale with wearisome repetitions. In course of time he will be able "to hear in his mind what he sees on paper." There will be the possibility of his becoming a musician, for there is nothing so vital to true progress as the power to imagine sounds from notation.

VOICE CULTURE FOR CHILDREN

A PRACTICAL PRIMER ON THE CULTIVATION AND PRESERVATION OF YOUNG VOICES

WITH EXERCISES FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS, CHOIRS, SOLO-BOYS, ETC.

BY

JAMES BATES.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the extreme delicacy of the child's voice, yet how often have these frail instruments been irreparably ruined for want of a little knowledge or a little care! Let the teacher sternly discourage anything like "shouty" singing, especially in class or choir, or misguided attempts to sing notes which are too high or too low. It may safely be said that soft singing (of course within the compass of the voice) will never do harm, no matter how continuous, but loud singing will inevitably lead to disaster. The teacher who successfully instils the principles of correct singing, and thereby renders possible the life-long use and enjoyment of a pleasing voice, is conferring on his young charges a boon of inestimable value. This thought should be his constant encouragement in times of difficulty and lack of immediate success.

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

BY

EMILY R. DAYMOND,

D.Mus., Oxon.

This book is the outcome of a request made some time ago to the author to write some examples of Exercises in Score-Reading similar to those imposed as tests in the examination for F.R.C.O.

These Exercises (forty-eight in number) comprise two sets of twenty-four examples, each set containing one example in every key, major and minor. The first and easier set is intended to prepare the way for the second, which is of greater complexity.

The author has endeavoured to provide a certain amount of variety both in style and in difficulty, and it is hoped that the Exercises will be of use to candidates for the F.R.C.O. Examination and also to other students who wish to become proficient in Score-Reading.

EXAMINATION QUESTIONS AND HOW TO WORK THEM

BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS,

Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

PREFACE.

This Primer is intended more especially for those who purpose presenting themselves for examination in the theory of music. While the subjects dealt with may be found in all examination schemes for musical degrees and diplomas, it is hoped that the following chapters may prove useful more especially to candidates for the diplomas of the Royal College of Organists.

The object of this book is to stimulate and cultivate method in answering examination questions. Considerable experience as an examination "coach" has proved the success of the method, herein followed, of dissecting the questions, and—by dividing the points for consideration under several heads—thus directing the student's attention to one point at a time.

Price Two Shillings.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of Daily Technical Practice. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

"The book is one which our organist readers will do well to study. PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

This Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

The present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

MUSICAL SCHOLARSHIP AT OXFORD.

A "HOLROYD MUSICAL" SCHOLARSHIP of the value of £60 a year will be OFFERED FOR COMPETITION in July at Keble College.

The Scholarship is open to persons not members of the University, and to such members of the University as have not exceeded their first year of residence. But by the terms of the benefaction all candidates must be members of the Church of England, and preference is to be given to candidates who have been born in the County of York or who are at the present time being educated or resident in that County.

The Scholarship will be awarded for excellence in some subject connected with the theory or practice of music, vocal or instrumental.

The Scholar elect will, if not already in residence, be expected to come into residence in October, 1907, and must pass Responsions or some equivalent examination before he can receive the emoluments of the Scholarship. He will be expected to take the degree in Arts and be subject to any regulations about his musical studies which the College may determine.

The Scholarship will be awarded in the first instance for two years, but, if the College is satisfied with the conduct and progress of the Scholar, it will be prolonged so as to cover the usual time of residence.

Candidates are requested to write to the Warden not later than July 1, sending the certificates of their birth and baptism, with not less than two testimonials and a statement of the subject which they offer for examination. They will then receive detailed information about the examination.

TECHNIQUE
AND
PIANOFORTE PLAYING
BY
FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glees and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

OF
WORDS OF ANTHEMS.

Crown 8vo, 822 pp., cloth, red edges, 5s. Red Basil and red edges, 7s. 6d.
Appendix only, paper cover, 1s.

This Book, which now contains the Words of about 2,000 Anthems, besides being admirably adapted for the use of Choirs and Congregations, for which purpose it was originally compiled, will be found most valuable to Organists, Choirmasters, and the Clergy as a Book of Reference for the selection of Anthems suitable for special days, seasons, or occasions, the Indexes having been considerably enlarged. It also contains a list of Anthems suitable for Men's voices, and Anthems with Latin words.

The newly-incorporated Anthems (Nos. 1590 to 1952) have been added to the former edition by means of an Appendix, which is published separately from the complete work. Consequently Choirs and Congregations which are still using the older edition are enabled to supplement their books, and make them complete, by purchasing the Appendix at the price of One Shilling.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(Instituted 1872.)

President:
The Right Hon. LORD COLERIDGE, M.A., K.C.
Warden:
EDMUND H. TURPIN, Mus.D.

MICHAELMAS TERM begins on September 25.

The College provides complete and systematic individual instruction, and training in every recognized musical subject.

Students are received for a single subject. The lessons may be taken during the day and on certain evenings.

Preparation for all Public Examinations in the Theory and Practice of Music, including the Examinations for University Degrees.

The Orchestra, the Choir, the Opera Classes, and the other Ensemble Classes are also open to those not attending for other subjects, as are also the Courses of Lectures on Musical History, the Theory of Music, etc., given during Term by recognized Teachers of the London University.

There is a SPECIAL COURSE of LECTURES on the ART OF TEACHING given on Wednesday afternoons during Term time. Students may enter for special tuition in this subject or for lessons by correspondence. This Course serves as preparation for the College Examinations for Diplomas.

The class for the TRAINING OF TEACHERS meets on Saturdays, and is intended for Students desirous of obtaining not only general instruction, but also practical experience in the Art of Teaching as applied to Music.

STUDENTS' CONCERTS are given frequently.

In the JUNIOR SCHOOL pupils of either sex are admitted up to the age of fifteen, and the lessons are arranged so as not to interfere with the pursuit of their general education. All students in this department are under the immediate supervision of the Director of Studies.

There are THIRTY SCHOLARSHIPS tenable at the College, and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits. They are awarded for the following subjects: Composition, Pianoforte, Singing, Organ, Stringed and Wind Instruments, and carry with them, in exceptional cases, a maintenance grant.

Prospectus and Scholarship regulations may be had on application.

By order, SHELLEY FISHER, Secretary.

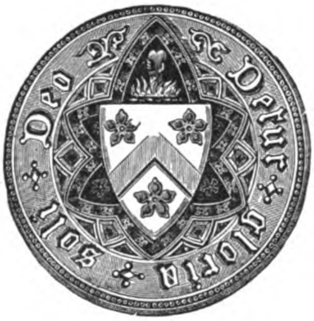
JULY 1, 1907.

DULWICH COLLEGE.

Dulwich College, or 'College of God's gift in Dulwich,' was founded by Edward Alleyn (1566-1626). He was a famous actor and a contemporary of Shakespeare, and in the year 1595 he is described as 'a musicion.' Although an eminent actor, and although he, in conjunction with Philip Henslowe, had built in 1600 the Fortune Theatre in Golden Lane, Cripplegate, Alleyn did not make his fortune on the stage. As early as 1594 he had acquired an interest in the baiting-house at Paris Garden in Southwark, and in 1604 he and Henslowe purchased from the then holder the Court appointment of 'Chief Master Ruler and Overseer of all and singular our games of Beares, Bulls, and Mastive Doggs.' This royal office, not altogether an elevating one, was held by Alleyn, as the survivor of Henslowe, till his death: it was doubtless a source of considerable profit to him, and he acquired great wealth and landed property. Between the years 1605 and 1614 he purchased from Sir Francis Calton the entire Manor of Dulwich for the sum of 'nearly £10,000,' a wonderful investment of which he could not possibly have foreseen the potentialities. The Manor of Dulwich, it may be stated, was granted to Thomas Calton by Henry VIII. on the dissolution of the monastery of Bermondsey.



THE ARMS OF DULWICH COLLEGE.

With princely munificence Alleyn built and endowed the 'College of God's gift in Dulwich,' which originally consisted of a 'Master, Warden, fower Fellowes, sixe poore Brethren, sixe poore Sisters, and twelve poore Schollers.' One John Benson, 'bricklayer, of Westminster,' began the building of the College in 1613. The chapel, which Alleyn built 'in his said College on his own land and at his own cost, and has furnished and ornamented the same with all things necessary for the decent and proper performance of divine service,' was consecrated and 'dedicated to y^{e} honour off Christ by the most Reverent father in God, George Abbot Archbishopp of Canterbury His Grace, on Sundaye y^{e} first off September and y^{e} yeare off our Lord, 1616.' The first organist, Thomas Hopkins —perchance an ancestor of Edward John Hopkins —was appointed on March, 26, 1618, and two years later, 'y^{e} chaple wase furnished wth basone and candell sticke y^{e} children wth 10 surplices & y^{e} fellowes allsoe.' The original buildings, which have been much altered since they were erected, occupy three sides of a square, and are known as 'The Old College.' The chapel (see the illustration on p. 439) contains the tomb of the founder.

In 1619 the institution obtained a royal charter from James I. after some obstruction on the part of Lord Bacon, who wished the king to apply part of the grant to the foundation of two lectureships at Oxford and Cambridge. Within two months of his death (in 1626) Alleyn signed the Statutes of the College, which consist of no fewer than 121 'Items'! Some of these 'Items' are of special interest in that they relate to music and show how the founder had carefully considered the subject in endowing his munificent benefaction. Thus in 'Item 5' we read:

> That the two first senior ffellowes bee in degrees, at the least Masters of Artes, of either of the Universities, Oxforde or Cambridge, preachers; the two second senior ffellowes, graduates and divines, the first of them to be an approved scholmaster, and the second to be a sufficient scholler to be usher of the schole, the two first of the sixe chaunters to be Musicians, of sufficient skill in the art of musique to be Organistes of the college, and to teach the poore Schollers musique and to singe, and the other fower chaunters to be singing men of the chappel, all of them single and unmaried ꝑsons; and if any of them shall marry after their admission, then he or they so doinge to be removed from the college (ipso facto), and for ever made uncapable of any place or ꝑferment therein.

'Item 35,' headed 'The Office of the Fellowes,' is thus quaintly and exhaustively set forth in regard to music:

> That the two first of the sixe chaunters, alias junior fellowes, be men of approved skill in musique to sounde the organs in the chappell, and singe their partes in the quire, and shall prick all such services and anthems as the master shall com̄and for the use of the chappell into faire Books, and also all other songes and musiques for the private or publique use of the college, both for violls and voices, and those they shall keepe faire, and at their departure leave them to the college; and they shall teach the poore schollers to sing prick-songe, and to play upon the violls, virginalls, organs, and other instruments, as they shalbe found capable, and to teach and direct any other ꝑson or ꝑsons of the college that are to sing their partes in the chappell, or any whom the mr., warden, and two senior fellowes shall think fit.
> And the other fower of the said chanters, als junior fellowes, to be singers in the chappell, and ꝑsons well skilled and exercised in prick-songe, and to be men of handicraft trades, viz$^{t.}$, taylors, glovers, imbroderers, shoemakers, or such like; and these fower Chaunters, als junior fellowes, for avoyding idlenesse, shalbe imployed in their trades by the appointment of the master, warden, and fower senior fellowes, or the most part of them, for the generall good of the college, both in making the poore schollers apparell and shoes, and otherwise, as they shall direct, provided all stuff shall be found them at the college charge. They shall also every day, in the afternoone, teach and instruct in their several manufactures, such and so many of the poore Schollers, as shalbe found unfit for the universitye; and that they may not loose their musique, half the number shalbe taught the trades one afternoone, and the other of them the other afternoone.

That Alleyn was familiar with the choral services of the Chapel Royal and Westminster Abbey, and that he wished them to be models for those in his chapel at Dulwich, is shown by 'Item 59,' headed 'Orderes for the Chapell and the celebrating of Divine Service': it begins thus:

> I ordaine and for ever establish, that in all succeeding times to come the service which shall be reade and sunge in the said chappell shalbe daily read and sunge in such manner and forme, as neare as may be, as is usually observed in the King's Chappell, or in the Collegiate Church of S$^{t.}$ Peter at Westminster, and that the master, warden, senior and junior ffellowes, and poore schollers of the said college on Sundaies, holydaies and eves, in their surplices, and other working daies in their gownes, shall daily sing their partes in the quire of the said chappell, and if the m$^{r.}$, warden, or any of the senior fellows be not present in their singing, or cannot sing their parts in the quire, that then he or they that shalbee defective therein shall find everie of them at his and their own charge a severall ꝑson that can sing his ꝑte in the quire to supplie his or theire place that is defective, untill hee or they shalbe able to p'forme the same.

The last clause of this Item further shows the importance Alleyn attached to the reading of music at sight:

> And I further ordaine, that, if yt may be, all the other servaunts or officers of the said College to have knowledge in prick-songe, or to learne the same after their coming to the said college, and to sing his or their parte in the quire also at times convenient.

'Item 113,' a financial Statute, states that 'the revenue of the landes which I have given to the said College, amounting to eight hundred pounds per annum thereabouts, shall be yearely disposed and devided in such manner and sort as hereafter ensueth, that is to say:

For the diett for the master, warden and ten senior and junior fellowes, after the rate of ten powndes ꝑ annum a piece.	cxx
. . . .
The two first chaunters or junior fellowes, viz$^{t.}$, organists to be sixe pounds to each of them, paid quarterly, per annum.	xii
To the said two first chaunters or junior fellowes, to find stringes for their instruments, pap, pennes and inck, for the twelve poore schollers, eleaven shillinges and viij$^{d.}$ a peece, per annum.	xxiij^{s}, iv$^{d.}$
The other fower chaunters or junior fellowes' pension, to be v^{li} a year a peece, paid quarterly p^{r} annum.	xx$^{li.}$

While in this financial region it may not be without interest to give a few items from the odds and ends of payments as recorded in Alleyn's own Diary and in the College accounts in the 17th century. A 'paire of piggs petty towes' cost 10*d.*; 'tripe, cowheel, and trotters,' 1*s.* 10*d.*; 'giggett of mutton,' also 1*s.* 10*d.*; 'ale for pankeakes,' 6*d.*; two puppies cost 3*s.*; 'ffor a dogge called Lion,' 4*s.*; 'pd. a man for keeping y^{e} Dogg and teaching him, though he learnt nothing,' 2*s.*; 'an oz. of tobacko' (in 1620) 1*s.*; '6 doz. of tobacco pipes,' 9*d.*; 'Coffin for a boy that dyed,' 2*s.* 4*d.* A postman's Christmas-box is thus recorded in 1690: 'for box money to the Postman 00. 01. 0.'

Other payments, more strictly musical perhaps than the above, were as follows (the amounts are set out in modern form):

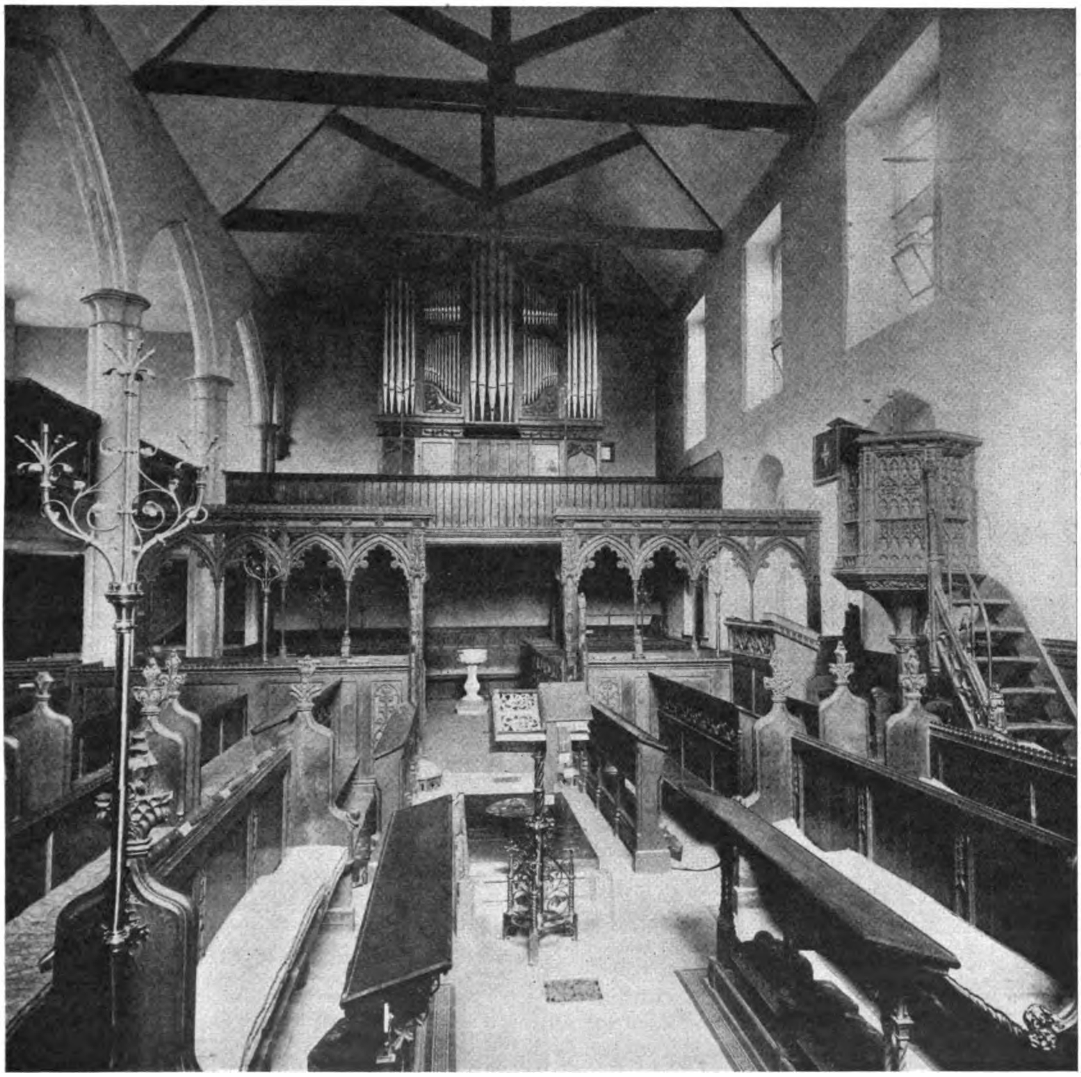
(In estimating the above amounts the difference in the value of money then and now must be taken into consideration.)

The 'noyse off trumpeters,' recorded in the year 1617, is still heard on Founder's Day, two trumpets and two trombones being used with the organ to accompany the service in the Chapel. Alleyn records, under date 1622, that 'Charles Massy and his cosen Ned Collins, 2 shagbuttes and a cornett dind here.' The foregoing extracts, as well as the Statutes, go to prove that music has played an important part in the history of Dulwich College.



THE CHAPEL.

(Photograph by Messrs. Negretti & Zambra.)

With regard to the organs of the chapel, there appears to have been no instrument or organist at the time of the consecration in 1616. On April 27, 1618, Alleyn records that he 'bought a p: orgaines for y^e^ chapell off mr. gibbs of powles, 08.02.0,' and 'water to feche them & to feeld y^t^ Helpte to carie them, 00.02.03.' This was doubtless a portable organ purchased from an instrument dealer (or maker) in St. Paul's Churchyard, where book and musicsellers had their places of business. A portion of the case of this old organ is still preserved in the Chaplain's house. On May 23 there was a payment for 'y^e pew for y^e orgaines,' and on May 27 an entry reads 'pd given mr. burward for tuning y^e orgains 00.02.06,' and on June 24 Mr. Hopkins (appointed organist on the preceding March 26) was paid £2 10*s*., 'His qtrs wagis.' In 1619 Alleyn paid £5 10*s*. to 'mr. burett for a dyapason stop to my organe & other allteracons,' and in July there were payments under 'organ case charges,' which included '3 dozen and 5 pipes and 6 rownds tuning' (12*s*. 6*d*.), and '4 yrds of blewe callyco for drawing out off y^e orgainnes' at > pd. mr. burett for mending y^e bellowes & tuning y^e orgaine & making y^e Conveighaunce for y^e. starrs turning - - - - 15*s*.

'14d y^e yrd.' A curious entry occurs in the year 1620:

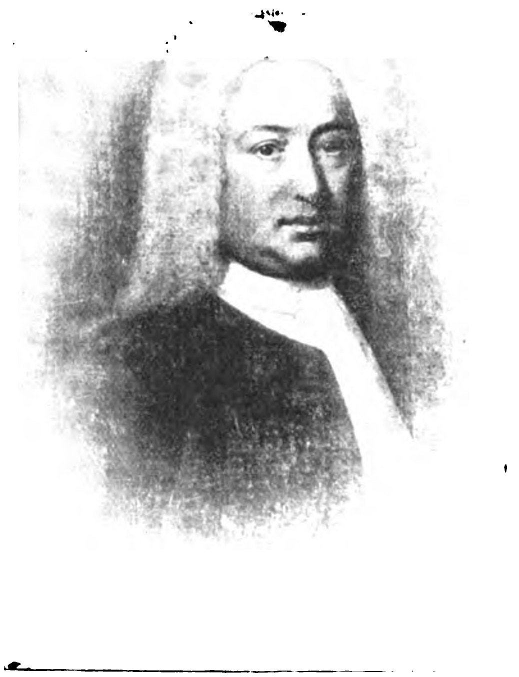
This was a quaint mechanical device which caused two gilt stars to revolve in the front of the case when the organ was used; according to the direction of the revolutions of these stars, the player could tell if the bellows were being properly inflated.



JOHN READING.

ORGANIST OF DULWICH COLLEGE FROM 1696 TO 1698(?), 'YET NEVER ADMITTED.'

From an oil-painting by an unknown artist in the Picture Gallery, Dulwich.

(Photographed by Mr. W. H. Stocks.)

It is quite possible that the above-named organ builders, Burward and Burett, were one and the same person, if not, indeed, the John Burrard who, in 1625, repaired the organ in Westminster Abbey and from whose bill Orlando Gibbons 'cut him off ten shillings.' In 1622 a Mr. Hamden was paid by Alleyn the sum of 15*s*. 'for mending y^e orgaynes and making 3 or 4 newe pipes for a dyapason.' A distinguished organ-building name appears in the following entries from the account books:

		£	s.	d.
1668.	23 Nov. pd. Mr. Dalham, an organ maker, when he examined all our old organ pipes and layd them in order -		10	0
	pd. Mr. ffelgate a musick master for his opinion - - - - - -		5	0
1669.	15 March & 20 July. Mr. George Dalham was paid in two instalments for compleating our organ in the Chappell -	80	6	6
1685.	To Mr. Touissaints Dallam his quarters salary for lookeing to the organ - -		10	0

The name of Touissaints Dallam is, we believe, quite new. These entries almost, if not entirely, refute the statement, recorded on a plate affixed to the present instrument, that Father Smith built an organ for Dulwich College, more especially as his name does not appear in the published volumes of accounts, &c. In 1722, after Smith's death, the organ was removed to the west end, therefore, by inference, it formerly stood near the altar. In 1759 a new organ was built, by England, 'for the sum of £260 and the old one.' Although the instrument has been to some extent modernised, the original oak case with its front gilt pipes has been retained. The diapasons are beautiful specimens of England's work. Of a total of eight stops on the great organ, four are mutation stops, including a fine example of a 'Mounted cornet.' On the choir organ is a curious stop of the reed species labelled 'Vox humana' by a re-constructor of the instrument who must have had a lively imagination. It may be of interest to mention that one Abraham Jordan was a tenant of the College, and that his house was burnt down on March 13, 172$\frac{3}{4}$. Was this fire-consumed habitation the residence of the inventor of the Swell organ?

The roll of organists of Dulwich College contains some interesting names. The first, Thomas Hopkins, who held office from 1618 to 1622, has already been mentioned. To him succeeded Benjamin Cosyn, who held the post for nearly two years. His name is associated with 'Benjamin Cosyn's Virginal Book,' now in the Royal Music Library, Buckingham Palace. Hawkins says that Benjamin Cosyn was 'a famous composer of lessons for the harpsichord, and probably an excellent performer on that instrument.' In 1626, four years after he had left Dulwich, he became organist of the Charterhouse (see THE MUSICAL TIMES, December, 1903, p. 780, for further particulars concerning this appointment, therein first made known). Dr. Cummings possesses some voluntaries, in manuscript, by Cosyn.

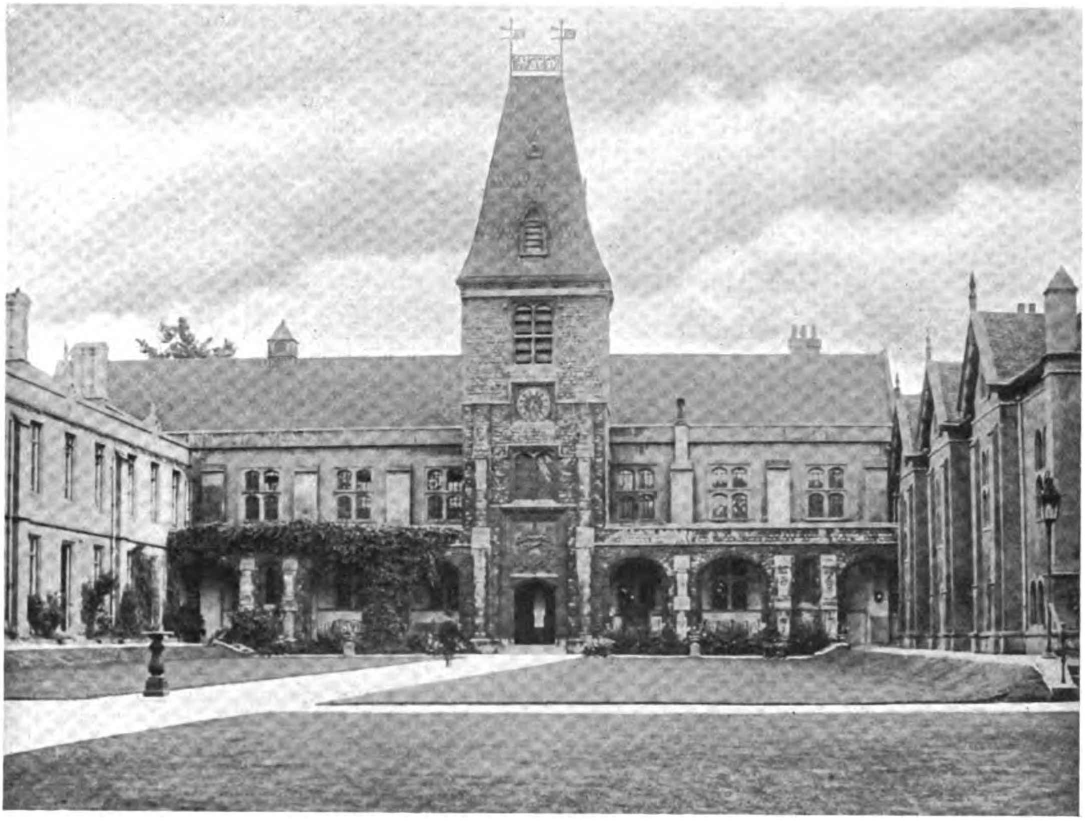
The choral service at Dulwich had been suspended during the Commonwealth. After the Restoration Archbishop Sheldon became visitor of the College. In 1664 he appointed a committee to inquire into the administration of Alleyn's foundation. 'Concerning y^e Chappell and Divine Service,' this committee reported:

> We find that the service by statute is appointed to be performed as near as may be to y^e forme of y^e King's Chappell or S^t. Peter's Westminster. But that by the iniquity of the late tymes their quire and singing was put down, their organ broken to pieces and carried away, The Master, Warden, and fellows and boys forbidden to weare surplices, their Communion table turned end ways East and West and severall other disorders now crept in and continued to the tyme of this visitation. Whereupon we thought fitt to order them to furnish themselves with surplices, which is done . . . . and lastly finding their rents well increased and that they begin to be in stock of money, we have ordered them and they are willing to it, to provide as formerly they had, a small organ fitt for their Chappell, that they may have their service there, according to the statute as near to Cathedrall fashion as may be.

In October, 1667, as a result of this Report, the Archbishop, as visitor, thus decreed 'concerning the Chappell and Divine Service':

> We do Order and Enjoyn That according as the Statutes of the sd College Ordain, And according to Our Commission in the Visitation We have Directed & appointed to the Service of God in the Chappel of the sd College be observed & performed, as near as may be according to the Patterne of His Majesty's Chappel or St. Peters Church Westminster [the Abbey], And that as near as may be the sd Chappel in all things, be kept Conformeable to His Majtys Chappel or St. Peters Church Westminster aforesd. And that the Master, Warden & Fellows of the sd College forthwith take it into consideracon, to provide a good Organ, as formerly there hath been for the Use & more Solemn Service of God in the sd Chappel, which sd Organ shall be provided & Set up in the sd Chappel before our Lady day which shall be in the year of our Lord 1669.

Mr. Francis Forcer, who was duly appointed, has not found his way into biographical dictionaries of music, except Dr. Cummings's Primer. In the 'Dictionary of National Biography' he is credited with having been a composer of music, that is assuming the Dulwich organist is the same Francis Forcer as there recorded, of which there seems little doubt. Moreover, he is mentioned by Hawkins in his 'History of Music' (pp. 701 and 703, foot-notes, of the Novello edition) as 'a musician and the composer of many songs printed in the "Theater of Music," published by Henry Playford and John Carr in the years 1685, 1686, and 1687.' Several of his songs are contained in Playford's 'Choice Ayres, Songs, and Dialogues' (1675 and 1679), an Overture and Eight Tunes by him are in the library of Christ Church, Oxford, and a Jig and Gavotte in the British Museum Library (Add. MSS. 29,283, and 31,403). Forcer, who held the Dulwich organistship for two years only—October, 1669, to November, 1671—became (c. 1697) joint lessee of Sadler's Wells music-gardens. The dates of his birth and death are approximately given as 1650 and 1705, though the first date might be an earlier one, unless he was appointed to Dulwich at the age of nineteen. It was during Forcer's régime, or a little later, that the following memorandum is recorded on the cover of the College account book between August, 1669, and February, 1673: 'The organist must have yearly to find string for



THE OLD COLLEGE AT THE PRESENT TIME.
(Photograph by Mr. C. W. Heath.)

Not only did the Archbishop 'order' the authorities to restore the choral service and to 'provide a good organ,' but he recommended them a good organist, as the following letter shows:

> Sirs,—I have heard a very good report of the bearer Mr. Forcer, both of his skill in Musick, which may render him very fitt to be your Organist, and of his civill demeanour and sobriety of life, which may recommend him for your society. If therefore you shall chuse him your organist I thinke you will doe yourselves a good office and that which wilbe acceptable to me who am instruments, paper, pens, and Inck, for ye 12 scholars 01. 3. 4, which is 5*s.* 10*d.* per quarter.' In those days, therefore, the organist was also the music-master of the College.

The successor to Francis Forcer also was 'recommended' by the Archbishop (Sheldon). His secretary, Miles Smith (the author of a metrical version of the Psalms), wrote to the Master and Warden stating that while the Archbishop, not willing 'to make himselfe a judge of that profession of Musicke, hath deputed you the Master and Warden of ye said Colledge in his stead to elect choose and admit into ye said place such person as you in your judgments (you the Warden especially being skilled in musick) shall think fitt for it. And because His Grace hath heard very well of a young man one Albertus Bryan, both for his sobriety of Life and good Proficiency in Musick and skill upon ye Organ, His Grace therefore recommends him to your consideracion, to be elected into that place if you the Warden shall in your judgment approve him as fitt for it. And soe, I rest, your most humble Servant, MILES SMYTH, by his Graces Command. Lambeth House, Jan 10, 167½.' Mr. Albertus Bryan, being thought 'fitt,' was accordingly appointed.

Various writers have assumed that this Albertus Bryan, of Dulwich, is one and the same person as Albertus Bryan, or Byrne (the name is variously spelt), successively organist of St. Paul's Cathedral (1638-1666) and Westminster Abbey (1666-1669). If, according to his petition to Charles II. for the organistship of the Chapel Royal, Bryan was appointed organist of St. Paul's Cathedral at the age of seventeen, he was born in 1621, therefore in 1672 he must have been fifty years of age, and no longer the 'young man' of the Archbishop's recommendation; moreover, if Bryan (or Bryne) had held such important posts as those of St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey the Archbishop would scarcely have said (through his secretary) that he had 'heard very well of him.' It may therefore be assumed that the Dulwich Bryan was a son of his more distinguished father, as stated in West's 'Cathedral Organists,' and not the St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey organist.

Following the expulsion of Charles Garraway (organist from 1678 to 1696) no appointment was made to the organist's fellowship until 1698. It is on record, however, in the Register that 'John Reading was organist during the intervening two years and upwards yet never admitted to the status of a fellow.' This John Reading, whose portrait is in the picture gallery of the College and is reproduced on page 440, was a musician of great repute in his time. Born in 1677, he became one of the children of the Chapel Royal under Dr. John Blow and thereafter undertook the temporary organistship of Dulwich College. In 1702 he was appointed 'Junior Vicar and Poor Clerk' of Lincoln Cathedral, and two years later 'Instructor Choristarum in musicâ vocali' in the same cathedral. He afterwards returned to London and held organist appointments at St. John, Hackney, St. Dunstan-in-the-West, St. Mary Woolchurchaw, Lombard Street, and St. Mary Woolnoth; he died September 2, 1764. Reading was a composer of both sacred and secular music, and manuscripts of his compositions are preserved at Lincoln Cathedral and in Dulwich College. That this John Reading was the author of 'Adeste Fideles' is doubtful: the tune may have been composed by John Reading, organist of Winchester Cathedral and College and composer of 'Dulce Domum,' but the origin of 'Adeste Fideles' is extremely obscure.

There is no need to refer to all the organists, nearly thirty, who have held office at Dulwich College. It may be mentioned, however, that for forty-one years (1816 to 1857) the post was held by three clergymen in succession—the Rev. Ozias Thurston Linley, the Rev. George Suckling Browne and the Rev. Edward Augustus Giraud. The first of this clerical-organist trio was a son of Thomas Linley, of Bath, and therefore a member of that distinguished family of musicians which included Mrs. Sheridan. An eccentric and absent-minded parson, the Rev. Ozias T. Linley held a minor canonry at Norwich previous to his becoming organist at Dulwich in 1816. On one occasion at Norwich he preached a sermon of Bishop Hoadley's. After the service, as the procession was proceeding to the vestry, the Bishop of Norwich turned to the preacher and said: 'Mr. Linley, I am much obliged to you for the excellent sermon you selected.' As for his own sermons, the Rev. Ozias Linley considered them of such little worth that having no further use for them as organist of Dulwich, he gave them to the chambermaid to light his fire with them every morning until they were all consumed.

Dr. Cummings relates a funny story of the Rev. Ozias Thurston Linley. Whenever that reverend gentleman read, as the lesson for the day, the third chapter of Daniel, he declaimed verse 5 as printed in the Bible: 'That at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of musick, ye fall down and worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up.' But when he came to verses 7, 10, and 15, instead of enumerating all the above instruments, Mr. Linley was wont to say: 'the orchestra as before'!

The last of the clerical organists, the Rev. E. A. Giraud, terminated his connection with the College at the re-organization of the Foundation in 1857, but not without having secured an annuity of £466, a 'consideration' which he continued to enjoy for sixteen years, after he had become rector of Stanningfield, near Bury St. Edmunds, and enjoyed its emoluments.

An amusing instance of how the election of fellows was managed in 1831 is furnished by the following letter, written after the death of the Rev. Mr. Linley, by John Allen, the Master, to the Rev. Joseph Blanco White. The allusion to 'common musicians' is interesting, as none of the later 'fourth Fellows' (the organists) knew much, if anything, of music.

March 6, 1831.

DEAR BLANCO,—Poor Linley, 4th Fellow and Organist of Dulwich College, died this morning. Some years ago you had thoughts of offering yourself for the situation, if it should ever become vacant, and therefore I hasten to inform you of the event, that you may announce yourself as a candidate without delay, in case you are still of the same mind.

You are aware of the nature of the office. The organist is a Fellow of the College, and the late Mr. Linley was a clergyman. The duties are to play the organ on Sundays, and instruct the children in music—twelve in number. The emoluments are at present £160 a year, besides apartments, commons, and wine. As the organist is completely on the same footing as the other Fellows, we wish, of course, to avoid common musicians, and to have a man of education, with the manners and feelings of a gentleman.

The election, from the mode of conducting it, is to the last moment uncertain. Two persons are chosen by the electors, who are five in number, and these two draw lots for the situation.

Let me know, if possible, by Tuesday morning, what is your determination, as we shall be overwhelmed with applications as soon as the vacancy is known.—Yours faithfully,

JOHN ALLEN.

The Rev. J. Blanco White replied in these frank terms:

Oxford, March 7, 1831.

DEAR ALLEN,—I shall be happy to take my chance of the vacant Fellowship of Dulwich College. My only difficulty is that, at this moment, I am not able to accompany the Psalm tunes required at Church. If, however, you were to allow me for a time to pay a person who should play and teach the children, I trust that my knowledge of music would enable me in a few months to do the Organist's duty myself.

If there is no objection to this plan, I beg you will enter my name as a candidate, and tell me what else I must do.

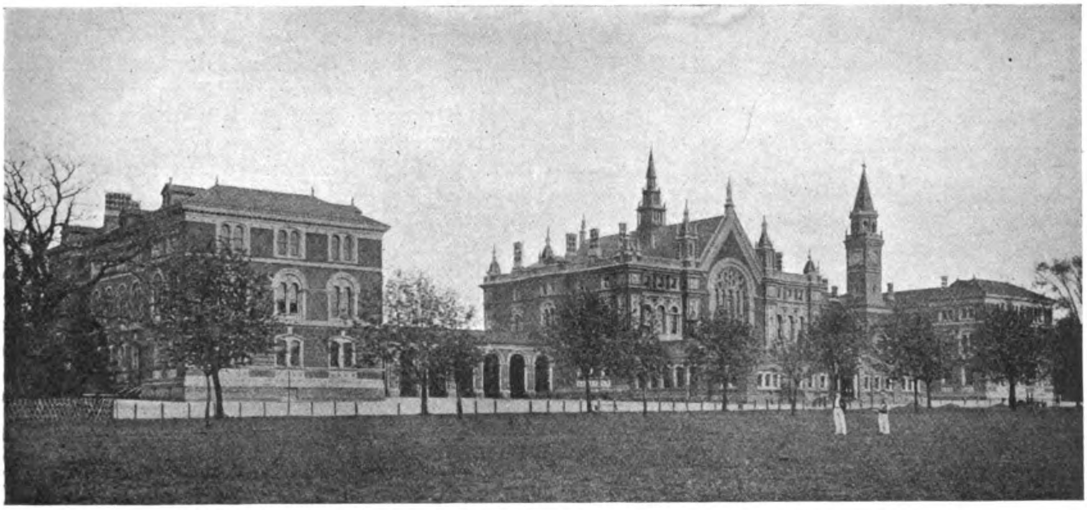
With many thanks for your kind remembrance of me, I am, dear Allen, Yours ever faithfully,

J. B. W.

The Master lost no time in replying to this remarkable letter from a would-be candidate who could not play a psalm-tune! He wrote: 'Dear Blanco,—I am very glad you propose to stand, and with your knowledge of music I have no doubt you will learn to play the organ in much shorter time than you mention.' Although this attempt at jobbery was frustrated, the election of the Rev. George Suckling Browne served to keep out a 'common musician' from the organistship of the College.

The Rev. Joseph Blanco White, the disappointed candidate who could not play the organ—he was then sixty-six years of age!—had a curious career. First a priest in Spain, he gave up his belief in Christianity. Then he qualified as a clergyman of the Church of England, and subsequently became a Unitarian. He wrote several theological works and translated Paley's Evidences and the Book of Common Prayer into Spanish. His claim to fame rests on his fine sonnet on 'Night and Death,' (published in the Bijou, 1828), which Coleridge declared to be 'the finest and most grandly conceived sonnet in our language.'

Since 1857, when the Rev. E. A. Giraud began to enjoy his annuity, the organistship has again been held by professional musicians. The names of those who have thus officiated during the last fifty years are Henry Baumer, James Brabham, Mr. Edward D. Rendall (now of Charterhouse School), and Mr. William H. Stocks.



DULWICH COLLEGE.

THE NEW BUILDINGS AS SEEN FROM THE PLAYING FIELDS AND RAILWAY.

Mr. John William Ivimey, the present organist of Dulwich College, comes of a very musical family. Born at West Ham on September 12, 1868, he studied under Mr. Henry Gadsby and Dr. Warwick Jordan at the Guildhall School of Music and became Corporation Exhibitioner. He is a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, an Associate of the Royal College of Music (composition), and an honorary member of the Royal Philharmonic Academy of Rome. In 1888 he was appointed an assistant music-master at Wellington College, and from 1890 to 1893 he held a similar post at Harrow School, therefore he has had good experience in public school work. For fifteen years he held the organistship of St. Paul's Church, Onslow Square, Kensington, a post he resigned upon being appointed to Dulwich College in November, 1906. He formerly had the direction of the music section of the South-West London Polytechnic Institution, and he conducted the London County Council Musical Society and the South Kensington Choral Society. His compositions include several orchestral works, a grand opera, five comic operas, a pianoforte trio, a Rondo pastorale for violoncello, and some pianoforte pieces, &c.

The chapel services are attended by residents in the neighbourhood and during term-time by those boys who live in the boarding-houses connected with the school. The surpliced choir sit in the gallery in front of the organ, except during the vacations, when, in the absence of the boys, they occupy places in the body of the chapel. A special service-book is used, and the choir is composed of boys from the village—if Dulwich can now be called a village—and four professional and four voluntary men-singers. The daily services, at 11.30 and 6.30, are without music; the Sunday services, at 11, 3.15, and 6.30, are choral, and there is choral communion on the first Sunday in the month. The boys attend three practices and the men one practice each week. The Chaplain is the Rev. A. E. David, M.A., late Archdeacon of Brisbane.

If Edward Alleyn could come to life again he would rub his eyes on beholding the extraordinary change the 'College of God's gift in Dulwich,' which he founded in 1619, has undergone. It was just fifty years ago that an Act of Parliament was passed which dissolved the old Corporation of the College and established a new governing body. This and subsequent schemes of the Endowed School Commissioners entirely reconstituted the educational side of Alleyn's foundation. Magnificent new buildings were erected (see the illustration on p. 443), and were opened by the King, then Prince of Wales, in 1870. The number of boys now being educated at the College is 682, and at Alleyn's School, formerly the Lower School, between 500 and 600. There is also a girls' school, founded by James Allen, at which 300 girls are educated. All these educational institutions at Dulwich are under one governing body.

How does Dulwich stand to-day musically as compared with other public schools—Winchester, Rugby and Clifton, for example? And what was Alleyn's attitude towards music when he founded the College? An answer to the second question is furnished by the Statutes, which ordain that the 'schollers' should be taught to 'sing prick-songe, and to play upon the violls, virginalls, organs, and other instruments, as they shalbe found capable.' Thus it is perfectly clear that the founder desired that music should form part of the regular curriculum of the College; moreover, he specially mentions that the 'schollers' should 'not loose their musique.' At the time the College was reconstituted no one seems to have thought of preserving the intentions of Alleyn in regard to music; as a distinguished musician recently observed, 'Dulwich had every opportunity of becoming one of the finest music schools in the country.' But instead of being an integral part of the educational system of the College, music is an optional subject. Unlike nearly all public schools, and notwithstanding the importance the founder attached to music in framing the original statutes, the music at Dulwich (in both the Upper and Lower Schools) is under the charge of form masters and not professional musicians. Due credit must, however, be given to Mr. Hubert V. Doulton, himself an old Alleynian, who has charge of the music in the Upper School, and to Mr. E. F. Carrick, who supervises music in the Lower School, for much excellent work done at the school concerts and in the encouragement given to boys to learn music.

Private lessons are given 'out of school hours' in instrumental music. The school choir—'it is hoped that all boys who are able will join'—meets for an hour on Tuesday afternoons 'after school,' and the altos and tenors and basses have special practices on two separate days for twenty-five minutes immediately after mid-day dinner. The orchestra—'all members of the school are eligible'—rehearses for one hour a week after school on Fridays. The choral works recently performed are Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin,' Handel's 'Samson,' and Stanford's 'Revenge,' while the orchestra have essayed the 'William Tell' and 'Son and Stranger' overtures.

There are singing-classes for the junior forms which are compulsory for all boys who do not learn drawing: in these sight-singing is part of the curriculum. In the large Hall of the College is a divided organ built by Martin, of Oxford, which is used at daily prayers, for Sunday recitals and at School concerts: this instrument was partly presented by Canon Carver, late Master of Dulwich.

As to the importance of music as an educational influence we may quote the words of so high an authority on public school life as the Rev. Canon Glazebrook, late headmaster of Clifton College, of which Mr. A. H. Peppin is the music-master. The quotation is from an illustrated article on Clifton College which appeared in The Musical Times of April, 1905:

> The object which we have set before us for the last eight years is to give music a definite place as an integral part of a liberal education. Therefore, though we have welcomed exceptional talent and tried to develop it, we have thought chiefly of the influence of music upon the school as a whole. Not that every boy should learn either to sing or to play an instrument,—only about one-third of the whole number do so—but that every boy should feel music to be part of his life. Thanks to Mr. Peppin, and the able masters who work so harmoniously with him, a large measure of success has been attained.
> Long ago I learned from John Farmer, at Harrow, to regard music as a moral agent. Unison 'house-singing' of the type which he invented has been an institution at Clifton for a dozen years. The good-fellowship and good feeling which are promoted by all singing together, whether they have voices or not, do not cease with the moment, but are a permanent influence making for unity. Nor is it less important that familiarity with wholesome words and tunes defends the mind and the lips from much that is trivial or base in the popular songs of the day. This kind of singing has been wisely encouraged by Mr. Peppin, though he has left the management of it to amateurs. His own principal work has been to give music the intellectual hold without which it cannot exercise its full powers.
> By various means a remarkable degree of interest has been aroused. The average boy, who can neither play nor sing, at least testifies to the reality of music by his criticisms. He can judge solo performances with only partial reference to the popularity of the player. He can often show a real appreciation of long orchestral pieces, and discuss them, if not with knowledge, at least with pleasure. Indeed, it is delightful to sit among the school at an orchestral concert for which Mr. Peppin's lectures have prepared them, and see how intelligently the boys enjoy music of a high class. This creates an atmosphere at once critical and sympathetic, which is highly favourable to all degrees of ability. Average boys, who cannot expect ever to play well, are encouraged to a degree of careful effort which disciplines the mind and trains the perceptions better than some regular school subjects. Those, again, who have a moderate gift make the most of it, and often play surprisingly well: so that there are now individual houses which can give as good a concert as the whole school could offer ten years ago. And the few boys of real talent are greatly benefited. In the attitude of others they find at once a stimulus to effort and a check upon pretension, for they have not that consciousness of singularity which is the root of affectation.
> Intellectual and moral influences unite in the chapel service. The increased love of music, together with the wonderful improvement of the choir, has lent a new grace to worship, without in any degree diminishing reverence. Again and again I hear from old boys that some of their happiest recollections of Clifton are connected with the psalms and hymns which they learned to love there.
> He who cherishes such memories is under the spell of music still. He has taken with him into manhood a sensibility to that great art which is second only to poetry in the power to refine feeling and interpret life. When music is not a thing apart, making for singularity, but woven into the texture of a liberal education, the mind in which it lives cannot but be sympathetic and humane.

Need anything more be added to such a tribute to the value of music in the life of a great English public school?

No account of Dulwich College would be complete without even a brief reference to the famous Picture Gallery, 'one of the finest private collections in the world,' as Mr. T. Hodgkins, the curator, proudly asserts. The collection of pictures bequeathed by Alleyn, founder of the College, received a valuable addition in the Cartwright bequest of 1686, and later in the Bourgeois bequest of 1811. The splendid works of art comprised in the latter were collected before 1807 by the celebrated picture-dealer Noel Joseph Desenfans, who bequeathed them to Sir Peter Francis Bourgeois, one of the early members of the Royal Academy. Three weeks before his death—which took place early in 1811—Sir Francis Bourgeois, as he was commonly called, made a will in which he left to the authorities of Dulwich College his collection of pictures, 371 in number. A special building, part of which is the mausoleum of Sir Francis Bourgeois, was erected to receive this magnificent gift. Here may be seen many notable examples of the Dutch school, including specimens of Cuyp, Wouverman, both the Teniers, Adrian Ostade, Hobbema, Ruisdael, Berchem, W. Van de Velde, Rembrandt, Gerard Dow, and others; some fine pictures by Murillo and Velasquez; Rubens and Van Dyck;

N. Poussin and Watteau; while English artists are represented by Reynolds, Gainsborough, Lawrence, &c. The portraits include several members of the Linley family (of Bath), including Mrs. Sheridan and her sister Mrs. Tickell; a portrait, by an unknown artist, of John Reading, which by kind permission of Mr. W. H. Stocks we are enabled to reproduce on p. 440; 'Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic Muse,' by Sir Joshua Reynolds; of Thomas Clark, organist of the College from 1714-1715; of Beza, the eminent French scholar and reformer, whose name is associated with Clément Marot in connection with the Huguenot Psalter; and of Edward Alleyn (reproduced on p. 437), the founder of the 'College of God's gift in Dulwich.'

'THE REHEARSAL.'

The sister arts of painting and music are happily harmonized in the picture entitled 'The Rehearsal,' now being exhibited at the Royal Academy of Arts (No. 487 in Gallery vii.). Apart from its subject, this attractive work is invested with additional interest to musicians in that it is from the brush of Mr. L. Campbell Taylor, a son of the late Dr. James Taylor, of Oxford. As organist of New College from 1865 till his death in 1900, and organist to the University, Dr. Taylor was held in the highest repute, not only for his artistic musicianship but for his personal worth.

Mr. Campbell Taylor has not only allowed his picture to be reproduced as one of the special supplements to the present issue of The Musical Times, but he has very kindly furnished some notes on the conception and subject-matter of 'The Rehearsal.' He says: 'My first idea was to paint a quartet only, and in my original sketch a sofa took the place of the piano. But on starting the picture I came to the conclusion that the piano would serve to give a greater sense of unity, and I therefore introduced the fifth figure with the keyboard instrument. The piano which served as a model was the identical one on which Chopin played when he gave his recitals in London in 1848, the year before his death; it was kindly placed at my disposal by Messrs. Broadwood, by whom the instrument was made. I frequently had in my mind Schumann's Pianoforte quintet, to which Mr. Herbert Thompson, in his article in your June issue, refers. Several people have told me that ladies wearing the crinoline never played the violin; but I fancy there must have been some who thus attired did perform on the instrument in private, even if not in public. The standing figure and the girl at the piano are both regular models. The girl in the foreground is a Surrey farmer's daughter; the violoncellist an old repairing tailor who lives at Oxford; and the viola player a well-known London restaurant keeper. The picture hanging on the wall is the engraved portrait of Purcell. The main idea was to give a quiet scheme of colour and reticent tone.' Those who have seen the picture on the walls of Burlington House will have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Taylor has admirably succeeded in obtaining that 'quiet scheme of colour and reticent tone' which give equal pleasure to both eye and ear, and that he has produced a most interesting work of art. The fact that his picture has been purchased by the President and Council of the Royal Academy under the terms of the Chantry Bequest is a distinction upon which the artist is to be warmly congratulated.

Mr. Leonard Campbell Taylor was born at Oxford on December 12, 1874. He was educated at the Oxford Preparatory School and at Cheltenham College, where he gained a scholarship. He began the study of art at the age of eighteen at the Ruskin School, Oxford; he afterwards studied at the St. John's Wood Art School, and for three years at the Royal Academy Schools. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1898, and, with the exception of one year, has since continued to do so. His pictures also have been exhibited at the New Gallery, Paris Salon, and in the Provinces. After a residence in London of twelve years, Mr. Taylor, four years ago, removed to Hindhead, Surrey, to live amid rural surroundings congenial to an artist mind. His brother, Mr. Colin M. C. Taylor, is one of Dr. Harford Lloyd's assistants on the music staff at Eton, and organist of the Lower Chapel; his sister, Miss May C. Taylor, is a professional violoncellist and a pupil of Herr Julius Klengel. Thus, sons and daughter carry on those high artistic traditions so worthily associated with their revered father.

THE ORGANISTS.

John Howe, Master Whitt, and John Taylor are the three first recorded organists of Westminster Abbey; they successively held office between the years 1549 and 1570. If they are unknown to fame, not so is Robert White, Wight or Whytt, organist from 1570 till 1574, who may have been the Whitt mentioned above, or some relative of his. Although little is known of his biography, White is mentioned by Thomas Morley, in his 'A plaine and easie Introduction to practicall musicke,' as being equal in rank to Orlando Lasso, and John Baldwine, 'singing man of Windsor,' in a manuscript written in 1591, says, in recounting the principal composers of his age:

> I will begin with White, Shepperd, Tye, and Tallis, Parsons, Gyles, Mundie, th'oulde one of the Queen's pallis.

White succeeded Christopher Tye in the organistship of Ely Cathedral, and he may have married Tye's daughter. He graduated in Arts and Music at Cambridge, and entered upon his duties at Westminster in 1570. He died, probably from the plague, at Westminster between November 7 and 11, 1574, and was buried at St. Margaret's Church. He bequeathed to his father, Robert White 'the some of three poundes . . . . and all such his household stufe and goodes w^{ch} he did bringe unto me at or before his cominge to me,' from which it seems that his father lived with him. Among the bequests is one to his daughter Margery White of 'six syluer spones and a mazer w^{ch} was her late graundmothers,' and he left 'to every of my skollers to eche of them iiii^{d}.' For a list of White's compositions and further details concerning this worthy musician, the reader is referred to Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' vol. iv., pp. 451 and 816.

The first regularly-appointed organist of the Abbey was Edmund Hooper, who became master of the choristers in 1588 and organist in 1606. He was also a gentleman and organist of the Chapel Royal, and, according to the Abbey records, he was occasionally employed in 'mending the organs' and 'pricking new song-books.' Hooper, who was buried in the Abbey cloisters, was succeeded by John Parsons, at a salary of £16 per annum as organist, and £36 13*s*. 4*d*. for 'teaching and finding the children.' He died in July, 1623, and, like his predecessor, was buried in the Abbey cloisters. Camden's 'Remaines concerning Britain' (1657) contains the following epitaph 'Upon Master Parsons, organist at Westminster':

Death passing by and hearing Parsons play,
Stood much amazed at his depth of skill,
And said 'This artist must with me away,'
For death bereaves us of the better still;
  But let the quire, while he keeps time, sing on,
  For Parsons rests, his service being done.

For two short years—1623 to 1625—the keys of the Abbey organ responded to the fingers of Orlando Gibbons, one of the most eminent organists of the stately fane. There is no need to dwell upon the fame of this master-musician, nor to recount the details of his all too-short life.[*] We may pass on to the Restoration, merely mentioning that John Day, Richard Portman and Thomas Warwick (or Warrock) had in the meantime and in succession held the post of organist. In 1660 Dr. Christopher Gibbons, son of Orlando Gibbons, was appointed. He had previously been one of the children of the Chapel Royal and organist of Exeter Cathedral until about 1644, when he joined the Royalist Army. At the Restoration he obtained the dual appointments of organist of Westminster Abbey and the Chapel Royal, like his father before him. In 1664 he was created a Doctor of Music at Oxford Per Literas Regias, on which occasion the Dean and Chapter made him a present of £5. He died October 20, 1676, and was buried in the Abbey cloisters. Anthony à Wood does not give him a very good character—'A grand debauchee,' he says, 'He would often sleep at Morning Prayer when he was to play the organ.' In 1666, Albertus Bryan (Brian, or Byrne) having been burnt out, so to speak, at St. Paul's Cathedral, was appointed organist of the Abbey, an office he held for three years only. (See a reference to Bryan in the article on Dulwich College, p. 442 of the present issue.)

DR. BENJAMIN COOKE (1734-1793).

ORGANIST OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY FROM 1762 TO 1793.

(From an engraving in the possession of Mr. John S. Bumpus.)

In 1669 began the reigns of Dr. John Blow, Henry Purcell, and Dr. Croft—a glorious period—fifty-eight years, till 1727, which is known and read of all men. As biographies and portraits of this illustrious trio of English church musicians have been already given in this journal, there is no need to repeat the details of their distinguished careers.* John Robinson—of whom a portrait was given in our issue of April last—succeeded Dr. Croft in 1727, and held office for thirty-five years. According to Dr. Boyce, John Robinson was 'a most excellent performer on the organ': to posterity he is known by his melodious double chant in E flat. He died April 30, 1762, and was buried in the north aisle of the Abbey, in the same grave as Dr. Croft. During Robinson's organistship the organ was removed from the north side of the choir to the screen.

Dr. Benjamin Cooke, the son of a music-seller and publisher at the Golden Harp in New Street, Covent Garden, was appointed organist in 1762, on the death of John Robinson. A pupil of Dr. Pepusch, Cooke, at the age of twelve, became deputy-organist to Robinson at the Abbey, and he was successively master of the choristers (1757) and lay-vicar (1758). In 1782, while still holding the Westminster organistship, he became organist of St. Martin-in-the-Fields. Dr. Cooke is best known by his Service in G—composed, as already stated (p. 372), for the re-opening of the Abbey organ after the addition of pedals in 1778—and his many beautiful glees, canons, &c. He made a large and important collection of manuscript music, now preserved in the Library of the Royal College of Music. Dr. Cooke, who was a Doctor of Music at the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford, died at his house, Dorset Court, Cannon Row, Westminster, September 14, 1793. His remains were interred in the west cloister. The mural tablet which there records his worth contains a fine canon, composed by him to be sung as an appendix to Bird's Non nobis Domine.

Dr. Samuel Arnold (1740-1802) succeeded Dr. Cooke. He was connected with the Chapel Royal, first as one of the children and afterwards as organist and composer. In 1793 he was appointed organist of the Abbey; but before entering upon his church career, with its attendant solemnities, Dr. Arnold was composer to Covent Garden Theatre and proprietor of Marylebone Gardens, and director of the music at that place of entertainment. Although he composed much music, he is best known as an editor of Handel's works—though the 'Arnold edition' has been superseded by the German Handel Society's publications—and his 'Cathedral Music' in continuation of Boyce. Arnold was buried in the north aisle of the choir of the Abbey, 'the musicians' aisle,' where a tablet, erected to his memory, contains some lines written by his son, S. J. Arnold, the dramatic author, and for some time lessee of the English Opera House, subsequently the Lyceum Theatre.

The three musicians who, during twenty-nine years successively held the organistship after Dr. Arnold, were Robert Cooke, son of Dr. Benjamin Cooke, George Ebenezer Williams, and Thomas Greatorex. There is no need to give the details of their somewhat uneventful lives; it should be mentioned, however, that Benjamin and Robert Cooke furnish the second instance of father and son having been organists of Westminster Abbey, Orlando and Christopher Gibbons having set this unusual example.

By reason of his melodious chants and dignified hymn-tune 'Westminster,' the name of James Turle is known in all the churches. Born at Somerton, Somersetshire, March 5, 1802, he became a chorister of Wells Cathedral. At that time (1810) the nave of that beautiful building appears to have been the recognized playground of the choristers. There they were wont to indulge a juvenile passion for throwing stones, and Master Turle distinguished himself as 'a good shot' by sending a missile through St. Andrew's nose in a stained glass window! 'That was done by the organist of Westminster Abbey,' a sacristan long after remarked when pointing out the damage. At the age of eleven Turle was sent to London, and studied under J. J. Goss and G. E. Williams, organist of the Abbey. He held in succession the office of organist of Christ Church, Southwark, and St. James's, Bermondsey. In 1831, on the death of Greatorex—whose deputy he had been for twelve years previously—Turle was appointed organist of Westminster Abbey, an office he held with distinction for fifty-one years, though during the last seven years (from 1875) of that period its active duties were discharged by the permanent deputy-organist, Dr. (now Sir) J. Frederick Bridge.

As a cathedral organist, James Turle was a fine example of the old school—dignified and reverent. Like his life-long friend, John Goss, he excelled in playing from the old figured-bass scores. He had an enormous hand. On one occasion, at the Prussian Embassy, he met the Chevalier Neukomm, who boasted that he could extend his hand on the keyboard over an octave and three notes. Turle quietly approached the pianoforte, and taking an octave and a half into his enormous hand, exclaimed 'One more for luck.' No wonder that a roar of laughter greeted the triumph of the English organist over the German composer. Turle formally retired from active duty at the Abbey on September 26, 1875, when his Service in D was sung. He enjoyed his well-earned retirement for seven years, his death taking place on June 28, 1882. His remains were interred by the side of his wife in Norwood Cemetery. A stained glass window to their revered memory has been erected by one of their sons in the north aisle of the Abbey, of which his father had been organist for fifty-one years. This window, which nearly faces the Purcell monument, contains portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Turle. One of their sons, Henry Frederic Turle, was editor of Notes and Queries from 1878 to his premature death in 1883.

James Turle was the first editor of the Westminster Chant Book, published by Messrs. Novello more than half a century ago. The original preface of this well-known collection stated that 'the object of it is to combine sufficient choice with order, and, by publication of the arrangement, to enable the congregation to join in the Psalms.' Turle was the chant composer par excellence, and no better proof thereof could be furnished than by this Westminster collection. In the original edition of the book his splendid double chant in C (there set in D), assigned to the fifth evening of the month, is headed 'Purcell Commemoration Chant,' an interesting fact which does not appear in the modern editions of the collection. His equally fine hymn-tune 'Westminster'—now so worthily associated with Faber's hymn 'My God, how wonderful Thou art'—first appeared in 'The Psalmist' (Part II., 1836), edited by Vincent Novello, as having been 'composed for this work by J. Turle,' and is named 'Birmingham,' for what reason is not known. It is there set in the key of D, which, of course, includes a high F sharp in the melody: the lowered key (C) in which it is found in most modern hymnals has necessitated a slight re-arrangement of the harmony, also the loss of the low bass notes in the last line of the tune; these, however, can be supplied by the organ.

JAMES TURLE.
ORGANIST OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY FROM 1831 TO 1882.
(From a photograph kindly lent by Dr. W. H. Cummings.)

As already stated, Dr. (now Sir) John Frederick Bridge, from 1869 to 1875 organist of Manchester Cathedral, was appointed permanent deputy-organist of Westminster Abbey in 1875. He succeeded to the full title of the organistship on the death of Mr. Turle in 1882, and has therefore discharged the duties for nearly thirty-two years. An illustrated biography of Sir Frederick Bridge, M.V.O., appeared in The Musical Times of August, 1897—the second in the series of eighty-two similar articles which since have been written for this journal—to which the reader is referred for details concerning the career of the present distinguished holder of the time-honoured office of organist of Westminster Abbey.

THE COMPETITION FESTIVAL MOVEMENT.

By W. G. McNaught.

The spread and progress of the competition festival movement shows no signs of abatement. A great many festivals of this type are held in the springtime months, because this period is the natural culmination of the winter's work. It is estimated that about 50,000 competitors have been or will be concerned in the festivals held or to be held this year. The following lists show the geographical distribution of the chief centres:

North.

The lists given are not exhaustive; there are probably even a greater number of smaller events that escape public record. Welsh Eisteddfodau are excluded because they are in another category. The problems they present press for the grave consideration of all concerned for the future of music in Wales, but they are beyond the scope of this article. It is evident from all this that the application of the competitive principle to musical execution, attracts to the point of fascination a vast number of persons. There is, of course, nothing new in the idea. It is simply that it is now made into a propaganda. The Academies and Colleges of Music are, and always have been, seething in competitions. If any critics are disposed to deprecate the principle as a means of stimulating art progress, they may be invited to consider its application in these high places before they condemn it in more popular and rough and ready quarters. But it will be conceded by the most ardent promoter of the competitive festival movement that the objective and ways and means of the propaganda must always be vigilantly watched. The aims must be high and always educational. If the movement drifts into providing arenas merely for a sordid struggle for a cash-down prize, it will sound its own knell and there will be no mourners. This view is consistent with the belief that money prizes of a reasonable amount are not open to objection, when it is clear that the prize, if won, merely contributes to the unavoidable expenses of competitors. It is absurd to suppose, for instance, that the working men who mainly compose the Habergham Choir (Mr. E. Hitchon)—one of the best-equipped choirs it has ever been my good fortune to hear—gain pecuniarily as individuals by their achievements in the North. To those who, like myself, mix freely with the enthusiastic and obviously altruistic promoters, of at least the schemes born of that founded by Miss Wakefield at Kendal, there would seem to be no danger of the festivals under their benign sway degenerating.

It is worth while to note that the promoters of the majority of the above-named festivals are mostly amateurs of good social position who have been drawn into the vortex—at times a stormy one—because they have been greatly impressed with the utility of the movement from a social point of view. Distinguished professional musicians also have supported the movement in many ways, but they have rarely initiated a festival. The amateurs give their means, and, better still, their time and social influence without stint, and derive their satisfaction and reward when they see that even partial realization of ideals makes for social amelioration. Their motives then are entirely praiseworthy. Can so much be said for the motives of competitors? Perhaps not. There is no doubt a great deal of human nature in the average musical competitor. We meet the conductor who is impervious to the merit of another choir, even when that choir has achieved the amazing feat of beating his own choir; and there is the solo singer who is staggered at the vagaries of the adjudicator. The foregoing, however, have no mothers as have the junior pianists! Ah! But these are exceptions. As a rule the verdict is accepted cheerfully, and as matter for chaff rather than tears. It is fair to say that the average competitor does not come to win a prize but to gain experience, to have a share, however humble, in the musical feast provided, and to meet and mix with others similarly minded. To such the festival leaves a pleasant memory.

One of the most useful incidental functions of a competitive festival is the education of the audience. Sometimes outsiders are scarce, but in many places the interest of the general public is extraordinarily keen. The festival is found to provide a novel and instructive entertainment. People who have put in an appearance expecting to be bored have been astonished to find themselves absorbingly interested and listening for hours on end, unwilling to lose a single item. Repetitions of a piece are not merely tolerated but eagerly awaited. The first singer or choir performs, it may be, indifferently, but at least the performance (or 'rendition,' as the local reporter generally will have it) makes the audience acquainted with the piece. Other competitors come forward and 'rendite' the piece better or worse, and presently one comes and illuminates much that was dark, and the possibilities of the piece and its dependence upon interpretation are realized. A rough critical standard has been attained, and curiosity is aroused as to how the next comers will meet its demands. By now the music is familiar, and the attitude of the audience has become one of informed expectancy. A competitor appears and obviously eclipses the record. What qualities constitute the merit of the new interpretation? This is debated, and it is felt that certain faults have been avoided, that good points of other performers have been focussed and new and unexpected beauties revealed. The adjudicator then gives his award and the reasons for his decision, and probably many of the audience find their conclusions are different because they have missed points that the more expert listener noticed. The critical standard is now revised and with new zest applied to the next class. The audience now fancies itself and confidently adjudicates the competitors and the official adjudicator.

A contemplation of this widespread and increasing activity excites many hopes. What is quite clear is that there is abundant potential executive ability in the country, and that its development is simply a matter of skilful training. It is not claimed that more than say a tenth of the results achieved in this great musical outpouring can be truly described as first-rate. It is the deliberate aim of the promoters of most of these gatherings to draw the inefficient into the fold. This being so, the need for tolerance is constant, and there must ever be sympathetic study of the evolutionary stage of the organism under observation. Our duty is most faithfully done when we prescribe just the right practical thing.

Occasional Notes.

The gentlemen in privat meetings, which A. W. frequented, play'd three, four, and five parts with viols, as treble-viol, tenor, counter-tenor, and bass, with an organ, virginal, or harpsicon joyn'd with them: and they esteemed a violin to be an instrument only belonging to a common fidler, and could not indure that it should come among them, for feare of making their meetings to be vaine and fidling.

Anthony à Wood (1656).

Thirty years have come and gone since Dr. Hans Richter made his first appearance in England. He came as the fidus Achates of Richard Wagner when the master paid his last visit to this country in 1877. Wagner was announced to conduct the series of concerts called 'The Wagner Festival' given in the Royal Albert Hall in May and June, 1877. Himself no conductor—at least at that time—Wagner wisely placed the baton into the competent hands of his friend Richter. The Musical Times recognized the ability of the newcomer in these words:

> Now is the time to acknowledge the very valuable services of Herr Richter, the Wagnerian conductor par excellence. Whenever the baton fell from the nerveless hand of the master Herr Richter took it up to retrieve the fortunes of the day. And right well he did this. New life appeared to animate the orchestra, every man of whom seemed to be in a measure inspired. Thenceforth, on every occasion, all went well, and the merits of Herr Wagner's elaborate orchestration were satisfactorily displayed.

The first concert, 'on his own,' so to speak, which Dr. Richter conducted in England was the first of a series of 'Orchestral Festival Concerts' given at the now demolished St. James's Hall on May 5, 1879, under the auspices of Herr Hermann Franke. On that occasion the following orchestral works were performed under Dr. Richter's baton: Kaisermarsch and Introduction to Act 3 of Die Meistersinger (Wagner); Overture Manfred (Schumann); and Symphony in A, No. 7 (Beethoven). To quote again from The Musical Times (of June, 1879):

> One word more, in conclusion, as to Herr Richter's conducting. Whatever may be said in favour of invisible orchestras, we are of opinion that the audience assembled during the memorable Bayreuth performances have lost a considerable element of assistance in the appreciation of the music of the Tetralogy in not seeing Hans Richter conduct. His baton speaks the intentions of the composer whose work he is interpreting with an eloquence which at once attracts, and fascinates to the end, both executive artists and audience alike. His individual reading—for the impress of his individuality upon his orchestra, as may be inferred, is most marked—has in it nothing eccentric or obtrusive, while his manner is entirely free from the ecstatic and ostentatious ways of some modern conductors. The result is invariably a performance harmonious in all its parts, a fact which, if examples are to be quoted, was especially noticeable in the three symphonies, the splendid rendering of which no one present will easily forget.

All that Dr. Richter has done to ennoble the art of conducting during the intervening twenty-eight years confirms in the most sure and steadfast manner the opinion expressed above. No wonder that a large and appreciative audience assembled at Queen's Hall on June 3 to listen to a 'special Beethoven concert in commemoration of Dr. Hans Richter's thirty years' work in this country.' The programme consisted of two overtures—'Die Weihe des Hauses' and 'Leonora No. 3'—and two symphonies—No. 4 in B flat and the 'Eroica.' How these works were interpreted by the London Symphony Orchestra (under whose auspices the concert was given) and how Dr. Richter conducted—and entirely from memory—those masterpieces, need anything be said? Yes; that the performances furnished a rich feast of beautiful music, which gave the keenest enjoyment to those privileged to attend it. The occasion, moreover, was in the nature of a centenary commemoration, for it is just one hundred years ago that the genial and ever-welcome Fourth Symphony of Beethoven was first performed, its production having taken place, at the house of Prince Lobkowitz, Vienna, in March, 1807.

It may be remarked that the programme-book of the concert of June 3 states that the first performance of the Eroica Symphony in England took place at the Philharmonic concert of February 21, 1814, a date, by the way, on which no concert of the Society was given. The Philharmonic programme of February 28 included 'Sinfonia Eroica (including the Funeral March), Beethoven'; but eight years earlier, on February 14, 1806, 'Act 2' of one of the 'Vocal Concerts' given at Hanover Square Rooms began with a 'New Grand Sinfonie (MS.) for a Full Band, Beethoven.' As No. 1 of the 'immortal nine' had been performed here several times before 1814, and a 'Grand Symphonie never performed in this kingdom, Beethoven,' doubtless No. 2, was played on February 14, 1805, it may be assumed that the 'Eroica' was the 'new grand Sinfonie (MS.)' performed in 1806, as above stated. Unfortunately the newspapers of the day, while devoting space to the vocal performers, scarcely mention the symphony whereby its identification could be made certain, but The Courier records that 'during the Second Act the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Cambridge sat on a seat in the room near the orchestra and heartily joined in the applause, particularly to a New Grand Symphony by Beethoven.' Countless other listeners in the course of the intervening hundred-and-one years have followed their Royal Highnesses' illustrious example, as again and again this beautiful century-old music has delighted the ear.

A recent issue (No. 5) of the Mercure Musical, the organ of the Paris section of the International Society of Musicians, contains a very interesting article entitled 'La musique rustique Arménienne,' signed 'Le R. P. Komitas,' and translated into French by M. A. Tchobaniau. In this the writer describes a scene which he witnessed from the roof of the monastery of Haridj, twenty-eight versts from Alexandropol. Young men and maidens and young brides were dancing and improvising songs. He noted down what he heard, and shows how a short phrase was repeated by the chief coryphée again and again, each time with changed notes and rhythm, and repeated by all present, as a chorus in unison. Then the same process was gone through by other solo singers, the last performer being the one who sang and danced best. Thus the song assumed many forms. Hence, as the writer remarks: 'It is the song itself, not its author, which interests the peasants; to-day the author is this person, to-morrow it will be another.'

Gilbert and Sullivan's comic opera 'Iolanthe, or the Peer and the Peri,' was revived on June 11 at the Savoy Theatre, where the work was originally produced on November 25, 1882.

Collectors of musical manuscripts who have the respective sums of £1,175 and £625 to spend can enrich their collections by the purchase of two treasures which are 'on the market' at Leipzig. The first is a 'Breviarium Benedictinum Completum IX.—X. Saeculi,' and is described as a > Manuscript on vellum with carefully executed notation of the melodies of the responsories and antiphonies of the horary office in neumes (without lines) and with a detailed entry of the lections, orations and capitula, including the respective hymns.

In a detailed account of this interesting specimen of 9th or 10th century neumes, Professor Dr. Hugo Riemann remarks:

> The manuscript consists of 241 leaves of vellum, 15 centim. broad and 20.7 centim. high; the surface, covered with writing, measures 9.5 × 14.5 centim., with 26 lines on each page. The text of the songs, which are accompanied with neumes, has been executed in smaller characters, so that one line of the text with neumes occupies the same room as a line of the larger characters. The manuscript consists of quaternions (four double-leaves lying one in the other and stitched), the first quaternion is preceded by one double-leaf only and at the end there are two single leaves and one double-leaf. The first leaf of the tenth quaternion is missing, in the 12th quaternion the last leaf is torn off, but preserved. The 24th quire is a quinternion (20 pages), the 25th a sexternion, the last leaf of which is missing. The MS. is in very good condition, some damaged spaces are neatly mended with parchment; each quire has a back of parchment, apparently made in the 16th century, when the MS. was put in the present binding (brown calf). The back of this binding, which is almost entirely eaten away by worms, was lettered thus (as still can be seen):
> Br[eviari]um
> Be[nedictin]um
> C[ompl]etum

Prof. Dr. Riemann says that among the 'artistical initials' which bear tribute to the antiquity of the manuscript is 'a phantastical P on p. 3 representing an insect giving food to a dog,' which, he says, 'reminds us of the Irish style.' He adds that 'The manuscript is very rich in hymns and thus contains valuable contributions to the history of the hymn-songs in the Office. The author has, unfortunately, supposed the melodies to be known and has, therefore, given no notation.' He is of opinion that 'The character of the writing and of the neumes and the initials render it probable that the manuscript has been written in a Benedictine monastery of South Germany.'

The other manuscript—offered for sale at the price of £625—is a much more modern specimen of musical notation. It is the original autograph of Wagner's 'Das Liebesmahl der Apostel,' known in England as 'The Holy Supper of the Apostles.' The manuscript is thus described by Herr Karl W. Hiersemann: '6 leaves, folio. The first four folios contain a complete sketch of the work. On folios 5 and 6 is written a fair copy of the portion accompanied by the orchestra, but arranged for the pianoforte. The manuscript, entirely in Wagner's own hand, furnishes an interesting insight into the master's method of working.' Herr Hiersemann goes on to say:

> It is known that, at the instigation of Prof. Dr. Loewe (not the famous composer Karl Loewe) arrangements were made at Dresden in summer 1843 for a musical festival of the Saxon male choral unions, and that Wagner had on demand promised a composition 'The Holy Supper of the Apostles.' As to the date of composition of this piece, the only information was hitherto to be found in Glasenapp's biography of the master. He says: 'In spite of the burden of labour, redoubled by Reissiger's absence, he had to compose within a fortnight a great and serious work. . . . On the afternoon of July 6 the festival began with a sacred concert in the Frauenkirche, at which "The Holy Supper of the Apostles" formed the closing number.'
> Now the present manuscript enables us to rectify Glasenapp's statements, and there are three dates thereupon which throw a new light on its genesis. At the top of the first folio the date May 14 is written, i.e., the day on which Wagner set to work. At the chorus 'Wir sind betrübt' is a second date, May 19; and at the end, June 16. Hence it follows that the words and the musical sketch were finished between May 14 and June 16. . . .
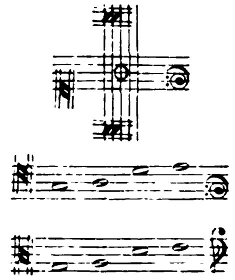
> The manuscript furnishes an interesting insight into the master's production. The certainty with which Wagner made his sketch is quite astonishing. On the whole he retained the first scheme; as in only a few passages have serious modifications been made. The chorus, 'Allmächtiger Vater,' originally headed 'Gebet,' was commenced three times before it was definitively settled upon. Again, the passage 'Sende uns Deinen heiligen Geist' caused Wagner much labour, for throughout fifteen bars he tried many modulations. In all cases, however, the corrections turned out to be real improvements.

Both the above manuscripts can be purchased from Herr Karl W. Hiersemann, Königsstrasse 3, Leipzig.

Mr. W. C. Stockley, of Birmingham, writes:

> Thinking that you would like to know Gade's own way of arranging his musical monogram I send it herewith. He gave it to me when he came to conduct his 'Crusaders' at our festival of 1876:



Angelo Neumann, in his recently published Memoirs of Richard Wagner, relates that after the first performance of 'Parsifal,' in 1882, there was the usual gathering at Wahnfried following the performance. Great enthusiasm prevailed, when suddenly Förster disturbed the concert of joy with a discordant note. 'You will see,' he exclaimed, 'that Wagner's life is near its close.' Neumann replied, 'Why this mournful presentiment?' Förster, 'Why? do you ask: because a man who has created what we have heard to-day could not possibly live much longer. His work is finished, he ought to die.' And, as everyone knows, within seven months from that very day Wagner lay in his grave behind the Villa Wahnfried.

Mr. Edward Ernest Cooper, for some years past honorary treasurer to the Royal Academy of Music, has been elected Chairman of the Committee of Management of that Institution in succession to the late Mr. Thomas Threlfall, and Mr. Charles Rube has succeeded Mr. Cooper as honorary treasurer.

Dr. H. P. Allen, organist of New College, Oxford, has been appointed conductor of the Bach Choir in succession to Dr. Walford Davies, who has resigned that office.

The following is the complete programme of the concert of old English music given by the 'Fondation J. S. Bach' at Paris on April 23, to which reference was made in our last issue (p. 404):

Henry Purcell—Golden Sonata.
Ah! how sweet it is to love (Tyrannick Love).
I attempt from love's sicknes to fly.
Nymphs and Shepherds.
Martin Peerson—The Fall of the Leafe.
Orlando Gibbons—Preludio.
The Queen's Command.
William Byrd—Earl of Salisbury Pavanne.
Giles Farnaby—A Toye.
John Bull—King's Hunting Jigg.
Richard Jones—Chamber air, violin (?) and pianoforte (?).
Dr. Boyce—Heart of Oak.
Sonata for two violins and pianoforte.
Dr. Arne—The topsails shiver in the wind.
Where the bee sucks.
By dimple brook.
Vocal duet from Artaxerxes.

It is always pleasant to record the successes, obtained after diligent study and hard work, of the sons of musicians. One such, Mr. L. Campbell Taylor, the artist, is referred to on p. 446 of the present issue. And now comes the news from Cambridge that Mr. G. E. Liddle, son of Mr. W. H. Liddle, organist of the Parish Church, Basingstoke, was bracketed sixteenth Wrangler in the recent Mathematical Tripos; and that Mr. A. C. L. Hylton-Stewart, son of the Rev. C. H. Hylton-Stewart, rector of Bathwick, Bath, and formerly precentor of Chester Cathedral, has obtained the degree of Bachelor of Music, both these graduates being alumni of Peterhouse. Hearty congratulations to father and son in both cases.

A chorus of congratulation—in which The Musical Times desires to have a voice—has been raised in honour of Mr. and Mrs. John Brinsmead. On June 3 'the father of the pianoforte trade' and his wife celebrated their seventieth wedding day by receiving all their relatives, friends and workpeople at their residence at Regent's Park, inaugurating a Provident Fund among their workpeople (to which Fund Mr. Brinsmead presented £1,000), making a personal presentation to every man who has worked for them for upwards of forty years, of which there were quite a number, and sending everyone in their employment, together with their wives, to one of the London theatres, for which purpose they engaged over 500 seats. Mr. Brinsmead, who is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, was born in North Devon on October 13, 1814, and was apprenticed to a cabinet-maker in Torrington. As soon as his indentures had expired he came to London, and having entered the pianoforte trade, he founded in 1837, the year of his marriage, the well-known house of Brinsmead, with which his name is honourably associated.

The Committee of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival have received no fewer than fifty-one librettos for the competition in connection with the meeting of 1908. After a careful examination of these manuscripts, the three adjudicators—Mrs. Rosa Newmarch, Miss Mary Wakefield and Mr. Ernest Newman—have awarded the prize of twenty-five guineas to Mr. Gerald Cumberland, of Withington, near Manchester, for the work entitled 'Cleopatra.' Printed copies of the libretto will be sent to any composer wishing to compete for the prize of fifty guineas for the best setting of 'Cleopatra.' Application should be made to Mr. F. Oddin Taylor, Honorary Secretary, Norwich.

The concert and gymnastic display given at the Royal Albert Hall on June 3 by the students and graduates of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind again testified to the usefulness of that excellent institution presided over by Dr. F. J. Campbell. The concert, conducted by that old friend of the College, Dr. W. H. Cummings, included a concert overture for organ by Mr. Alfred Hollins, a graduate of the College, Elgar's part-song 'Lullaby,' Weelkes's madrigal for female voices 'The Nightingale,' two madrigals for mixed voices, 'The silver swan' (Gibbons) and 'All creatures now are merry-minded' (Benet), Faning's 'Song of the Vikings' and Mendelssohn's 'Capriccio for pianoforte and orchestra in B minor (Op. 23), the solo played by Master Wilfrid Kershaw. The performance, which gave great pleasure to an interested audience, was honoured by the presence of King Edward and Queen Alexandra.

The following is from the Annual Report (1906-7) of that flourishing organization The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union, under the heading 'Town Hall' [Newcastle-on-Tyne]: 'Never has the utter inadequacy of the Town Hall, both with regard to seating capacity and comfort, been so severely felt as during this season. At both the "Messiah" and "Elijah" concerts it was quite impossible to accommodate the crowds who wished to attend, and the demand for tickets was so strong that on both these occasions the Hall could have been sold out twice over.' This extract, which needs no comment, may be commended to the notice of those who are prone to believe that oratorio is played out in England. Next season the Society intends to perform 'The Dream of Gerontius,' 'The Messiah,' and Bach's B minor Mass. May all success continue to attend its endeavours.

The autograph of Beethoven's Sonata for pianoforte and violin in G (Op. 96), which was for sale at Leipzig, has been purchased by Signor Leo S. Olschki, of Florence, for the sum of over £2,000. As the score consisted of twenty-three folio sheets, this works out at about £87 per folio! an amount that would doubtless have perfectly satisfied Beethoven for the copyright of the entire work. The Sonata, which dates from the close of the year 1812, was first played by the Archduke Rudolph and Rode—whose style Beethoven kept in view in the violin part—at the house of Prince Lobkowitz on December 29, 1812.

The Municipal Council of Vienna have taken steps to obtain permission to transfer the remains of Joseph Haydn from Eisenstadt to that city. Should it be granted, the master will be re-interred in the Central Cemetery next to the graves of Beethoven and Schubert.

A correspondent, writing from Wales, says: 'A local newspaper here reports a tenor soloist as having sung "On-the-way, awake beloved," in an open competition.' The proof-reader of that newspaper should keep his eyes open for such things that are well on the way to inaccuracy.

Great Yarmouth Parish Church will form the subject of the illustrated article in The Musical Times next month. As the Church Congress will meet at Great Yarmouth in October, the timeliness of the article will be obvious.

DR. GLAZOUNOW.

M. Alexander Constantinovich Glazounow, the distinguished Russian composer, is the latest musician to receive the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causâ, at the University of Cambridge, this honour having been conferred upon him on June 12. He also received a similar honour from the University of Oxford on June 18, when the following Latin speech, written by Dr. F. W. Bussell, of Brasenose, was addressed to the Vice-Chancellor by the Professor of Music, Sir Hubert H. Parry:

Insignissime Vice-Cancellarî, vosque eximii Procuratores, Hodie mihi munus gratissimum est implendum. En! Adstat coram vobis vir in arte musicâ peritissimus, Alexander Glazounow quem vetus nostra Academia summi gradus honore cumulare desiderat. De quo pauca praefari liceat, ut sciatis quis et unde venerit ad litora nostra, peregrinus ille et hospes.

Urbs est in Europae, ut ita dicam, extremo margine, quam ducentis abhinc annis Constantinus alter in Baltico mari condidit. Ibi nostri incunabula, ubi fertur etiam infantiae vagitûs concinne modulatus esse et a tenerâ ungue praesagia venientis famae sociis mirantibus monstrâsse. Sedecim annos natus difficillimum musicae artis symphoniacum genus ornavit et elaboravit; et in se studia popularium vertit, quippe qui Sclavorum genti nomen insigne additurus esset ob magnos in arte musica profectûs. Neque spem illam juventutis fefellit vir, non solum indole sed etiam industriâ spectabilis. In eo sociatur quicquid egregii in aliis scriptoribus dissipatum videmus; melos varietate, concinnitate dulcissimum, si jucunda vel solennia quaesiveris; rhythmi firmus tenor et virilis audacia; inventio multiplex et sibi constans sed nunquam eadem; organorum summa peritia, ita ut orchestra illo auctore semper nova addidicisse, semper inauditas blanditias auribus attulisse videatur; impetus denique et judicium, res olim dissociabiles ut cum Tacito nostro loquar, in eo adeo conjuncta, ut juvenis vires et maturitatis prudentiam scriptis et carminibus adhibeat. Vir ille eximie ergà instituta Musicae fidelis, formas scribendi veteres conservavit, sed gentis novae et ardentissimae ignes et stimulos addidit. Quis enim nescit Sclavos in poetarum ingenio mentisque vivacitate ceteris gentibus praecellere? Quibus, ut dux et institutor et moderator, noster semper favit, in natali solo Director ut vocatur Conservatorii ab Imperatore constitutus.

Hunc igitur presento vobis, Insignissime Vice-Cancellarî, omnium suffragiis dignum et habitum et habendum, qui ob merita et dotes et industriam et ergà cives suos amorem, viginti quinque annos in Musicorum Republicâ versatus et spectatus,—in ordinem Doctorum in eâdem Arte adsciscatur, honoris causâ.

The Professor of Music (Sir Hubert Parry) has kindly furnished the following translation of Dr. Bussell's oration:

Most distinguished Vice-Chancellor and eminent Proctors, a most grateful task falls to my lot to-day! For there stands before you M. Alexander Glazounow, a man most expert in the Art of Music, to whom our ancient University wishes to offer a signal mark of honour—of whom I beg to be allowed to say a few prefatory words, that you may know who he is and whence he comes to our shores, a guest from a foreign country.

There is a city on the extreme margin of Europe, if I may say so, which two hundred years ago a second Constantine founded upon the Baltic Sea. For the Emperor Peter, Cæsar and Augustus of all the Russias, wished his country to have an outlook, and as it were, a window towards the West. And there our hero was born, and there he is reported to have aptly blended his infantile wailings into Music and from the tenderest age to have given presage of his coming fame. At the age of sixteen he adorned the Art with an example of that most difficult and elaborate branch, the Symphony, and drew attention to himself as one who would add a name of honour to the Slavic race for his great proficiency in the Musical Art. Nor as a man did he fall short of the promise of his youth, but became notable for his industry as well as for his disposition. For in him we find at once many qualities united which in other composers are sometimes found scattered, a variety of melody, whether sweetness or cheerfulness or seriousness be desired, a strength and manliness of rhythm, and rich invention at once various and consistent, a mastery of resource, so that when he employed the Orchestra some new and unexpected charms revealed themselves, a vigour and a judgment, qualities which I may say with our Tacitus are sometimes dissevered, but so conjoined in him that he combines the vivacity of youth with the prudence of maturity. He shows his loyalty to fine musical traditions by maintaining the forms which are honoured by their ancient status, and has added thereto the fires and impulses of a new and fervent race. Who is it that knows not that the Slavs are pre-eminent for their genius in poetry and their vivacity of mind? To whom as a leader and instructor and advisor our guest is happily appointed by the Emperor, as in his native land he is called to be 'Director' of the Conservatorium. Such a man we present to you, worthy of the suffrages of all and assured of receiving them, who for his merits and his gifts and his industry, and the love of his compatriots, having for twenty-five years successfully exercised his powers in the Republic of Music, may worthily be received into the ranks of Doctors in this Art, 'honoris causâ.'

Born nearly forty-two years ago at St. Petersburg, Dr. Glazounow, unlike some of his fellow countrymen, has a preference for classical forms in music, and as a master of orchestration he occupies a high place among modern creative musicians. He produced his first symphony in 1882 at the early age of sixteen, which at once attracted notice. As Mrs. Newmarch says: 'Few composers have made their début under more favourable auspices, or have won appreciation so rapidly. Nor has he ever experienced the sting of neglect or the inconvenience of poverty. His life, it has been truly remarked, seems the realization of a fairy-tale set to music.' Of how few composers can this be said!

Dr. Glazounow—who made his first appearance in England at the Philharmonic Society's concert of July 1, 1897—paid a visit to the Royal College of Music on June 6, when, at the orchestral concert given by the students, were performed his 'Raymonda' suite for orchestra, two melodies for contralto solo and orchestra (sung by Miss Dilys Jones), violoncello solo 'Chant du Ménestrel' (played by Miss Beatrice Harrison), and Seventh Symphony in F (Op. 77). With the exception of the last-named, played under the baton of Sir Charles V. Stanford, Dr. Glazounow conducted his own compositions. The eminent Russian composer, who had a very cordial greeting, was greatly pleased with the interpretative excellence of the students at the Royal College of Music.

CROSBY HALL.

Crosby Hall, in Bishopsgate Street, is one of those fine old buildings so rich in historical interest, that all the efforts now being made to preserve it from destruction deserve to be crowned with success. Dating back to the 15th century and immortalized by Shakespeare, who lived close by, in his 'Richard III,' the place is not without its musical associations. There Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' was first performed, on January 8, 1845, at one of the Sacred Concerts for which it was specially written by the composer, the said concerts being given by Mrs. Mounsey-Bartholomew (then Miss Mounsey), who accompanied the work on the organ.

Three years later the late Mr. J. H. B. Dando transferred his excellent Quartet Concerts from the Hanover Square Rooms to Crosby Hall. In a circular announcing the change of venue, and dated

'Crosby Hall, Bishopsgate Street, March, 1842,' that able and enterprising violinist said:

> MR. DANDO begs respectfully to inform his friends and the public that he has secured a lease of part of the Ancient Palace of 'CROSBIE PLACE,' Bishopsgate Street, and that he has carefully, and at great expense, restored to its pristine beauty and elegance that part of it known as the 'Throne Room,' in which, besides other improvements, he has erected a fine Organ.
> He proposes to appropriate the Room to the use of those who wish to give Select Subscription or Benefit Concerts, Balls, Lectures, Church and other Committee Meetings, Masonic Meetings, Dramatic Readings, Literary and Scientific Conversazioni, &c.; and its centrical situation renders it particularly convenient to those parties attending, who may wish to avail themselves of public conveyances to all parts of London or the suburbs.
> In pursuance of his plans, Mr. DANDO intends to open the Room, on Thursday, the 31st of March instant, with an EVENING MUSICAL PERFORMANCE, which will be the first of a Series of THREE SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS, of Choice and Select Chamber Music, supported by first-rate Vocal and Instrumental talent.

It is very interesting to turn over a bundle of Dando's old programmes—many of which were given to the present writer by the concert-giver himself—especially as furnishing information regarding first performances in England. At the first concert, March 31, 1842, Miss Mounsey played on the organ a 'Prelude, and pedal fuge (sic) by Bach.' Dando claimed to have given the first public performance of Haydn's 'The seven last words' in its original form, namely as string quartets, interspersed with chorales. This was at the concert of April 10, 1843, the players being Dando, Gattie, Loder and Lucas; the vocalists, the Misses Williams, Messrs. Carter and A. Novello, with Vincent Novello at the organ. On May 6, 1844, a 'Concerto per il cembalo,' with string accompaniment, was played by Sterndale Bennett, and Mendelssohn's string quartet in E flat (Op. 44, No. 3) was performed for the first time in England. At the concert of June 3, 1844, Mendelssohn played some of his 'Songs without words,' listened to a performance of his Octet and extemporized in a very remarkable manner. As showing Dando's enterprise it may be convenient to set forth in tabulated form some of the works he introduced into England at Crosby Hall:

Spohr.	Quartet in B flat (Op. 74, No. 2) - - -	March 10, 1845
,,	Quartet in C (Op. 45, No. 1) - - -	February 12, 1849
Haydn.	Quartet in D (No. 49) -	January 14, 1850
Mendelssohn.	Andante, Scherzo, &c., for strings (Op. 81)
,,	Quartet in F minor (Op. 80) - - -	February 11, 1850
,,	Quintet in B flat (Op. 87)	January 20, 1851
,,	Caprice in A minor, for pianoforte - - -	February 3, 1851
Schumann.	Quartet in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1) - -	February 24, 1851
Spohr.	Duetto, for two violins (Op. 67, No. 2) - -	March 17, 1851
Mendelssohn.	'Infelice' (Scena) -	March 9, 1852
Spohr.	Pianoforte quintet in D minor (Op. 130) - -	February 14, 1853
Hummel.	Pianoforte sonata in F sharp minor (Op. 81) -
Haydn.	Quartet in E (No. 8) -	March 16, 1857

(In all the above instances Dando's statements as to first performances in England are assumed to be correct.)

In 1847 we find the name of P. B. Czapek as a song composer, he being none other than J. L. Hatton, the Englishman. On February 13, 1854, a young tenor named Cummings sang Hatton's 'The blind boy,' accompanied by G. A. Osborne, and on January 28, 1856, Horsley's glee 'By Celia's arbour' was sung by Messrs. Foster, Smith, Cummings and Barnby. Another familiar name appears in the programme of January 10, 1859, on which occasion a Serenade 'Sleep, dearest, sleep,' by A. Randegger, 'composed expressly for Miss Dolby,' was sung by that lady. The accompanists at these concerts included such well-known names as E. J. Hopkins, Henry Smart, Cipriani Potter, W. Dorrell, W. H. Holmes, Sterndale Bennett, Benedict, Walter Macfarren, Lindsay Sloper, W. Rea, F. Edward Bache, G. A. Osborne, H. C. Banister and W. G. Cusins. In thus sampling these old programmes, which, with the concerts given by Dando at the Hanover Square Rooms, cover a period of twenty-three years, one can imagine how greatly such chamber music was enjoyed by those who performed and those who listened in the Throne Room of Crosby Hall. May it be brought back to the same uses again. The Corporation of the City of London must surely be proud of this old building.

THE ARTICLE 'PSALTER' IN GROVE'S DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS (NEW EDITION).

The subject of Psalmody, which includes the origin and history of old hymn-tunes, has become of much interest and importance in the present day. Organists and others frequently give lectures on the subject, and they naturally turn to the new edition of 'Grove's Dictionary of Music' for information thereupon, especially if they are beyond reach of great libraries and other means of adding to their knowledge or of verifying their references: therefore, solely from this point of view, and not in a spirit of hypercriticism, we print the following corrections, &c., of the article 'Psalter, the English Metrical,' contained in Vol. III. (1907) of the new edition of 'Grove,' the said corrections having been kindly contributed by Mr. William Cowan, of Edinburgh, one of the authors of 'The Music of the Church Hymnary,' who has made a special and careful study of the subject.

VOL. III.

P. 833. col. 1.—First edition of Sternhold, 1548 or 1549. Is the title transcribed from the book itself? There are some slight differences in the wording and spelling as given by Cotton.* Seventeen of the nineteen Psalms are in common metre, and two are in short metre.

P. 833, cols. 1 and 2.—The enumeration of the early English editions of Sternhold is incomplete if Cotton's information is correct. He names three editions in 1551, one in 1552, and two in 1553. The sentence at foot of col. 1 is inaccurate. These editions are quite correctly described by Cotton, Rev. Neil Livingston, Dr. Julian, and others.

P. 833, col. 2.—Edition of 1553. What is the authority for the statement that this contains seven Psalms by Whittingham? It is generally understood that these did not appear till 1556.

P. 833, col. 2, Note 3.—Steele† states that a copy of Seager's Psalms is in the University library, Cambridge.

P. 834, col. 2.—1556 edition. This book is in three parts, the Psalms form the second part, and the date is on the title-page of the first part. See above as to the addition of seven Psalms by Whittingham.

P. 834, col. 2, 5th line from foot.—The tune here referred to as set to Psalm 68 is not in the 1556 edition.

---

* 'Editions of the Bible and parts thereof in English, from the year MDV. to MDCCL.' By the Rev. Henry Cotton, D.C.L. Second edition, Oxford, 1852.

† 'The Earliest English Music Printing.' By Robert Steele. London, 1903.

P. 835, col. 1.—There is a good deal of confusion here as to the editions of 1558, 1560 and 1561. The reference to the 1558 edition in a sentence in brackets is inadequate, for the book referred to is not a mere second edition of that issued in 1556. It contains sixty-two Psalms, and considerable alteration was made in the selection of tunes. Though the English edition of 1561 is not mentioned, some of the statements in the text apply to it. The copy at Christ Church, Oxford, is the 1560 edition, but that in the library of the Society of Antiquaries is the 1561 edition, of which a description will be found in Steele and also in Julian's 'Dictionary of Hymnology.' The 1560 edition contains sixty-five Psalms. It is practically a reprint of the 1558 edition, with three Psalms added—viz., the 95th and 125th, and a second version of the 67th.

P. 835, col. 2, line 3.—The Psalms have forty-two tunes, twenty-four of which are from the 1556 edition. Six (not five) of the new tunes are from the French Psalter, in addition to the tune for the Commandments. The French tunes to the 50th, 121st, 124th, 127th, and 129th are set to the same Psalms in the English version, and the French 107th is altered to suit the English 120th. The French 124th has not been expanded. The stanza is exactly the same in the two versions, namely five lines of ten syllables. The 130th, both psalm and tune, had already appeared in the 1556 edition.

P. 835, col. 2, line 20.—The contents of the 1561 Geneva edition are not given correctly. There are twenty-five new translations, the three psalms added in 1560 not being included. It contains in all sixty-two tunes, sixty set to Psalms, with the Commandments tune, and a tune to a version of the Nunc dimittis which appears only in this edition, in that of 1558, and in Daman's Psalter, 1579. Of the sixty tunes, twenty-four are in both the 1556 and the 1558-60 editions, sixteen are in 1558-60 only, while twenty are new. Seventeen of the new tunes, or eighteen if the 113th is included, are from the French Psalter. The details given of the 'French importations' are not correct. The 50th, as already mentioned, appeared in 1558; the 113th is the French 36th, but is really of German origin; the 145th is not in this edition, it appeared first in 1562; and the 148th appeared in 1558. Further, neither the 145th nor the 148th are from the French Psalter, and they are not 'called "French" by Ravenscroft.' From what book is the setting of the 100th Psalm, printed in this column, taken? None of the tunes in the books described at this part of the article are harmonized.

P. 837, col. 1.—1562 edition. The sentence in brackets (lines 13, 14) is presumably meant to refer to the 1562 edition, though as it stands it apparently refers to that of 1564. The title of the 1562 edition is not correctly transcribed, and the copy in the John Rylands Library is not unique. There is one in the British Museum Library, and another in the library of Mr. A. H. Littleton. It contains sixty-five tunes, but three of these are really duplicates. The tunes of Psalms 77 and 81 are identical, as are also those of Psalm 112 and the Lord's Prayer; while those of Psalm 35 and the 'Humble Sute' differ so little as to be practically the same tune. The comparison with previous editions should be as follows:—

Of the sixty-two tunes there appeared:	Tunes.
In 1556, 1558-60, and 1561 (Geneva) . .	10
In 1558-60 and 1561	9
In 1558-60 only	4
In 1561 only	7

Of the remaining thirty-two, sixteen probably appeared in the English edition of 1561, of which no statistics are given, while the remaining sixteen are new in 1562. None of the tunes called 'High Dutch' by Ravenscroft are new in 1562. The hymn 'Preserve us, Lord' was in the 1561 English edition.

P. 837, col. 2.—The Introduction to learn to sing is in the 1562 edition. The sol-fa syllables appear in the edition of 1570, and in others down to 1608.

P. 837, col. 2, Note.—Is the statement in this foot-note correct? There seems to be no evidence of the existence of a 1565 edition. (See Steele.)

P. 839, col. 2.—Two small errors occur in the title of Daman's 1579 Psalter: Damon should be Daman, and unseemly, unseemely.

P. 840, col. 1, line 23.—The statement as to the four 'single common measure tunes' is not quite accurate. Cambridge has five lines, the repeat of the fourth line of words being afterwards dropped. Canterbury is here a double tune, but the second half was dropped in later books. Southwell is in short, not common metre.

P. 840, col. 1.—Hunnis' 'Seuen Sobs of a sorrowfull soule for sinne.' Steele gives editions of this work dated 1583, 1587, 1589, 1597. There is also an edition dated 1592. Is the statement as to number of tunes correct? The 1592 edition has more than seven tunes.

P. 840, col. 1.—Cosyn's 'Musicke of six and five parts.' There is a copy of the altus part in the British Museum and of the bassus part in the Bodleian Library.

P. 840, col. 2.—Daman's 'Second Booke.' The title is not correctly given. The words 'differing from the former' are not in the title. The same mistake appears in the article 'Daman,' vol. i., p. 655, top of col. 2.

P. 840, col. 2, line 25.—If by 'original tunes' is meant the tunes in Daman's 1579 book, the comparison is not correct, as fourteen tunes contained in the 1579 edition do not appear in 1591, and the latter has five tunes which are not in the 1579 book. One of these is the tune Windsor, and another is the short-metre tune which is called London by Ravenscroft, but named Southwell by Playford, though it is quite different from the Southwell already noted as appearing in Daman's 1579 Psalter.

P. 840, col. 2.—Este's Psalter, 1592. The statistics of its tunes are not correct. The 'Note of tunes newly added' mentions nine tunes. Five of these had appeared in Daman's Psalters—namely, Cambridge, Oxford, Canterbury, Windsor and the short-metre tune just referred to. The other four are Glassenburie, Kentish, Winchester, and Chesshire. In the 1592 edition Cambridge occurs thirty-one times, Oxford twenty-six times, and Canterbury thirty-three times. In the 1594 and subsequent editions the number of these repetitions is increased.

P. 841, col. 1.—Composers of settings in Este's Psalter. The list needs correction: Sixteen are by John Farmer; six by John Dowland; and three by Edward Johnson.

P. 842, col. 2, lines 25-29.—There is some error here. If of the ten new settings in Barley's Psalter six are not to be found elsewhere, then only four, not five as stated, can be in Ravenscroft. Presumably lines 25 and 26 should read 'four of them—two by Morley and two by Bennet.'

P. 842, col. 2, last line.—Is not the tune set by Blancks, and called by Ravenscroft a Dutch tune, that already referred to as Canterbury?

P. 843, cols. 1 and 2.—Ravenscroft's Psalter. There are some errors in the transcription of the title. The statistics of the contents are not accurate. The new tunes—that is, those which had not previously appeared in an English Psalter—number only thirty-two, not forty as stated. Several of these tunes, however, had already appeared in Scottish Psalters. Ravenscroft's book contains ninety-eight different tunes, of which sixty-six had appeared in previous English books. Five of the tunes have two differing arrangements, and one has three arrangements. There are therefore in all 105 settings. The settings taken from Este's Psalter number twenty-eight by nine composers. None of Dowland's settings in Este appear here, but there is one by him of the 100th Psalm (quoted in the text). Two of Hooper's settings in Este are taken, but there is no new one by him. The list of new composers and the number of their contributions requires correction as follows: J. Milton, 3; J. Tomkins, 2; W. Cranfield or Cranford, 1; Ravenscroft, 55; and add M. Peirson, 1.

P. 844, col. 1.—Wither's book contains only fourteen tunes; that known as Angels' Song (by Orlando Gibbons) appears three times.

P. 844, col. 2.—The sentence in brackets at the top of the column is rather inadequate as being the only reference to the Scottish Psalter. It had a history of its own, though starting from the same nucleus as the English book. Many of the tunes in the Scottish book (completed in 1564) never appeared in the complete English book, and others, such as some of those in Ravenscroft's Psalter, appeared first in Scotland.

P. 844, col. 2.—George Sandys. The first edition of his work appeared in 1636, but this edition had no tunes, and the title as quoted is incorrect. In 1638 there appeared in folio 'A Paraphrase upon the Divine Poems, by George Sandys.' The Psalms, with tunes, form a part of this volume, bearing the title as quoted.

P. 845, col 1.—Playford's Psalms and Hymns, &c., 1671. Only thirty-four of the tunes had appeared in editions of the Sternhold and Hopkins Psalter. One tune (Angels' Song), set to Psalm 104, is from Wither, and twelve seem to be new, though some of them are made up from older tunes. There are only eleven four-line tunes with names which had appeared previously, ten being in common and one in short measure.

P. 845, col. 1.—Bishop King's Psalms (1651) has eight tunes, namely, those named in the text, and also the short metre tune set to Psalms 25 and 50 in older books and called Southwell by Playford. The tune referred to as being 'not a church tune' is the tune set to the Lamentation in all editions of Sternhold.

P. 845, col. 2.—Playford's Psalter, 1677, does not contain all the church tunes. He rejected several and substituted other tunes for them. In his preface he gives elaborate reasons for setting the tunes in three parts.

The following additional corrections of articles in Vols. I. and II. of 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' which bear upon the subject of Psalmody, are subjoined.

VOL. I.

P. 173, col. 2.—Ballard. 'The Psalms of Marot' is put in quotation marks as if it were the exact wording of the title. (An exhaustive series of articles on 'Clément Marot and the Huguenot Psalter,' by the late Major G. A. Crawford, appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES from June to November, 1881.)

P. 374, col. 2.—Bourgeois. A copy of the 1551 edition is in the Royal Library at Dresden.

P. 527, col. 1.—Chorale. The paragraph referring to Goudimel is misleading and not consistent with what is stated on the subject in other articles. The book issued in 1565 was simply one of the editions of the Marot and Beza Psalter, as mentioned in column 2 of p. 527, with the regular tunes, harmonized by Goudimel. The Old Hundredth appeared in 1551. Only a very few of the tunes were included in German collections of chorales, though of course all of them appeared in the German translation of the French Psalter.

P. 527, col. 2.—Goudimel's settings in the 1565 book are not all 'note against note.' Some are in florid counterpoint, and seventeen (not twelve) have the melody in the Superius part.

P. 654, col. 2.—Daman (William). The psalter published in 1579 contains more than 'about forty' tunes, the number being seventy-nine tunes, fifty-seven being set to Psalms and the rest to the Canticles and Hymns. There are slight errors in the transcription of the title, of this and also of the first of the 1591 issues. The title of the 'Second Booke' of 1591 is quite incorrect. It should read:

¶ The second Booke of the Musicke of M. William Damon, late one of her maiesties Musitions: conteining all the tunes of Dauid's Psalmes, as they are ordinarily soung in the Church: most excellently by him composed into 4 parts. In which Sett the highest part singeth the Church tune. Published for the recreation of such as delight in Musicke: By W. Swayne Gent. Printed by T. Este, the assigné of W. Byrd. 1591.

P. 676, col. 1.—Day (John). The list of Day's books is very inadequate. The 1561 and 1562 editions of the metrical psalter should have been mentioned. Is there any evidence that the 'Psalmes in 4 parts' were reprinted in 1565?

Of the 'whole Booke of Psalmes' three later editions were issued in 1594, 1604, and 1611. The tunes are not in 'what is now called score.' The four parts are printed separately, though on the same opening in the book.

VOL. II.

P. 455, col. 1.—Hymn. Playford's 1671 book contains many more hymns than those indicated. Supplement to the New Version: this appeared in 1700.

P. 672, col. 2.—Le Jeune. According to Douen, the Psalms of four and five voices were first printed at Paris, not at La Rochelle.

Church and Organ Music.

'DIVINE AMUSEMENT.'

The reader may well smile at the above heading, but it must be taken quite seriously. On the writer's shelves is a large octavo book, in the original binding and containing sixty-one pages, bearing this exhaustive title:

> DIVINE AMUSEMENT, being a selection of the most admired Psalms, Hymns and Anthems used at St. James's Chapel for the Organ, Harpsichord & Piano Forte; to which are added some of the most favorite Psalms and Hymns used at the Magdalen, Asylum & Foundling Chapels.
> The whole composed and compiled by GEORGE THOMAS SMART, organist of St. James's Chapel, and late one of the Children of His Majesty's Chapel Royal.
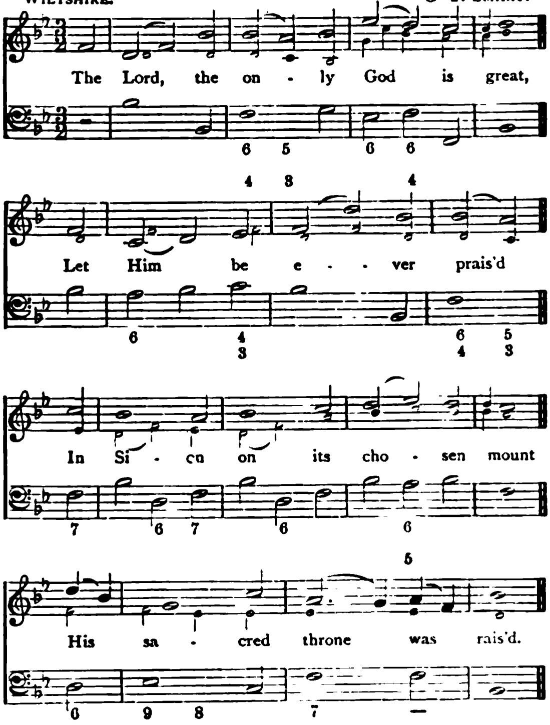
> London: Printed at G. Smart's Musical Instrument Warehouse, corner of Argyl Street, Oxford Street, where may be had, just published, a Collection of Psalms by M. Cooke, and variety of Divine Music.

Sir George Smart, who was born in 1776, became organist of St. James's Chapel, situated in Hampstead Road, in 1791; therefore 'Divine Amusement' appeared after that date, and the year 1795 may approximately be given as that of publication. The tunes, printed in short score with figured bass, include Smart's well-known tune 'Wiltshire,' which there makes its appearance for the first time in the following form:

WILTSHIRE. PSALM XLVIII. G T. SMART.



The Lord, the on - ly God is great,
Let Him be e - - ver prais'd
In Si - on on its cho - sen mount
His sa - cred throne was rais'd.

Immediately following the index of the book is the following note: 'N.B. For the accommodation of those who do not understand thorough Bass, it is Explained in Small Notes which may be Played, or Omitted, at Pleasure.' It will be observed that the composer's permission to omit 'at pleasure' the small notes has not been embraced in regard to the second line (of words), because the two F's have now been adopted as the melody. This change the composer approved when the tune was included in 'Church Melodies,' edited by the Rev. Dr. Henderson, of Paisley, and published in 1856; moreover, Smart himself adopted the alteration in his 'Collection of Sacred Music' published in 1863, when he was eighty-seven years old. Other forms of 'Wiltshire' have appeared at different times, and the tune has afforded re-harmonization sport for various editors, one of the chief sinners in this respect having been the late Dr. Gauntlett in the 'Congregational Psalmist.'

In Scotland the tune was formerly named 'New St. Ann,' in order to distinguish it from another 'Wiltshire' composed by one Stevenson. This 'New St. Ann' designation caused Smart's tune to be assigned to Dr. Croft north of the Tweed, doubtless because Dr. Croft was the composer of the old 'St. Ann's'!

SIR GEORGE SMART.

COMPOSER OF THE TUNE 'WILTSHIRE.'

There are other tunes than 'Wiltshire' by Smart in 'Divine Amusement' named respectively 'St. James's Chapel,' 'Wheatfield' (suggestive of a harvest festival hymn) and 'Westminster,' a very different production from Turle's tune of that name. There is also a feeble anthem by Smart, beginning 'Blest He, whose heart with pity glows,' in the last movement of which the sopranos shriek a succession of Amens while the other parts are vociferating repeated Hallelujahs. There are other curiosities in this old collection; for instance, Henry Carey's tune to 'The Lord my pasture shall prepare' is assigned to Addison, the author of the words, and the music to the 'Hymn of Eve' is credited to Handel instead of to Dr. Arne. A curious versification of 'The Hymn Benedicite,' set by an anonymous composer, contains these lines:

Ye cattle which on earth do feed,
And fish that in the waters breed:
Ye fowls whom thro' the spacious air
Swift wings from place to place do bear.

The tunes are variously noted, some in minims, some in crotchets. Of the various old melodies which are to be found in the book, 'Bedford' naturally appears in its beautiful original triple-rhythm form, as 'Divine Amusement' was published before Mr. Gardiner, the Leicester stocking-maker, unwarrantably spoiled the tune by turning it into quadruple time. Unless a suggestion of drowsiness is intended, or of a grumble at having to 'shake off dull sloth' at sunrise, it seems strange that Ken's Morning-hymn, so suggestive of brightness and thanksgiving, should here appear set to a minor tune. Finally, the seeker after 'consecutives' would find a quarry to his heart's desire in 'Divine Amusement.'

Sir George Smart, the compiler of the old book which has formed the subject of the above notes, was one of the best-known musicians of his time. He lived a most active life, and, after having had a very successful career, he died in his ninety-second year on February 23, 1867, and is buried in the catacombs of Kensal Green Cemetery. As a composer he failed to make his mark; indeed he is almost forgotten, except for his one hymn-tune 'Wiltshire,' which, having first appeared in 'Divine Amusement' more than a hundred years ago, has found its way into nearly all hymnals of the present day.

FLINTOFT'S CHANT: AN IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

Mr. William Cowan, of Edinburgh, writes:

> 'Another warning against making positive assertions about the first appearance and origin of hymn-tunes and chants!
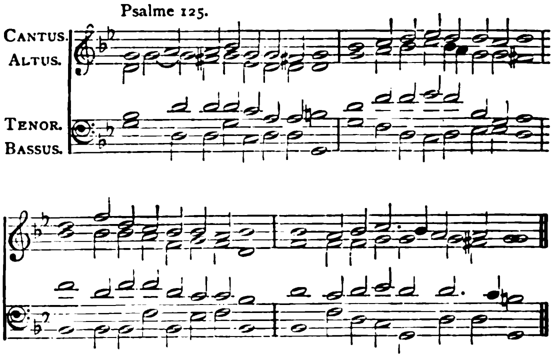
> 'I have just acquired a copy of Allison's Psalter, 1599, which I had not previously examined in detail, believing it to contain simply the tunes in Este's book. To my surprise I have discovered in it the tune hitherto attributed to Playford, to which you refer in THE MUSICAL TIMES of May (p. 312) as being the source of Flintoft's double chant. Thus the tune appeared no less than seventy-two years before Playford's book! I may add that this tune, under the name "Salisbury," is found several times in Playford's "Whole Booke of Psalms," 1677, and subsequent editions, and also in other books of that period.'

Here is the tune as given in the above psalter, except that the four parts are printed separately:



This fresh information—one of many discoveries for which students of hymn-tuneology are indebted to Mr. Cowan—concerning the origin of Flintoft's chant corrects all previous statements on the subject, including the article in THE MUSICAL TIMES for May, 1907, p. 312, already mentioned.

DIOCESAN CHORAL ASSOCIATIONS.

The thirty-first meeting of the Canterbury Diocesan Choral Union was held in Canterbury Cathedral on May 29, the united choirs numbering 520 voices. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to a setting in C by the Rev. Geoffrey C. E. Ryley, a minor canon of the Cathedral, this service having been written for a similar festival held in Gloucester Cathedral last year. The anthem was Barnby's 'Awake up, my glory.' Canon Hichens, the precentor of the Association, conducted, and Dr. H. C. Perrin, organist of the Cathedral, presided at the organ.

The Festival of the Ely Diocesan Council of Church Music was held in Ely Cathedral on June 4, under the conductorship of Mr. Felix W. Morley, organist of Pembroke College, Cambridge. Walmisley's beautiful setting in D minor of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, scored for orchestra, was the service, and the anthems were 'O that I knew where I might find Him' (Sterndale Bennett), and 'O God, when Thou appearest' (Mozart). The orchestra played the Sinfonia from Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' and the march from Mendelssohn's 'Athalie.' Dr. A. W. Wilson, organist of Ely Cathedral, presided at the organ. The united choirs numbered 739 voices, and the arrangements of the Festival were in the capable hands of the Precentor (Canon Crosby) of the Cathedral.

At Worcester Cathedral, on June 6, the eleventh triennial festival of the Church Choral Association for the Archdeaconry of Worcester was held, when twenty choirs, numbering about 700 voices, took part. The processional hymn, 'With gladsome feet,' was sung to Mr. John E. West's tune, the Cathedral lay-clerks standing on the choir-steps, singing, as cantors, alternate strains with the full chorus. Martin in G furnished the music for the canticles, and the anthems were 'Sing unto the Lord' (E. A. Sydenham) and 'There is none that can resist Thy voice' (Ivor Atkins), the latter composed for a similar diocesan festival held at Gloucester Cathedral. The recessional hymn, 'Through the night of doubt and sorrow,' was sung to a very expressive tune by Sir Hubert Parry. The precentor of the Cathedral (the Rev. H. H. Woodward) conducted from the choir-steps, his beat being transmitted to the easternmost choirs by Mr. W. Mann Dyson, one of the lay-clerks. Mr. Ivor Atkins, organist of Worcester Cathedral, presided at the organ. An interesting feature of this impressive service was that the prayers were intoned by Minor Canons Tupper and Mercer, both of whom had in former years taken part in similar festivals as choristers of the Cathedral.

The forty-first annual festival service of the Chelmsford Association of Church Choirs was held at the Parish Church, Chelmsford, on June 6, under the conductorship of Mr. F. R. Frye, choirmaster to the Association. The combined choirs, numbering 300 voices, sang Dr. Gladstone's anthem 'Bring unto the Lord,' Dr. J. Charles Long's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F, and processional tunes by Dr. G. F. Huntley and Sir George Martin. Dr. Huntley, in addition to playing the accompaniments, gave a short organ recital before and after the service.

An Archidiaconal Choral Festival took place in Bangor Cathedral on June 13, at which Mr. John Williams, of Carnarvon, conducted a force of some 1,500 Welsh singers, and Dr. Roland Rogers, organist of the Cathedral, presided at the organ. The music sung on that occasion included two new Festival Anthems, composed respectively by Mr. Herbert C. Morris, organist of St. David's Cathedral, and Mr. T. Westlake Morgan, late organist of Bangor Cathedral.

Mr. Josiah Booth completed the thirtieth year of his appointment as organist of Park Chapel, Crouch End, on Sunday, May 26, on which occasion the music for both services was selected entirely from his own compositions, including a new Te Deum in D.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

The annual dinner took place at the Monico Restaurant on May 28, the genial President of the College, Sir Walter Parratt, in the chair. In proposing the toast of 'The Royal College of Organists,' the chairman, referring to the recent agitation by the country members, said 'the College must really endeavour to broaden its lines and bring to London for all the purposes of council and examinations some of those eminent men who do not happen to live here.' Sir Frederick Bridge proposed the health of the President. In responding to the toast of 'The visitors,' proposed in well-chosen words by Dr. Turpin, the honorary secretary, Dr. Charles Harriss suggested that some means might be devised for the examinations of the College to be held in Canada, a part of Greater Britain in the musical development of which Dr. Harriss takes a very warm and practical interest.

Dr. William Stevenson Hoyte, for nearly forty years organist and choirmaster of All Saints' Church, Margaret Street, is about to retire from the appointment he has held with such distinction to himself and advantage to the church. In recognition of his work the vicar and churchwardens have bestowed on him an annuity, with very complimentary assurances of their regard. Dr. Hoyte will be succeeded by his pupil and assistant, Mr. W. S. Vale, organist of St. Peter's Church, Ealing.

Mr. T. Tertius Noble is giving an interesting series of twelve organ recitals at York Minster, of which he is organist, in aid of the York Minster Choir Fund. The remaining dates of the performances are July 9, 13, 16, 20, 23, 27 and 30, at 8 p.m., except on Saturdays, July 13 and 20, when the hour is 2.45 p.m. Mr. Noble has made an excellent selection of pieces, and the whole of his programmes form a booklet which may be obtained from Mrs. Lewin, Minster Gates, York, price 6*d.*

The Dedication Festival of Boston Parish Church on June 17 included 'A special service of praise,' under the direction of Mr. G. H. Gregory, organist and choirmaster of the church. Spohr's 'God, Thou art great' was sung by an augmented choir of over a hundred voices, accompanied by an orchestra. The service was 'Stainer in A.' Mr. E. H. Ditton-Newman presided at the organ.

The London Wesleyan Methodist Choir Union held a United Choir Festival at Wesley's Chapel, City Road, on May 30, under the conductorship of Mr. C. J. Dale, with Mr. C. F. Warner, organist of City Road Chapel, at the organ. The music sung on this occasion included 'Tours in F' (Magnificat and Nunc dimittis), and a selection from Part I. of Mendelssohn's oratorio 'Elijah.'

The Free Church of Scotland—the 'Legal Frees,' as they are called—are showing their detestation of instrumental music in their church services by the issue of a collection of Psalmody in vocal score only. This antiquated method is to be adopted for two reasons: (1) in order 'that the psalm-tunes may not be played on the organ conveniently,' and (2) because 'the compressed score encourages the playing of tunes on Sunday for amusement'!

Six Lyric Pieces for violin and pianoforte. By Hans Sitt (Op. 96).
Souvenir de Printemps for violin and pianoforte. By Joseph Holbrooke (Op. 23, No. 6).
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Surely is the path of the budding violinist strewn with roses! Not, perhaps, with 'roses all the way,' for one must ever turn aside to pursue the necessary drudgery of the demands of technique; but so constant is the output of fascinating solos, of a moderate degree of difficulty and capable of being taken in hand by players with but a modest technical equipment, that all should be encouraged to persevere in overcoming the initial difficulties of the favourite bow-stringed instrument.

No one knows better how to write for the young violinist than the genial Hans Sitt—in very truth the Hans Andersen for the fiddle! His latest opus—six lyric pieces for violin and pianoforte—are ostensibly designed for those who have made fair progress in the third position, and therefore are suitable pieces to work with Book II. of 'A Modern School for the Violin.' No. 1 is a graceful Cavatina; No. 2, a rippling Gondoliera; No. 3, a charming Canzonetta, in which the occasional use of the fifth position will enhance the effect in performance; No. 4, a very fine Romance (here, by-the-way, some chromatics and modulations will require somewhat skilful intonation); No. 5, a graceful Intermezzo; and the last, No. 6, a delightful Serenade, which may be played ad lib. with the mute on. These pieces are little poems, and should carry one's thoughts away from the dry facts of crotchets and quavers into the realms of Fairyland.

The Souvenir de Printemps, by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke, gives one the fancy of a happy impromptu thought, sketched out on a bright spring day with Nature smiling all around. It is an unaffectedly and agreeably written piece for the solo instrument, one that is well within the compass of the third position.

The Wagner Stories. Told by Filson Young.
[E. Grant Richards.]

Wagnerian literature seems to be inexhaustible. One book after another, in various languages, comes from the press, each with its own special purport on the Bayreuth master or his wonderful creations. Some of these books lack the saving grace of being readable; not so this volume by Mr. Filson Young, who has the pen of a ready writer and an attractive style. The preface—or 'Note' as he calls it—to his interesting pages may be quoted as sampling his style:

> A long and varied experience of introducing people to the enjoyment of Wagner's operas has convinced me that the process of initiation is generally made far too formidable. The unfortunate novice is plied with information about leading motives and musical characterization till he goes to the opera like a nervous schoolboy trying to remember his lesson, and has his mind so concentrated on details that the work as a whole too often produces no intelligible effect upon him. I would like to assure the amateur who is as yet unacquainted with these masterpieces that all this semi-masonic mystery of initiation is quite unnecessary. All that is necessary is that he should know what the operas are about.

This is common-sense and perfectly true, and as the title of this interesting book implies, the author treats of the libretti of Wagner's operas—from 'The Flying Dutchman' to 'Parsifal.' In this respect he is sure to find many readers who will regard him as a guide, philosopher and friend. An excellent reproduction of Franz von Lenbach's portrait of Wagner forms an attractive frontispiece to the volume, and the Chronology at the end of the book will be found most useful.

The Scottish Soprano Album. The Scottish Tenor Album. The songs selected, edited and annotated by Donald Ross: the accompaniments composed and revised by Alfred Moffat.
[Edinburgh: Paterson & Sons.]

The editors of these two books are to be congratulated upon the success of their work. So vast is the field of Scottish song—those beautiful melodies that touch the heart-strings even of those not born north of the Tweed—that it is not an easy matter to make a good selection of some thirty songs, the number contained in each volume. This difficulty has certainly been overcome in these albums, which are sure to be heartily welcomed and widely used. The selection of the songs could not be in better hands than those of Mr. Ross, and, as the preface states, Mr. Moffat 'has composed or revised the accompaniments in an artistic manner,' and it is satisfactory to learn that several of the accompaniments 'have been retained as written by their composers.' The excellent 'Notes on the songs, their authors and composers,' written by Mr. Ross, greatly add to the interest and value of these attractive publications issued by the well-known Edinburgh firm of Paterson & Sons.

Obituary.

The death of Dr. Hermann Deiters at Coblenz on May 11 is recorded with regret. Born at Bonn, June 27, 1833, he was active as a teacher for many years, also as a writer. He contributed many important articles to various periodicals: e.g. 'Beethoven's dramatic works,' 'Schumann as a writer,' 'Otto Jahn,' and especially a series on Brahms, which was translated into English by Mrs. Rosa Newmarch. His magnum opus, however, was the German translation of the three volumes of A. W. Thayer's Beethoven Biography (1866-79). His connection with that Biography was not, however, confined to its translation. Thayer frequently consulted with him on many points, and gave him full liberty to deal as he pleased with his original manuscript. Thus, when Thayer died in 1897, Dr. Deiters was the very man to complete the work, which the third volume only brought down to the end of the year 1816. The revised first volume appeared in 1901, and for many years Dr. Deiters had been engaged on revision of the other volumes. How far he left the latter ready for publication we cannot say, but we are able to state on good authority that the first part of the fourth and concluding volume of the Biography is printed and will shortly be issued.

M. Edouard Mangin, the distinguished chef-d'orchestre of the Opéra, Paris, died suddenly on May 24, having conducted 'Tannhäuser' two days previously. He was born at Paris in 1837, and in 1870 he went to Lyons, where he founded the Conservatoire, also the Popular Concerts. In 1887 he was appointed chef de chant, and six years later was appointed to the post which he held up to the time of his death.

Herr Richard Mühlfeld, the eminent clarinettist of the Meiningen Orchestra, died suddenly at Meiningen on June 1, at the age of fifty-one. One of the finest performers on the clarinet—in technique, tone, and phrasing—Herr Mühlfeld will always be associated with Brahms, who 'discovered' him in 1891, with the result that Brahms wrote for him his Quintet for clarinet and strings (Op. 115), written and produced that year at Meiningen Castle. The distinguished artist played in the work at the Monday Popular Concert of March 28, 1892, Dr. Joachim leading. Since then Herr Mühlfeld has been a frequent and welcome visitor to London, where his admirable playing has always been greatly appreciated. From 1884 to 1896 he was principal clarinettist at Bayreuth.

A children's choral festival of the Vale of Clwyd Association was held in St. Asaph Cathedral on June 20, which was attended by 1,800 children. The music, mostly in two parts, was well rendered. The anthem was Smart's 'The Lord is my Shepherd' and the Magnificat (Welsh) and Nunc dimittis (English) were sung to a setting specially composed by Mr. W. E. Belcher, the cathedral organist, who conducted. Mr. Morton Bailey, of Llangollen, was at the organ.

ORLANDO GIBBONS COMMEMORATION.

Westminster Abbey.

June 5, 1907.

Being the Anniversary of the death of Orlando Gibbons, Organist of the Chapel Royal, 1604-1625, and of the Collegiate Church of St. Peter, Westminster, 1623-1625.

'He being dead, yet speaketh.' Such was the thought that constantly flitted across one's mind as strain after strain of the music of Orlando Gibbons greeted the ear in the dear old Abbey of Westminster. There, in the softened light of a June day, were assembled all sorts and conditions of men and women, from Princesses of the land down to the humble chorister, met together in order to commemorate one of the great masters of English church music—the great master who, as organist of Westminster Abbey nearly three hundred years ago, had 'the best finger of that age.'

ORGANIST
1625

THE BUST OF ORLANDO GIBBONS IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY, PRESENTED BY MR. C. T. D. CREWS.

The congregation included H.R.H. the Princess Christian, her daughter Princess Louise Augusta of Schleswig-Holstein, and many other notable people. The Worshipful Company of Musicians, under whose auspices the Commemoration was held, were present in large numbers, all of them arrayed in their furred gowns, the graduates among their number wearing the hoods of their several degrees; thus a welcome touch of colour added brightness to the scene, and, moreover, as has been well said, 'reminding many people by their robes of the Master-singers who were their somewhat indirect forerunners.' The Master of the Company, Sir Homewood Crawford (unfortunately absent through illness), was represented by the Acting-Master (Mr. E. Ernest Cooper), and there were present the Wardens (Mr. A. C. Hunter and Mr. T. Lea Southgate), the Clerk (Mr. T. C. Fenwick), and

Mr. C. T. D. Crews, a Past-Master of the Company and the generous donor of the bust of Orlando Gibbons, to which reference will subsequently be made.

Music and musical institutions were worthily represented by the following good men and true: Sir Walter Parratt, M.V.O. (Master of the Musick to the King); Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie (Principal of the Royal Academy of Music); Sir C. Hubert H. Parry, Bart., C.V.O. (Director of the Royal College of Music and Professor of Music at the University of Oxford); Sir George C. Martin, M.V.O. (Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral); Sir Charles V. Stanford (Professor of Music at the University of Cambridge); Dr. W. H. Cummings (Principal of the Guildhall School of Music); Dr. Charles Harriss (Director of the McGill University Conservatorium of Music, Montreal); and Dr. E. H. Turpin (Honorary Secretary of the Royal College of Organists). These eight distinguished musicians wore the State robes of their doctors' degrees. Cathedral music was represented by the precentors or organists of the following cathedrals: Bristol, Canterbury, Chester, Chichester, Dublin (St. Patrick's), Edinburgh (St. Mary's), Ely, Lincoln, Manchester, Truro, Wells, and Winchester.

The music was under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, M.V.O., the latest successor of Orlando Gibbons in the organistship of Westminster Abbey. Dr. W. G. Alcock, assistant-organist of the Abbey and the latest successor of Orlando Gibbons in the office of organist and composer of the Chapel Royal, presided at the organ throughout the service. An orchestra of players upon stringed instruments, numbering twenty-nine performers, lent their valuable aid; all except five were members of the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. Ernest Ford). The instruments were thus distributed: First violins, 6; Second violins, 6; First violas, 4; Second violas, 4; Violoncellos, 6; Double-basses, 3. The violinists in the orchestra included a cathedral organist, Mr. Hubert Hunt, of Bristol.

A choir of 300 voices had been organized by Mr. Henry King, who, as on similar previous occasions, discharged the duties of choir secretary. The ninety-six boy singers were drawn from Westminster Abbey, the Chapel Royal (these 'children' wearing their state uniforms of scarlet and gold), Canterbury Cathedral, the Temple Church, St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square and the Foundling Hospital. The choristers of St. Paul's Cathedral were unavoidably prevented from taking part in this memorable service. The 204 men-singers consisted of the lay-vicars of Westminster Abbey and contingents from the choirs of St. Paul's Cathedral; the Chapel Royal; St. George's Chapel, Windsor; Canterbury Cathedral; Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford; the Temple Church; Lincoln's Inn Chapel; St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square; Christ Church, Westminster; St. Alban's Church, Teddington, and several other churches, in addition to the President (Mr. J. Edward Street) and several members of the Madrigal Society and members of the Worshipful Company of Musicians. Singers and players were placed close to the organ screen on its western side, and Sir Frederick Bridge conducted from a specially-erected rostrum.

The service—in the form of Evensong, and held in the Nave—was preluded by two pieces composed by Gibbons—a 'Fantazia of foure parts' from Parthenia, 1611—originally written for the virginals, but arranged for the organ by Dr. John E. Borland, and a movement in A minor, arranged from a manuscript in the British Museum (Add. MS. 31,403) by Mr. John E. West and included in his series of 'Old English Organ Music.' The Precentor of Westminster (the Rev. H. G. Daniell-Bainbridge) intoned the prayers, and the Versicles and Responses were sung to the music of Gibbons (down to the Gloria Patri) and Tallis. The special psalms for the day were the 84th and the 150th, the former sung to a double chant adapted by Sir Frederick Bridge from Gibbons's well-known madrigal 'The silver swan' and the latter to the so-called 'Grand Chant' by 'Mr. Pell. Humphry,' the harmonies from a manuscript, temp. Charles II., in the British Museum (Add. MS. 17,784). No better selection could have been made for the first lesson (read by the Sub-dean, the Rev. Canon Duckworth) than the 44th chapter of Ecclesiasticus, beginning 'Let us now praise famous men,' the 'famous men' including (v. 5) 'such as found out musical tunes,' while the second lesson (read by the Dean) was Revelation vi. 'Gibbons in F,' in Sir George Martin's edition and there transposed to the key of G, naturally furnished the music for the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, a beautiful setting of the canticles which long has been an honoured classic in English church music.

After the third collect three anthems were sung, all, of course, by Gibbons—'Hosanna to the Son of David,' (six voices), 'This is the record of John,' for tenor solo (Mr. Frederick Norcup) and chorus—in which the strings, as representing the viols of the original score, had a most beautiful effect)—and 'O clap your hands together, all ye people' (eight voices, unaccompanied).

The sermon was preached by the Dean of Westminster (the Very Rev. Dr. J. Armitage Robinson), who took for his text Psalm xlvii, vv. 1 and 2: 'O sing unto God with the voice of melody: for the Lord is high, and to be feared.' The following extracts from the Dean's discourse, one fully worthy of the occasion, are taken from the report in The Guardian by the courtesy of the Editor of that journal.

'One of the peculiar glories of the English Church is our Cathedral music. The 16th century in this, as in other respects, was the dawn of a new era. Two special causes occasioned a fresh departure in sacred music. One was the rendering of our ancient Latin services into the English tongue, and their adaptation to congregational as contrasted with monastic use. The other was the drastic re-casting of the establishments of several of the old Cathedrals which had been monastic churches, and the foundation of six new Cathedrals in the place of suppressed Abbeys. Of these last Westminster for a brief ten years was one. When the Abbot and monks were transformed into the Dean and Prebendaries, a choir was constituted of Minor Canons, lay-clerks, and choristers, after the manner of the old Cathedrals. We cannot easily realize what musical arrangements were displaced by the new system. We know that already previously the singing-boys were a distinct group from the grammar-boys, who now became the scholars of the Cathedral School: and it appears also that for men's voices the monks had long looked beyond the limits of their own body. We have a list in 1399 of eight "secular chanters" receiving annual payments and livery. Among them we have the name of Robert Tyes as organist, and when we remember, as we must to-day, how music has run in families, it is a fair conjecture to suppose that he may have been an ancestor of Christopher Tye, who was born a hundred years later. The Bohemian pilgrims in 1467 tell how the Abbot brought them into the choir, where they heard the most excellent choir-singing, "lovely to listen to." Fifty years later, in Abbot Islip's time, there were two separate organs—in the choir and in the Jesus Chapel.

'We have no cause, therefore, to be ashamed of our musical traditions. But it is certain that the new system gave a fresh impetus to the music of worship. When under Queen Elizabeth the Dean and Prebendaries were restored, and the Church became as it is to-day—no longer Cathedral, but collegiate and independent—the English services came back, and the task of their musical interpretation devolved on the choir of this as of other great churches throughout the land. We still possess a copy of John Day's service-book, printed in 1565, and entitled "Mornyng and Euenyng prayer and Communion, set fourthe in foure partes, to be sung in churches, both for men and children, wyth dyuers other godly prayers and anthems, of sundry mens doynges." And two names of the Elizabethan period must be honoured here. From 1584 to 1586 William Camden, who published his "Britannia" in the last of these years, was singing as a lay-clerk in our choir. In that year also his friend, William Heather, who founded the music-lecture at Oxford, came to sing by his side, and continued in the choir for the next eighteen years.* A little earlier, in 1583, Orlando Gibbons was born. I will not repeat the outline of his life, nor dwell on his friendship with the two distinguished men whom I have named in later years. When at the age of forty he became our organist he was already at the height of his powers. . . .

* A tenor singer of the same name, Mr. Alfred Heather, is one of the lay-vicars of Westminster Abbey at the present time.—[Ed. M. T.].

'In 1623, when Gibbons came to us, John Williams, Bishop of Lincoln, and Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, was our Dean, and William Laud, his life-long rival, was one of the Prebendaries. Dean Williams was passionately devoted to the music of the Abbey, and did much to improve the choir, never resting till he had housed all its members within the precincts or in the immediate neighbourhood. It is tempting to linger on a name which receives scant justice from our Church historians. I content myself with a scene in this church in which he and his organist take the prominent parts. It is described by Bishop Hacket, of Lichfield, who had been his devoted Chaplain, and was probably present on the occasion in December, 1624. King James had received at Cambridge the French Ambassadors who came to treat of the marriage of his son Charles to the Princess Henrietta Maria. He sent them on to Williams to entertain them on their Christmas Day, which fell ten days sooner than ours. The Lord Keeper had with a wise foresight procured the translation of our prayer-book into French as the best answer to the falsehoods current in France as to our mode of worship. Before feasting the Ambassadors in the Jerusalem Chamber he received them in this church, as Hacket proceeds to describe :

> The Embassadors, with the Nobles and Gentlemen in their Company, were brought in at the North-gate of the Abby, which was stuck with Flambeaux everywhere, both within and without the Quire, that strangers might cast their Eyes upon the stateliness of the Church. At the Door of the Quire the Lord Keeper besought their Lordships to go in, and to take their seats there for a while, promising in the Word of a Bishop that nothing of ill Rellish should be offered before them; which they accepted; and at their Entrance the Organ was touch'd by the best Finger of that Age, Mr. Orlando Gibbons. While a Verse was plaid, the Lord Keeper presented the Embassadors and the rest of the Noblest Quality of their Nation with our Liturgy, as it spake to them in their own Language ; and in the Delivery of it used those few Words, but pithy, That their Lordships at Leisure might Read in that Book in what Form of Holiness our Prince worshipp'd God ; wherein he durst say nothing savour'd of any Corruption of Doctrine, much less of Heresie ; which he hoped would be so reported to the Lady Princess Henrietta. The Lord Embassadors and their Great Train took up all the Stalls, where they continued about half an hour, while the Quiremen, vested in their Rich Copes, with their Choristers, sang three several Anthems with most exquisite Voices before them.

'It is not for me to praise the music of Gibbons. It speaks to you to-day for itself. Let me remind you that he was a man of character, so far as our evidence extends, vir integerrimus—one of those of whom we may hopefully say :

Whatever record leap to light,
He never shall be shamed.

His music has been spoken of as "true and sincere"; his life is described on his monument as "the sweetest harmony." The epithets in either case are transposed, from morals to music, and from music to morals. No shadow darkens his personality, no suspicion detracts from the elevating influence of his art. We are proud to commemorate here his unsullied fame ; and we thank God for his genius, and for its consecration to the noblest ends.'

Immediately after the sermon came one of the most interesting features of the Commemoration. A procession was formed, in which were included the Princess Christian, the Dean, the clergy, organist and assistant-organist of Westminster Abbey, the eight invited distinguished musicians, together with the officers and some members of the Worshipful Company of Musicians. Proceeding to the North Choir Aisle this distinguished company witnessed the unveiling, by Princess Christian, of the bust of Orlando Gibbons—a replica, by Mr. A. G. Walker, in black marble, of that in the monument of the composer in Canterbury Cathedral, where he, having died at Canterbury, was buried in 1625. This replica-bust (of which a photograph is given on p. 469) is the gift of Mr. C. T. D. Crews, a Past-Master of the Musicians' Company, who begged to present it to the Abbey on behalf of the Worshipful Company of Musicians ; to this the Dean made a brief reply, accepting the bust on behalf of himself and the Chapter. Then all the distinguished musicians present filed past the bust. The bust has found an appropriate resting-place just below where the organ stood when Gibbons was organist, and in close proximity to the monuments of Blow, Purcell and Croft, three distinguished successors of Gibbons in the organistship of the Abbey. While the unveiling ceremony was in progress, the orchestra, under the baton of Mr. Ernest Ford, played a Fantasie by Gibbons.

Thereupon followed the singing of four more compositions of the great composer who had thus further been honoured in his own cathedral—the anthems 'Blessed be the Lord God of Israel' (four voices), 'O God, the King of Glory' (five voices, and edited by Dr. Armes from some part-books at Durham Cathedral), sung to the accompaniment of strings and organ, 'O Lord, I lift my heart to Thee' (a hymn for men's voices), and 'Lift up your heads' (six voices).

The remaining prayers of Evensong having been read by the Precentor, the hymn 'O, all you creatures of the Lord,' from Wither's 'Hymnes and Songs of the Church' (1623), was sung to the original form of the tune by Gibbons, now known as 'Angels' or 'Angels' Hymn.' During the singing of this hymn, which was accompanied by band and organ, a collection was made in aid of the National Association for the establishment of Sanatoria for workers suffering from tuberculosis ; as all the expenses of the Commemoration were generously borne by Mr. Crews, the donor of the replica-bust, the entire proceeds of the offertory were devoted to the above benevolent project, in which the Princess Christian takes a very warm and practical interest. It should be added that the seventh verse of the hymn was sung in unison to varied harmonies specially written by Dr. Alcock, in which he ingeniously and effectively introduced, on the tuba stop, notes in canon with the tune. The first four lines of the last verse were sung as an unaccompanied quartet, the band, organ and full chorus entering with thrilling effect at the words

Bless you the Lord, Him praise, adore,
And magnify Him evermore.

The Amen, following the Benediction pronounced by the Dean from the altar in the far distance, was sung first to the plagal cadence and then to the Amen from Gibbons's anthem 'O Thou, the central orb.' For the concluding voluntary Dr. Alcock repeated the Fantazia he had previously played. As this Commemoration of Orlando Gibbons—held on the 282nd anniversary of the composer's death—took the form of a service, criticism of the rendering of the music would be out of place ; but this may be said, that the music itself and the interpretation thereof greatly impressed the large congregation assembled within the Abbey walls on this Commemoration occasion.

In conclusion : Carlyle says, 'Great men, taken up in any way, are profitable company.' As one exchanged the tranquillity of Westminster's glorious pile for the busy streets around it, one could not help feeling that a refreshing hour had been spent in the profitable company, through the medium of his noble church music, of a great man—the genius-endowed musician who bore the honoured name of Orlando Gibbons.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

At the eighth and last meeting of the present session, held on June 18, Dr. H. A. Harding read a thoughtful paper on 'The position of Johannes Brahms among the masters of music.'

Dr. Harding prefaced his remarks by saying that he did not intend to enter upon so controversial a matter as the comparative excellence of Brahms's music. What Brahms did or tried to do, the nature of his artistic aim and mission, was to be the main theme of his remarks. In the lecturer's opinion, Brahms was a pioneer, therefore opposition to him was inevitable and not surprising. If this view were more fully recognized, he believed the popularity of Brahms would be more widely spread. The prestige of novelty would attract the lighter sort of musical amateurs; interpreters of Brahms's music would study it more, and obtain a firmer grasp of its spiritual and intellectual content. He believed that inadequacy of interpretation was one great cause why Brahms had not yet come into his own. Conductors and performers had neither the opportunities nor the incentive to cultivate an appreciation of any further development of musical design than that enunciated by Beethoven. They had exploited the Romantic School with superlative efforts, but (with few exceptions) had not proved themselves to possess such a power of expression and interpretation—such an insight into the possibilities of the development of organic design combined with the spirit of romanticism—as were demanded for the exposition of Brahms's works. In Brahms had been presented a most difficult problem, the unmistakable combination of two apparently antagonistic elements, the classical and the romantic: it was not surprising that so few performers realized the true nature of Brahms's message to the world of music.

There were other causes for Brahms's non-popularity. His music did not give much opportunity to performers or conductors for the exhibition of their own personality. Pianists successful with Schumann and Chopin failed with Brahms (as they did with Beethoven) through lack of self-abnegation. To effects of orchestral colour, which at the present day fascinated musical amateurs to an undue extent, Brahms had not devoted any special attention. The ordinary amateur's taste had been vitiated by the meretricious charms of 'programme music,' which (in spite of Professor Niecks's paradox) Brahms shunned writing. Lastly, there was apparent in some quarters a Pharisaism of attitude on the part of the more exclusive votaries of Brahms, a pose of intellectuality, by which many were repelled.

In answer to the question, 'Is a fusion of the Classical and Romantic styles possible?' Dr. Harding said, 'The latter has for some time been predominant; the former has lain dormant (but for Brahms) since Beethoven. The Romantic school, however, seems to be "running to seed." Possibly the new tonal system of Debussy and Max Reger has a future before it, and presages an important phase in the evolution of music. The present system of key-tonality however, is very firmly established, and it is to be hoped that in the "music of the future" beauty of design and warmth of expression will be found as the fundamental qualities.' These two virtues, in Dr. Harding's opinion, Brahms has shown to be capable of being combined, and the wider study and more comprehensive interpretation of his works will save the art of music from the débâcle of romanticism.

Dr. Harding then passed to a consideration of Brahms's earlier pianoforte works; which, he said, had suffered from conventional criticism, and, though hailed with enthusiasm by Schumann, had been somewhat disparaged even by Brahms's most enthusiastic admirers. The compositions anterior to the D major Serenade (Op. 11) deserved to be regarded as something more than immature essays in romanticism 'disfigured by structural defects,' 'steeped in Schumann,' &c. Schumann himself laid stress on the novel character of those works; to him Brahms was the genius who should 'direct the art into new paths.' Schumann himself attempted in the Pianoforte sonatas Op. 11 and 22 to adapt romantic ideas to classical form, not with great success. Was it not significant that this was precisely the success he found attained by Brahms, and greeted so rapturously?

Dr. Harding concluded his discourse by giving a detailed analysis of Brahms's Pianoforte sonatas Op. 1, 2, and 5, several movements from which were played by Dr. Markham Lee. Dr. Yorke Trotter occupied the chair, and several members of the audience took part in the discussion.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music:—The Charles Rube Prize (string quartet playing) to Samuel Robinson (first violin), Raymond Jeremy (second violin), Eric Coates (viola) and Edgar Fawcett (violoncello); the Melba Prize (sopranos) to Clara Smith (of Stratford-on-Avon); the Melba Prize (contraltos) to Edith Kirk (of Leicester).

THE OPERA.

The most memorable night in the past month at Covent Garden was the gala performance on June 11 in honour of the visit to England of the King and Queen of Denmark. As usual on such occasions, the house was converted into a floral bower, some 250,000 roses being woven into the green foliage which completely hid the fronts of the boxes and the proscenium arch; and when the Royal party had assembled, and the entire audience faced them while the National anthems of Denmark and England were played the scene was one of the utmost brilliancy. The performance commenced with a much shortened version of the first act of 'Madama Butterfly,' in which appeared Mesdames Destinn and Lejeune, and Messrs. Caruso, Scotti and Zucchi. This was succeeded by the opening scene of 'La Bohème,' carried out by Madame Melba and Messrs. Caruso, Scotti, Sammarco, Marcoux, Gilibert and Gianoli. Both these excerpts were conducted by Mr. Campanini, but afterwards the baton was taken up by Dr. Richter (for the first time at a gala performance), who directed selections from the last two scenes of 'Die Meistersinger.' As these only occupied thirty-five minutes, there was almost more left out than there was performed, one of the most notable excisions being the part of the Beckmesser; but that which remained was excellently interpreted by Mesdames Hempel and Tolli, who severally appeared as Eva and Magdalene, whilst Messrs. Van Rooy, Griswold, Jörn and Bechstein respectively impersonated Hans Sachs, Pogner, Walther and David.

Concerning other performances recently given, 'La Traviata' was presented on May 25, in dresses fashioned after the mode of 1850, instead of, as formerly, those of the 18th and sundry other centuries. The principal parts were sustained by Madame Donalda and Messrs. Caruso and Scotti. A remarkably fine performance of 'Aïda' took place on May 29, the cast including Mesdames Destinn, Kirkby Lunn and Messrs. Caruso, Journet, Marcoux and Scotti. 'Der Fliegender Holländer' was added to the season's repertory on June 1, Mr. Van Rooy sustaining the name-part, Mr. Griswold appearing as Daland and Miss Destinn giving an admirable reading of the romantic-minded and altruistic heroine. Miss Hempel appeared as Elsa in 'Lohengrin' on June 3, and sang with much sympathetic charm, Mr. Knote was an experienced but hard-voiced Lohengrin, and Madame Kirkby Lunn and Messrs. Griswold and Whitehill completed the cast. The greatest distinction was gained by the three last-named artists—British singers, be it noted.

While speaking of the success of native vocalists, it should be mentioned that Madame Nicholls sang as Venus in 'Tannhäuser' on May 28, and Miss Gleeson-White impersonated the same character on June 5; on the latter occasion the song of the Shepherd was charmingly sung by Miss Caroline Hatchard. Miss Gleeson-White also impersonated Lola in the performance of 'Cavalleria Rusticana' on June 8, when three new singers made their first appearance in London. Of these Miss Scaler appeared as Santuzza and Mr. Wheatley as Turiddu. The former has a powerful soprano voice but a somewhat hard style, and Mr. Wheatley seemed to have scarcely sufficient vocal power for so large a house. Greater success was gained the same evening by the third of the new-comers, Mr. Bassi, who as Canio in 'Pagliacci' proved his possession of a tenor voice of musical quality and a vivacious temperament. Concerning the other members of the cast, Miss Destinn gave a remarkably fine impersonation of the flighty heroine, Nedda, while Mr. Sammarco sang with notable dramatic emphasis as the revengeful clown. Madame Giachetti made her rentrée in the title-part of 'La Tosca' on June 13, and, supported by Mr. Caruso as the tortured hero, and Mr. Scotti as the melodramatic villain, Scarpia, gave an interpretation of the lurid work that has never been surpassed in realism at Covent Garden.

'Faust' was mounted for the first time this season on June 14, Madame Donalda singing sympathetically as Marguerite, Mr. Carpi, as Faust, being moderately successful, M. Journet being good-naturedly sardonic as Mephistopheles, and Mr. Sammarco emphatically dramatic as Valentine. The performance was conducted by Mr. Percy Pitt for the first time in his capacity of musical director.

Verdi's 'Rigoletto' was mounted on June 17, with Miss Selma Kurz as the unfortunate heroine Gilda, and Madame de Cisneros as the wicked Maddalena, both ladies sustaining their several reputations. Mr. Bassi appeared as the amorous Duke, but with only moderate success. Mr. Sammarco gave a very fine embodiment of the jester, and Mr. Panizza, who conducted, secured an excellent ensemble.

An interesting event was the revival, on June 20, of Amilcare Ponchielli's four-act opera 'La Gioconda,' originally produced at La Scala, Milan, on April 8, 1876, and first mounted at Covent Garden on May 31, 1883. The libretto, based by Arrigo Boïto on Victor Hugo's 'Angelo,' is a melodrama of the most pronounced type. The music, is remarkable for fine, broad melodies, gay and rhythmic measures, and picturesque orchestration, while as a spectacle the scenes, as mounted at Covent Garden, surpass in brilliancy those of 'Aïda.' The opera was greatly favoured by its exponents. Mesdames Destinn and Kirkby Lunn gave ideal embodiments of Gioconda and her rival Laura, and although, vocally, Mr. Bassi was scarcely equal to the demands of the hero's music, he acted admirably, and Mr. Sammarco and Mr. Journet were quite as realistic as could be desired respectively as the unamiable spy of the Inquisition and Alvise, who arranges a ball to take place while he poisons his wife. The choruses were rendered with great verve, and the orchestra played with notable crispness and finish, under the direction of Mr. Campanini.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

A genial programme, largely composed of open-air music and unspoiled by novelties of cacophonous complexity, wound up the ninty-fifth season of the Society's operations. The concert—held on May 30 at Queen's Hall—began with Dr. Cowen's fanciful overture 'The butterfly's ball,' and concluded with Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony. If the former work is entomological, the latter (in its slow movement) is ornithological in character, but both are logical from a musical point of view, and, what is more to the point, they are delightful to listen to.

Between this pair of purely orchestral pieces, two beautiful concertos were performed — for the pianoforte composed by Edvard Grieg, and the violin by Felix Mendelssohn. In both works the soloists were artists of the highest rank, Miss Johanne Stockmarr and Lady Hallé. The absolute refinement, poetic insight, and perfect technique which characterized the performances of these two ladies call for unqualified praise. Lady Hallé met with, as she deserved, a specially cordial reception. The vocalist was M. Georges Mauguière, who sang (in French) the spring-song from 'Die Walküre,' and, to the pianoforte accompaniment of Mr. Raphael Roche, César Franck's 'Mariage des Roses.' Dr. Cowen can be congratulated upon a successful season regarded from a musical standpoint, and the orchestra under his baton has worthily maintained the best traditions of the Philharmonic Society.

'ELIJAH' AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

The performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on the great Handel Orchestra at the Crystal Palace on June 15 not only worthily commemorated the sixtieth anniversary of the production of the work in its present form—at Exeter Hall, on April 16, 1847—but it was one of the best interpretations that have been given under these conditions. Dr. Cowen had the entire confidence of the vast number of choristers who took part in the performance, and they followed his gestures and indications with a quick understanding that resulted in many thrilling effects. The 'Baal' choruses were in particular given with most dramatic impressiveness, and the huge audience will surely long remember the magnificent rendering of 'Thanks be to God,' delivered with superb precision and a volume of tone well-nigh overwhelming. Great interest centred in Mr. Santley's embodiment of the Prophet, and the veteran baritone sang with wonderful verve and remarkable vocal skill, affording to students present a splendid lesson in phrasing and dramatic emphasis. Madame Agnes Nicholls also was most successful in her interpretation of the soprano solos; Madame Ada Crossley gave excellent renderings of the principal contralto airs, and Mr. Ben Davies sang with his usual fervour. The second quartet consisted of Miss Edith Evans, Miss May Peters, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Charles Knowles. The London Symphony Orchestra gave all necessary support to the solo pieces, and Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock at the great organ rendered valuable assistance.

MADRIGAL MUSIC-MAKINGS.

THE GENTLEMEN AND CHILDREN OF THE CHAPELS ROYAL.

Amid the pleasant surroundings of the splendid picture-gallery of Bridgewater House, St. James's, the Gentlemen and Children of His Majesty's Chapels Royal gave their eleventh concert on May 31. The programme—entirely vocal, but none the less welcome on that account—included the following concerted pieces:

Ballet	Now is the month of maying	Morley.
Madrigal	The silver swan	Gibbons.
Glee	When Allen-a-Dale went a-hunting	Pearsall.
Madrigal (men's voices)	This pleasant month of May	Beale.
Part-song	Phillis the fair	Walter Alcock.
Chorus (with solo)	When the foeman bares his steel ('Pirates of Penzance')	Sullivan.
	Solo—Mr. W. H. Brereton.
Glee (men's voices)	All hail, thou lovely queen of night	G. W. Martin.
Part-songs	(a) Golden days return (b) Sweet Echo	Walter Alcock.
	Sung by the Children.
Ballet	Dainty fine, sweet nymph	Morley.

In addition to 'How sweet is summer morning' (Smart) and 'When for the world's repose' (Prendergast), which were sung by solo voices, solos were contributed by the following 'Gentlemen': Mr. Walter Ivimey (who gave an excellent rendering of the Prologue to 'Pagliacci'), Mr. James Gawthrop, Mr. Sutton Shepley and Mr. Harold Wilde. The 'Children' who sang solos were Master S. B. E. Cutler, Master D. A. R. Rawlings (the possessor of a sweet little voice) and Master S. W. Thorogood. Dr. Walter Alcock, organist, choirmaster and composer of His Majesty's Chapels Royal, efficiently conducted an enjoyable afternoon's music.

THE MAGPIE MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

'A rich feast of song'—such a description can in very truth be applied to the concert of the Magpie Madrigal Society, given at the Royal College of Music on June 5. The programme was so interesting in its variety that it may be given in full, so far as its choral portion is concerned:

Chanson (four parts)	Je vois des glissantes eaux	Guillaume Costeley.
Madrigal (5 parts)	Scaldava il sol	Luca Marenzio.
Madrigal (6 parts)	Quando dal terzo cielo	Palestrina.
Madrigal (8 parts)	Dispiegate, guancie, amate	Peter Philips.
Madrigal (6 parts)	Fair Orian	John Milton.
Madrigal (5 parts)	Weep, O mine eyes	John Wilbye.
Ballad (4 parts)	When old King Cole	R. L. de Pearsall.
Choral Song (4 parts)	God and the universe	C. V. Stanford.
Part-song (4 parts)	Since thou, O fondest	C. H. H. Parry.
Part-song (4 parts)	To musick	Arthur M. Goodhart.
Part-song (4 parts)	I loved a lass	W. H. Bell.
Part-song (4 parts)	Sweet and low	Gustav von Holst.
	(For female voices.)
Part-songs	Es tönt ein voller Harfenklang Komm herbei Tod! Wein' an den Felsen	(Op. 17) Brahms.
	(For female voices, with harp and horn accompaniment.)
Motettes	Es ist das Heil uns kommen her Schaffe in mir, Gott, ein rein Herz!	(Op. 26) Brahms.

The Magpie Madrigal Society has made an established reputation under Mr. Lionel Benson's able direction, and there is no need to enlarge upon the excellent results obtained at this concert. The soloists—Miss Beatrice Harrison (violoncello) and Mr. Francis Harford (vocalist) gave pleasant variety to this Magpie madrigal music-making. Mr. Henry R. Bird accompanied perfectly.

THE ORIANA MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

An enjoyable evening of unaccompanied vocal music was provided by the Oriana Madrigal Society at Portman Rooms on June 11, under the direction of Mr. C. Kennedy Scott.

The selection included the madrigals 'All creatures now' (Benet), 'What is our life?' (Gibbons), 'Lo, countrie sports' and 'As Vesta was descending' (Weelkes), 'Flora gave me fairest flowers' (Wilbye), and 'Sister, awake' (Bateson), in addition to 'Mother, I will have a husband,' one of the 'songs of five voyces' composed by Thomas Vautor, a little-known English composer who lived early in the 17th century. Thomas Morley's ballet 'Those dainty daffodils,' Dowland's ayres 'Me, me, and none but me' and 'Awake, sweet love,' Ravenscroft's four-part song, with tenor solo, 'Willy, prithee go to bed,' and 'It was the frog in the well' (a popular song for soprano solo and chorus) also were included in this interesting programme. Some rounds—including 'Great Tom is cast' (Henry Lawes), for men's voices, and Byrd's Canon 3 in 1, for female voices, 'Hey ho, to the greenwood'—added lightness and variety to the programme. The singing of the choir was characterized by good attack and rhythmic vigour, though the subtle refinements of madrigal singing have yet to be mastered by these enthusiastic madrigalists. The soloists were Miss Cordelia Grylls and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint.

THE EAST-END AT THE WEST-END.

The excellent work of the Oxford House Choral Society (composed entirely of residents in the East-End) and the Oxford House Orchestra has more than once been commended and commented upon in The Musical Times. In order to show West-enders what they can do, these enthusiastic Bethnal-Greenites annually invade the West-end of this 'smoky-nest.' At Queen's Hall, on June 6, they performed a capital programme, which included one of the most beautiful of all Brahms's compositions, 'The song of destiny,' Elgar's 'Spanish serenade' and Eaton Faning's 'Daybreak'; while the orchestra played the overtures 'Euryanthe' and 'Ruy Blas' and Wormser's 'L'enfant prodigue' suite. The Excelsior Boys' Choir, composed of London County Council Schools of Bethnal Green, sang Arne's 'Blow, blow, thou winter wind' and Morley's 'It was a lover and his lass' in capital style. Praiseworthy, indeed, was the interpretation of the programme from beginning to end, and the conductor, Mr. Cuthbert Kelly, and his music-loving colleagues are to be warmly congratulated on their achievements. The soloists were Madame Louise Dale, Mr. Frederic Austin and Mr. Gervase Elwes.

The Bishop of London, a former Head of Oxford House, made a short speech during the interval, in which he referred to the work of the Oxford House Musical and Dramatic Association, saying that it was formed in 1898 for the purpose of providing the people of Bethnal Green, one of the poorest and most populous districts of East London, with musical and other entertainments. The Bishop referred to the appreciation shown by the people in Bethnal Green for the concerts provided by the Society, and to their detestation of low-class entertainments. The Society, he said, most satisfactorily answered the question, 'Can good music be provided by the people themselves?' The excellent work of the Oxford House Musical and Dramatic Association formed the main feature of an article on 'Music for the people' which appeared in The Musical Times of January, 1904. May all success continue to attend this beneficent enterprise.

GIRLS' PUBLIC DAY SCHOOL PRIZE-GIVING.

The Albert Hall was thronged on the afternoon of June 14, when H.R.H. Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, distributed the prizes to the girls of the London high schools belonging to the Girls' Public Day School Trust. On the orchestra were ranged the choir, supported by a string band led by Miss E. Gwynne Kimpton, and conducted by Dr. Harford Lloyd, of Eton College, with Mr. H. L. Balfour at the organ.

Except for a short rehearsal immediately preceding the concert, the choirs and orchestras from the various schools had had no opportunity of practising together, but the pieces, both vocal and instrumental, went perfectly smoothly. In the numbers for full chorus, such as 'The men of Harlech' and 'Auld lang syne,' wherein the girls in the arena joined with those on the platform, the body of sound was very massive and inspiriting, and in the unison and two-part songs for the choir alone some very pleasing effects were obtained. The jolly old song, 'Good-morrow, Gossip Joan,' was sung with infectious humour, and with due attention to the rippling scale-passages, which stood out with wonderful clearness for so huge a choir. 'O mistress mine' also was charmingly rendered. The singing throughout showed a great advance upon that of former years, pointing to the fact that the subject is receiving much more attention in the schools than hitherto, although, curiously enough, vocal music is not once adverted to in the handsome volume containing the history of the schools that was provided for the occasion.

Sir W. Bousfield, chairman of the council, moved a vote of thanks to the Princess Louise, which was responded to by the Duke of Argyll, who called attention to the fact that it was the first time they had had an orchestra at those gatherings, and complimented the young players upon their successful performance under the able leadership of Dr. Harford Lloyd.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL CHOIR.

Three concerts and a choral competition were arranged for by the Council of the London Sunday School Choir at their thirty-fifth annual festival, held at the Crystal Palace, on June 19. The juniors, five thousand strong, conducted by Mr. J. Wellard Mathews, led the way.

The second concert, given by the Festival Choir and Orchestra, was a complete success. The conductor, Mr. William Whiteman, had his singers well under control, and obtained from them an excellent reading of a programme of varied interest. The selection of music showed a decided advance upon that of recent years, and the choir, rising to the occasion, displayed much enthusiasm and intelligence in their renderings.

The principal vocal pieces were 'Judge me, O God' (Mendelssohn), 'O sing to God' (Gounod), 'Methinks I hear the full celestial choir' (Crotch), 'Blessed be the God and Father' (S. S. Wesley), 'Lead, Kindly Light' (Pughe-Evans), 'Then round about the starry throne' (Handel), 'The sun now mounts' (Gade), 'Evening' (Leslie), 'Haste thee, Nymphs' and 'Wretched lovers' (Handel). Mr. Horace G. Holmes rendered valuable assistance at the organ. In addition to playing the accompaniments, the London Sunday School Orchestra, augmented by the Crystal Palace Military Band, played several pieces, conducted by Mr. Wesley Hammet.

At the choral competition in the theatre during the afternoon the Willesden District Choir, conducted by Mr. J. S. Waddell, were awarded first place and the Founders' Shield for the fourth time in succession at these gatherings. Their chosen piece was 'I can but love thee' (Cornelius), and the set piece John E. West's 'Love and summer.' The adjudicator was Mr. Josiah Booth. Under the able management of Mr. J. Barnard, the whole arrangements of the day were carried through most satisfactorily.

'THE KINGDOM' AT CAMBRIDGE.

A festival service was held in King's College Chapel, Cambridge, on the afternoon of June 11, when Sir Edward Elgar's 'The Kingdom' was performed. The glorious building in which the oratorio was given enhanced the mystical character of the music in a very remarkable degree; indeed, no better environment could be found for the presentation of a work that so assimilates with the manifold beauties of King's College Chapel.

The choruses were well sung by a choir of about 200 voices, excellent in tone and expression, and the accompaniments were played by the London Symphony Orchestra. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss M. Yelland, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, the first and last named especially distinguishing themselves in the parts of the Blessed Virgin and St. Peter. Dr. E. W. Naylor was at the organ. Dr. A. H. Mann, organist of King's College conducted a very impressive performance, and is to be heartily congratulated on the results of his careful preparation of the oratorio. The attendance was so large that the accommodation of the spacious building was taxed to the utmost. Among the audience was Sir Edward Elgar, who expressed himself as having been delighted with the performance.

London Concerts.

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

The Committee of the Joachim concerts and those who attend the performances given by the Joachim Quartet have suffered a two-fold disappointment—first by the postponement of the concerts owing to the illness of Dr. Joachim, in Vienna, and again by the absence, from the same regrettable cause, of the eminent leader of the Quartet. At Dr. Joachim's request, however, the concerts are being given, with Prof. Carl Halir as first violin; Herr Klinger, second violin; Prof. Emmanuel Wirth, viola; and Prof. Robert Hausmann, violoncello.

The first concert took place on June 17, at Bechstein Hall, when excellent performances were given of Haydn's Quartet in D minor (Op. 76, No. 2); Mozart's Divertimento in E flat (Köchel, No. 563) for violin, viola, and violoncello; and Beethoven's Quartet in C (Op. 59, No. 3). These works were played with all due significance, and their renderings upheld the fine classical traditions associated with Dr. Joachim and his artistic colleagues. At the second concert—Queen's Hall, June 19—string quartets gave place to Mozart's splendid Serenade in C minor (Köchel, No. 388) for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons, Schumann's ever-welcome Pianoforte quintet in E flat (Op. 44), and Beethoven's genial Septet. The octet of players, a perfect ensemble, in the Serenade were Messrs. W. M. Malsch and E. W. Davies (oboes), M. Gomez and G. Anderson (clarinets), E. F. James and Wilfred James (bassoons), A. Borsdorf and H. Vandermeerschen (horns). Miss Fanny Davies was an ideal pianist in the Schumann quintet, her associates being Prof. Halir and his colleagues. The performers in the Septet—one of those delightful works that are so refreshing in their melodic simplicity—were Messrs. Halir, Wirth, Borsdorf, Gomez, E. F. James, Hausmann and C. H. Winterbottom. Thus concluded a pleasant afternoon's music.

Mr. Thomas Dunhill is to be warmly commended for his scheme of chamber concerts given at Queen's (small) Hall, for the programmes made generous recognition of living British composers. At the first of these, on June 7, the opening work was Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's Sextet No. 2 (Op. 32), written In memoriam the late Frederick Westlake, the well-known professor of the pianoforte at the Royal Academy of Music. This work consists of three movements, the most significant of which is a central elegie instinct with sincere feeling. The first movement has an expressive principal theme, and contains several impressive passages, but in its entirety is not so coherent as could be desired. The finale is a lively rondo of somewhat conventional character. The work was played in spirited fashion, with Mr. Holbrooke at the pianoforte, and the Saunders Quartet, assisted by Mr. G. Yates. Three tasteful and effective pianoforte pieces—severally entitled Intermezzo, Prelude, and Caprice — were admirably played by their composer, Mr. James Friskin; and a sympathetic setting, by Mr. Cecil Forsyth, of Rossetti's poem 'Remember me,' was charmingly sung by Miss Phyllis Lett. The programme concluded with Dvořák's Pianoforte quintet in A (Op. 81), played by Mr. Thomas Dunhill and the Saunders Quartet.

The second concert, on June 14, commenced with Mr. Frank Bridge's 'Three Idylls' for string quartet, which well-deserve the favour of chamber music players. They were admirably rendered by the Grimson Quartet, which, assisted by Mr. Thomas Dunhill at the pianoforte, also gave an effective interpretation of that gentleman's Quintet in C minor (Op. 20). Songs (from Op. 89 and Op. 109) by Mr. Algernon Ashton were sung by Madame Lilly Saint-George, and mention is also due of a 'Celtic song-cycle,' by Mr. Arnold Bax, entrusted to Miss Ethel Lister.

The programme for the concert on June 21 included Mr. York Bowen's Sonata for two pianofortes, Mr. R. H. Walthew's Pianoforte quartet in G minor, Mr. B. J. Dale's Pianoforte sonata in D minor, and vocal duets by Dr. Vaughan Williams.

Mr. Joseph Holbrooke gave his second chamber concert at the Salle Erard on June 14, and, as on previous occasions, introduced new and little known works by British composers. The first performance was given of two short quartets, composed by Mr. Joseph Speaight, respectively named 'Puck' (Fantasy) and 'Poem,' the former realistic and the latter poetical in conception, and both worthy of the attention of amateurs. The first performance in London was heard of Mr. Holbrooke's Pianoforte quintet No. 2 (Op. 46). According to the programme, this was written in 1903, and therefore can scarcely be taken as the composer's latest word in chamber music. The most important movement is the first, built up with significant themes, but developed at too great length. The second number, an Allegretto scherzando, is bright, vigorous and terse, and encloses an Adagio section that provides a good contrast. This is succeeded by a vivacious waltz of genial character. The finale, in rondo form, is a vigorous example of its class. The interpreters were the composer and Messrs. John Saunders, Charles Woodhouse, Ernest Yonge and Jean Preuveneers. The programme also contained Mr. Richard Walthew's pleasing Pianoforte trio in G, No. 4, in the performance of which the composer took part at the pianoforte, and Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's 'Fantasie' (Op. 17) for string quartet. Amongst numerous songs, sung by Miss Ruth Pine and Mr. Howard Goodchild, mention may be made of 'A wild rose,' by Mr. Holbrooke, 'First loss,' by Mr. Algernon Ashton, and 'The rebel,' by Mr. William Wallace.

An interesting feature of the concert given by the Walenn Quartet on June 20 at the Æolian Hall was the performance for the first time in London of Mr. Glazounow's Suite in C (Op. 35). It is a composition in five movements, the first of which consists of an Introduction of mystical character, Andante, leading into a well-developed fugue, Allegro moderato. The second number, a Scherzo in E, furnishes a lively contrast to what has gone before, the writing being extremely vivacious. It is succeeded by an Andante headed 'Orientale,' which exhibits the composer's Eastern proclivities in a marked manner. The fourth movement is an original theme and five variations, each of which possesses distinctive character. The last number of the Suite is a waltz, having for its chief melody an alluring theme, effectively contrasted by other sections, and treated in a most musicianly manner. The Suite was excellently rendered, and heartily applauded by a numerous audience that included the composer.

Mr. James Henry Peter, associated with Miss Irene Penso, violinist, and Mr. Paul Ludwig, violoncellist, concluded their recent interesting series of chamber concerts at Steinway Hall on June 4, when the chief feature of the evening was Benjamin Godard's 'Movements' (Op. 72), a pianoforte trio consisting of an Allegro moderato, Adagio, and Vivace, somewhat erratic in design, but possessing character. The vocalist was Miss Lucia Fydell.

The Cathie String Quartet held its second evening at Steinway Hall on June 11, when the first performance in England was given of a well-written Pianoforte quintet (Op. 13), by Anton Rückauf, the keyboard instrument being played by Mr. Arthur Newstead. An excellent interpretation also was secured of Smetana's String quartet in E minor, 'Aus meinem Leben.' Very pleasing variety was contributed by the singing of Miss Zélie Delsart.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

The directors of the London Choral Society, as a mark of their appreciation of the good work done by Mr. Arthur Fagge, the conductor of this body, arranged a concert for his benefit at Queen's Hall on June 22, when Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' was performed with the solo parts sung by Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies. There was a large audience, and the choral singing under Mr. Fagge's guidance certainly justified the action of the directors. The 'Demon' chorus has been given with greater significance, but in its entirety the interpretation was impressive and made prominent the best features of the work.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Mr. Paderewski made his reappearance in London, after an absence of five years, on June 18, at Queen's Hall. The renowned pianist was enthusiastically received by an immense audience, and at the close of the recital the enchanted listeners refused to depart until they had exacted six extra pieces from the Polish pianist, and this after listening to him for over two hours! Mr. Paderewski commenced with his own Variations and fugue on an original theme (Op. 23), the performance of which was a wonderful display of virtuosity, but the piece itself possessed little musical interest. To this succeeded Beethoven's 'Moonlight' sonata (so-called), and Liszt's great Sonata in B minor, both of which were very finely played. The programme proper concluded with a Chopin selection, interpreted with great significance and individuality of style.

Miss Johanne Stockmarr again proved herself a versatile pianist of marked individuality and independence of thought at her pianoforte recital at Steinway Hall on June 14. As on previous occasions, she was particularly happy in her interpretations of music by Grieg.

The Russian pianist Mr. Sapellnikoff gave a pianoforte recital at Steinway Hall on June 20, when his programme included Mr. Glazounow's Sonata (Op. 74), a refined and cultured work in three movements, the last of which is of great brilliancy. Mr. Sapellnikoff interpreted his countryman's music in a masterly manner, and throughout the afternoon played with notable artistic restraint.

Amongst the numerous pianoforte recitals given recently mention should be made of the following: Miss Ethel Leginska, who played with notable intelligence and brilliancy, on June 12, at Æolian Hall; Mr. Percy Grainger, at Æolian Hall, June 13, whose programme included several pieces by Grieg which were admirably rendered, and the Allegro from Sir Charles Stanford's 'Four Irish Dances,' the excerpt brought forward being that founded on a Rebel March of 'the '98,' found in the Petrie Collection, known as 'Maguire's kick,' which, given with great verve, delighted the audience.

VARIOUS RECITALS.

Miss Beatrice Harrison, a very talented young lady, and sister of the violinist, Miss May Harrison, commenced the study of the violoncello at an early age, and soon gained high honours at the senior local examinations of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and Royal College of Music. At present she is only fourteen years old. She made her début on May 29 at Queen's Hall, playing Saint-Saëns's Violoncello concerto in A minor with beautiful tone and excellent technique. She also was heard, and to advantage, in a new Suite by Mr. Victor Herbert, consisting of five movements, of which the Scherzo and Andante proved the most taking; also in Boellmann's 'Variations symphoniques.' It is satisfactory to learn that she will continue her studies, not accepting any engagements, as it would be a pity for her not fully to mature the great gifts with which she is endowed.

The Misses Dorothy Walenn and Louise Aumonier gave distinction to their concert, on June 7, at Æolian Hall by performing, if not for the first time in London, two little-known sonatas for violin and pianoforte, respectively in C (Op. 117), by Mr. Enrico Bossi, and in G minor (Op. 57), by Mr. Otto Malling. The former is the second of two similar works by the Italian composer, who was born in 1861, and is now director of the Liceo Musicale, Bologna, whose sacred cantata, based upon Milton's 'Paradise Lost,' was recently performed by the London Choral Society at Queen's Hall. His Sonata in C consists of four movements, Moderato, Scherzoso, Adagio eligiaco and Allegro con fuoco, all of which are distinguished by flowing and melodious themes tersely and clearly developed. Mr. Malling's sonata consists of three movements only, respectively headed Moderato, Andantino, and Allegro molto. This work is of somewhat light character, but it is well written and interesting. Both sonatas were excellently interpreted. Much appreciated items were recitations dramatically delivered by Madame Lillian Ginnett.

A feature of Mr. Boris Hambourg's violoncello recital on June 12, at Bechstein Hall, was the performance, stated to be the first in public, of a sonata in four movements by Henry Eccles (1670-1742). There was also given the first performance in England of a tasteful and effective Berceuse by Szulc.

A pleasing feature of Mr. Sergei Kussewitzky's second double-bass recital at Bechstein Hall, on June 15, was the performance of a sonata for Viole d'amour and Contra-bass, by the 18th century virtuoso and composer, Luigi Borghi. The sonata, in three movements, is a delightful example of its period, and its effectiveness was enhanced by the soft tones of the Viole d'amour.

Record is due of the reappearance at Queen's Hall on June 15 of Miss Vivien Chartres, the youthful violinist, who in a programme containing Vieuxtemps' Concerto in D minor, and pieces by Hubay, Wieniawski, Saint-Saëns and Godard, showed that she is making excellent progress in command of expression as well as in technical dexterity.

VOCAL RECITALS.

The Russian baritone, Mr. Oumiroff, gave distinction to his vocal recital at Bechstein Hall on June 3, by including in his programme a number of duets by the Bohemian composers Kavel and Dvorák, which, with the co-operation of Miss Tania Oumiroff, were sung with fascinating vivacity and all due significance.

A very successful recital was given by Mrs. George Swinton at Æolian Hall on June 6. Her selection of songs showed as much artistic perception as did her rendering of them, and she so delighted her audience with a new and piquant ditty entitled 'Love's quarrel,' composed by Mr. Cyril Scott, that she was induced to sing it again.

Two most enjoyable recitals have been given by Madame Julia Culp, respectively on June 8 and 18, at Bechstein Hall. On both these occasions this Dutch artist sang with exceptional beauty of vocal tone and versatility an attractive selection of old and modern songs of the Fatherland.

A recital of novel description was given at Bechstein Hall on June 14, by a Swedish baritone, Mr. Sven Scholander, who accompanied himself on an old Swedish lute, dated 1798. Mr. Scholander is a Diseur, and indulged freely in gesture and pantomimic action in his interpretation of Swedish and Continental folk-songs. Many of these were of considerable musical interest, and ranged in sentiment from grave to gay, amongst the latter being several of humorous character, in which the artist was heard at his best.

MLLE. SUZANNE MORIVAL'S CONCERT.

A good deal had been rumoured regarding Mlle. Morival's ability as a singer before she made her first appearance in England on June 17 at Æolian Hall. Expectations were therefore high, but it cannot be said that they were wholly fulfilled on this occasion. Unquestionably Mlle. Morival has a beautiful voice (much marred, according to our view, by a constant vibrato) and considerable temperament. At first apparently nervous, her performances grew in interest. Two Bergerettes by Weckerlin were sung with much charm. Greater experience will no doubt enable her to sing other styles of music as effectively. The young débutante had the advantage of the co-operation of M. Edouard de Reszké, Signor Simonetti (violin), and Signor Tito Mattei (pianoforte).

SOUTH HAMPSTEAD ORCHESTRA.

The coming of age of the South Hampstead Orchestra was worthily celebrated by its twenty-first annual concert at Queen's Hall on June 10. The programme included Mendelssohn's 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' overture; Tchaikovsky's Symphony in E minor (No. 5); Brahms's Rhapsodie for contralto solo (Miss Tilly Koenen), orchestra, and male-voice chorus; and Dvorák's Violoncello concerto in B minor, the solo part of which was played by Miss May Mukle. In the interpretation of this ambitious programme the members of the South Hampstead Orchestra (ably led by Mrs. Ronald Carter) bore testimony to that artistic culture associated with the neighbourhood where they reside, and in no small degree to the skilled musicianship and magnetic personality of their conductor, Mrs. Julian Marshall, who is to be congratulated upon the success which has attended the Society under her inspiring leadership.

At the City of London College on June 6 a performance of 'The Revenge' (Stanford), followed by Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' and a miscellaneous selection, was given by the College choir and orchestra, conducted by Mr. W. G. Rothery. The choir sang with spirit and enthusiasm, ably supported by a capital small band, led by Miss Maude Swepstone. The soloists were Miss Emily Shepherd, Miss Jessie Ribll and Mr. Henry Franckiss. The pianoforte accompaniments were entrusted to Miss Gertrude Smith and Mr. Russell Bonner. During the evening Miss Emma Jarvis gave a dramatic and moving recital of Tennyson's 'First Quarrel.'

The St. Augustine's Choral Society, connected with St. Augustine's Church, Stepney, performed on June 4 Weber's 'Jubilee Cantata' and Gaul's 'Ruth,' with orchestra. The soloists were Miss Nellie Handel, Mrs. Sumner, Mrs. Thorogood and Messrs. Alonzo and F. C. Thorogood. At the close of the performance a handsome hunter watch was presented to Mr. C. D. Gawthorpe, organist of the church, by the Rev. A. F. Asher, on behalf of the members, in recognition of his work as conductor during the season.

The Streatham Hill Choral Society gave a very successful performance of the 'Dream of Gerontius' on May 31 in aid of the Lord Mayor's Cripples' Fund. The choir of 150 voices, accompanied by an excellent orchestra, gave a very spirited rendering of the choral portion, under the direction of Mr. E. J. Quance, to whom much credit is due for the satisfactory result. The solo music was more than safe in the hands of Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Fred B. Ranalow. This is the second performance of Elgar's work given by the Society this season.

Musical Competition Festivals.

Hertfordshire and North Middlesex.

This is the most recently established festival. The committee was formed only this year, and to many concerned it seemed that it would not be possible to expect much support on the first occasion. But owing to the indefatigable, and one may say relentless, persistency of Miss Cecilia Hill, the originator and chief promoter of the scheme, the success was almost overwhelming. It was very fortunate that so commodious a venue as the Alexandra Palace was available. No other meeting-place within reach of the district appealed to would have sufficed to accommodate the throngs of competitors. Although the festival has a county title, it derives considerable support from the northern suburban district of London. That it so readily attracted competitors from these suburbs seems to prove that, notwithstanding the alleged inertness of the metropolis in musical matters, the awakening of latent musical forces is really only a matter of method and provision of a practical vent for musical energies.

The festival—held at the Alexandra Palace on May 23, 24 and 25—lasted three days, and many competitions had to go on concurrently in different rooms. The following is a synopsis of the entries:

INSTRUMENTAL AND SOLO SINGING.

The adjudicators were Mr. Plunket Greene, Dr. McNaught, Dr. Somervell, Dr. Turpin, Mr. Allen Gill, Dr. Percy Buck, Mr. Philip Cathie (strings) and Dr. Walford Davies (composition). The standard of execution attained by a considerable number of the competitors gave great satisfaction. It is certain that the study of the art is pursued with serious purpose by amateurs in the district catered for. The chief results were as follows:

First-Prize Winners.

(There were no money-prizes.)

Large Elementary Schools: Tring Boys' School (Mr. Fells).

Higher Grade Schools: Wentworth Hall (Miss Cecilia Hill).

Female-voice Choirs: Mill Hill Madrigal Society (Mr. L. Cane).

Church Choirs, men and boys: (B) St. Mary's and St. John's, Hertingfordbury (Mr. J. R. Kennerell); (A) Parish Church, Winchmore Hill (Mr. Gilmour Laird).

Mixed-voice Choirs: Harringay Congregational Church (Mr. Charles Rowley).

String Quartets: Mr. Duncan Tucker's Quartet.

Small String Orchestras: Miss Macfarlane's Orchestra, New Barnet.

Large String Orchestras: Mr. Slocombe's pupils, Brondesbury.

Choral Societies.—Not more than seventy voices: Harringay (Mr. Wilfrid Pepper). Not more than sixty voices: Hertford Festival Choir (Mr. J. L. Gregory). Not more than forty voices: Hertingfordbury (Mr. J. R. Kennerell. Madrigal Class: Welwyn and District (Mr. T. Hassard). Open Class: Slough Choral Society (Mr. George Bower).

On the first and third evenings concerts were given, at which the prize-winners performed. Miss Marie Brema sang solos, and Mr. Allen Gill conducted on the first occasion. At the concluding concert the adult choralists, to the number of about 1,200, were massed in sections, upon the commodious orchestra. Each section sang the chief test-piece of its class, under the direction of Sir Walter Parratt, who throughout had taken great interest in the scheme. Mr. G. D. Cunningham was at the organ.

There is every prospect of a still more successful gathering next spring. A meeting of the committee, at which Mr. W. H. Leslie presided, has been held, and the dates, May 7, 8, 9, have been fixed.

Feis-Ceoil.

The Feis-Ceoil (Irish Musical Festival) was held in Dublin on May 20 and following days, all the competitions and concerts taking place in the Rotunda Buildings. Mr. Ivor Atkins (choral), Mr. Denis O'Sullivan (singing), Mr. Oscar Beringer (pianoforte), Mr. Hans Wessely (strings), and Mr. A. J. Dunn (wind instruments) were the adjudicators.

On Monday, May 20, an evening concert was given, at which Mr. Denis O'Sullivan sang, the other performers (all former prize-winners) being Miss Annie McCabe, Miss Alicia Keogh, and Miss Annie McCabe's ladies' trio (Miss Cissie Slevin and Miss Lucy Becker), Miss Emily Keady (solo violin), and Miss Mary Gallagher (solo violoncello). Miss Dorothy Bewley and Miss Sophie Allen played the accompaniments. At the concert on the following evening Miss Madeleine Macken and Mr. Denis O'Sullivan were the vocalists, and Miss Annie Lord (pianoforte) and Mr. Hans Wessely (violin) the instrumentalists. The Dublin Oratorio and Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Vincent O'Brien) sang madrigals and part-songs by Marenzio, Purcell and Sir R. P. Stewart, and two Irish airs arranged by Dr. Jozé. The remaining evenings of the week were taken up by choral competitions and the prize-winners' concert on Saturday. The following were the choral prize-winners :

Division I.—Female-Voice Choirs (6 entries): 1st, Mr. A. E. J. M'Creary's Choir, Belfast. 2nd, Dublin Glee Singers (conductor, Mr. Joseph Seymour).

Male-Voice Choirs (4 entries): 1st, Ulster Male-Voice Choir (conductor, Samuel Holmes), Belfast. 2nd, Phibsboro' Glee Singers (conductor, Peter P. Walsh), Dublin.

Mixed-Voice Choirs (4 entries): 1st, Mr. Loretto's Sligo Choir. 2nd, Amphion Choir, Dublin (conductor, G. B. White).

Division II.—Female-Voice Choirs (5 entries): 1st, Bangor Ladies' Choir, Co. Down (conductor, Robert Jones). 2nd, Rutland Square Ladies' Choir, Dublin (conductor, Thomas H. Weaving). Special 3rd prize, Messrs. W. & R. Jacob's Choir A (conductor, Thomas H. Weaving).

Mixed-Voice Choirs (2 entries): 1st, Brian Boru Gaelic League Choir (conductor, William M'Gouran). No second prize, as only two choirs competed in this class.

Commercial Choirs.

Mixed Voices (3 entries): 1st, Messrs. Pim Bros., Ltd., Choir, Dublin (conductor, T. F. Marchant). No second prize, as only two choirs competed.

Female Voices (3 entries): 1st, Messrs. W. and R. Jacob's Choir B, Dublin (conductor, Thomas H. Weaving). 2nd, Varian's Choral Society, Dublin (conductor, Robert O'Dwyer).

Male Voices (2 entries): 1st, "Independent" Choral Society, Dublin (conductor, Herbert Honohan). No second prize, as only two choirs competed.

Trade Choirs (2 entries).—1st, The Brushmakers' Choir (conductor, Robert O'Dwyer).

School Choirs, Class I. (2 entries): 1st, Sisters of Mercy, Gardner Street National School, Dublin (conductor, Miss Elizabeth Gorman).

School Choirs, Class II. (2 entries): 1st, Christian Schools, Sheriff Street, Dublin (conductor, Peter P. Walsh).

Choral Singing in Irish.

Mixed Voices (4 entries): 1st, Emmet Choir, Dublin (conductor, John Lawless). 2nd, Brian Boru Gaelic League Choir, Dublin (conductor, W. M'Gouran).

Female Voices (5 entries): 1st, Brian Boru Gaelic League Ladies' Choir (conductor, W. M'Gouran). 2nd, Colmcille Ladies' Choir, Dublin (conductor, John Maxwell); Emmet Female-Voice Choir, Dublin (conductor, John Lawless).

Male Voice (2 entries): 1st, Brian Boru Gaelic League Male-Voice Choir, Dublin (conductor, W. M'Gouran).

There was only one entry for the String Orchestra Class, in which Mr. Arthur Dalton's Orchestra was awarded a certificate of excellence.

Hull.

This was the second annual festival held under the newly-formed Hull and District Musical Festival Society. As yet it seems that the scheme has a greater attraction for the districts surrounding Hull than for that town itself, but it is anticipated that in future more local support in the direction of competitors and audience will be forthcoming. Without doubt the festival, worked as it is with high motives by the Rev. T. F. Jones, of Burstwick, the secretary, and Mr. C. H. Gore, M.A., the chairman, and their coadjutors, deserves all the civic, social and musical sympathy the town can afford.

The entries included 193 solo singers and instrumentalists, seven instrumental trios, four string quartets, three orchestras, and nineteen school choirs. The Hornsea school choir (Mr. H. Sykes) was very successful in these sections. Generally the execution in the junior classes was very satisfactory. The Darrington Ladies' Choir sang 'Sound sleep' (R. Vaughan Williams) and won a prize. The test in one of the adult sections was 'any chorus' or passage from Bach's cantata 'God's time is the best.' Four choirs sang, and the first place fell to Dr. Smith's Hull Choir. The finest choral performances heard at the festival were those by Dr. Ely's Scarborough Choir in 'Autumn' (Brahms) and 'Matona, lovely maiden' (Orlando di Lasso). The former piece made a profound sensation. Dr. McNaught, who adjudicated the vocal classes, stated that not at Morecambe or Blackpool had he heard a more masterly interpretation of this fine part-song. The most striking of the solo-singing winners was Miss MacBean, of Beverley, who displayed good musicianship, a fine voice and attractive temperament. Dr. W. H. Richards adjudicated in all instrumental sections except the orchestras, which were taken by Mr. George Halford.

Concerts were given in which the prize-winners participated. A performance of Moonie's cantata 'A woodland dream' was given by the Hornsea children, and the adult choirs combined to perform with orchestral accompaniment the cantata 'God's time is the best,' under the careful direction of Mr. C. Carte Doorly. The difficult solos in this work were the tests in the solo-singing competition, and the prize-winners sang the solos at the concert. It cannot be said that this plan worked satisfactorily, because the soloists were obviously unused to the orchestra. But in this matter, as all through the competitions, it was the aim of the organizers to put music before the competitors that was worth the trouble of studying. The festival took place on May 28, 29 and 30.

Berks, Bucks, and Oxon.

Held at Oxford on May 30, 31 and June 1, this festival was eminently successful in attracting large numbers of competitors in a great variety of classes. There were thirty-six choirs of divers sorts, about 100 vocal and more than 100 instrumental soloists, four stringed orchestras and four quartets. But the greatest triumph of the festival was the gathering of about 1,400 children from about fifty schools. The St. Margaret's orchestra (Mrs. Molyneux), Miss Campbell's String Quartet, Cogges and Ducklington Chorus (Rev. H. F. Pinder), St. John Baptist, Crowthorne (Mr. H. G. Sharpe), St. Giles' Church, Oxford (Mr. H. B. Wilsdon), the Rev. B. C. S. Everett's Choir, Windsor, Winslow Musical Society (Mr. Herbert Thompson), Abingdon Musical Union Female-Voice Choir (Mr. H. W. Wilsdon), Watlington Ladies' Choir (Mr. Bertram Storer), Crowthorne Choral Society (Mr. Tomlinson), St. Barnabas, Lissdale, Male-Voice Choir (Mr. Hedges) were among the first-prize winners in the senior sections. Newbury Wesleyan (Mr. Bowring), Datchet School (Mr. G. W. Page), Cowley St. John (Girls), Oxford (Miss Vincent), Marsten C. E. School (Mr. J. W. H. Brown), St. Stephen's College, Clewer (Miss Bowdler), Islip Juvenile Branch C.E.T.S. (Mr. J. Woolfall) were winners in junior choral classes.

A concert was given by the adult competing choirs, at which Sir Hubert Parry's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' was performed under the baton of the composer. The programme also included what was announced as the first public performance of 'Laudate Pueri' from 'Vesperæ de Dominica' (Mozart). On the afternoon of the last day the children assembled in the Town Hall and sang many of their test-pieces, often with surprisingly good effect. Dr. Vaughan Williams conducted. H.R.H. the Princess Christian attended and gave away the prizes. The adjudicators were Dr. Walford Davies, Dr. Vaughan Williams, Dr. Ernest Walker, Mr. Maurice Sons and Mr. Henry R. Bird.

This festival is excellently managed. The chief honorary organizing secretary is Mrs. Commeline, and there is a strong committee. On the whole this county festival takes its place as one of the most successful held in the kingdom. It is worth while to note that there are no money prizes.

Lytham.

The festival held in this very pleasant and reposeful Lancashire seaside resort on June 6, 7 and 8, is now greatly appreciated by the townsfolk and visitors. Competitors are attracted from a wide area, and it would seem that the festival has reached the limit of its expansion in view of the accommodation the only two halls in the town afford. Solo singing is a speciality of the scheme. The test-pieces, which in this department were sufficiently exacting, were as follows :

Soprano: 'Omnipotence' (Schubert), 'Deh vieni, non tardar (Mozart).

Contralto: 'Agnus Dei' (B minor Mass) (Bach), 'Che Farò' (low-key edition) (Glück).

Tenor: 'Annabel Lee' (H. Leslie), 'Love in her eyes' (Handel).

Baritone or Bass: 'The Lute Player' (Allitsen), 'O star of eve' (Wagner).

Some of the competitors exhibited first-rate talent. This was particularly so in the soprano class, in which Miss Louie Attwater, of Preston, distinguished herself. Another strong feature was the junior solo singing. In the girls' section some of the singing, by virtue of its great expressiveness, much touched the large audiences. There were not many school choir entries, but those that came were of the highest standard. The Revoe (Blackpool) Council School (Mr. J. R. Rigby) sustained its reputation for beautiful tone, great expressiveness and skilful sight-singing. The action-songs by juniors provided a very attractive entertainment.

Twenty-eight adult choirs entered, and amongst them, in the male-voice section, were two of the finest organizations of this class to be heard anywhere in the country, namely, the Manchester Orpheus (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt), and the Habergham Choir (Mr. Ernest Hitchon).

The test-pieces in the class in which these male choirs, with two others, competed, were 'The phantom host' (Hegar), 'It's Oh! to be a wild wind' (Elgar), and 'A Franklyn's Dogge' (Mackenzie). The first-named piece was performed with electrifying vehemence and splendid tone by the Habergham Choir, and the other pieces also were finely sung, but the Manchester men on the whole exhibited more polish and subtlety in all three pieces, and were awarded the first place. In another male-voice choir section in which ten choirs sang, the Goodshaw Glee Union (Mr. B. Peel) came first. In the small mixed-voice choir section, All Saints' Church choir, Blackpool (Mr. H. Hanson), was victorious. The chief mixed-voice choir section brought eight excellent choirs. The tests were 'Gather ye rosebuds' (Blumenthal), 'Dim-lit woods' (Brahms), and 'Moonlight' (Faning). An exceptionally beautiful interpretation of the Brahms piece by the Blackpool Orpheus (Mr. Clifford Higgin) failed to atone for some weakness in the other pieces, and the first-prize fell to the Preston Vocal Union (Mr. H. Whittaker) for all-round good performances, and Mr. Hiram Ball's fine Bradford Vocal Union were very close behind. Dr. McNaught and Mr. C. H. Fogg adjudicated. The official accompanists were Mr. A. Vivian Jackson and Mr. T. S. Warburton. The secretary is Mr. Allon Wilson. Most of the success of the concert was due to the labours of Mr. Wilson and of Mr. John B. Crook, the chairman of the committee.

St. Cecilia Girls' Clubs.

The eighth annual competition of these working girls' clubs took place on June 18 and 19 at the Passmore Edwards Settlement, Tavistock Place. Ten intermediate grade clubs sang on the first evening. The tests were the two part-songs 'Under the greenwood tree' (Charles Wood), and 'O beautiful violet' (Reinecke), and a unison sight-test. The West Central Jewish Club (Mr. Harvey Grace) gained the challenge picture. Four clubs sang on the second evening. The tests were the trios 'Elves of the forest' (Mozart) and 'How merrily we live' (Este), and a two-part sight-test. St. Edward's, Oxford Circus (Mr. W. Holmes), gained the first position. There were no money prizes. Dr. McNaught adjudicated. Mrs. Herbert Lousada is the secretary.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Birmingham has now entered on its saison morte, and so far as the concert room is concerned there are no events of importance to record. The three weeks' season of promenade concerts at the Theatre Royal, given under Mr. Max Mossel's direction and under the conductorship of Mr. Landon Ronald, terminated on June 15, having proved a complete success, artistically and financially. These concerts are now quite an established institution, and will be continued annually. The orchestra, principally composed of local musicians, was the best yet heard at these concerts.

A concert worthy of notice was that given at the Edgbaston Botanical Gardens on June 8, under Mr. Oscar Pollack's direction, in inauguration of the summer season. Mr. Edwin Stephenson, organist and choirmaster of the Birmingham Cathedral, supplied the vocal items with his Birmingham select choir of mixed voices, who, under his training, are making rapid progress in the rendering of unaccompanied madrigals and part-songs, which on that occasion comprised examples by John Benet, Palestrina, Purcell, Stanford, Tomkins, Walmisley, Benedict, Elgar, Parry, Leslie, Barnby, Morley and others, given with evenly balanced ensemble and freshness of tone-colour. Several members of the choir also were heard to advantage in well-rendered songs and duets. The solo violinist was Miss Mari Krovelli and the solo pianist Miss Maud Nevill.

I regret to say that the annual series of ten orchestral concerts carried on by the Halford Concerts Society for the last ten years is likely to be discontinued in consequence of the reduction of a large guarantee fund, and the inadequate support given to these excellent concerts by the general public. The Society now propose only to give a series of four instead of ten concerts if sufficient guarantee is forthcoming.

A new scheme that came as a great surprise to local musicians was made known on June 10, according to which it is proposed to give eight orchestral concerts on a grand scale in the Town Hall next season. Of the eight concerts three are to be conducted by Dr. Hans Richter, with the Hallé Orchestra, three by Mr. Henry J. Wood, with the Queen's Hall Orchestra, one conducted by Mr. Max Fiedler of Hamburg, and one conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald. In order to carry out the scheme a guarantee fund will be raised, the circular referring to this matter being signed by Sir Edward Elgar, Mr. Granville Bantock, Prof. H. G. Fiedler, and Mr. Max Mossel (honorary secretary). Promises of support have already been received from the Lord Mayor of Birmingham, Alderman Charles Beale, Sir Oliver Lodge, Mr. Richard Peyton, Mr. G. H. Johnstone and Mr. C. B. Bragg. I may add that local orchestral players will be offered engagements to augment the ranks of the different orchestras, each of which is to consist of at least a hundred performers.

MUSIC IN CAMBRIDGE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

As is usual in the examination-ridden May Term, but few concerts were announced, and the scanty original list was further reduced by the regretted non-appearance of Dr. Joachim. The Cambridge University Musical Society's concert on June 7 was a great success. With the exception of Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' conducted by Dr. Gray, the programme was furnished by living composers, who were all present to conduct their works. Dr. Glazounow's splendid Symphony No. 6 made a deep impression, and Sir Hubert Parry's delightful 'Pied Piper' and Sir Charles Stanford's brilliant Irish Rhapsody were much enjoyed. All the works went well, and the different conductors had fine receptions from a very large audience.

Combinations of the organ with stringed instruments seem to be growing in favour. Mr. Inwards, our leading resident violinist, has joined Dr. Gray and Mr. Rootham in organ recitals at Trinity and St. John's respectively. At Pembroke College Chapel, Mr. W. L. Raynes, assisted by Miss Margery Pryor and Miss Porter, gave Rheinberger's rarely-heard Trio for organ, violin and violoncello.

Mr. Clive Carey, a promising singer and composer, gave a vocal recital on June 5. Concerts have also been given by Miss Madeline Booth and the Misses Eyre.

The honour conferred by the University on M. Glazounow and the performance of Elgar's oratorio 'The Kingdom' are referred to on pp. 454 & 474 respectively.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the summer term took place on May 13 in the Town Hall, when Herr Pachmann gave a delightful concert in conjunction with Madame Blanche Marchesi, the lady's first appearance here. Of all the Chopin pieces played by Herr Pachmann, perhaps the Barcarolle in F sharp (Op. 60) delighted the audience most, for he was cheered to the echo, and good-naturedly responded again and again. Of the three clusters of songs contributed by the lady vocalist, 'The stars,' by Joseph Holbrooke, and 'Songs my mother taught me,' by Dvorák, were specially notable and were beautifully rendered.

The next concert took place in the same building on May 16, under the auspices of the Musical Club, when the Kruse String Quartet, with the co-operation of Mr. Fransella (flute) and Dr. Walker (pianoforte), gave a chamber concert.

The principal items were Beethoven's Serenade trio in D (Op. 25), Mozart's Quartet for flute and strings in D major and Dvorák's Pianoforte quintet in A (Op. 81).

We can only mention the most important college concerts which took place in the 'Eights' week, the first being at Balliol, on May 26, when Mr. Alfred Gibson and his confrères gave a chamber concert, the pieces played being Brahms's Sextet in G, and Mendelssohn's Octet. A concert followed on May 28 at Exeter College, the chief items being Stanford's choral ballad 'Phaudrig Crohoore,' rendered by the Musical Society, under the careful baton of Mr. C. E. Winn, the organ-scholar, and a short tuneful Suite for orchestra composed for the occasion and conducted by Mr. F. Cunningham Woods, a former Exeter man. On the following evening Keble gave its concert, and perhaps the most notable feature was the excellent playing of the orchestra, Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overture and Mendelssohn's 'Fingal's cave' overture being admirably rendered. The programme also included Mozart's Pianoforte concerto in D minor, Mr. F. Shaw, a former musical scholar, playing the solo part in a musicianly manner.

The last concert of the Eights took place at 'Queen's' on May 31, the principal items being Schumann's Choral Ballad for men's voices, 'The Luck of Edenhall,' and Grieg's 'Landerkennung' (Op. 31). The band played the 'Peer Gynt' Suite, and essayed Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll.' Mr. J. Reed (of the choir, Trinity College, Cambridge) sang Lohengrin's 'Narration' with excellent effect.

We must not omit to mention that on certain Tuesday afternoons organ recitals have been given at New College, and that the Sunday evening concerts at Balliol have been continued as usual.

Foreign Notes.

CHRISTIANIA.

An opera, 'Sjörmandsbruden' (The sailor's bride), text and music by Aspestrand, has been produced with marked success at the National Theatre. As the subject is also national, the work will probably enjoy a long run.

DRESDEN.

The annual meeting of the Allgemeiner Deutscher Musikverein was announced to take place here from June 29 to July 2. Among the important works set down for performance are the following: Operas—Richard Strauss, 'Salome'; Max Schillings, 'Moloch.' Orchestral—E. N. von Reznicek, Prelude and fugue in C sharp minor, for full orchestra; Hans Pfitzner, Overture 'Christelflein'; Ludwig Thuille, Symphonic Festival March (Op. 38); Georg Schumann, Overture to a drama(Op. 45); Paul Scheinpflug, 'Spring, a song of battle and life' (Op. 9), tone-poem for full orchestra; Hans Sommer, 'Forest idyll' (Waldfrieden), overture to the second act of the fairy play 'Riquet mit dem Schopf'; Chamber Music—Bernhard Sekles, Serenade (Op. 14) for eleven solo instruments—flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, bassoon, two violins, viola, violoncello, double-bass and harp. At the general meeting on July 1 the most important subject for discussion was to be the production of a complete edition of Franz Liszt's works.

MUNICH.

At the festival performances this year at the Prince Regent Theatre, Herr Felix Mottl will conduct the first and third cycles of the 'Ring,' and the four 'Tristan' performances; Herr Fischer, the second 'Ring' cycle and 'Die Meistersinger'; while the 'Tannhäuser,' performances will be under the direction of Herr Schalk.

ST. CLOUD.

A replica in bronze of the bust of Gounod, executed by Carpeaux at London in 1871, and placed in front of the church in this town, was unveiled on June 2. The composer often stayed at St. Cloud, where he died suddenly on October 17, 1893. After the Mayor, M. Belmontet, had spoken, M. Saint-Saëns delivered an eloquent speech. The ceremony ended with a few words from M. Dujardin-Beaumetz, Under-Secretary of State for the Fine Arts, and by the performance of some music by Gounod, sung by principal and chorus singers from the Opéra, under the direction of M. Henri Büsser.

Country News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinion expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local paper, or furnished by correspondents.

Bishopwearmouth.—Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was performed in Bishopwearmouth Church on June 11 by a choir of ninety voices and full orchestra (led by Mr. A. Bevan). The choir was well balanced and sang with spirit under the conductorship of Mr. James Bevan, and Mr. F. W. Joblin assisted at the organ. The solo vocalists were Miss Florence Boddy, Miss Laura Cameron, Mr. Henry Reay and Mr. George Swan.

Buckley.—The Choral Society gave a successful performance of 'Israel in Egypt' in the Central Hall on May 28. The choir and orchestra numbered 100 performers under the conductorship of Mr. Wilfred Jones. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Davies, Master Hubert Jones, Miss Edith Randles and Mr. Gwilym Richards, the duet 'The Lord is a man of war' being rendered by Mr. Davies Hayes and Mr. Powell Edwards, both local singers. The orchestra was led by Mr. Horace Haselden, and Mr. Emlyn Davies presided at the organ. This Society, now in its eighth year, is carried on in connection with the Evening Continuation Classes under the Flintshire Education Council.

Kenilworth.—A Shakespearean Festival was held in the Castle grounds on June 20 by the combined choirs of the Leamington, Warwick, and Kenilworth Madrigal Societies numbering ninety voices, under the conductorship of Mr. E. Roberts West. The programme included the following part-music, 'Full fathom five' (Cunningham Woods), 'It was a lover and his lass' (A. H. Brewer), 'Sigh no more, ladies' (Stevens), 'When daffodils begin to peer' (H. Wareing), 'Let me the canakin clink' (J. B. McEwen), 'When icicles hang' (Mrs. Bernard Green), 'Under the greenwood tree' (A. W. Ogilvy), 'Good-night, good rest' (W. Macfarren), and the Shakespearean Tercentary song and chorus, 'Great Warwickshire Will.' Solos by Miss May Eaves and Mr. Sydney Miles (vocal), Mr. H. M. Freeth (violin), and recitations by Mr. J. C. Prodger and Mr. H. M. Vanderfelt completed the programme.

Answers to Correspondents.

Student.—(1) It is not altogether satisfactory to give a phonetic pronunciation of German words. In your city you should experience no difficulty in getting the Lied sung to you in the original language. (2) The final 's' in Saint-Saëns is sounded. (3) Rubinstein's 'Ouverture Triomphale' (Op. 43) was composed in 1856—possibly in connection with the Crimean war—and dedicated to Alexander II., Czar of Russia, who decorated the composer for his achievement. The work was performed at the Crystal Palace on July 4, 1874, when a reliable critic said: 'Clever and effective as it is in points, such a cumulation of noise can never have been intended for performance within doors.' (4) Tchaikovsky's '1812' overture was composed in 1880 for the consecration of the Cathedral of the Saviour, Moscow.

A. H. H.—Woldemar Bargiel (1828-1897), a step-brother of Madame Schumann, was born at Berlin and studied at Leipzig under Mendelssohn's supervision. He held various posts at Cologne, Rotterdam, and Berlin. As a composer Bargiel must be ranked among the foremost disciples of Schumann, though he lacked the genius of that master. For further details of his career see the biography of him by the late Edward Dannreuther, in the new edition of 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' vol. i., p. 186.

K. R.—The following speeds are suggested for the pianoforte studies you name: Loeschhorn, in C, Op. 192, No. 3, crotchet = 104; Bertini, in G, Op. 137, No. 3, crotchet = 92; Czerny, in C, Op. 599, No. 18, crotchet = 132; Brunner, in A minor (No. 64 of Primula Series), crotchet = 80. Pauer's Gigue in G (No. 12 of Tutti Frutti) may be played at dotted crotchet = 120; and the first movement of Gurlitt's Sonatina in G (Op. 121, No. 1), at crotchet = 112.

F. L. B.—Schumann's 'Intermezzi' (Op. 4) for pianoforte are metronomised by Madame Schumann as follows: No. 1, Allegro quasi maestoso, crotchet = 120; Più vivo, crotchet = 132. No. 2, Presto a capriccio, dotted crotchet = 144; second part, crotchet = 138. No. 3, Allegro marcato, crotchet = 176; assai vivo = dotted minim = 69. No. 4, dotted crotchet = 50. No. 5, crotchet = 144. No. 6, crotchet = 160.

V. D.—(1) There is more than one way of dividing the words in the extract you send from 'But who may abide?' ('The Messiah'), and the one you have given is not the best. (2) The closed method of voice production may be briefly described as a placing of the voice at the back of the throat—swallowing the note, as it were; the open method is the direct antithesis of this.

Minim.—Duvernoy's pianoforte study in C (Op. 120, No. 4) may be played at crotchet = 132, and Loeschhorn's in E minor (Op. 192, No. 40) at crotchet = 96. The speed of the Allegro of Haydn's Sonata in C (No. 5 of Peters' edition, 713A) is about minim = 92; and of Burgmüller's 'La cloche des matines' (Op. 109, No. 9), crotchet = 84.

L. S. J. W.—(1) There is a Polacca by Tchaikovsky in No. 7 of his pianoforte pieces (Op. 72), and the polonaise from 'Eugen Onegin' has been arranged by Liszt. (2) The following duets for two contraltos are suggested: 'Frühlingszeit,' by Ochs: Duets, Op. 150 and 151, by H. Wenzel; and 'Fuyons,' 'Sous le feuillage' (for mezzo-soprano and alto), by Gounod.

F. R.—You would probably have no difficulty in getting a reliable opinion on your voice at Birmingham. Why not apply to the Secretary of the Midland Institute School of Music there? At your age, however, it would seem to be more desirable to retain your present employment rather than exchange it for the uncertainties of the life of a professional vocalist.

Elbe.—For Harvest and Dedication cantatas, see C. Lee Williams's 'A Harvest Song,' 1*s.* 6*d.*; Garrett's 'Harvest Cantata,' 1*s.*; Maunder's 'Song of Thanksgiving,' 1*s.* 6*d.*; Blair's 'Harvest-tide,' 1*s.*; West's 'Seedtime and Harvest,' 2*s.*; and the same composer's 'Lord, I have loved the habitation of Thy house,' 1*s.* All the above are scored for orchestra.

Music.—There is no reason why a working-man should not 'gain so lofty a position' as a doctor of music. Dr. Coward, of Sheffield, is a bright and shining example of such an attainment. You should seek the advice of a reliable and sympathetic teacher of music in your neighbourhood as to your ability and methods of study.

Sandgrounder.—The 'Ah' in Grieg's 'Solvejg's Lied' should not be hummed but sung sotto voce, just as if you were singing to yourself. The song may be sung at about the speed of crotchet = 84; the $\frac{3}{4}$ section, crotchet = 144 to 152.

Veronique.—The method of your violin teacher is quite right. You are learning the elements which make up the scale, in other words, you are making a short cut to ultimate scale playing. In this respect the Sevcik System is not new.

Jerne.—You will find a good article on Greek Music, by Mr. H. S. Macran, in the new edition of 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' vol. ii., p. 223, and an article on the same subject in Stainer and Barrett's 'Dictionary of Musical Terms.'

Pianist.—You could not do better than prelude your study of Bach's '48' with the Twelve little preludes and the Fifteen two-part Inventions. The Partitas and Suites will also afford you keen enjoyment, and, at the same time, develop your technique and improve your musicianship.

H. C. S.—Baritones are plentiful. If only you were a tenor! We cannot recommend teachers, but you might become a student at the Guildhall School of Music and take some lessons from one of the competent professors at that institution.

A. B. C.—You will find the names of conductors of choral societies in the Midlands and the North in 'The Musical Directory,' published by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co. See pp. 63 to 77 of that useful book of reference.

R. M. W.—Mr. Hersant, 49, Lennox Road, Stroud Green, N., can be recommended as a reliable artist for the restoration of a spinet.

Theory.—The 'diminished 7th' question set for you to answer is perfectly absurd as to IV. and V. The practical value of such ridiculous questions is nil.

Tarquin.—John Amott was organist of Gloucester Cathedral, 1832-65; Townsend Smith, organist of Hereford Cathedral, 1843-77; and William Done, organist of Worcester Cathedral, 1844-95.

H. B. T.—Treatises on harmony by foreign writers that have been translated into English are those by Richter, Lobe, Jadassohn, and Büsser.

E. W. D.—You would have to wait until the winter in order 'to hear in London a good rendering of Haydn's "Creation."' Please write again—say in September.

A Lover of Music.—The books you mention are not of any intrinsic value.

J. A. M.—We strongly recommend you to study under a competent lady teacher of singing.

M. G. W.—An illustrated article on King's College, Cambridge, appeared in The Musical Times of April, 1902.

Mr. Kentish Bache writes: 'An English translation of Beethoven's Studien has been made by Henry Hugo Pierson, published in 1853 by Schuberth & Co., of Leipzig.

SIX OCTAVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

BY

WILLEM COENEN.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

"The musical value of some of the pieces is not inconsiderable."—The Times.

"Must needs prove most useful, and are not at all dry."—Daily Telegraph.

"The studies are quite as entertaining to the listener as they are serviceable to the performer."—Musical Opinion.

"Six clever and useful 'Octave Studies.' They are more than usually interesting."—Musical Standard.

"Excellent for practice."—Christian World.

"They afford a very complete course of study. The different numbers are tuneful and attractive, and the variety is great."—The Lady.

"Almost every branch of octave-playing is represented in these tuneful studies."—Church Bells.

"These studies are very melodious, and will make the irksome study of octaves quite interesting to the hard-working student."—Church Family Newspaper.

"Admirably adapted to formulate touch as well as style in this special branch of pianoforte technique."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"Fitted for advanced students. For wrist work, No. 2 is excellent, and No. 6 is good enough for a concert piece. In all there is pretty equal work for both hands."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Six excellent octave studies (legato and staccato)."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

"Can safely be recommended to players who possess the laudable ambition of keeping up their technique."—Western Daily Press.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED
BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

This Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

FROM THE ABOVE:

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

The present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

SCHOOL BAND MUSIC

Edited by W. G. McNAUGHT.

This Series, as its title suggests, is intended to meet the needs of School String Bands. It will include arrangements and original pieces of every suitable description.

FIRST SELECTION.

1.	WHERE THE BEE SUCKS ...	Arne.
2.	THE GOLDEN VANITY	English Air.
3.	THE BAY OF BISCAY	John Davy.
	O WERT THOU IN THE CAULD BLAST ...	Mendelssohn.
4.	GOOD MORROW, GOSSIP JOAN	English Air.
	AULD LANG SYNE...	Scotch Air.
5.	THE ASH GROVE ...	Welsh Air.
	MARCH OF THE MEN OF HARLECH	Welsh Air.
6.	THE ARETHUSA	Shield.
	THE MINSTREL BOY	Irish Air.
7.	FAIREST ISLE	Purcell.
	WELCOME THOU WHOSE DEEDS CONSPIRE (from Jephtha)	Handel.
8.	HEART OF OAK	Dr. W. Boyce.
	THE HARP THAT ONCE IN TARA'S HALLS	Irish Air.

The above are all very simply arranged by Percy E. Fletcher. The 1st Violin parts do not go beyond the third position, and they are often written divisi in order to fill out the harmony. The viola parts are ad lib., the actual notes being written as the second of the divisi parts for the second violin. The bowing and fingering are carefully marked. The arrangements are complete in themselves with or without the vocal parts, and they can also be used as accompaniments to Novello's School Song edition of the pieces.

1st Violin, 2nd Violin, Viola, 'Cello and Bass Parts, each number and part in a separate cover, price 3d.
Pianoforte Parts can be obtained of each of the above Pieces, price 1½d. or 2d.

PROGRAMME MUSIC
IN
THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES
A CONTRIBUTION TO THE HISTORY OF MUSICAL EXPRESSION

BY

FREDERICK NIECKS, MUS.D.
Reid Professor of Music in the University of Edinburgh.
(Author of "Frederick Chopin as a Man and Musician"; &c.)

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.
A contribution to musical literature which will stand as a monument of research and as a text-book for all students of the art, in one of its most important aspects, to which the book's pages are devoted. . . . As a work of reference its completeness should certainly make it invaluable. . . . The volume now published, full as it is of the fruits of well-directed industry and research, and containing as it does vastly more information on the important subject with which it deals than any other work yet written in our language, is one for which its author deserves the lasting gratitude of everybody interested in music and its development.

STANDARD.
It is safe at the outset to say that by this thoroughly interesting and helpful book Professor Niecks has enriched our literature to an extent only equalled in recent times by the Oxford History of Music. . . . An exceedingly well written epilogue concludes this book, which cannot fail to be helpful to composers at the moment. . . . Professor Niecks brings his immense labour—one that is not likely to be superseded for a long time—to a worthy finish.

MORNING POST.
The present volume deserves to rank among the most valuable works on the history of music which have appeared for many years. The subject is one of engrossing interest, and in treating it the author has not only displayed his erudition and marshalled his facts with the greatest accuracy, but has in the expression of his ideas shown himself thoroughly impartial.

DAILY NEWS.
Professor Niecks has done valiant work in clearing away many of the errors and misunderstandings which have obscured the vexed subject of programme music. He took up his task in the impartial spirit of the historical investigator, and has carried it through with such success that his bulky volume will be an historical document. . . . The value of the historical survey and the criticism connecting it cannot be exaggerated.

MORNING ADVERTISER.
Professor Frederick Niecks has long been known as an admirable writer on music, and he has given some good works to the world, especially his life of Chopin, but he has done nothing more valuable in the domain of musical literature than his work on "Programme Music," which has just been published by Messrs. Novello. Not only is it a sound as well as an exhaustive volume on the art which he knows so well, but it has the fine merit, from the amateur's point of view, of being extremely readable. . . . If I wanted to place in the hands of a man the history of music for the last four hundred years I should give him the work under notice, for by reading it he would gain a clearer view of what had been accomplished than by wading through half the academical histories written in the formal manner of the pedantic historian.

MORNING LEADER.
Professor Niecks's book fills a lamentable gap in our musical literature, though it cannot be said to exhaust the subject, which is, in a sense, co-extensive with the whole history of music. . . . The whole book is a valuable contribution to the study of the subject. It deprives people of the excuse of not having all the facts before them in an accessible form, and many will be surprised to learn what a vast body of facts has been accumulating in the last four centuries. Finally, his lucid definition of the various kinds of programme music should put an end to much loose thinking and looser writing on the subject.

DAILY MAIL.
This practically amounts to a history of music regarded from a particular aspect, and Dr. Niecks's aspect is so wide that almost every composer of importance is laid under contribution. . . . His remarks on Richard Strauss alone would make the book worth reading, for he can discuss his works with temperateness and sympathy, while at the same time, he shows us the bent of his own tastes in the last sentence of the book: "What do we want? Simplicity, sanity, spontaneity, and, above all, and including all, beauty—rational, gracious, persuasive beauty."

ATHENÆUM.
Prof. Niecks's book is a veritable cyclopædia of information on programme music, and full of valuable comments and criticisms. In his Epilogue he sums up the matter tersely in the following words: "Programme music in its widest sense is co-extensive with expressive music; in its narrower sense it is a species of this genus."

SATURDAY REVIEW.
This immense book, "Programme Music in the Last Four Centuries" (Novello and Co.), was a book well worth writing, for it is filled with information of many curious kinds, and it tells us incidentally a great deal about music and "musical expression." . . . Too much praise cannot be given to the care with which the actual sayings and writings of composers themselves, on their own intentions and on what they consider should be done in music, have been gathered together and set in a convenient and significant order.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.
Professor Niecks's work will be welcome to many who, whether or not they endorse all of the author's conclusions, will find in its pages much information on the subject previously unknown or inaccessible. The data brought together in the work will indeed surprise many. . . . Enough for the present to congratulate Professor Niecks heartily on the production of the work, which must have cost infinite labour and the value of which is incontestable.

EVENING STANDARD AND ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.
By its lucidity of expression, the thoroughness of the examination of material, and by sound critical judgment, Professor Niecks's book stands as a great achievement and a most valuable contribution to the history of musical expression.

GLOBE.
His book will add to the pleasure of many a concert-goer addicted to "tone-poems," and secure the gratitude of genuine students, youthful or mature.

OBSERVER.
From the historic house of Novello has come a book by Professor Frederick Niecks, which, it is safe to say, is one of the most important contributions to the literature of music since the Oxford History. . . . Not only will this wonderfully written and planned volume be of the greatest help to music-lovers, but it should do much to influence all our modern composers to return to the simpler paths.

REFEREE.
Dr. Niecks's book is the most advanced, comprehensive, and valuable consideration of the subject extant, and should be read by every thoughtful musician, who, it may be added, will derive no small profit and pleasure from its perusal.

THE OUTLOOK.
There are a certain number of books which should be found in the library of every cultured musician, and one of these is the volume on "Programme Music," by Professor Niecks of Edinburgh, recently issued by Messrs. Novello.

BRISTOL TIMES.
It is "a contribution to the history of musical expression" which will take a foremost place among works of the kind.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.
As a contribution to historical musical literature, the book is one of the most important publications of recent years.

BIRMINGHAM POST.
It is undoubtedly the most notable contribution to the question in any literature. For the thoroughness with which he has done his work no praise can be too high.

VOICE CULTURE FOR CHILDREN

A PRACTICAL PRIMER

ON THE

CULTIVATION AND PRESERVATION OF YOUNG VOICES

WITH EXERCISES FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS, CHOIRS, SOLO-BOYS, ETC.

BY

JAMES BATES.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the extreme delicacy of the child's voice, yet how often have these frail instruments been irreparably ruined for want of a little knowledge or a little care! Let the teacher sternly discourage anything like "shouty" singing, especially in class or choir, or misguided attempts to sing notes which are too high or too low. It may safely be said that soft singing (of course within the compass of the voice) will never do harm, no matter how continuous, but loud singing will inevitably lead to disaster. The teacher who successfully instils the principles of correct singing, and thereby renders possible the life-long use and enjoyment of a pleasing voice, is conferring on his young charges a boon of inestimable value. This thought should be his constant encouragement in times of difficulty and lack of immediate success.

Extract from Introduction.

The benefits of sight-singing cannot be over estimated. The vocalist becomes independent and self-reliant: he has a wide and varied field open to him: the music he learns does not stale with wearisome repetitions. In course of time he will be able "to hear in his mind what he sees on paper." There will be the possibility of his becoming a musician, for there is nothing so vital to true progress as the power to imagine sounds from notation.

Seventh and Revised Edition.

A HANDBOOK
OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

BY

EMILY R. DAYMOND,

D.Mus., Oxon.

This book is the outcome of a request made some time ago to the author to write some examples of Exercises in Score-Reading similar to those imposed as tests in the examination for F.R.C.O.

These Exercises (forty-eight in number) comprise two sets of twenty-four examples, each set containing one example in every key, major and minor. The first and easier set is intended to prepare the way for the second, which is of greater complexity.

The author has endeavoured to provide a certain amount of variety both in style and in difficulty, and it is hoped that the Exercises will be of use to candidates for the F.R.C.O. Examination and also to other students who wish to become proficient in Score-Reading.

EXAMINATION QUESTIONS
AND HOW TO WORK THEM

BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS,

Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

PREFACE.

This Primer is intended more especially for those who purpose presenting themselves for examination in the theory of music. While the subjects dealt with may be found in all examination schemes for musical degrees and diplomas, it is hoped that the following chapters may prove useful more especially to candidates for the diplomas of the Royal College of Organists.

The object of this book is to stimulate and cultivate method in answering examination questions. Considerable experience as an examination "coach" has proved the success of the method, herein followed, of dissecting the questions, and—by dividing the points for consideration under several heads—thus directing the student's attention to one point at a time.

Appendix only, paper cover, 1s.

This Book, which now contains the Words of about 2,000 Anthems, besides being admirably adapted for the use of Choirs and Congregations, for which purpose it was originally compiled, will be found most valuable to Organists, Choirmasters, and the Clergy as a Book of Reference for the selection of Anthems suitable for special days, seasons, or occasions, the Indexes having been considerably enlarged. It also contains a list of Anthems suitable for Men's voices, and Anthems with Latin words.

The newly-incorporated Anthems (Nos. 1590 to 1952) have been added to the former edition by means of an Appendix, which is published separately from the complete work. Consequently Choirs and Congregations which are still using the older edition are enabled to supplement their books, and make them complete, by purchasing the Appendix at the price of One Shilling.

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

MICHAELMAS TERM begins on September 25.

The College provides complete and systematic individual instruction, and training in every recognized musical subject.

Students are received for a single subject. The lessons may be taken during the day and on certain evenings.

Preparation for all Public Examinations in the Theory and Practice of Music, including the Examinations for University Degrees.

The Orchestra, the Choir, the Opera Classes, and the other Ensemble Classes are also open to those not attending for other subjects, as are also the Courses of Lectures on Musical History, the Theory of Music, etc., given during Term by recognized Teachers of the London University.

There is a SPECIAL COURSE of LECTURES on the ART OF TEACHING given on Wednesday afternoons during Term time. Students may enter for special tuition in this subject or for lessons by correspondence. This Course serves as preparation for the College Examinations for Diplomas.

The class for the TRAINING OF TEACHERS meets on Saturdays, and is intended for Students desirous of obtaining not only general instruction, but also practical experience in the Art of Teaching as applied to Music.

STUDENTS' CONCERTS are given frequently.

In the JUNIOR SCHOOL pupils of either sex are admitted up to the age of fifteen, and the lessons are arranged so as not to interfere with the pursuit of their general education. All students in this department are under the immediate supervision of the Director of Studies.

There are THIRTY SCHOLARSHIPS tenable at the College, and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits. They are awarded for the following subjects: Composition, Pianoforte, Singing, Organ, Stringed and Wind Instruments, and carry with them, in exceptional cases, a maintenance grant.

Prospectus and Scholarship regulations may be had on application.

AUGUST 1, 1907.

GREAT YARMOUTH AND ITS PARISH CHURCH.

> As we drew a little nearer, and saw the whole adjacent prospect lying a straight low line under the sky, I hinted to Peggotty that a mound or so might have improved it; and also that if the land had been a little more separated from the sea, and the town and the tide had not been quite so mixed up, like toast and water, it would have been nicer. But Peggotty said, with greater emphasis than usual, that we must take things as we found them, and that, for her part, she was proud to call herself a Yarmouth Bloater.
> When we got into the street (which was strange enough to me), and smelt the fish, and pitch, and oakum, and tar, and saw the sailors walking about, and the carts jingling up and down over the stones, I felt that I had done so busy a place an injustice; and said as much to Peggotty, who heard my expressions of delight with great complacency, and told me it was well known (I suppose to those who had the good fortune to be born Bloaters) that Yarmouth was, upon the whole, the finest place in the universe.
> I never hear the name, or read the name, of Yarmouth, but I am reminded of a certain Sunday morning on the beach, the bells ringing for church, little Em'ly leaning on my shoulder, Ham lazily dropping stones into the water, and the sun, away at sea, just breaking through the heavy mist, and showing us the ships, like their own shadows.—David Copperfield.

In order to enjoy a quiet look round, the visitor to Great Yarmouth should steer clear of its seasons—the 'herring' and the 'holiday' times. The high-water mark of enjoyment will be reached if, like the present writer, he should select a bright day in early May. Then the town of Peggotty and the land of Ham are seen at their best, and the sojourner there, as he inhales the invigorating ozone and gazes upon the glinting waters of the mighty deep, fully endorses the opinion of Steerforth that Yarmouth is 'a good, queer' place, which, however, can no longer be regarded as an 'out-of-the-way kind of hole.'

The history of Yarmouth may be briefly told. That it was a place of considerable commercial importance at Domesday is proved by the fact that seventy burgesses were then and there recorded. Henry I. appointed a provost as governor, at which time the population had grown to 'a great multitude'; and King John granted a charter of incorporation, making Yarmouth a free borough and conferring many privileges in consideration of a fee-farm rent of £50, which is still paid to the Crown. In 1261 Henry III. permitted the inhabitants to enclose the borough with walls and moats, and he granted 'a gaol for prisoners and malefactors, according to the laws of this land . . . commonly called by the name of the Tolhouse.' This building, which remains to this day, is now a show-place where visitors may descend into the old dungeon, the scene of Sarah Martin's labours, and peer into the cells where condemned prisoners were incarcerated. Although over 7,000 inhabitants are said to have died of the plague in 1348, Yarmouth supplied Edward III. with more ships and men for carrying on his wars than any other place in the kingdom. The good people of Yarmouth are now more peaceably employed in their various useful avocations, not the least important of which is the herring-fishing industry. Michael Drayton, in Part 2 of his 'Poly-Olbion' (1622), says of it:

> Whose fishing through the Realme, doth her so much renowne,
> Where those that with their nets still haunt the boundless lake,
> Here such a sumptuous feast of salted Herrings make,
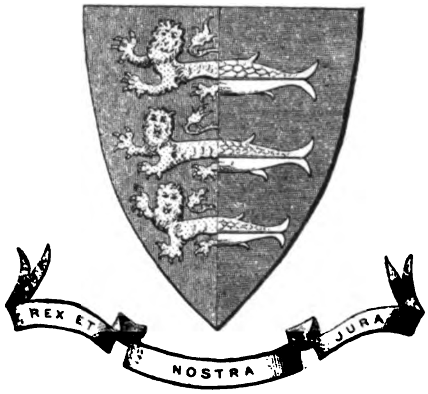
> As they had robb'd the Sea of all his former store,
> And past that very howre, it could produce no more.



THE ARMS OF GREAT YARMOUTH.

In the autumn of every year many millions of herrings are landed at Yarmouth; for instance, during four months in 1902 (August 23 to December 20) the official figures gave a total of 611,379,418 herrings. Thomas Nash—who, by the way, was a native of the neighbouring town of Lowestoft—in his 'Lenten Stuffe' (1599), a burlesque panegyric of the red herring, says that the red herring (bloater) originated in this way. A Yarmouth fisherman, having caught more herrings than he could either sell or eat, hung some up in his smoky cabin. Some days afterwards he was astonished to find that they had changed their colour from 'white as whalesbone' to 'red as a lobster.' Nash concludes his eulogy of the bloater in these words: 'No more winde will I spend upon it but this—Saint Denis for Fraunce, Saint James for Spaine, Saint Patrike for Ireland, Saint George for England, and the Red Herring for Yarmouth!'

In regard to the town, its outstanding features are the Market Place, the Rows, and the Parish Church. Three acres in extent, the Market Place is one of the most spacious in the kingdom. Now devoted to sales and purchases of various kinds, its site has been the scene of strange doings—men and women whipped at the cart-tail for punishment, bull-baiting and bullock-roasting. Here stood the stocks and pillory, and at the Market Cross (now demolished) banns of marriage were proclaimed in Cromwellian times. And what shall be said of those unique thoroughfares, the long narrow passages known as the Rows? The origin of the name has been conjectured as derived from rhodio (to walk), the Saxon rowa (a rank), and, what is a more probable source, the French rue, a street or lane. These Rows are 145 in number and their total length exceeds seven miles. Six feet is their average width, but the narrowest—Kitty Witches Row—is only 2 feet 3 inches wide. (Of this a photograph is given on page 512.) Each of these quaint alleys was formerly known by name, but in 1804 the Corporation decreed that they should be numbered. Some of the names were very curious — Pot-in-hand Row, Post Office Hall Row, Split Gutter Row, and Snatchbody Row; the only musical designation was Horn Row. Various theories have been put forth as to their peculiar construction. One is, the limited space within the fortifications when the early builders had to meet the demands of a rapidly growing population, many people being attracted to the town for the flourishing fishing operations therein carried on. Manship, the historian of the town, writing in 1619, regarded the Rows as a means of defence; he says 'every householder to his private dwelling hath of all necessaries very convenient conveyance and the same in time of hostility, for the defence and safeguard of the town, is very meet and necessary, for one man against twenty, with shot and powder, is able to make resistance.' He goes on to say, in reference to their close quarters, 'yet is there not any more division in comeliness, to be by the eye discovered, amongst them, than unpleasantness to the ear in music, consisting of many discords which do make a perfect concord.' At one time these narrow passages were inhabited by the wealthy burgesses of Yarmouth, and many of the houses, now occupied by the poorer classes, have curiously panelled rooms, with decorated ceilings. Although the Rows are so narrow, they are kept beautifully clean and the inhabitants seem to thrive in their confined surroundings. Here and there flowers brighten the dreary brickwork of the houses—'wonderful nasturtiums and scarlet runners are reared from green boxes, filled with that scarce commodity, vegetable mould,' to quote from an article, entitled 'The Norfolk Gridiron,' in Household Words (edited by Charles Dickens) of April 16, 1853. In the same article we read:

> They [the Rows] are the chosen locality of numerous little shopkeepers. If you want a stout pair of hob-nailed shoes, or a scientifically-oiled dreadnought, or a dozen of bloaters, or a quadrant or compass, or a bunch of turnips the best in the world, or a woollen comforter and nightcap for one end of your person, and worsted overall stockings for the other, or a plate of cold boiled leg of pork stuffed with parsley, or a ready-made waistcoat, with blazing pattern and bright glass buttons—with any of these you can soon be accommodated in one or other of the paved rows.
> Here, you have a board announcing the luxurious interval during which hot joints are offered to the satisfaction of a salt water appetite; from twelve to two no one need suffer hunger. . . . Elsewhere is the notice over the door that, within, 'Live and boil'd shrimps are sold BY THE CATCHER.' Shrimps unadulterated, caught and sold by the very catcher himself, the original article, and no mistake! *

Before making our way to the Parish Church, reference may be made to the ancient Waits of the town. In 1555 the Corporation resolved that 'there be three waits who could play upon the shalmes (or shawms)', that they were 'to have wages as the old waits had' in addition to the sum of 6*s.* 8*d.* for their livery, every member of the Corporation being required to contribute to their support. In 1577 the Corporation decreed that the Town Waits 'should begin their service at the Nativity of Our Lady and end at the Annunciation: and such as should refuse them their wages, were to be committed to prison.' They had a house assigned to them as, in 1639, 'the Waits' house was ordered to be repaired and let.' In 1695 the Corporation resolved not to suffer any plays or shows in the town unless 'the town music' was employed: two years later the bailiffs and justices were called upon to reform the Waits and prescribe rules for their future government. These musicians, then five in number, were required to play before the bailiffs for the time being upon St. John's Day, St. Michael's Day, and at the Waters; as also upon all scarlet days and other public feasts when their attendance should be required; and to play about the town in a body together on the morning of every Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday, from mid-September to the 1st of March yearly (the winter months!); their salary was £4, with a cloak, or livery, every seventh year. In the 14th century they played on the leads of the Staple Wood House—'every Sunday for the most part in summer season, after Evening Prayer ended, the Waits or Musicians of Yarmouth do resound forth several consorts of musical instruments, most melodious and delightful harmony.'

Yarmouth has the largest parish church in England! No wonder the townsfolk are proud of this distinction, and a warm welcome is sure to be extended to the Church Congress which is to meet for the first time in the town in October. This noble building, dedicated to St. Nicholas, was founded and built by Herbert de Losinga, one of the chief ecclesiastics at the Court of Robert of Normandy. He came over to England with William Rufus in 1087; in 1091 he became the last of the ancient bishops of Thetford, and in 1094 procured the transference of the see from Thetford to Norwich. Consecrated in 1119, this Norman church was much smaller than the present vast edifice. Only the tower piers and Norman windows in the tower remain, and the great piles on which the pillars rest are the oldest part of the church. Between the years 1190 and 1200, in the reigns of Richard Cœur de Lion and John, the church was enlarged by the addition of narrow aisles, about thirteen feet wide, the 'string course' of which may be seen above the outside of the nave arches, and by lengthening the building to the point where the font now stands. The length of the chancel at that time is unknown.

* For further details concerning these curious thoroughfares, see an interesting pamphlet entitled 'The ancient rows of Great Yarmouth,' by Mr. Edward J. Lupson, the venerable parish clerk.

In the reign of Henry III. the church was still further enlarged by the erection of the present spacious north and south aisles consecrated in 1251. These aisles were built, not for congregational purposes, but to provide room for the private chapels supported by the religious guilds for which 'Greate Yermouthe' was famous, and which were then coming much into favour and practical use. There were no fewer than eighteen of these chapels in St. Nicholas, but unfortunately no plan of them has survived, and, except the merest fragments of piscinæ, aumbries, and canopies, they have been destroyed. Splendidly appointed and richly decorated, the windows of these chapels were filled with priceless glass and the floor covered with costly sepulchral brasses of great magnificence. To this date (A.D. 1251) belongs the main porch. Thirty-five years later (1286), in the reign of Edward I., the chancel aisles were added and consecrated. The transepts were added between 1320 and 1330, therefore the church, which took about 225 years to complete, may be said to have assumed its present form in the year 1330. An enormous enlargement of the church, which would have made it as large as Gloucester Cathedral, was contemplated in the 14th century, but the 'black death,' which ravaged the town in 1348, put a stop to the building operations; the remains of the foundations of this proposed addition are still to be seen beyond the west door.

Much damage was done to the church in 1550-52 by the mistaken zeal of those who regarded beauty as inconsistent with true devotion, and for a hundred years the sacred edifice remained in a very desolate condition. In 1649 the church was divided by great walls into three places of worship, the Independents taking the chancel, the chancel aisles, and sanctuary; the Presbyterians the north aisle; while the Church of England were allowed to use the nave and south aisle. Huge and unsightly galleries had to be erected by the church folk in their allotted part of the building in order to provide the necessary space for their congregations. Although at the Restoration the edifice again came into the possession of the Church of England, the great dividing walls were not removed until 200 years later (in 1864); the chancel and north aisle were practically unused and allowed to fall into a ruinous condition—indeed at one time the whole church narrowly escaped being condemned as past repair. Now, however, this magnificent old church is open from end to end, and from north to south, in all its spacious stateliness. The length of the church is 236 feet; width, 112 feet (six feet wider than York Minster); width of transepts, 150 feet; the total area is 25,023 square feet, only 77 square feet less than Tewkesbury Abbey, and 1,008 square feet more than St. Michael's Church, Coventry.

A YARMOUTH ROW.

KITTY WITCHES ROW.

(Photograph by Mr. Thomas Ayers, Great Yarmouth.)

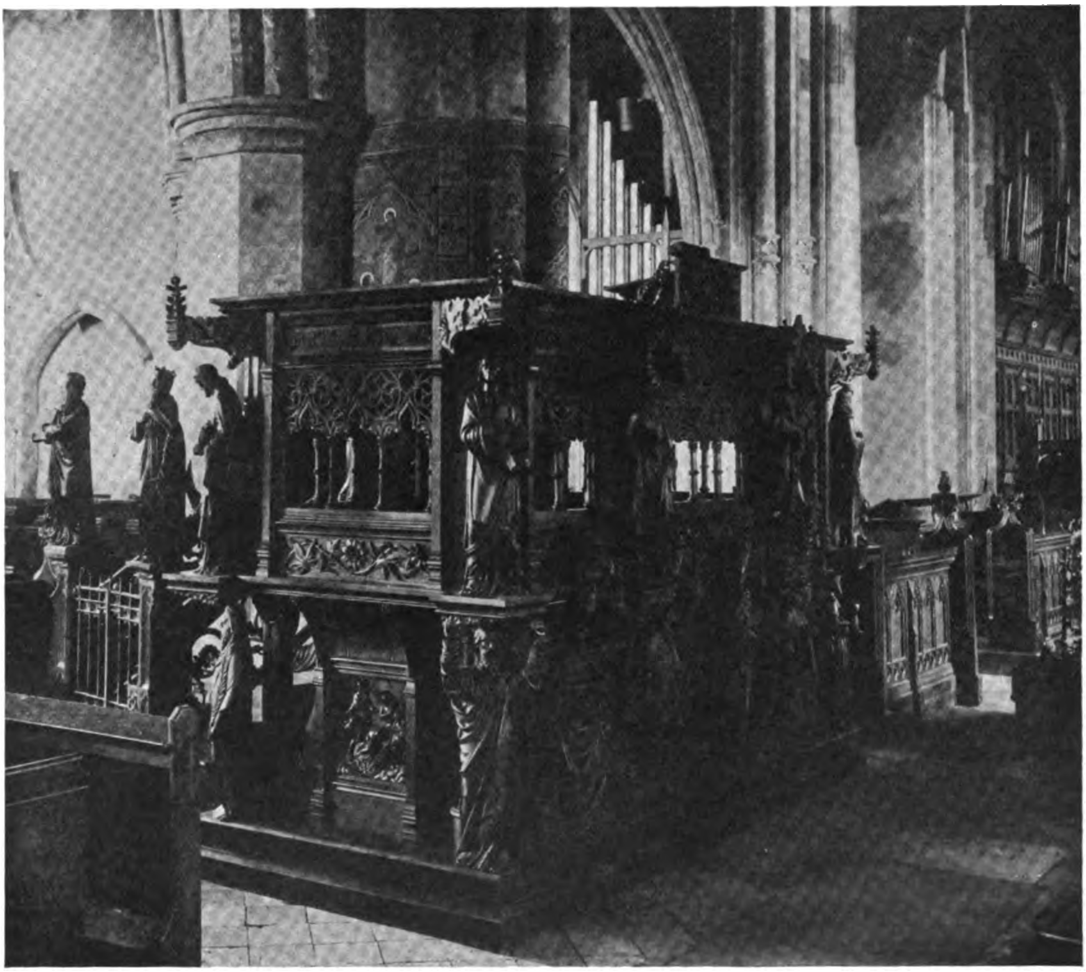
Great Yarmouth Parish Church has been the scene of some strange happenings during its long history. In the year 1287, the sea flowed into the building to the extent of four feet and the town was flooded. For more than a hundred years during the 15th and 16th centuries, sacred dramas and mysteries were performed in the church. In 1541 'four merchant heretics created a great disturbance during service'; this was on October 28, and five days afterwards 'a merchant and shoemaker were fined 2*s.* each for selling a last of white herrings in the Church.' Nelson visited Yarmouth on November 6, 1800, and went to the Parish Church, and as the great hero entered the building, 'See the conquering hero comes' was played on the organ.

Among the objects of special interest, the bowl of the font is the oldest, having been in the church for 700 years. In the centre of the south aisle wall is the tomb of Sir John Fastolf, the great warrior and a man of great influence in the reigns of Edward III. and Richard II.; he built Caister Castle and died in 1383. The finest window in the church, regarded from an architectural point of view, is the Early English window at the west end of the south aisle. The reredos was erected in 1880, and the remarkable pulpit (of which an illustration is given opposite) was completed in 1885 at a cost of £579 16*s.*, from the plans of Canon Venables, whose enthusiastic labours on behalf of the church of which he was formerly vicar are worthily commemorated in this handsome feature of the building. At the west end is the famous whalebone seat, formed from a portion of the skull of a whale fifty-one feet in length, which was cast up by the sea close to Caister in 1582. In 1606 the churchwardens invested eight shillings in giving the whalebone (or the whale-skull) seat a coat of paint! For more than 200 years this curious seat stood just outside the church, but for a very long time it has occupied its present recessed position. Standing in the north transept is another curiosity — an ancient revolving reading-desk (see the photograph on page 516). This ingenious and useful contrivance enables the student before he applies himself to his studies to arrange the works of reference he may require, and then to bring any of them before him by simply giving the desk a turn. It has six shelves, with an aggregate length of nearly 24 feet, and is so cleverly arranged mechanically that the shelves severally maintain one angle while the whole revolves.

Not the least interesting feature of the church is the library, which consists of about 320 volumes. Among the Bibles are Tyndale's, 1531; the Great Bible (or Cranmer's), 1541; the 'Breeches' Bible, 1582; and the 'Vinegar' Bible, 1717. Of the Fathers—are the works of St. Augustine (edn. 1528), St. Chrysostom, Cyprian and others. The collection includes an imperfect Roman Missal (Venice, 1547); a black-letter Prayer Book (1683) and 'a fine specimen of 17th century verbosity' by one Thomas Adams: it is a commentary on the second Epistle of St. Peter, a book in the Bible which consists of three short chapters, but Mr. Adams has so much light to throw upon it that his commentary occupies 1,634 folio pages! Here is also a manuscript roll containing the Book of Esther, exquisitely written in Hebrew unpointed and illuminated: it is probably the handiwork of a Spanish Jew late in the 15th century.

The custodian of the library is Mr. Edward J. Lupson, the author of a very interesting history of the Parish Church, who has held the office of parish clerk for nearly fifty years. Mr. Lupson says that he has officiated at no fewer than 12,479 marriages and that he has given away 1,324 brides! In the book above-mentioned he gives some quaint and amusing information from the church registers, especially the marriage section. Under Similarity of Names (the bridegroom's always being first) he gives Coe-Cole, Pye-Pyke; Appropriate Combinations include Orange-Black, Carrier-Porter, England-Brittain; specimens of Jingles are Cook-Took, Lark-Clark, Bell-Pell; and in regard to Irregularities we find King-Mouse, Lion-Herring, Whale-Swan. Mr. Lupson amusingly comments on about 180 of the 'extremely curious and accommodating combinations' of names he has found in the marriage registers; here are some samples of his wit:

Samuel Free Lydia Male	Anomalous. Samuel married a male: and Lydia accepted matrimonial bonds to become free.
Edward Wright Susannah Rivett	When Edward found the right rivet, he made the rivet wright.
John Trotter Hannah Lightfoot	How could a trotter go satisfactorily without a light foot?



THE PULPIT.

Photograph by Mr. Alfred W. Yallop, Great Yarmouth.)

From the burial registers, which date from 1558, Mr. Lupson has extracted the following: 'John Littleproud of yᵉ Musicianers'; this humble-named gentleman was probably one of the ancient Waits of the town.

It is now time to consider the musical associations of England's largest parish church. According to Henry Swinden, the antiquary and a historian of Yarmouth, two old church books contained the following memoranda in regard to the organs: 'Our Lady's organs' (1465), 'the old and new organs' (1485), 'the great old organs' (1486), 'Jesus' organs' and the 'new organs (1510).' H also speaks of 'a fine organ' erected, in 1545, on the north side of a chapel at the east end; and Manship, writing in 1619, says that on the north side of the chancel was 'a fair pair of organs.' The Corporation records show that, in 1588, an order was made for the payment to 'Andrew, the organ maker, of 2*s.* 6*d.* that was due to him for six years, and that the same be paid yearly by the church-wardens.' Here may be mentioned that so far back as 1462-63 one Arnold Johnson, of Gorleston, Orgglmaker, is mentioned in the Yarmouth Corporation records; in 1486-87, John, an organ-maker, is also referred to; while in 1493 Robert, the organ-maker of Norwich, was fined for selling beer within the town, 'contrary to the assize.'

Nothing definite as to the scope of the organ in the church is known before the year 1733, when a splendid new instrument was erected by the celebrated artificer Abraham Jordan, 'of the parish of St. John upon Walbrooke'; at the same time, he was ordered to build an organ for St. George's Chapel, a chapel-of-ease to St. Nicholas, at a cost of £500. The organ in the Parish Church—a remarkably fine specimen of Jordan's work—cost £900: it consisted of three manuals and contained the following stops:

This organ, enclosed in a handsome oak case (see the illustration opposite), originally stood in a gallery at the west end of the south aisle, then partitioned off from the rest of the church. It was opened on December 20, 1733, by Humphry Cotton, organist of Norwich Cathedral, who received a fee of two guineas for his services. The Norwich Gazette of December 8 thus forecasted the great event:

> On Thursday the 20th instant, the fine organ at the Great Church in Yarmouth, made by Messieurs Jordan & Harris, and approved of by most judges of musick in London as a masterpiece, will be opened with great solemnity, there being a sermon on the occasion; likewise Mr. Purcell's grand Te Deum and Jubilate, will be performed by several voices and instruments. In the evening will be an assembly, introduced by a concert of musick. The church will be opened at 10 in the morning.

The sermon preached by the vicar, the Rev. Dr. Thomas Macro, on that occasion was published 'at the request of the Corporation' under the title 'The melody of the heart.' The following is a short extract from that eloquent discourse:

> Since the organ, for its excellency and comprehensiveness, hath been adopted into the service of Christian worship, let the hand that plays it know its bounds, and make it minister to the end of true devotion, to the delight and edification of the people. . . . Let not the harmony of its sounds be frisking, airy, or ludicrous, which tends to dissipate the thoughts and break the attention of the mind; but let it be always accommodated to the pure and heavenly matter, and to the sublime and majestic style of those divine psalms and hymns that are appointed to be sung to it.

In 1793 the organ was repaired, at a cost of £104. 4*s.*, by Michael Crotch, of Norwich, probably a near relative of Dr. Crotch the composer. George P. England added an octave and a-half of pedal pipes in 1812, and Gray further enlarged the instrument in 1844. Twenty-five years later Hill removed the organ to a gallery at the west end of the north transept, when the CC compass and equal temperament were then adopted. It was opened by Henry Smart on February 3, 1870. The instrument was again removed in 1875, Messrs. Bishop undertaking the work, and placed in the two chancel aisles; thus it became a divided organ.

In 1903, Mr. James J. Binns, of Leeds, entirely reconstructed and enlarged the organ at a cost of £3,550 and placed it in its present position, the fourth it has occupied in the church! The following is the specification of this remarkably fine four-manual instrument:

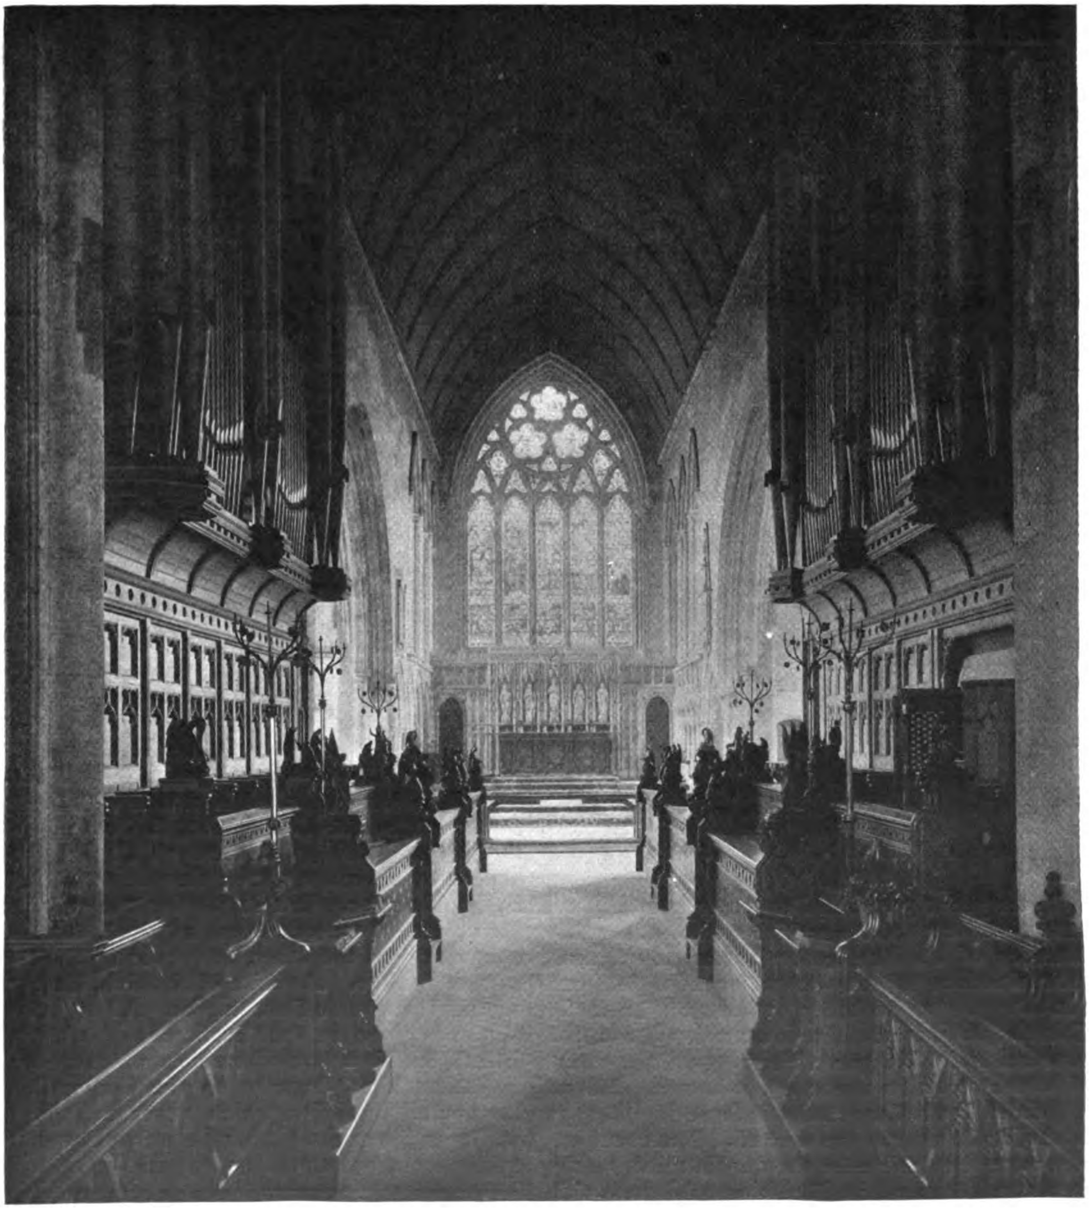
The action is Mr. Binns's patent tubular pneumatic system, and his ingenious invention in the way of stop control is applied to all the stops, this interchangeable combination action providing unlimited opportunity of variation to the player.

The wind is generated by two Sturtevant fans, propelled by a gas engine all placed in a separate building, and kept at an even temperature.



THE CHANCEL AND ORGAN.

(Photograph by Mr. Thomas Ayers, Great Yarmouth.)

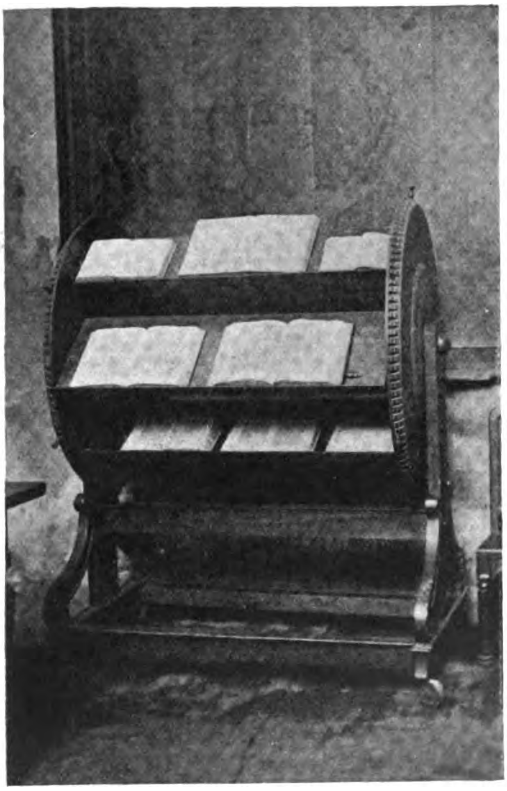
As will be seen from the illustration on page 515 the organ is a divided one, placed behind each side of the choir stalls in the chancel, though the choir now occupy seats further westward in the church, to be nearer the congregation. An elaborate screen of wainscot oak encloses each portion of the organ. The back enclosures, however, consist of two fine old cases—that on the north is Jordan's imposing original case (see the illustration opposite), and on the south side is also another ancient case of stately design which came from St. Peter Mancroft Church, Norwich. It seems strange that these two old cases should form the backs instead of the fronts of the present organ, which would certainly have been more picturesque and added greatly to the dignity of the instrument.



ANCIENT LIBRARY READING-DESK.

In the year 1454 John Bowyer, organist, and ten others—among whom was Richard Southwell, Esq., Member of Parliament for Yarmouth—received their freedom of the town for 26*s.* 8*d.* each. Mr. Bowyer was probably organist of the Parish Church; but more definite information is available concerning Dr. Musgrave Heighington, the source of whose degree in music is not known. He was appointed (by the Corporation in those days) in 1733, when Jordan's organ was erected. The committee who were responsible for the appointment, 'taking into consideration his [Heighington's] great skill, recommended he be allowed £80 a year, he providing an assistant [to officiate at St. George's Chapel], and to keep both organs in tuneable repair, and to instruct the Hospital and charity children in singing to the organ the Psalm tunes now in use and such new ones as shall be thought proper.' It was further arranged that 'the Doctor and his assistant should play alternately every Sunday forenoon and afternoon at the Church and Chapel, also on every Holyday in the forenoon at each place, and every Wednesday in the forenoon at the Church; the Psalms and voluntaries to be used as in the parish churches in London where they have organs, and that at church every Sunday, scarlet days and Sessions, a voluntary be played before divine service when the Mayor and Corporation are going to their seats.' In 1745 the salary of the organist at the parish church was reduced from £60 to £40, 'to be paid by the churchwardens, and the chapel organist to have £20 a year, to be paid by the water bailiffs.' Soon after, however, on April 9, 1746, Dr. Heighington was 'discharged, having absented and removed himself and family from this parish.' *

Mr. Potts Crookenden was then appointed organist of the church and chapel at a salary of £40. He was probably succeeded by Johann Christian Mantel, a native of Erfurth, as his tombstone records. He had been previously organist of South Benfleet Church, Essex, as recorded by Eitner in his Quellen Lexikon. Eitner, however, makes no mention of the Yarmouth appointment, and the list of compositions is incomplete; nor does he give the date of Mantel's death, which took place on December 28, 1761, as his tombstone also records. Mantel composed two sets of 'Six lessons for the harpsichord or organ (Op. 1 and 2)—the latter were published by William Smith, at 'the golden Bass, in Middle Row, Holborn'—and 'Six concertos for the organ or harpsichord' (Op. 3); and there are some manuscript songs by him in the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge. His successor, Henry R. Chicheley, a blind organist, is said to have had 'the soul as well as the hand of a master,' a precious and ofttimes rare combination of gifts in an organist. Isaac Lewis, a subsequent organist, held the offices of 'searcher and coast waiter at the Customs.'

Although not strictly organist of the parish church, John Eager must not escape notice. Appointed by the Corporation, in October, 1803, to the organistship of St. George's Chapel, Eager, like his predecessors, took turn about with the Parish Church organist in playing the services in both places, therefore he was as much organist of one church as the other, and probably the better man of the two. A native of Norwich, Eager was a rather remarkable East Anglian. A long account of him is given in the 'Dictionary of Musicians' (1824), but his more modern biographers are wrong in calling him 'Organist to the Corporation of Yarmouth,' an office which never existed: the St. George's organistship having been a Corporation appointment has doubtless caused the confusion.

* These dates, obtained from official sources by Mr. Fred Johnson, correct erroneous ones in the various biographical notices of Dr. Heighington, who held the Yarmouth appointment from 1733 to 1746. Mr. Johnson's valuable researches were printed in the Yarmouth Mercury of June 14, July 5 and 12, 1902.

In August, 1804, Eager conducted performances of 'The Messiah' and 'Judas Maccabæus' in the Parish Church, on which occasion Dr. Beckwith presided at the organ, and, according to a preliminary announcement, 'the band will comprehend such professional talents as will render it in every respect complete.'

It is much more interesting, however, to learn that Eager hospitably entertained Samuel Wesley during his visit to Yarmouth in 1815. But Wesley may tell the story himself in a letter he wrote to his friend Vincent Novello, the original of which is preserved in the British Museum:

Yarmouth,
Dear N. Tuesday, July 18, 1815.

I was informed that you expected me to write from this place, and I almost believe that you said as much to me yourself: if therefore I am mistaken in both instances, your duty will be to make me refund the postage at our next meeting.

I and my coadjutor Charley Smith have had a mixture of good air, good bathing, good company, good cheer and cold attendance. . . . Our party [performances] ought to have taken place in the week of the races, when the town is always sure to be full and the people all mad for any public fun, from an Oratorio to Punch.

However, the people who did attend appeared all very much delighted, and some of them (especially the visitors from Norwich) were good judges, and of course much tickled with such a row as we gave them upon the most magnificent organ I have yet heard, and in which I think you would agree with me. Your MS. music-book has been of special service to us: the triple fugue in E♭ [Bach's St. Ann's] was received with the same kind of wonder that people express when they see an air balloon ascend for the first time. Smith, I believe, planted two or three spies to watch the effects of such sounds upon their countenance and consequently, mind.

The 30 Variations [Bach] we mean to try to-morrow upon the said organ: this will be a treat to Mr. Eager, the organist, at whose house I am staying and who wishes to be introduced to you on his arrival in London, which he expects to be in the next Christmas holidays.

You will find him rather an extraordinary man, and knowing several things well. As a musician he has had no advantages whatever but from his own industrious and persevering assiduity: he has therefore gained a pretty fair proportion of pretty dry theory, having fagged at more treatises than have done him much good, which you know is very easy to do: he is a bad player on the organ, a tolerable one on the piano, and a very good leader on the violin; has studied several wind instruments, viz., horn, trumpet, flute, clarinett, oboe, and bassoon, and can play them all tolerably. . . . He has read a good deal, and is a good grammarian in French and Italian . . . so that you ken, my gude mon, that this 'mine host of the garter' is not to be sneezed at, and I assure you he is quite agog for an introduction to you, which I rather wonder at, after my giving him my opinion.

I purpose with God's blessing, and the devil's assistance (or the coachman's, which is pretty much the same), to be in London on Friday morning by 9 o'clock: it is highly probable that I shall look in at your shop [church] either in the morning or evening of Sunday, when we may talk over some of my Yarmouth pranks more ad longum.

I did not mention the amount of our receipts. We share £22, which is better than losing as much, you know.

Adieu for the present, believing me as always

Yours most cordially,
S. Wesley.

To Mr. Novello,
No. 240, Oxford Street,
London.

The 'Charley Smith' of Wesley's letter was a well-known bass vocalist and composer, who had then recently married a Miss Booth, of Norwich: he and Samuel Wesley were evidently colleagues in their professional visit to Yarmouth.

In August, 1820, a 'Grand Musical Festival,' lasting three days, was held in St. Nicholas' Church and the Town Hall, Yarmouth, the programmes largely consisting of Handel, with selections from Mozart's 'Requiem' and Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives.' Mr. Eager 'conducted the instrumental band and Mr. Buck presided at the organ,' on which occasion the Parish Church 'presented a very brilliant appearance from the number of lamps and candles with which the orchestra (expressly built for the occasion) and the other parts of the edifice were decorated.' In addition to exercising his musical gifts in Yarmouth, Mr. Eager pursued the avocation of a dancing-master—Wesley designates him Maître de Ballet—and he was a doughty champion of the Logier system of teaching music. He afterwards settled at Edinburgh and died there June 1, 1853. The 'Dictionary of Musicians' (1824) places to his creative credit a Pianoforte concerto and a 'Collection of Songs,' but neither of these publications has found its way to the British Museum Library.

In December, 1843, George Warne, another blind organist, was appointed. Until that year he had been organist of the Temple Church, and thus he was the immediate predecessor of Dr. E. J. Hopkins in that appointment. Like Dr. Hopkins, Warne was noted for his interludes and improvisations, at that time played between the verses of the hymns. On Midsummer-day, 1850, Henry Stonex, a native of Norwich and a pupil of the celebrated Dr. Zachariah Buck of that city, was elected organist without competition by reason of his 'good abilities.' An excellent musician and an estimable man, Mr. Stonex discharged the duties appertaining to his office with conspicuous ability for over forty-four years: moreover, during that long period he rendered excellent service in the cause of music at Yarmouth. He died on January 10, 1897, much esteemed for his 'kindness of heart and never failing cheerfulness, even in the midst of trouble'; and to those who knew him 'his friendship and memory will always be lovingly cherished.'

MR. HAYDON HARE, MUS.B.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER OF GREAT YARMOUTH PARISH CHURCH.

(Photograph by Mr. Frank H. Sayers, Great Yarmouth.)

Mr. Haydon William Hare, Mus.B., the present organist of the church, was born at Stamford, Lincolnshire, July 2, 1869. He began his musical career as a chorister of St. John's Church, Stamford, and studied the pianoforte and organ under the organist of that church, Dr. A. Gore Mitchell. He afterwards became a chorister at Peterborough Cathedral, singing as one of the four boy altos, there being no men altos at that time in the choir. He gained a musical scholarship from the choir, and a King's scholarship at the King's School at Peterborough. At the breaking of his voice in 1884, he became an articled pupil of and afterwards assistant to Dr. Haydn Keeton, organist of Peterborough Cathedral, and in the same year, aged fifteen, he obtained his first organ and choirmaster appointment at Ryhall Church, a village near Stamford. One year later, aged sixteen, he was appointed organist and choirmaster of All Saints' Church, Stamford, his native town, an office he held with distinction for ten years. His vicar, Canon Oldfield, testified to him as 'a man of persevering and unflagging energy,' and as one who 'neglects nothing and takes pains with every trifle.' During his Stamford appointment he discharged the duties of choirmaster, from 1893 to 1895, at Bourne Abbey church. Early in 1895 he obtained his present post, that of organist and choirmaster of Great Yarmouth Parish Church.

As a choral conductor Mr. Hare has had a varied and successful experience of nearly twenty years. In 1888 he became conductor of the Stamford Musical Society (band and chorus of 120 performers), from 1890 to 1895 he conducted the Bourne Choral Society, and since 1895 the Great Yarmouth Musical Society has had the advantage of his skilful leadership. The Society—founded by Mr. Stonex in 1857 and conducted by him for many years—has given excellent performances, under Mr. Hare's baton, of the following works between the years 1895 and 1907, with a band and chorus numbering 200 performers:

Messiah (twice)	Handel.	Ancient Mariner	Barnett.
Creation (twice)	Haydn.	Golden Legend (twice)	Sullivan.
Last Judgment	Spohr.	Martyr of Antioch	,,
Elijah (twice)	Mendelssohn.	Phaudrig Crohoore	Stanford.
St. Paul	,,	Ode on St. Cecilia's Day (twice)*	Parry.
Hymn of Praise (twice)	,,	St. John's Eve	Cowen.
May Queen	Sterndale Bennett.	Hiawatha (Parts I. & II.)	Coleridge-Taylor.
Bride of Dunkerron	Smart.
Jacob	,,

* One performance was conducted by the composer.

In co-operation with Mr. Ernest Tunbridge (stage manager) he has conducted successful performances of the following Sullivan operas: 'Patience,' 'Iolanthe,' 'The Mikado,' 'Yeomen of the Guard,' and 'The Gondoliers' (twice). In 1895 Mr. Hare was selected to train the Great Yarmouth contingent (about forty voices) of the Norwich Musical Festival chorus, and this year, in succession to Dr. A. H. Mann, he was appointed chorus-master of the festival to be held at Norwich in 1908.

In regard to academic distinction there can be placed to Mr. Hare's credit the following diplomas: 1889, Associate of the Royal College of Organists, and in 1890, the Fellowship; 1892, Bachelor of Music at the University of Durham; and, 1894, Associate (organ) of the Royal College of Music. His published compositions consist of part-songs: he has also written a highly-effective Te Deum and an excellent Communion Service for male voices, both of which are in constant use at the church.

To return to Great Yarmouth Church. The choir consists of sixty-six voices—forty boys and twenty-six men, most of the latter being volunteers. The Vicar, Canon Willink, not only takes a very warm and practical interest in the music of the church, but regards Mr. Hare as a valuable colleague in the conduct of services that are as beautifully rendered as they are devotionally inspiring. One of the special services is a united Harvest Festival, which has been held for the past nine or ten years. On this occasion all the choirs of the town take part, making a great choir of 250 voices: it is not surprising to learn that this service is thrilling in its thanksgiving uplift of jubilant music. The church is seated for 3,000 persons; but frequently during the holiday season the vast edifice is filled in every part by some 4,000 worshippers; at such times the sight of so vast a concourse of people and the sound of their congregational song is peculiarly impressive and solemn.

THE REV. JOHN WAKEFIELD WILLINK, M.A.,

VICAR OF GREAT YARMOUTH AND HON. CANON OF NORWICH.

(Photograph by Mr. Alfred W. Yallop, Great Yarmouth.)

In the concluding words of an interesting paper on the church, read before the Norfolk and Norwich Archæological Society, Canon Willink said: 'Our forefathers have loved this church and have worshipped here and worked for it through many generations. From countless hearts and from countless lives it has drawn forth the best things that man has got to give to God, and many indeed are they who will have cause to thank God throughout eternity for the Church of St. Nicholas.

In addition to the authorities above named, thanks are due to Dr. A. H. Mann, organist of King's College, Cambridge, for the loan of his valuable 'notes' on East Anglian music.

MR. HARRY EVANS.

'The Eisteddfod is taking hold in an increasing degree—I will not say upon the masses of the people, because I think they have always given it sympathy, but upon all classes of the community. Here . . . . you meet for the purpose of giving it a recognised, an impartial, a universal means of countenance and support. May these meetings flourish; and may the attachment of the Welsh people to their institutions and their tongue always have fair play, and result in their being maintained, not only for the gratification of their tastes, but, as I believe, for the elevation of their characters, and for the promotion of the best and highest welfare of the country.' These words, spoken by Mr. Gladstone nearly twenty years ago, may serve as a fitting prelude to the career of a worthy son of the Eisteddfod, who forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Mr. Harry Evans was born, on May-day, 1873, at Dowlais, Glamorganshire, the famous iron-manufacturing town of South Wales. Dowlais has always been noted for its singers (solo and choral) and conductors. Miss Megan Watts (Mrs. Watts-Hughes), Eos Morlais, Mr. Daniel Price (who gained one of the first open scholarships at the Royal College of Music and is now on the teaching staff of that institution), and Miss Maggie Davies—all these may be instanced as vocalists who have made more than a local reputation. 'In the seventies,' says Mr. Evans, 'Dowlais was held in great repute in the Principality as a choral town possessing choirs and conductors, that struck terror into the hearts of other competitors at Eisteddfodau. Not the least distinguished among those choral conductors was my father, John Evans (Eos Myrddin), who left behind him a long and creditable record of honest work in the cause of music. Left an orphan at five years of age, he was brought up by an uncle and aunt, and at the age of nine he had to go to the colliery to help his uncle: of education he had practically none. After reaching manhood he became known locally as a bass solo-singer and the winner of many prizes at competitions. He had a phenomenal voice in regard to quality, volume, and compass—low C (2nd basses) and high A (1st tenors) were often patterned by him in the course of a rehearsal. He also played the flute and became a fairly good performer on the violoncello.

'When Eos Morlais, the famous choral conductor, left Dowlais, my father conducted the principal choir in the town, and for thirty years led a busy life in his spare time as a choir-trainer. Competitions absorbed most of his energies, but he conducted the first performance of the "Messiah" ever given in Dowlais! In a few years he established something like a record with his Bethania choir, winning eighteen first-prizes out of twenty-one competitions, dividing two prizes and losing only one. Those were the days of small prizes, but the conductor generally got a trophy in the form of a medal, metronome, baton, or oak chair, and these prizes we, his children, value very highly. His choir consisted entirely of working people—colliers and iron-workers; at that time even most of the sopranos worked either at the pit-head or in the ironworks, and all the altos were boys. Scarcely any of these singers could read music, and my father used to have them to our house, in batches of six or seven at a time, and teach them by ear. They were quick to learn and never forgot. There were no pianofortes used in those days—everything was unaccompanied and "dropping in pitch" was unknown. My father, who was a good reader of the staff notation and knew nothing of tonic sol-fa, possessed unbounded energy and enthusiasm for music. He was an ordinary iron-worker—a roller of steel plates for the Admiralty—and only a pair of tongs separated him from the white heat of the iron he welded into shape. When he worked at nights he would, during his supper-hour, rush down to the school-room in his leather clothes and conduct the choir until it was time for him to return to the furnace. He was known to take a choir to a competition, win the prize, return home, get into his working clothes, and then work all night! In his later years it was a great pleasure to me to play to him his favourite choruses, while he, with closed eyes, would fight his battles over again. He was precentor of Bethania Congregational Church for forty years, and died suddenly one Saturday evening in August, 1905, at a religious meeting held in the same schoolroom and near to the exact spot where he had stood and toiled as conductor for so many long years.' No comment is necessary on the interesting life-story of this typical Welshman, in whose soul burned the fire of the love of music, to become, like the iron furnace at which he stood day by day and night by night, its own refining influence.

The fifth child of a family of ten children, Harry Evans learned the tonic sol-fa notation from his eldest sister, and at the age of five he could play hymn-tunes from that notation on the harmonium. His father taught him the staff notation, and at the age of seven he made his first public appearance at a penny reading, when he played a solo on the harmonium. Although it was a small instrument he could scarcely blow it, but the audience were so pleased with the little fellow's performance that they made a special collection for him, which amounted to something over five shillings. 'This was my first fee,' he says, 'it was given me all in coppers, and I well remember how proud I felt in handing the coins to my mother.' In 1883, at the age of ten, Master Evans was appointed 'organist of Gwernllwyn Congregational Church, a post that had been previously held by his friend Dan Price. As a matter of fact, the 'organ' was a large Alexandre harmonium, and the youthful 'organist' was so small that the precentor (father of Mr. Price) arranged a special blowing apparatus at the back of the instrument. His blower, now a thriving tradesman in Dowlais, was 'a most capable and faithful assistant.' Instead of a salary, the good people of Gwernllwyn decided to pay for some pianoforte lessons for their boy-organist. He was accordingly placed under the tuition of the late Mr. Edward Lawrance, whose pupil he remained for two years. Mr. Lawrance, a former pupil of Moscheles at Leipzig, was very kind to the boy and took a great interest in his progress. He carefully graded his technical studies, building upon the foundations of Bertini, Cramer and Moscheles, and forming his taste with Bach, Beethoven and Mendelssohn, giving him nothing lighter than the last-named composer's 'Songs without words.' 'I could play,' he says, 'some of Beethoven's sonatas, and I passed "with honours" the Local Examination held by the Royal Academy of Music (now the Associated Board). This was all the teaching I have had. During the whole time of my lessons with Mr. Lawrance I had no piano to practise upon, so I used to go two or three times a week to the house of a kind lady friend, a member of the church.'

Ever solicitous for the welfare of their young organist, the congregation thought it desirable that he should have an instrument of his own, so they arranged a concert, with the proceeds of which they bought him a small pianoforte. This he still greatly values. He was in great request as a pianist and accompanist, accomplishments rather rare in South Wales at that time, and was regarded as something of a prodigy. 'My friends,' Mr. Evans says, 'were very anxious to send me to London that I might adopt a musical career; but my father, always wise and far-seeing, insisted upon my securing a good general education first, for which I am now very grateful. When I passed through the elementary school I had to compete for a scholarship at a higher grade school. This I won and remained there until I was fourteen. Music, however, was ever the ruling passion, but my father decided that I should enter the scholastic profession that I might be well-equipped educationally and be certain of a livelihood. "After that," he said, "you can do as you like about taking up music." This was a great disappointment to me. For some time I rebelled against my father's decision, and it was only his ultimatum—that if I did not take up the appointment which was awaiting me and that I had secured by examination, I must go to the iron works!—that finally pulverised my opposition. But it was with a heavy heart that, on a certain Monday morning, I, a fourteen-year old pupil-teacher, trudged to the Abermorlais Schools, Merthyr Tydfil, to begin my scholastic career.'

In 1887, simultaneously with his pupil-teacher appointment, Mr. Evans became, by competition, organist of Bethania Congregational Church, Dowlais, where his father was precentor, an office he held with much acceptance for nineteen years, until August, 1906. Up to that time, he had no knowledge whatever of an instrument with pedals, but he soon became passionately fond of the organ. With the exception of St. David's Church, Merthyr Tydfil—of which Mr. Lawrance, his teacher, was organist—organ recitals were then unknown in those parts of Wales, and Mr. Evans was the first Welsh organist to give them in that district. At the same time he worked so assiduously at his scholastic duties that he passed with distinction the South Kensington examinations in mathematics, science and art, winning the district prize in art for the best freehand and perspective drawing. It was a hard life. 'I started from home,' he says, 'at 7.30, in order to be at the morning class (two miles away) by 8 o'clock. School began at 9: the dinner-hour was devoted to study; evening classes lasted till 8.30; and then very often I finished the day with a wild rush up to Dowlais to accompany the choir for an hour or so. I do not know how I managed to get through it all; but I had an indulgent head-master, who let me off to fulfil engagements as accompanist at Eisteddfodau and concerts. Saturday was a free day, but only so far as school duties were concerned, as I was occupied in teaching the pianoforte and organ from early morning till late at night.'

At the end of his pupil-teacher course he entered for the Queen's Scholarship examination for admission to a training college, and, though his attention had been divided between music and school-work, he headed the list in the district; moreover, he came out eighty-eighth on the list for the whole of the United Kingdom and was the top man in his College—Bangor Normal College. Then came the crisis in his life. Acting upon the advice of a medical friend he gave up all idea of Bangor, to adopt music as a profession. But the way did not seem clear. With the scholarship he could remain as a teacher at the Merthyr school at a salary of £40 a year against the £20 he had previously received. 'This meant something to me,' he says, 'as what I earned by music I spent in going about to hear good music, and in purchasing organ, pianoforte and theoretical works. Without consulting anybody, I studied hard at music, and after a year's work went to London in July, 1893, and, to the great surprise of Dowlais, passed the examination for the Associateship of the Royal College of Organists!' He sent in his resignation to the School Board, and at once began to extend his music-teaching connection, acted as pianoforte accompanist to all the famous choirs in the neighbourhood, and was in great demand for organ recitals.

In the autumn of 1893 a representative choral society of 200 voices was formed at Dowlais with Mr. Evans as conductor, and Handel's 'Samson' was performed, with full orchestral accompaniment, before a crowded and enthusiastic audience. 'Acis and Galatea' followed, but the question had to be answered, 'What can Harry Evans do at the Eisteddfod?' Therefore, except for an occasional oratorio, the next few years were devoted to choral competitive work. Success varied—sometimes a first, at other times a second prize; but after the choir had won a £100 prize at Tonypandy in the spring of 1897, Mr. Evans decided to stop the competitive work of the choir. Early in that year he had qualified for the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists, he and one other candidate being the first Welshmen to obtain this diploma. For the next few years he coached various choirs, one of which, in 1905, won the chief choral prize at the National Eisteddfod. In 1898 he formed a ladies' choir at Merthyr Tydfil, which continued for some years with great success. In 1900 these ladies, all of social position, combined with his Dowlais male-voice choir in a performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' an occasion which proved the levelling influence of music, as many of these fair vocalists sang on the same platform with the working men whom their fathers employed. 'But these working-men,' Mr. Evans proudly observes, 'were all gentlemen, and they could sing—indeed, the result was in many ways the best singing I have ever secured. The Dowlais male-voice choir was formed by me in 1899 with a view of competing at the Liverpool National Eisteddfod of 1900. We worked hard for twelve months, and when the fateful day arrived we sang tenth in the order of eleven choirs, one of them being the Manchester Orpheus, which has since achieved fame; but we came off easy winners: thereby was saved the honour of the Welsh nation, as all the other choral prizes that week had been won by English choirs. This Dowlais choir gave concerts in various parts of South Wales, and during Easter, 1901, we sang at six concerts in London with success.'

At the Royal National Eisteddfod of 1901, held at Merthyr Tydfil, Mr. Evans conducted a memorable performance of 'Israel in Egypt,' with a chorus of 500 voices, and at one of the concerts the 'Tannhäuser' overture and Beethoven's C minor Symphony were played under his baton, an orchestral concert being a novelty at this important national meeting. At the Llanelly Eisteddfod, held in the following year, he conducted the choir which won the £200 prize; but that was his last appearance in this capacity, for owing to his increasing engagements as an adjudicator he thought it desirable to give up being a competitor. He, however, kept the choir together for some time, giving performances of 'Elijah,' 'St. Paul,' 'The Revenge,' 'Hiawatha,' 'King Olaf,' and his own 'The Victory of St. Garmon,' and on three occasions he took the choir to London, where they sang at Welsh concerts given at Queen's Hall and elsewhere.

The great change in Mr. Evans's life-work was foreshadowed five years ago, but the story may be told in his own words. 'In the autumn of 1902 I was invited to become conductor of the Liverpool Welsh Choral Union, and although I was aware that there were 100,000 people of Welsh descent in Liverpool, and also that the city had a very fine Eisteddfod choir in 1900, it was all in the nature of an experiment, and I had not the slightest idea that the Society would develop into such an important organization, neither did I think it would be the means of alluring me away from my native heath. The first work we gave was Handel's "Samson," and after that performance and two months' experience of the choir at rehearsal, I found that there were great possibilities here and just the right kind of people to work for Art's sake, with no external considerations other than doing what they could to uphold the reputation of Wales as a choral nation. The decision to restrict the membership of the Society to persons of Welsh descent seemed to be attended with some risk, but now that it has been amply justified in the results, we are proud of that restriction. We began with a membership of 150 voices: now we number 300, each singer having to undergo a test before being admitted to the Society. We had to overcome much prejudice, for instance that Welsh choralists could only sing Handel and Mendelssohn. This we have disproved in our performances of "Hiawatha" and "The Golden Legend," and especially in Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion and the "Dream of Gerontius." We were somewhat doubtful as to the reception the choir would accord the "St. Matthew" Passion, but they sang Bach's music as if they had been accustomed to it all their lives, and the public showed their interest in Bach by the fact that the Philharmonic Hall was sold out ten days before the concert.' That the Liverpool Welsh Choral Union (Undeb Corawl Cymreig Lerpwl) is in a flourishing condition financially as well as musically is shown by the report of the fifth season (1906-07), when the three concerts yielded a profit of £71 6*s.* 6*d.* ('Hiawatha'), £120 11*s.* 3*d.* ('Messiah'), and £78 4*s.* 3*d.* ('St. Matthew' Passion), and that there is a credit balance of £135 7*s.* 1*d.* in the hands of the treasurer, a result upon which the energetic conductor and the able business men on the committee of the Society are to be warmly congratulated. The works selected for performance next season are 'The Martyr of Antioch' (Sullivan), 'Samson' (Handel), and 'The Apostles' (Elgar).

In 1906 Mr. Evans decided to settle in Liverpool, where he leads a busy life, teaching singing, conducting the Liverpool Welsh Choral Union, and holding the appointment of organist and choirmaster at Great George Street Congregational Church. As a composer he attracted considerable attention at the Cardiff Musical Festival of 1904 by his dramatic cantata, for baritone solo and chorus, 'The Victory of St. Garmon,' produced and very favourably received by the public and the critics. For the Royal National Eisteddfod of 1908, to be held at Llangollen, he has composed a dramatic cantata on a Welsh subject, 'Dafydd ap Gwilym.' Like several musicians whose careers have been recorded in The Musical Times, Mr. Evans testifies to the value of 'picking up': he says 'My musical education has been mainly obtained from experience—coming into contact with and learning much from singers, composers, and conductors; spending my savings in going about for many years, to London in particular—Covent Garden Opera, Queen's Hall symphony concerts, Albert Hall oratorios — Birmingham, Leeds, and Three Choirs Festivals. I never came away from any of these performances without having picked up something fresh, and I have always made it a point, and still do so, of hearing anything new, whatever it might cost, and this I consider has been invaluable to me in my musical development.'

In response to a request for his views on the Eisteddfod, Mr. Evans says: 'Well, some of us are much concerned as to its future. I claim to know something about it, being a "child of the Eisteddfod," and owing a great deal to it. This ancient and national institution has undoubtedly rendered great service to music in the past, and many of our best native musicians have been "discovered" there. It is thought that the Eisteddfod—which of course must live in Wales—could be of great service in guiding young people into true artistic paths. There was a time when choirs competed purely for the love of music, when the prizes were small, £10 and £15, and when sight-singing was always included. But now the prizes are enormous, £200 for instance, and no sight-singing is required. But worse than all, the test-pieces do not make for progress. A comparison of present day programmes with those of twenty years ago, reveals the fact that no more demands are made to-day in vocal music, either from the executive or interpretative point of view. Also the same test-pieces are selected over and over again, and are sung by the same choirs. In many instances these test-pieces are not worth the attention of the splendid voices that sing them. Eisteddfod committees have actually been known to be compelled to change a test-piece (which might be somewhat new) at the instance of these choirs, who promise to attend the Eisteddfod only on the condition that one of their favourite "chestnuts" is chosen. The result is that it is a common thing to hear a choir sing one of these pieces in an inferior manner to what they did in previous years. And then what becomes of all the magnificent choirs that have been heard in Wales of late years? What is their artistic record? The winning of prizes is not an artistic record! The same thing applies to solo singers. At these competitions we often hear most magnificent voices: what becomes of them? In most cases they drift into mere pot-hunting—singing the same things over and over again—gradually deteriorating, losing the finer feelings, and ultimately disappearing altogether. Mr. D. Emlyn-Evans — our most capable critic in Wales—draws attention to these facts in striking articles which have recently appeared in the Welsh press. The great success that has attended English competition festivals has set some of us seriously thinking. In England we have heard test-pieces sung that are upon a much higher level as test-pieces than anything we have ever had at the Eisteddfod. The same thing applies to sight-reading. If this can be done in England after only a few years' existence of these festivals, surely our ancient institution could do likewise. First of all, what we want is a judicious selection of music for competition, and it has been often suggested that the National Eisteddfod Association should take this matter in hand and, with the co-operation of the leading musical men in Wales and the directors of the chief local Eisteddfodau, an Advisory Board should be formed of, say, a dozen capable men, to select the programme of test-pieces for the National Eisteddfod, and the local committee to carry it out. Such a plan would prevent local jealousies and obviate heart-burnings, and while it would eradicate wire-pulling, this method would ensure an artistic programme and above all would prevent the constant repetition of the same test-pieces, or pieces of a similar type.

'Let it not be thought that all the music selected at the National Eisteddfod is unworthy —far from it. There are cases where excellent and suitable pieces have been chosen, but generally speaking Eisteddfodic selections are of a haphazard and promiscuous nature, with no thought of artistic development. If the National and the chief local gatherings could only be induced to fall into line, the smaller ones would follow. At present, choirs generally exist solely for competitive purposes, and the competitive spirit—which has become unhealthy owing to the large money prizes—has such a firm hold upon the choirs that it is almost impossible to induce them to undertake serious work for Art's sake. One fears that in singing the test-pieces their thoughts are centred on winning the prize and beating the neighbouring choirs rather than on the music they are performing. This is all very heart-breaking to those who, like myself, know that our countrymen are capable of attaining to the very best and the very highest in choral music. We have heard certain kinds of music sung at Eisteddfodau in such a manner that would satisfy the most exacting critic, at the same time electrifying the audience. We also know that were these choirs properly equipped they could worthily interpret Bach and modern music like Elgar's. The deep religious feeling so essential to a true performance of Bach, combined with the "mystic" in Elgar, would not be in the least foreign to the Welsh temperament; on the contrary, such feelings are a part of a Welshman's nature and up-bringing. This has been very forcibly brought home to me by the singing of Bach and Elgar by the Liverpool Welsh Choral Union. I am a great believer in my own dear Welsh people, and if their energies can only be directed into the proper channel, there is a great future for us as a musical nation. But unless something is done, and that speedily, to stem the strong tide of Eisteddfodic anti-progress, the future will indeed be a gloomy one.'

Have you anything to say about the religious fervour of the Welsh people as exemplified in their worship-song? we ask Mr. Evans. 'Yes; in one respect we Welsh people stand alone — in our congregational singing. One has only to attend a Sunday evening service at a Welsh chapel in order to realise this. And much more so at one of the popular Psalmody Festivals—Gymanfa Ganu—when a number of churches in the district combine for a day's singing of hymn tunes, chants, anthems, and, occasionally, choruses. Some of this combined singing is truly wonderful, and much might be done in these gatherings to instil the right artistic ideals into the people. I have for many years conducted such singing festivals all over Wales. Some of them have left a lasting impression on me, and I shall never forget the effect of 10,000 people singing in the Carnarvon Pavilion in 1904.'

Asked as to his methods in chorus-training, Mr. Evans replies: 'The great thing is to arouse the enthusiasm of the singers and to make them feel that their part in the presentation of a work is as important and sometimes even more so than that of the principals. I give my singers a general idea of the purport of the work at the outset, and arouse their interest by playing over the main themes and climaxes, and explaining the dramatic situation of each chorus. Then, when they have become thoroughly acquainted with the music, attention is paid to phrasing, accentuation and colour. To acquire unity of vowel tone, and absolute control over crescendo and diminuendo, I practise them in sustained chords, beginning pp, cres. to f, and dim. to pp, and so on. The phrasing receives much attention, not only the proper accentuation of words and poise of phrase, but a cantabile style, which ensures the presentation of the phrase as a whole with clear enunciation, and not in detached bits. The danger of too much attention to enunciation may result in an absence of breadth of melodic phrasing and the detaching of one note from the next. This "speaking on a sustained tone" is a most difficult thing to acquire, but once achieved it is an invaluable asset in choral singing. I always get my choir to understand the significance of what they perform, and the exact position of everything they sing in a work, with the result that they sink individuality into one common whole—are animated by the sole desire faithfully to convey the composer's idea. They are always to regard themselves as actors in the drama, so to speak. I seek to avoid any exaggeration by keeping in view the main idea or sentiment and never being led astray by individual words or detached phrases. I believe in "pattern" teaching, showing the singers how a passage ought not to be done as well as how it ought to be done. It is also well for choirs to remember that they have a whole night's work to do and that therefore they should not expend their force at the outset. In my case the result generally is that they finish up a work with a great climax, which is in reality a climax and which they have had in view all through the evening's work. I am a great believer in getting choristers to realise their importance as artists in the performance of works.'

Surely nothing more than a fervent Amen need be said as a conclusion to this biographical sketch of so true a Welsh artist as Harry Evans.

The Prince of Wales presided, on July 22, at Marlborough House, over the eighteenth annual meeting of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music, of which His Royal Highness is president. The report showed that in the local centre examinations 4,014 candidates entered in the year 1906-07, and that the number of candidates in the school examinations was 14,618. On the same day and under the presidency of the Prince of Wales, the annual meeting of the Royal College of Music was held.

IN A MUSICAL LIBRARY.

To the real lover of books there are few more pleasant ways of passing a spare half-hour than on a roving commission along the shelves of a well-furnished library. The pursuit probably starts with some definite object in view, but this is soon lost sight of as the attention is arrested, generally on the top of the library steps, by some interesting or half-forgotten volume.

Such a chance led the writer to take down a curious book which had been long out of mind. The somewhat pedantic title of the work (and no truly learned old German is content with a title in one language) is 'Stentor Ὑαλοκλάστης, sive de Scypho vitreo per certum humanæ vocis sonum fracto.' Kiloni, 1683. The author was Daniel Georg Morhof, a man of some celebrity, about whom a word must be said. He was born at Wismar, in the Duchy of Mecklenburg Schwerin, in the year 1639, where his father was a notary-public and assistant clerk of the Town Council. The young Morhof showed a disposition for music from his earliest years, and became distinguished in all the branches of a liberal education at a time when learning was valued for its own sake and not for the mere purpose of passing examinations. Having been appointed to the professorship of Poetry in the University of Rostock, before entering on his duties he visited both Holland and England, making a long stay in Oxford to make use of the treasures of the Bodleian Library. In 1665 he was invited to accept the professorship at the recently founded University of Kiel—a town better known to us in these days as forming the entrance of the great German Ship Canal than as a seat of learning—and here it was that the work of his life was carried on. Many and various subjects formed the occupations of his active mind, but the work by which he is best known is the 'Polyhistor Literarius, Philosophicus et Practicus,' in which he proposed to survey the whole field of human knowledge as existing in literature. It may be readily believed that in so vast a scheme the various departments of learning are not treated with equal success, but the work even in the present day is not without a certain value. It is a little disappointing to the musician that his art is but slightly touched on.

With these few preliminary remarks about the author, I return to the volume of which I have already given the title, and this I will now translate: 'Stentor the glassbreaker, or an account of a glass vessel broken by a certain sound of the human voice.' It is hardly needful to say that Stentor was a Greek celebrated for the power of his lungs. The name is one met with not unfrequently in musical literature; for example, in a tract of equal rarity, Sir Samuel Morland calls the speaking trumpet, the invention of which he claims, 'Tuba Stentorophonica.'

As addressed to men of learning, the book is of course in Latin, as was the practice of those days. The account which Morhof gives of the discovery of the possessor of this remarkable power is as follows:

> When I was living at Amsterdam I made the acquaintance of Jodocus Plumer, a celebrated bookseller of that place. He was the first to speak to me, I know not how it came about, of a certain tavern-keeper, Nicolas Petter, living in the street called 'Prince Gracht,' at the sign of the Gustavsburg, who had the power of breaking glass vessels with his voice. As it seemed to me wonderful and contrary to all experience, I did not cease to beg the bookseller to take me to the man. This he did, and when he asked him to perform the experiment in my presence, the man produced several bowl-shaped (ventricosos) glass vessels, with banded stems, which in the vulgar tongue we call 'rummers' (römer), which did not exceed a pint in capacity.

May I say here that a 'rummer,' as found by the result of questions addressed to several young people, is a vessel unknown to the present generation, but in the old days of early dinners, followed by a leisurely supper, the 'rummer,' i.e., a tumbler mounted on a foot, was the invariable vessel for mixing the grog which was habitually produced with the 'churchwardens' after that meal. It would seem that its name was not derived, as might be supposed, from that spirit which was Mr. Stiggins's favourite vanity, but from the Dutch word as quoted above, and this indeed is the derivation given by Dr. Johnson in his dictionary. It may also be noted that the author seems to look on a drinking-glass of something under a pint in capacity as moderate in size. In these degenerate days it seems a goodly jorum. If not a consummation of the wish—

> Oh that a Dutchman's draughts might be > Deep as the rolling Zuyder Zee, it was at least a step in the right direction!

To continue Morhof's narrative:

> I was invited to choose any vessel which seemed to me the strongest; this he wished me to do so that I might have no suspicion of any trick. Then, having first ascertained the pitch of the glass he lent over towards me as I held it in my hand, and placing his mouth in contact with the middle of the bulb, singing against it a note of the same pitch. Immediately the glass gave out the same note, the vibration of which was communicated to the hand. As he continued to hold the note with a long breath, the glass broke with a noise, in such a manner that the crack extended through the bowl from the stem to the rim.

Morhof goes on to say that Petter was equally successful with glasses of other shapes, but that he himself could never succeed in performing the experiment from the fact that his voice was duller (obtusior) and less steady. It was easy to see, as the wine merchant acknowledged, that success depended on the even holding of the note, which required to be so accurate that the slightest variation resulted in disappointment. By constant practice he had so learned to manage his voice that he was invariably successful. He also had a son who excelled in the same way, and even more quickly, as he had a voice more acute in pitch. If the note sounded was to be that given out by the glass, the relevance of this last remark is not apparent.

The copy from which I have been quoting is really the third edition of Morhof's work. The first was published in 1672 and was at once translated into Dutch, but by whom the author himself does not seem to know. From a note in this translation it appears that in January, 1672, a number of distinguished persons met at Petter's house for the purpose of having an exhibition of his skill, when he succeeded in breaking no fewer than twenty-five glasses within the half-hour, a result which must have proved convincing.

The last circumstance proves that this remarkable phenomenon had at once excited the curiosity of the scientific world. The great Mersenne unfortunately died in 1648, a victim of the heroic surgery of that age, but we cannot help regretting that so remarkable a scientific fact was unrecorded before his decease, as it would have proved to him a source of great delight and of many speculations. Strange to say, Athanasius Kircher, who was generally disposed to accept any statement, however wonderful, in this case expresses some doubt, at which Morhof seems a little hurt, on the grounds that it wants further confirmation, as many had tried the experiment without the success they had hoped for. A learned Jesuit, Bartoli, in his treatise 'Del suono de' Tremori armonici,' published in 1680, takes the question more seriously and tries to find an explanation, as indeed does our author, quoting freely from the learned men of the day, including the Englishmen, Boyle and Dr. Hooke. It is not possible to follow him through his arguments, which extend to 247 quarto pages, but it may be mentioned that he thinks the phenomenon tends to throw some light on the overthrow of the walls of Jericho.

I confess that I should like to see the experiment repeated, especially if some kind reader will undertake to pay for the rummers, if such vessels still exist in 'the trade'! As far as I am aware, no later record exists of any such attempt, although I have been informed, on credible evidence, that the late Henry Blagrove, the well-known violinist, whose tone was remarkably pure and powerful, on one occasion set a glass shade into such strong vibration that it cracked from top to bottom.

REFORM OF WELSH EISTEDDFODAU.

The best known Welsh musicians are united in the opinion that Welsh Eisteddfodau are not making for a healthy development of the great natural musical capacity of the nation. There are signs and portents that this discontent is coming to a crisis, and therefore high hopes of a renaissance that will place Welsh art on the high plane which it ought to occupy. What is needed is that the party of reform should band themselves together and resolutely deal with the problem. Isolated jeremiads have proved futile. The ruts of habit have worn deep, and it has become the line of least resistance for promoters of Eisteddfodau—who are impelled to make the gatherings business successes—to live and move in their restrictions. The outward sympathy and inward pachydermatousness of these genial and popular hard workers, when reforms are suggested, recalls the Chancellor in Tennyson's 'The Day Dream,' who:

> In courteous words return'd reply:
> But dallied with his golden chain
> And, smiling, put the question by.

Reform and progress will call for many a self-denying ordinance, but young Wales should be equal to this ordeal.

Mr. D. Emlyn Evans, a deeply respected and outspoken critic, in commenting on the article on competition festivals, printed in our July issue, says of the Eisteddfodau, 'We have travelled a considerable distance on the downward path . . . One looks back with regret on the period when the most capable of our choirs, led by our ablest conductors, were content to enter the arena of song solely for art's sake, and to be proud, not of the performance of certain announced test-pieces alone, but to submit themselves also to a more trying ordeal technically speaking, namely, "reading at sight."'

The above considerations give much point to the opinions of Eisteddfodau expressed by Mr. Harry Evans on page 523. There can be no doubt that one of the most pressing reforms called for is a drastic change in the method of selection of test-pieces. At present, at many if not most events, the choice of pieces is dictated by the choirs, a clear case of the tail wagging the dog. It would be well for the future if for some years it was resolved that no piece that had been previously used should be used again. This course is adopted at the most important English festivals, and has resulted in a great widening of outlook. Then while it is just that Welsh creativeness should be stimulated, it is surely easy to see that this patriotic object can in the long run be better achieved by the close acquaintance and constant comparison of the finest old and modern exemplifications of the art of other nations, than by an excessive and narrow insularity of choice. In connection with programme making, Eisteddfodau music committees are fettered by far too many personal clamourings which force compromises they would be glad to avoid. Compare the chief pieces selected by the Blackpool Festival, to be held next October, with those selected for the Royal National Eisteddfod at Llangollen in 1908:

BLACKPOOL TESTS.

FEMALE VOICES.	Ricerari	Scarlatti.
	Slumber song	Arensky.
MALE VOICES.	The patriot's vow	Cornelius.
	A war song	Granville Bantock.
	Sorrow's tears	Cornelius.
	The Crusaders	E. A. MacDowell.
MIXED VOICES.	Footsteps of Angels	J. Holbrooke.
	Fest und Gedenkspruche	J. Brahms.
	O fly not, love	Thos. Bateson.
	Throne of Mercy	Cornelius.
	My dearest love	Sweeting.
	Angel Spirits	Tschaikovsky.

All the above must be sung unaccompanied.

LLANGOLLEN TESTS.

FEMALE VOICES.	Bring we blossoms	Schumann.
	Blodau Mai (Flowers of May.)	J. Owen Jones.
MALE VOICES.	Trysorau'r Dyfnder (Treasures of the deep.)	J. H. Roberts.
	Meibion Gwalia (Sons of Gwalia.)	D. Jenkins.
MIXED VOICES.	Dan wawd yn gaeth (Insulted, chained.)	D. Emlyn Evans.
	Ye nations	Mendelssohn.
	* Bryn Calfaria (The Hill of Calvary.)	J. H. Roberts.
	* Y lefndeg afon lithra'n mlaen (The gliding river.)	J. Price (Beulah).
	Cydgan yr Angelion (The Angels' Chorus.)	Miss A. J. Williams (Eurgain).

* Only these pieces are marked to be unaccompanied.

Of the nine pieces in the Llangollen programme, seven are by Welsh composers—we do not doubt their talent—and one ('Ye nations') is a piece that has done duty at innumerable gatherings during the last thirty years or more. It may be said that as Welsh music is generally ignored in the programmes of English festivals, there is no other vent than the Eisteddfodau for the creative impulse of Welsh composers. This contention might provoke a cheap caustic reply that we have no desire to make: we prefer to say that composers who can boast of Welsh extraction succeed best when they merge themselves in cosmopolitan art.

It is significant that Mr. Granville Bantock has withdrawn from the position of adjudicator at Llangollen on the ground of the inadequacy of the programme to the importance of the event.

The money prizes offered at Blackpool in the above classes amount to £108, and in each class there are at least three prizes. At Llangollen the money prizes in the same classes amount to £270, and only first-prizes are offered. However near the second in order may be to the first, it has to go empty away. The prize in the chief choral section is £150.

In common with many other well-wishers to Wales, and, we may add, believers in the musical future of the nation, we hope that the healthy ferment now apparent will lead to great results.

The University of Durham has conferred upon Mr. Thomas Lea Southgate the degree, honoris causa, of Doctor of Laws—a distinction upon which he is to be warmly congratulated; and a number of ladies subscribed together for the purchase of the robes appertaining to the degree. These were presented to Dr. Southgate at an afternoon tea held at Messrs. Broadwood's establishment, Conduit Street, on July 3. Dr. Cummings presided over the meeting, at which Dr. Annie Paterson invested the guest of the afternoon; Dr. Southgate gratefully acknowledged the gift, Sir Frederick Bridge echoed the sentiments expressed by the chairman in regard to Dr. Southgate, and a selection of music agreeably diversified the enjoyment of the occasion.

Occasional Notes.

O Care! thou wilt dispatch me,
If Musick do not match thee:
So deadly thou dost sting me,
Mirth only help can bring me.
Fa la.

Hence, Care, thou art too cruel!
Come, Musick, sick man's jewel,
His force had well nigh slain me,
But thou must now sustain me.
Fa la.

At the Encænia on June 26 the University of Oxford conferred the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causa, on Camille Saint-Saëns. The occasion was of special interest in that it was the first appearance at an important function of Lord Curzon the new Chancellor of the University, who, we understand, himself drew up the list of those to be honoured, which included such distinguished men as the Speaker, Rudyard Kipling, and Mark Twain. The following is an English version of the Latin speech delivered by the Professor of Music (Sir Hubert Parry) when he presented the eminent French composer to the Chancellor:

Most Serene Chancellor,

We may be permitted to rejoice that fortune having called you by a great majority of votes to preside over the Muses, you look round for opportunities to confer benefits not only on our own people but on those of other countries. There stands here an illustrious representative of a race to which we are bound by ties of warm friendship, and one most accomplished in music, Camille Saint-Saëns, whose name in our own language seems to suggest to the popular ear the flow of melody. Who will not perceive the possible alleviation of the sickness of the sea when the Senate and people of Dieppe (his native town) have decreed, as a striking enhancement of honour, to augment the title of the Rue St. Saëns to Rue Saint-Saëns Doctor of Music of the University of Oxford? How highly you esteem this particular Degree is evident; since to this illustrious man alone is it given among the other honours bestowed at this day's solemnities. He shines out, as you may see, not only by his vestments, but also by his own distinction 'as the moon among the lesser lights.' Who is it that will not endorse your judgment? Who will not embrace the bard, who is learned and expert in every branch of Music, whether it be the music of the Theatre, or the Chamber, or the Church, most ready in device and most sweet in the power of adornment? He has poured forth with incomparable versatility the immense waves of Chorus and the complexities of Symphonic melody. But indeed I take it to be the highest proof of worth that it is altogether superfluous to recount the details of distinction. 'What sea, what land, knows not the name of Camille?' Believe me, it will be as a latter day Dolphin that you will permit me to bear him here, that he may be admitted to the ranks of Doctors of Music, amidst universal acclaim, honoris causa.

The General Council of the Incorporated Society of Musicians have arranged to give an orchestral concert during the Conference at Harrogate in January next, 'at which,' according to official information, 'it is hoped to bring forward some compositions by Members of the Society.' Applications are to be made to the Committee of Selection, care of Mr. Hugo Chadfield, 19, Berners Street, W., at the earliest possible moment.

London will soon have lost all its landmarks associated with the great masters of music. Within the last few weeks has been demolished the house in Great Portland Street in which Carl Maria von Weber died eighty-one years ago. The composer of 'Der Freischütz' was the guest of Sir George Smart, who then lived in Great Portland Street in the house numbered 91, but which for many years has been numbered 103, and is now no more. There Weber drew his last breath away from his beloved Fatherland; but he was affectionately tended in the last stage of the disease (consumption) which terminated his life, by such friends as Smart, Göschen and Moscheles. He died, in his sleep, during the night of Sunday, June 4, 1826. For sixty-eight years this historic house remained unmarked, until the present writer called the attention of the Incorporated Society of Musicians (London section) to such shameful neglect, with the result that, in 1894, a memorial tablet was placed between the ground-floor windows of 103, Great Portland Street. Three years ago, in the same thoroughfare, the house in which Mendelssohn lodged during four of his visits to London met with the fate that has now overtaken the death-place of Weber. Thus Great Portland Street is bereft of its former musical associations. By a curious coincidence the numbers of the above two houses became interchanged in the process of re-numbering the street—Weber's 91, so to speak, became Mendelssohn's 103, and vice versâ.

Paesiello's 'Il Barbiere di Siviglia,' produced about the year 1780 at St. Petersburg, was so successful that Rossini was considered very bold to write an opera on the same subject. Again Beethoven's 'Leonore,' as he wished his 'Fidelio' to be called, threw into the shade Paer's opera of the same name. And now there is a second 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' by a composer named Domenico Maleone. The work has already been given, and, it is said, with success, at Amsterdam, but an attempt is being made to produce it on Italian stages. Objections have naturally been raised by Mascagni and his publisher Sonzogno, but at present accounts differ with regard to the result of the lawsuit.

The Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. Henry J. Wood, are announced to begin on August 17 and terminate on October 26. The list of artists who have been engaged includes 19 sopranos, 12 contraltos, 10 tenors, 13 basses, 11 violinists, 5 violoncellists, and 21 pianists; these, with 14 other instrumentalists, make a grand total of 105 solo performers! As in former years, new compositions by British composers find several places in the scheme of selected works. Here is a list of the native novelties:

Aug.	20.	—Symphony in E flat	Marshall Hall.
,,	22.	—Overture. Princess Maliene	Cyril Scott.
,,	27.	—New Serenade	Roger Quilter.
,,	29.	—Holiday Tunes	H. Walford Davies.
Sept.	3.	—Concerto for Violin and Orchestra	F. C. Barker.
,,	5.	—Three Orchestral Scenes from 'Endymion'	Arthur Hinton.
,,	10.	—Suite No. 2. The Mysterious Rose Garden	Garnet Wolseley Cox.
,,	12.	—English Suite	Havergal Brian.
,,	19.	—Lalla Rookh	Granville Bantock.
,,	26.	—Overture. Shylock	Felix H. White.
Oct.	2.	—Concerto in C sharp minor for Pianoforte and Orchestra	Edward Isaacs.
,,	3.	—Symphonic Poem. Isabella	Frank H. Bridge.
,,	8.	—Overture. For Valour	Havergal Brian
,,	15.	—Rhapsody for Orchestra	Frederic Austin.
,,	17.	—Concertstück in D minor for Violin and Orchestra	Ethel Barns.
,,	22.	—Concerto in C minor for Pianoforte and Orchestra	Fritz Delius.
,,	24.	—A Comedy-Overture	Hamilton Harty.

M. Paderewski was a welcome guest at the Royal Academy of Music on June 27, the object of his visit being to give a short recital to the students. When the great pianist appeared on the platform he received an ovation such as must have been peculiarly gratifying to him. Commencing with his Variations in E flat minor, M. Paderewski followed with his latest composition, the new Sonata, which was most brilliantly performed. This was followed by Chopin's Nocturne in F sharp and the Study in F minor, played with exquisite feeling. The programme concluded with a fine interpretation of Liszt's Rhapsody No. 13. In a few graceful sentences, Sir Alexander Mackenzie tendered to the distinguished visitor the grateful thanks of the governing bodies and of the students for his amiable and generous action in coming to the Academy to freely give them these splendid examples of his art, both as an executant and a creative master, and he, the Principal, predicted that the event would long survive in the memory of those who had the good fortune to be present.

This visit of M. Paderewski recalls a similar favour conferred upon the students of the Royal Academy of Music by Rubinstein about thirty years ago, when, on that never-to-be-forgotten occasion, he electrified his audience with his masterly performances. Similar enthusiasm was witnessed in the same concert room when Liszt was present at a short concert given by the students on April 6, 1886—a concert which celebrated the endowment of the Liszt scholarship. To quote from The Musical Times of May, 1886:

> The young performers having been duly presented to the master, applause arose on all sides and continued for some minutes, until at last the Abbé appeared to become conscious that the students wished to hear him play. With a self-deprecatory gesture he arose, and made his way on to the platform amidst uproarious excitement. His was, indeed, literally a 'flowery path,' for every girl had a posie to cast at the feet of the great pianist, and every youth who sported a 'button-hole' willingly offered his tribute. The consequence was that when Liszt reached the pianoforte, he found it half full of flowers—another Elizabethan basket, in fact—and had to wait some time until the strings were cleared. Then he began—with a tender caressing touch, such as no other pianoforte player ever possessed—his fingers stealing over the keys, until the melody merged in Chopin's 'Chant Polonaise.'

In response to the ringing cheers of the students, the great pianist played his own 'Cantique d'Amour,' to the further delight of his appreciative audience.

M. de Fourcaud, writing about M. Messager's comédie lyrique based on Musset's 'Le Chandelier,' declared that a literary piece could not effectively be transformed into a lyric work. M. Saint-Saëns, a critic whose opinion is of value, and whose pen is not lacking in sharpness, replied as follows: 'I do not say that he [M. Fourcaud] is wrong. I only venture to remind him that though some critics may agree with him, composers and the public have always been of a contrary opinion. In proof of which I mention—at a venture—Iphigénie en Aulide, Lucrezia Borgia, Rigoletto, Il Barbiere di Siviglia, Nozze di Figaro, Faust, Romeo et Juliette, La Tosca, Fédora!'

The dancification of classical compositions is not unknown, and more than one such metamorphosis can be met with. A somewhat recent example of this kind of sacrilege is 'The F.M.B. Lancers,' a dance-piece which, as the title implies, is concocted of Mendelssohn melodies. The 1st figure consists of the first movement of the 'Italian' symphony; for the 2nd figure 'I'm a roamer' and a part of the 'Ruy Blas' overture are employed; in the 3rd figure the 'Sonntagslied' is actually turned into a dance-tune !; while the 5th figure is a potpourri embracing the Scherzo from the 'Scotch' symphony, the Dance of clowns from 'The Midsummer Night's Dream' music, a little bit of the G minor Pianoforte concerto, the 'Reiselied,' 'Gruss' and 'Maiglöckchen' songs, and a theme from the 'Scotch' symphony. No comment on such a travesty is needed.

An interesting souvenir of the tour of the Yorkshire Chorus in Germany last year has recently been issued in the form of an attractive quarto volume of four full-score pages, or a double forty, for which those vociferous singers are so noted. This fully-illustrated book gives an account of all the journeys, concerts, social functions, &c., in addition to the flattering press notices which those excellent singers from Leeds and Sheffield so fully deserved. The souvenir is sure to be treasured as a record of an undertaking which, as we remarked at the time, 'reflected credit on all concerned,' and, we may add, especially Mr. H. C. Embleton and Dr. Henry Coward.

On October 28, 1853, there appeared in the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik the last article Robert Schumann ever wrote, viz., 'New Paths' ('Neue Bahnen'), in which, after making acquaintance with Brahms's three sonatas in C, F sharp minor, and F minor, and other works, he prophesied for the young composer a great future. Schumann's autograph of that famous article has been presented by one of Brahms's heirs to the Brahms Society of Vienna. The document, which the composer doubtless regarded as one of his most valuable treasures, must have been a constant reminder that he should try to fulfil that prophecy to the very utmost.

This comes from Scotland, and is contained in a newspaper paragraph headed 'The nightingale':

> A nightingale sang from about 4 a.m. till at least 12 midnight . . . . His highest note was C in det. In the Pastoral Symphony Beethoven brings in the nightingale's trill in G, a fourth below, but there it is the Cauld Fermo to the cuckoo and the quail, and the effect is realistic if the pitch is too low.

Exactly, in spite of the cooling influence of the 'Cauld Fermo.' And how much that nightingale was 'in det' to C for his highest note.

At a Welsh watering-place, where music is being well cared for at the present time, the programme of a recent concert contained the information that:

> The Novelty Bohemians will perform daily at 3 p.m. at the Pier Head; if wet inside the Pavilion.

From the same pink-paper programme we glean that the following piece was duly brought forth:

> 4. Piano and orchestra, 'Cappricio Brilliantine, Op. 22, Mendelssohn.

This should surely have been placed at the head of the programme.

SOME INTERESTING MANUSCRIPTS.

The well-known sale-room of Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge has been specially attractive from a musical point of view during the past month. Bach led the way with a manuscript belonging to Mr. Stuart M. Samuel, M.P., which was shown at the Exhibition of the Musicians' Company three years ago. This autograph consists of the whole of the continuo part (six folio pages) of the church cantata 'Christ unser Herr zum Jordam kam.' It was presented to Sigismund Neukomm by August Eberhardt Müller, one of Bach's successors as cantor of the Thomasschule, Leipzig, and the valuable treasure was bought at the sale by Mr. Quaritch for £63. Six 'Canzonettes Italiennes, paroles de Metatase' by Meyerbeer (unpublished) realized £22. The manuscript bore the inscripton 'Presentées à Mademoiselle Beyme, au moment de son départ de Darmstadt, par l'Auteur.' If this Darmstadt reference is to the time when Meyerbeer, aged nineteen, went there to study under the Abbé Vogler's roof, these canzonettes must be youthful productions of the composer's. Paganini manuscripts are rare, and the sum of £20 was paid for fourteen folio pages of 'notes and words' entirely in his handwriting, the autograph being described in the catalogue as 'a charming and most valuable relic of this great musician.'

No fewer than eight autograph manuscripts of Franz Schubert changed hands at the same sale. They were described in the catalogue as follows, and we have added the prices realized:

Miriam's Siegesgesang, Op. 136, MS. vocal score, dated Marz, 1828, 34 pages, signed - - -	100
Cantata, dated August, 1819, 18 pages, signed (probably unpublished) - - - - - - -	65
Trinklied, Op. 155, dated Juli, 1825, 4 pages, signed (the words translated from Rittgraft's Historical Antiquities) - - - - - -	28
Auf den Rinsenkuppe, dated Marz, 1818, 6 pages, signed - - - - - - - - - -	38
Frühlingsgesang, Op. 16, No. 1 (unsigned, no date), 2 pages - - - - - - - - -	11
Der Geistertanz, dated October 14, 1814, 2 pages, signed (one leaf of the MS. is apparently missing)	13
Grablied, dated 24 Juni, 1815, 2 pages, signed (on the back is another song, entitled: 'Das finden Kosegarke,' signed and dated 25 June, 1815) - - - - - - - - -	23
Strophe, von Schiller, dated November, 1819, 5 pages, signed - - - - - - -	18

The first four of the Schubert manuscripts, as well as those of Meyerbeer and Paganini, were acquired by Mr. C. Fairfax Murray.

No less interesting were the treasures that were entrusted to Messrs. Sotheby to dispose of on July 19. In accordance with the will of the late Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, there was sold an interesting relic of Handel, thus described in the catalogue:

> Handel's score of the 'Messiah,' in the handwriting of J. Christopher Smith, the composer's friend and amanuensis, three volumes oblong folio, in original calf binding; this valuable copy was at one time in the possession of Dr. William Hayes. Together with the manuscripts there are notes by Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, the result of careful comparison of his manuscripts with two important manuscript scores in Smith's handwriting (the 'Dublin' and the 'Hamburgh'); also other papers and important letters by Dr. Chrysander, Sir Frederick Ouseley, Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. W. H. Cummings, Dr. Ebenezer Prout, &c.
> In 1885 Sir Frederick Gore Ouseley wrote to Mr. Otto Goldschmidt as follows: 'I suppose it would be impossible to say for certain which of the MSS. was the earlier? But probably it would be mine, because it was used at the first performance of the work. Yours would then exhibit Handel's last revisions and in that sense would be the most valuable.' The two manuscripts mentioned are the one known as the 'Dublin' and the manuscript in question. . . .
> The volumes would seem, from a written statement in the manuscript, to have been used by Handel at performances of the oratorio; some grace notes have been added, possibly by Handel himself, in 'I know that my Redeemer liveth'; these added notes are of great interest, as it was customary in Handel's time for the singers to add ornamental notes and cadences to the airs, their own, or in some cases those of the composer.

Messrs. Sotheby's catalogue goes on to state:

> Professor Ebenezer Prout in the preface to his edition of 'The Messiah,' published by Messrs. Novello & Co., says: 'Another valuable and most interesting MS. score, also in the handwriting of Smith, is that belonging to Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, who has most kindly allowed me to collate it. This copy—at one time the property of Dr. William Hayes, whose name is written on the fly-leaf of each of the three volumes in which it is bound—has an advantage over both the autograph and the Dublin score in being quite complete. Mr. Goldschmidt has also collated it with the Hamburg conducting score, formerly in the possession of M. Victor Schoelcker; by its aid I have been able to verify more than one doubtful reading; and thus to make use (at second-hand) of the Hamburg score, also in Smith's handwriting.'

The Messiah manuscript which belonged to Mr. Goldschmidt was sold for £100.

Among the 'other properties' in the same catalogue were the following manuscripts penned by four great masters of music—Beethoven, Mozart, Wagner and Weber, described as follows, with a few additions, including the prices realized at the sale:

BEETHOVEN. Autograph letter (unpublished), written to M. de Bigot, to whose wife, a fine pianist and interpreter of his works, Beethoven presented the autograph of his F minor (Appassionata) Sonata. The Letter, signed, though without date, was most probably written towards the end of the year 1808. In it Beethoven requests some pianoforte parts, probably lent to Mme. Bigot, to be returned to him, for a concert which he is arranging. The letter is highly characteristic of the composer, and a very fine specimen of his handwriting. [£15 10*s*.]

BEETHOVEN. Autograph orchestral sketch of the Coda of the Scherzo of the Ninth Symphony, presented by Ignatz Moscheles to his friend Henry Phillips, the singer, on June 14, 1846. [£26.]

MOZART. Three autograph sketches. The first, a fragment of a fugue in E flat, is a fine specimen of the composer's handwriting. The date at which these 27 bars were written is not exactly known, but it is supposed to be somewhere about 1772. In the second edition (1905) of the Koechel catalogue, edited by the late Count Waldersee, a copy of this fragment with completion by Sechter is mentioned, but the autograph is said to be unknown! The second and third sketches, each of 11 bars, consist of passages in canonic imitation; they are on the same page as the autograph sketch mentioned above, and are therefore not noticed in Koechel. [£31.]

WAGNER (R.). Eight autograph letters written to Madame Henriette Moritz, during the years 1851-3. This lady, a highly-talented actress and vocalist, was a sister of August Roeckel, who in 1850 was condemned to death for the part he took in the May rising at Dresden in 1849, the sentence being afterwards commuted to imprisonment; in these letters there are inquiries respecting Roeckel and his poor wife. It was through the influence of Madame Moritz that Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin' were produced at Schwerin and other German towns, and the letters touch largely, though not exclusively, on these matters. In one, dated May 20, 1853, Wagner, in thanking her for the interest she is taking in his works, warns her 'lest in troubling about one who is so dangerous to the state, you find yourself on the black book' (Schwarzes Register). In Mr. W. Ashton Ellis's 'Life of Wagner,' Vol. III., there are references to the Schwerin and other productions of 'Tannhäuser'; but from several statements it is evident that these letters were not known to him.

A letter from Richard Wagner to Edouard Roeckel, dated 'Enge bei Zürich, March 15/51,' 4 pages of close writing is most interesting; in it Wagner refers to the closing days of the Dresden rising, to his flight to Weimar, and his meeting there with Liszt. [£46.]

WEBER (C. M. von). Autogragh score of the overture to 'Oberon,' 6 pages oblong 4to, endorsed 'Presented to Mr. Kearns by W. Hawes, May 30th, 1827, as a token of regard and friendship. Weber's original copy': also a very interesting drawing of Weber's head, taken after death by John Cawse, while preparations were being made for the cast of the composer's features, and another small drawing. This is Weber's autograph manuscript of the original composition of the overture to 'Oberon,' in close score, arranged for the pianoforte. He finished the overture at the house of Sir George Smart in March, 1826. After Weber's death, in June, 1826, the manuscript passed into the hands of William Hawes, a well-known singer and composer, who, on May 27, 1827, presented it to W. H. Kearns, in whose family it has since remained. [£59.]

It is a pathetic coincidence that the same month which saw Sir George Smart's house demolished (see p. 527 of the present issue) also saw this autograph of Weber's sold in London.

FESTIVAL NOVELTIES.

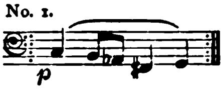
Among the new works to be produced at the Cardiff musical festival in September are a setting of Mrs. Browning's poem 'The sleep' ('He giveth His beloved, sleep'), by Dr. F. H. Cowen, conductor of the festival, and of 'Sir Patrick Spens,' by Dr. A. Herbert Brewer.

DR. COWEN'S 'HE GIVETH HIS BELOVED, SLEEP.'

In setting Mrs. Browning's poem 'The sleep,' Dr. Cowen has adopted as the title of his work 'He giveth His beloved, sleep,' that being the golden thread which runs through the poem. Dr. Cowen's setting is for contralto solo, chorus and orchestra.

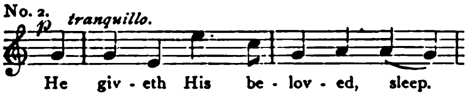
The work opens, adagio sostenuto, with the following mysterious phrase, played against holding C's in the upper parts:

No. 1.



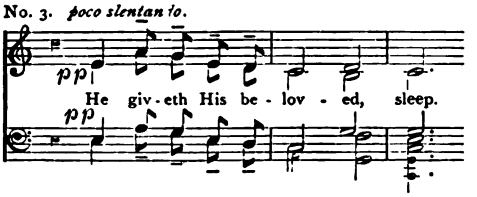
To the contralto soloist is assigned the first stanza of the poem, the last line of which and the predominant thought throughout furnish another leit motif:

No. 2.



to which the chorus immediately respond thus, the first (unison) bar being unaccompanied:

No. 3.

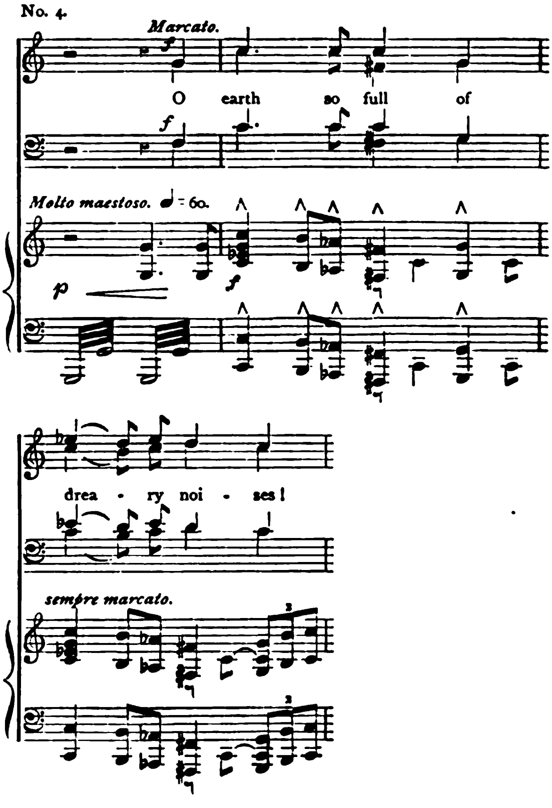


To a triplet accompaniment, a device much employed in the work, the soloist, in expressive tones, asks the question 'What would we give to our beloved?' which is preluded by the phrase of Ex. 1, and followed by Ex. 2, in the key of A.

The next stanza is cast in responsive form, solo and chorus with tranquil semiquaver accompaniment, a beautiful effect being obtained by a dreamy diminished seventh chord, altos and basses singing the low B natural in unison and the solo voice A flat, the orchestra supplying the remaining notes of the chord.

A change of key (A flat) and rhythm (triple) occurs at the words 'Sleep soft, beloved,' which, still in responsive form, are treated in that delicate and felicitious manner so characteristic of the composer. To this succeeds, as the text demands, a strenuous outburst:

No. 4.



followed by strident strains which illustrate the 'dreary noises,' the wailing and the strife of this stanza. The tranquil note is resumed when the soloist sings 'His dews drop mutely on the hill,' and the chorus (altos and basses in octaves) gently whisper 'He giveth His beloved, sleep.' The work then quietly proceeds to its peaceful, slumberous close, the final strains consisting of Ex. 2 (sung pianissimo by the chorus in four-part harmony) and Ex. 3, the last four bars containing Ex. 1 and the chords of C major, played as softly as possible.

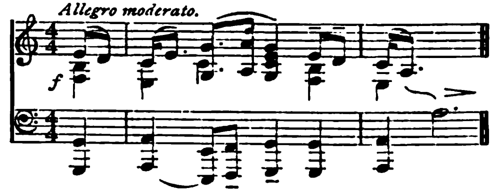
As may be inferred from the above skeleton outline of this festival novelty, Dr. Cowen has not failed to reflect the solemn beauty of Mrs. Browning's lines. His music flows steadily on, without repetitions of words, and it need scarcely be said that the vocal writing will be found grateful to both solo singer and chorus.

DR. BREWER'S 'SIR PATRICK SPENS.'

The old ballad of Sir Patrick Spens is familiar by the glorious unaccompanied 'ballad-dialogue in ten real parts' (as the composer called it) of R. L. de Pearsall. He, however, only set a portion of the poem; on the other hand, Dr. Brewer has wooed all the stanzas and mated them to descriptive music, he being the first composer to select the entire ballad for a musical setting. The work is set out for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra.

The 'Scotch flavour' which would naturally infect the music is manifested almost at the outset of the instrumental introduction to the first chorus by the 'snap' in the following leit-motiv :

No. 1.



Allegro moderato.
f

A few bars later the 'Sir Patrick Spens' motif asserts itself in a strenuous fortissimo and, as applicable to a great man, is to be given largamente. It has a nautical flavour and loses none of its effectiveness when it is declaimed by the full chorus in most emphatic tones :

No. 2. Largamente.

Sailors are proverbially brave, and Sir Patrick Spens was no exception to the rule. Any fears of danger that he may have had in sailing to Noroway at the winter time of the year were soon dispelled by the king's call to duty:

> O who is this has done this deed,
> And told the King of me,
> To send us out at this time of the year,
> To sail upon the sea?

In setting the last two lines of the above stanza, Dr. Brewer forecasts what happens later in the stormy music of the accompaniment:

No. 3. SIR PATRICK SPENS.

time of the year, To sail up-on the sea? . .

The third bar of the quotation is frequently used.

As the ill-fated vessel in which Sir Patrick Spens sailed does not appear to have struck a rock or a sandbank, it might be hypercritical to question the propriety of introducing a ground-bass into this nautical ballad, but any such objection may be waived when it is noticed with what skill the composer has employed this effective device to accompany the words:

> They hoisted their sails on Monenday morn,
> With all the speed they may.

This ground-bass (only one bar long) is subsequently inverted in an ingenious manner when it appears in the upper part of the accompaniment and a new ground-bass (not that the ship itself has grounded) is introduced in the depths below : between this running fire, so to speak, of this pair of ground-basses, the Scotch 'snap' (Ex. 1) makes itself heard, and at the same time the chorus have points of imitation :

The superstition of the sailors, who 'saw the new moon late yestreen with the old moon in her arm,' is graphically suggested in the accompaniment to the vocal phrase in which fragments of the Scotch 'snap' and the ground-bass are deftly interwoven.

The storm, which had such ghastly consequences, is then vividly depicted, both chorally and instrumentally. Thereafter comes the grief of the bereaved ones—the ladies who 'wrang their fingers white,' and the maidens who 'tore their hair.' The preludial bars of this dirge-like section contain the re-appearance of the Scotch 'snap' (Ex. 1):

and the Sir Patrick subject (Ex. 2) brings the work to a tranquil conclusion.

Such is a brief outline of a concise work which does credit to its composer. The music is as straightforward as it is descriptive, and Dr. Brewer has wisely avoided that dreary development which is often a weariness of the flesh to those who listen and a weariness of the voice to those who sing. A composition on a human subject, such as this, that so largely employs the chorus to tell the story, deserves a hearty welcome. The Cardiff choralists, with their deeply emotional temperament, are sure to give a good account of the music, and other choirs up and down the country will find in Dr. Brewer's 'Sir Patrick Spens' a fine outlet for their vocal powers and dramatic perception.

Consideration of Sir Hubert Parry's new work for the Cardiff festival, 'The vision of life,' must be deferred till next month.

Church and Organ Music.

THE OLD SCOTTISH PRECENTOR.

Like the old parish clerk in England, the old Scottish precentor has been almost exterminated. It is not so very long ago that Presbyterian ecclesiastics in Scotland anathematised the organ; but now, largely owing to the munificence of Mr. Carnegie, the 'unclean thing' has brightened up many a service in kirks north of the Tweed. It is well, however, to be reminded of those bygone days in Scotland when the 'chief musician' of the kirk was not an organist but—a precentor. Therefore, a warm welcome is due to an interesting book by Mr. W. Milne Gibson ('Ex-Laternist') entitled 'The Old Scottish Precentor,' which has been recently issued from the office of the Aberdeen Daily Journal. Mr. Gibson ably treats his subject from four points of view—historical, biographical, anecdotal and reminiscent. Let us dip into his readable pages.

The Sang Schules in Scotland date back to the 13th century. A distinctly Scottish institution, they were not only to be found in the cathedral cities, but in several of the smaller towns, e.g., Ayr, Dumbarton, Lanark, Cupar and others; indeed they found their way to the far north, as in 1544 Bishop Reid founded and endowed a Sang Schule in Orkney. We learn that 'these old institutions had not a little to do in the making and "upkeep" of the old-time "letter-gae," or "uptaker of the psalm"; moreover, 'for a long time prior to the Reformation, and, indeed for some considerable time afterwards, much attention was paid to the musical part of the Church service by the magistrates and councils of the various towns and burghs where a Sang Schule existed.' The teaching at these schools was originally restricted to the three M's, 'music, morals and manners,' but after the Reformation the three R's were added to the three M's of the curriculum.

As an Aberdonian, Mr. Gibson is naturally proud to assert that music first began to be taught in the granite city about the year 1256, when the master of the school was required to see to the due attendance of four singing boys at divine service in St. Nicholas Church, in which an organ was introduced somewhere about the year 1457. The Town Council in 1541 granted to 'Robe Portair and Robe Nicholsoun ilkane of thame fourthy shillings to bye thame clayse, to be given thame yeirly sua thei continew the Sang Schules, and serf in thair queir.' Three years later (in 1544) Sir John Fethy, or Fethe, was appointed one of the prebendaries of St. Nicholas queir, 'to have the organs and Sang Schule for instructing the bairnis.' It is recorded that 'this man was the first organist that ever brought in Scotland the curious new fingering and playing on organs.' There is much interesting information in these pages concerning the Sang Schule at Aberdeen, the alma mater of many a precentor. This institution came to an end in 1758: what a pity it was not continued.

Under the heading 'The first Aberdeen psalters,' Mr. Gibson says: 'In comparatively early times Aberdeen played an important part and occupied an honoured place in the history of Church music, and its reformation and improvement in Scotland.' In the matter of publishing psalters, Bon Accord was also not far behind. In 1625 Edward Raban, the 'toune's printer'—or, 'the Laird of Letters,' as he proudly called himself—published 'The Psalmes in Meeter, together with the tunes diligently revised and amended by the most expert musicianes in Aberdene'; and in 1633 there came from the same publisher a second volume, 'The Book of Common Order' with 'the psalmes in prose and meeter with tunes.' As Mr. Gibson says, it is somewhat remarkable to find music-type thus early in use at Aberdeen; he goes on to say that this psalter of 1625 'was among the most complete works of the kind that up to that period had been produced in Scotland.'

The multiplication of hymnals in the present day is a matter of common knowledge, but at Aberdeen, in the days of the old-time precentor, there seems to have been no end to the making of 'Musick Bookes,' from the semi-official, authorised psalters down to the attempts made privately by the precentors themselves to provide in printed form copies of the tunes they sang on Sunday. The titles of these works were often amusing. A great favourite was 'The Psalme Singer's Delightfull Pocket Companyon.' 'In one of these,' says Mr. Gibson, 'we find that persons of the meanest capacity may learn more of the true grounds of musick in a month by this booke than can be learnt in 12 months by any other work in Edinburghe'—a serious reflection on Edinburgh! We are told that 'the bookseller seems to have kept an eye on the main chance'—what Scotsman does not?—'for after announcing in a weekly news print of the day his stock of psalters and "other musick bookes," one dealer added this very pat note: "N.B.—At the same place there is a neat mahogany press-bed for sale."'

The word 'innovation' has occupied a very prominent place in Scottish ecclesiastical history. 'I hear you have introduced an innovation in your kirk,' said one minister to another, 'you read the Ten Commandments.' 'Quite true,' replied the other, 'and that is not the only innovation; we are going to try our best to keep them.' Even the pitch-pipe was regarded as rank profanity. One 'R. G.' of Aberdeen, writing to the Scots Magazine of April, 1755, said: 'There is a profanation of the Sabbath introduced by singing the psalms at church with a herd-boy's instrument of music, which gives offence to many serious Christians.' He goes on to say that, in place of the proper duties of meditation and prayer, the young folk 'meet to whistle and fife' before and after sermon 'to improve themselves in this exercise'; and as for singing in parts 'R. G.' characterises that as 'nothing but what was begun by a profane heretic a thousand years ago'! Any improvement in the musical service—what there was of it—created much prejudice. 'Weel, Janet,' said a mistress to her servant after attending a kirk where the psalm-singing had been improved, 'how did ye like it?' 'It was verra bonnie, mem; but oh! yon 's an' awfu' wye o' spendin' the Sabbath'! One old Elder was so loud in his denunciation of good, bright singing in the kirk that he pronounced it to be an 'invention of the devil,' solemnly adding, 'after a' it was naething but sacred pleesures.'

Mr. Gibson conveys much 'pleesant' information about old precentors, their achievements, incompetence, occupations, and especially their eccentricities. One was a mole-catcher named 'Moudiewort,' who, when he rose to precent the first psalm, saw a dog walk quietly up the 'middle pass' of the kirk. The animal, sitting on its haunches and opening wide its jaws, became an interested listener. Little wonder that no voice, save that of the precentor, was heard! At the end of the first verse 'Moudiewort' closed his book and laid it down with a bang on the desk, exclaiming 'Did ye think I cam' here to sing to dogs? I'll sing nae mair'! Immediately the dog rose, walked solemnly out of the kirk, and was never known to enter it again. No wonder!

Pawky humour and Scotch repartee find their rightful place in these entertaining pages. 'I wish you wadna pitch your tune sae high, Jeems,' observed a minister to his praise-leader; 'they say your singin's sharp.' 'It's a guid job, sir, we haena baith the same faut,' was the reply, 'for the folk say your discoorses are dreadfu' flat.' On one occasion a precentor failed to hit upon the tune, and kept on reading the line 'Teach me, O Lord, the perfect way,' hoping at last to succeed. After these repeated attempts had failed, an old farmer, who could no longer stand those vain repetitions, blurted out: 'Aye, mon, I'm thinkin' the Lord has muckle need to teach ye.' When one Sandy C——, a precentor, was practising his 'young fowk,' they 'went to bits' over a new tune. After struggling alone for a few minutes Sandy himself succumbed. He looked about him and said: 'Boys, ye're oot, an' I'm oot, an' we're a' oot thegither.'

And now our space is 'oot.' But enough has been said to induce many readers to turn to Mr. Gibson's informing and amusing pages. The book, which is a valuable contribution to the subject of which it treats, contains fifteen illustrations, which add to its attractiveness.

APPOINTING AN ORGANIST.

That interesting and informing book 'English Local Government,' by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Webb, contains an account of the curious method of appointing an organist to the Parish Church, Woolwich, in the year 1762. A competition was held in due course, and as the adjudicators were the parishioners, who voted according to the respective merits of the candidates, 'elaborate arrangements were made for eliminating all personal favouritism on the appointed day.' The Vestry decreed that 'When the several candidates shall be in the organ loft, and the curtain sewed together (!), the organ-blower shall attend them, and no person whatever to be admitted into the gallery, or any person admitted into the church but those who are parishioners and have a right to vote.' After the candidates had cast lots for precedence in playing, each in succession had to play a voluntary which lasted about fifteen minutes. When all had competed, the assembled parishioners (their names being duly recorded) declared by secret ballot which performer they preferred, the votes being there and then counted and the successful candidate elected.

Mr. Walter Scott, organist and choirmaster of St. Margaret's Parish Church, Roath, Cardiff, has been presented by the congregation of the church with a handsome solid silver salver as a token of their appreciation of his 'faithful work' for a period extending over thirty-five years. Mrs. Scott was at the same time presented with a beautiful gold brooch set with pearls and turquoises.

Mr. John S. Bumpus, honorary librarian of St. Michael's College, Tenbury, has compiled an interesting brochure entitled 'Memorabilia, 1906,' being a record of the fiftieth anniversary of the consecration of the church connected with Sir Frederick Ouseley's munificent foundation. This attractively got-up publication gives a full account of the services, the four sermons that were preached, the social functions, and a full list of the services and anthems sung during the Festival week, from September 28 to October 6, 1906. In a brief foreword the Warden (the Rev. John Hampton) says: 'At the request of many old boys and old friends in all parts of the world for some memento of our jubilee, these pages have been put together,' and, we may add, they have been well put together by Mr. Bumpus. An excellent portrait of Ouseley prefaces the book, which also contains two excellent photographs, taken by Mr. F. Lowe, lay-clerk and sacrist of the church.

The death, after only four days' illness, on July 5, of Mr. Frederick Edward Hollingshead, organist and choirmaster of St. Andrew's Church, West Walcot, Bath, is recorded with regret. A Fellow of the Royal College of Organists and an Associate of the Royal College of Music, Mr. Hollingshead was an excellent organist and choir-trainer; moreover he was a man of sterling worth and genial personality, and his premature death, at the age of thirty-three, has called forth many expressions of regret.

Mr. T. H. Spiers, for the past fourteen years organist and choirmaster of St. Luke's Church, Leicester, has been presented with a handsome illuminated address and to Mrs. Spiers was given a case of silver, in commemoration of their silver wedding. The presentation, which took place at the Vicarage, was made by the vicar, the Rev. David Dewar, in the presence of the clergy, churchwardens, and choir of the church.

Dr. F. H. Torrington has resigned the organistship of the Metropolitan Church, Toronto, which he has held for thirty-four years.

The third number—the first that has attained to the dignity of print—of the 'Lichfield Cathedral Choristers' Magazine' has reached us. Its contents are of a very varied and readable nature, including a poem entitled 'The Dean and Chapter's bodyguard,' by a young gentleman aged eleven. May all success attend this literary effort put forth in the city of Dr. Johnson.

The quincentenary of Peterborough Parish Church was commemorated on June 26 by two services in which music was a prominent feature. The choir, augmented to ninety voices, was accompanied by Mr. B. Manders, who has ably held the organistship of the church during thirty years and who gave an organ recital with much acceptance. The service music included Smart's Te Deum in F, the anthem 'O Lord, my God' (S. S. Wesley), and the chorus 'To thee, cherubim' from Handel's Dettingen Te Deum.

At St. Luke's Church, South Kensington, on July 5, the newly-formed Choral Society in connection with the church sang Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, with Miss Ada Forrest as soprano soloist, and a quartet of tenors and basses from the church choir. The accompaniments were played by an orchestra, and Mr. W. H. Hickox was at the organ. The orchestra and organ played Handel's overture to 'Samson' and Elgar's 'Sursum Corda' and 'Imperial March.' Mr. Charles Hoby conducted.

The organ in St. Mary's Church, Stoke Newington, originally built by Messrs. Gray & Davison in 1858, has been completely remodelled and restored by Messrs. W. Hill & Son according to the specification of Dr. H. T. Pringuer, organist of the church. On three successive Sundays short organ recitals were given respectively by Dr. Davan Wetton, organist of the Foundling Hospital, Mr. Fountain Meen, organist of Union Chapel, Islington, and Mr. Ernest W. Agate, organist of Caterham Parish Church.

An interesting organ recital was given at the Dutch Church, Austin Friars, by Mr. Rudolph Loman, organist of that historic sanctuary, on July 22. The well-played organ solos were agreeably interspersed by some violoncello pieces (with organ accompaniment) ably performed by Mr. Jacques Renard, of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, and Miss Edith von Elischer sang some sacred airs with acceptance, her selection including Mr. Willem Coenen's 'Father, forgive them.'

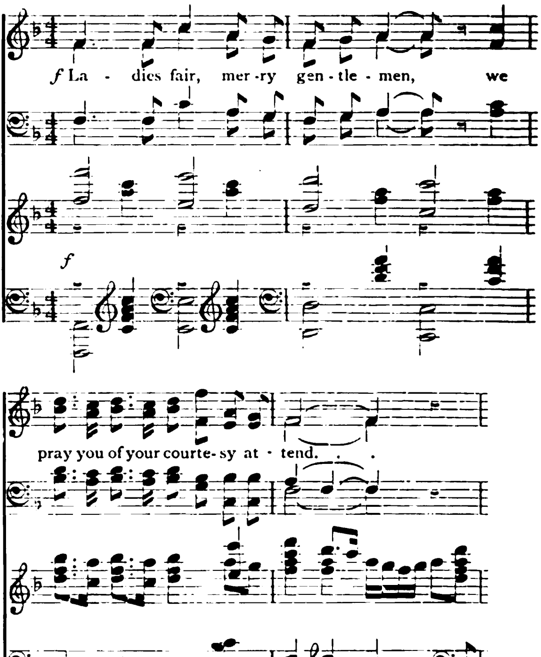
THE ST. ALBANS PAGEANT MUSIC.

There has been a positive craze for historical pageants this year, but all such forms of spectacle, worthy of encouragement as they are, seem to offer little chance for a composer to distinguish himself. The music here, as in the theatre, is regarded as a mere accessory, expensive and troublesome, but indispensable. Now the really gifted musician will rise to the occasion and show that even under these circumstances he can make his strength felt. The music to the beautiful pageant at St. Albans was as superior to that at any of the displays in other towns as Die Meistersinger is to any other comic opera. The composer, Mr. W. H. Bell, has been for some fifteen years before the world; he has written important orchestral works of great brilliance and originality, and these have been heard, highly praised and straightway forgotten. Like many another of whom any other country would be proud, his great talent is suffered to remain without reward. An excellent and experienced conductor, as well as a highly dramatic composer, his condition offers an instructive commentary on the recent outcry for schools of dramatic music and scholarships for conductors.

The very first bars sung by the Narrative Chorus in the St. Albans pageant :



f La - dies fair, mer-ry gen-tle-men, we
pray you of your courte-sy at - tend.

set the pattern of dignity and virile energy that is splendidly sustained throughout. Whether in the numerous narrative comments (so difficult for the musician to do anything with), or in the funeral music, or the battle scenes, or the stately Elizabethan dances, Mr. Bell has with each number produced a work of art. The all too short Sanctus which accompanies the martyrdom of Alban is a singularly original conception; a movement in 6-8 time with an accompaniment of semiquaver figures all in chords of the sixth high up in the treble, forming a halo of glory over the voices. The stately Pavane, too, with its quaint rhythm, is another gem. The sixteen principal numbers have been printed in vocal score by Messrs. Chas. Avison, and will be looked upon, we earnestly believe, with pride and respect by the music-lovers of a later generation.

NEW SETTINGS OF THE 'TE DEUM.'

Te Deum in G. By Alan Gray.
Te Deum in B flat. By Haydn Keeton.
Te Deum in B flat. By John Pointer.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Dr. Alan Gray's setting of the great Eastern hymn is laid out in accordance with the view of the Rev. Dr. Burn that the ancient hymn proper consists of three parts. The first ending with the Ter Sanctus, is the praise of creation; the second, ending with the line 'We believe that Thou shalt come to be our Judge,' is the praise universal; and the third, concluding with the prayer for salvation, is the praise of the congregation. Here the original hymn ends, the subsequent verses being a series of versicles and responses taken, with one exception, from the Psalms, the exception being 'Vouchsafe, O Lord,' which is found in the service of Compline and also as an antiphon to the Gloria in Excelsis. Dr. Gray has indicated these divisions by short interludes for the organ and also by a certain distinction of style for the different sections. The result is clearness and significance. Four-part choral writing has been chiefly adopted until the antiphon 'O Lord, save Thy people,' which is written for a bass solo, the choir answering with the words 'Govern them, and lift them up for ever.' This method is pursued until the close, the bass soloist having the words 'O Lord, in Thee have I trusted,' and being answered by the choir with 'Let me never be confounded,' the latter sentence being directed to be sung forte, a somewhat unusual proceeding at the present day. The general character of Dr. Gray's music will be surmised when it is said that considerable use is made of the third Gregorian tone.

A jubilant expression characterizes Dr. Keeton's music, and the setting would be specially suitable for a festival service. The composer adopts the idea that the choirs of heaven and earth join in praise in singing the words 'Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Sabaoth,' which are directed to be delivered fortissimo e marcato. The verse 'When Thou tookest' is set contrapuntally, and a fortissimo outburst comes with the words 'Thou didst open the kingdom of heaven to all believers.' The music allied to 'We believe that Thou shalt come' is impressive, and the remainder of the work contains some very effective part-writing. Dr. Keeton has also set the Jubilate in the same key, but in a simpler style.

The music by Mr. John Pointer makes less demands on the capabilities of the choir than either of the preceding settings, and will be found well adapted for ordinary use. The composer indulges in points of imitation, but not of a complex kind. The 'Holy, Holy, Holy' is set in massive fortissimo chords against slow scale passages in the organ accompaniment, and the three verses beginning 'The glorious company' are severally set for the basses, tenors and sopranos in unison. A good effect is made by the organ being silent while the choir sings (in four parts) 'When Thou tookest,' a climax being subsequently worked up from the words 'Thou didst open.' The tempo and tonal force are diminished in the last verse, which ends devotionally.

Alfred Bruneau. By Arthur Hervey. Living Masters of Music Series. [John Lane.]

Himself a critic and a composer, it is natural that Mr. Arthur Hervey should write upon so eminent a critic and composer as M. Bruneau; moreover, his well-known sympathies with French music, as evidenced by the two valuable volumes on the subject from his pen, qualify Mr. Hervey in no narrow degree for this congenial task. If there is any fault to find with Mr. Hervey's readable monograph, it is in the comparatively small space he allots to the strictly biographical portion of his subject, only sixteen pages of the eighty-six which form the book. One would like to know a little more of the early years and the struggles—if he had any—of Louis Charles Bonaventure Alfred Bruneau, to give his full name. If considerations of space prevented the amplification of M. Bruneau's life-story, a few pages of the critical matter, excellent though it be, might have been spared for this purpose. But Mr. Hervey has done his work well. The chapter on 'The artist and his methods' will be perused with special interest, and the operas 'Le Rêve,' 'L'attaque du Moulin,' 'L'enfant roi,' and others, are commented upon in a thoroughly able and judicial manner. The chapter on 'The musical critic' gives an all too brief account of M. Bruneau as a distinguished music critic. In this connection Mr. Hervey says: 'His criticisms impress one as eminently sincere, logical, and well thought out, besides which they are remarkable for excellence of literary style.' This attractive volume is prefaced with an excellent present-day portrait of M. Bruneau, and contains seven other illustrations; it is sure to be widely read. We may mention, by the way, that the date of M. Bruneau's birth as here given—March 3, 1857—does not agree with that of March 2 in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (new edition); and there is a discrepancy in the dates of the production of the opera 'Kerim,' Mr. Hervey giving 'June 9, 1887,' and the Dictionary 'May' of that year.

ANTHEMS BY OLD COMPOSERS.

Holy, Lord God Almighty. By Thomas Bateson. Edited by James Fitzgerald.
Teach me Thy way, O Lord. By Edmund Hooper.
Sing we merrily unto God. By Adrian Batten.
Let my complaint come before Thee, O Lord. By Adrian Batten.
Save me, O God. By Dr. William Boyce.
Look upon mine adversity. By Dr. John Blow.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The first of the above anthems is an extremely interesting example of 17th century church music. It is believed to have been written as the composer's 'Exercise' for his degree of Bachelor of Music, which he took at Trinity College, Dublin, about the year 1615. The anthem was included in one of the volumes of the Musical Antiquarian Society, and Mr. Fitzgerald has adopted the text from this edition; he has also added a condensed version of the choral score for the purposes of practice, but the work is intended to be sung unaccompanied. For this a well-trained choir is necessary, and sufficiently numerous to sing in seven parts, the sopranos, altos and tenors being divided. Given an intelligent and capable choir, this anthem would be very impressive.

The remaining anthems in the above list have been edited by Mr. John E. West, and with his usual insight concerning the needs and average abilities of church choirs. The anthem by Edmund Hooper, organist of Westminster Abbey from 1606 to 1621, is a good example of the diatonic style of the period. The music is of course contrapuntal in style, but it will be found easy to read. Adrian Batten's anthems are similar in character to that by Edmund Hooper, and to them the same criticism may be applied.

'Save me, O God,' by Dr. Boyce, is deeply devotional in character, the part-writing is flowing and dignified, and the conclusion most impressive. Dr. John Blow's setting of 'Look upon mine adversity' is also extremely reverent, and the part-writing is sure to interest the singers.

Correspondence.

MUSIC AT DULWICH COLLEGE.

SIR,—The account given in the July 'MUSICAL TIMES' of the music at Dulwich College is erroneous. So far from being neglected, the support given by the school to the musical institutions is enthusiastic. The statement that the music is 'under the charge of form masters and not professional musicians' is a ludicrous perversion of the truth. With the exception of myself, not one of the eight masters engaged in the musical teaching, teaches anything but music, and no form master teaches any music whatever.

No mention is made in the article of the great work done here by Mr. E. D. Rendall, which has left us with a musical organization complete in every particular, and a choir, orchestra and band which are, I believe, unsurpassed by those of any other public school. I might add that there is now no such thing as 'Upper' and 'Lower' School; 'Dulwich College' is a name expressly confined to this School by the Act of 1882; the Chapel has, musically, no connection whatever with the School; the two gentlemen whose photographs you reproduce were (sic) organists of the Chapel, not of Dulwich College.

Believe me, very truly yours,
HUBERT DOULTON,
Master of the Music at Dulwich College.
Dulwich College, S.E.,
July 1.

[In printing the above letter, literatim et verbatim, we venture to say that in the article the words 'neglected' (or 'neglect') were not once used. On the contrary, the writer of the article said that 'due credit must be given for much excellent work done at the school concerts and in the encouragement given to boys to learn music.' Mr. Doulton endorses the statement that the music at the College is under his direction, and he is a form master; therefore the music is, as we said, under the charge of form masters; for we included what is commonly known as the Lower School, or Alleyn's School, which, however distinct it may be from the modern Dulwich College, is under the control of the same governing body, and in this school the music is also under the charge of a form master.

If, as Mr. Doulton states, 'the Chapel has, musically, no connection whatever with the School,' it may be pointed out that Mr. E. D. Rendall—whose work is so highly and doubtless rightly eulogised by Mr. Doulton—was Organist as well as 'Principal musicmaster' of the College (see the Roll of the Union of Graduates in Music); and, moreover, he is a graduate in music at the University of Cambridge.

Dr. W. H. Cummings, in an article entitled 'Music at Dulwich College,' contributed by him to Concordia of August 7, 1875, said: 'Of the music taught in the College the less said the better. The study of music by all the scholars should be compulsory, and proper facilities and times for teaching the various classes should be arranged.' Whatever improvement has since been made in the musical department of the College, the fact remains that music does not hold that high place in the curriculum as was intended by the founder: this the writer of the article endeavoured to point out.—ED. M. T.]

THE ARTICLE PSALTER IN GROVE'S 'DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS,' NEW EDITION.

SIR,—My attention has been called to a communication appearing in the current number of 'THE MUSICAL TIMES,' and containing a list of alleged omissions and statements requiring correction—from the bibliographical point of view—in an article upon the English Metrical Psalter (in its musical aspect), in the new edition of Grove's Dictionary.

The list does not claim, apparently, to be the outcome of original research, but is rather derived from the works of recent writers, whose statements, it may be said, themselves need verification if they are to be used for this purpose.

The article in the first edition, which was also the first attempt to deal at all fully with the subject, was founded upon a careful examination of all the original sources, so far as they were then known. A list of the musical contents of each psalter, giving the first line of every tune, was made, and these were carefully compared; every precaution against error seemed to have been taken, and the history of each tune, it was hoped, was as plain as possible. And, in fact, the information then given having remained unquestioned, it was repeated, with very little change, in the new edition.

Since questions have now at last been raised, I should naturally have been glad if they could have been discussed and cleared up at once; but unfortunately I am, and shall be till November, far from London, and from all my books and papers relating to this subject, so that it will be impossible for me to begin the necessary inquiries until after my return to town. Only by a careful re-examination of the original sources can it be shown whether, in the cases mentioned by your correspondent, my information is correct, or whether the precautions taken against error were after all inadequate.

I remain, SIR,
Your obedient servant,
July 19, 1907. THE WRITER OF THE ARTICLE.

[We await the result of the 'careful re-examination of the original sources' before replying to the above letter.—ED. M. T.]

THE LATE DR. JOSEPH SMITH.

DEAR SIR,—Your obituary notice of Dr. Joseph Smith induces the promoters of the fund for the relief of his widow and younger children to beg the favour of your space. A generous response to their private solicitations has to be duly acknowledged; but thinking that many of his friends both professional and private would be glad to contribute to the fund, if it were more publicly announced, I am authorized to send you this letter. The lists will shortly be closed, and any contribution, however small, will be gratefully acknowledged by Dr. and Mrs. Werner, 31, Merrion Square, Dublin, and Mr. and Mrs. Peter Goodman, 44, Rutland Square, Dublin; and also by yours faithfully,

JOSEPH SEYMOUR,
Hon. Treasurer, Leinster Section, Incorporated Society of Musicians.

SOUTHPORT ADJUDICATING METHODS.

SIR,—I was extremely pleased to read the strictures passed upon the method of screening the adjudicators at the Southport festival. It is an insult to ask any adjudicator to accept such conditions. If conductors and adjudicators would have the courage to decline to have anything to do with festivals that foster this method, it would cease immediately. I have refused to adjudicate under similar circumstances until the 'bathing van' has been removed. I appeal to the various executive committees to adopt methods in harmony with our Divine Art so that we may have perfect ensemble with competitors and adjudicators.

Yours, &c.,
Hanley, July 8. JOHN JAMES.

THE DURHAM MUSICAL SOCIETY.

DEAR SIR,—On p. 401 of your June issue it is stated that the Durham Musical Society will probably 'be converted into a Cathedral Choral Society, which will devote itself to giving oratorios and other sacred works in the Cathedral.'

As a member of the committee of the Durham Musical Society I wish to give an emphatic contradiction to this statement, which is likely to affect the Society prejudicially. The Cathedral Choir, augmented by special voices, now gives oratorios three times yearly; but the Durham Musical Society will, as hitherto, continue to give its concerts quite independently.—Yours truly,

E. V. STOCKS,
Conductor Durham University Musical Society.

A BACH CONCERT AT THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Of the many excellent concerts given by the students of the Royal College of Music in their beautiful concert-room, none have exceeded in interest that of July 23. Why? Because all its welath came from an inexhaustible mine of noblest music. To display some of its rich treasures was a happy thought of Sir Hubert Parry and his colleagues, who are to be warmly congratulated on their first Bach concert. The programme speaks for itself:

1. Cantata .. Du wahrer Gott und David's Sohn .. Bach.
Solos { Ethel Duthoit (Exhibitioner), A.R.C.M.
Dilys Jones (Exhibitioner).
Spencer Thomas (Scholar).
2. Overture (Suite) in D major .. .. Bach.
Grave (C)—Piu vivace (9-8)—Bourrée I.—Bourrée II.—
Gavotte—Menuet I.—Menuet II.—Réjouissance.
3. Cantata .. Wachet, betet, seid bereit .. Bach.
Solos { Gladys Honey (Scholar).
Dilys Jones (Exhibitioner).
Spencer Thomas (Scholar).
Robert Chignell (Scholar).
4. Organ Solo Toccata and Fugue in D minor .. Bach.
Herbert Arnold Smith (Scholar).
5. Air .. .. .. Bete, bete .. .. .. Bach.
(from Cantata, Mache dich, mein Geist, bereit)
Gladys Honey (Scholar).
Flute—Robert Murchie (Scholar).
Violoncello—F. Gershom Parkington (Scholar).
6. Cantata, Now shall the Grace ('Nun ist das Heil') Bach.

Conductor—
Sir Charles V. Stanford, D.C.L., LL.D., M.A., Mus. Doc.

In regard to interpretation, detailed criticism of the work of students is uncalled for. The honours of the evening fell to the orchestra in their fine performance of the Suite in D, the lesser known of the pair in that key. This was played con amore with delightful verve and finish, as though the hearts of the young people were in the music, the two charming Bourrées especially giving unalloyed pleasure to the audience.

The same high standard was hardly reached in the choral music, in the rendering of which there seemed to be indications of insufficient rehearsal. Attack and accent were sometimes found wanting, and the enunciation of the German words was not always above reproach. The difficulties of Bach's vocal music must be allowed for, but the blemishes to which we have referred and which are often common faults, should be seen to by reason of their interpretative importance. Of the choral works the Advent cantata 'Wachet, betet, seid bereit' was the most interesting because of its wonderful conception. Bach's unrivalled genius in dramatic expression through simple means is grandly illustrated in the bass recitative depicting the Judgment Day, in which the melody of the choral associated in England with 'Great God, what do I see and hear' is introduced by the trumpet with thrilling effect. Bach has not given any time-words in this work; the question of speed, therefore, is one for the conductor to decide. In this connection we think that some of the movements of this cantata were taken too quickly, and thus the performance did not realize that breadth and dignity which the solemn subject demands.

Bach has rightly led the way: may not the College authorities arrange similar programmes from the works of other classical composers?

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

At the students' concert given at Queen's Hall on June 25, five orchestral works which proved interesting and pleasing were performed. Four of these, entitled 'Orchestral Illustrations,' were by Miss Eleanor C. Rudall, who has taken for her subjects the two pictures by the late G. F. Watts severally named 'Dawn,' and 'Good luck to your fishing'; Sir E. Burne-Jones's 'Dorigen and Bretaigne'; and Herbert Schmalz's 'The King's daughter.' These notable examples of pictorial art have moved Miss Rudall to write agreeable music, instinct with refinement and testifying to a lively imagination and perception of instrumental effects. The fifth novelty was a concert-overture in G minor by Mr. York Bowen, which well maintains the reputation this clever young composer has gained. The instrumental soloists were Miss Gladys Clark, who was heard to advantage in Spohr's Violin concerto, the 'Dramatic'; Miss Myra Hess, a decidedly gifted young pianist, and Miss Edith Evans, who reflected credit on her violoncello teacher. The singers were Miss Hedwig Hantke, Miss Josephine Ottlee, and Mr. Thorpe Bates, the last named giving an admirable interpretation of Wotan's 'Abschied.' Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who conducted, secured a grateful ensemble.

The annual prize distribution took place on July 19, when H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, President of the Academy, presented the awards to the successful students.

The following scholarships will be offered for competition at Michaelmas. Full particulars and forms of entry can be obtained from the Secretary upon application:

ROYAL OPERA.

Catalani's 'Loreley.'

During the closing month (July) of the grand season of opera at Covent Garden three works were added to the repertoire. One of these, Alfredo Catalani's 'Loreley,' was performed for the first time in England on July 12. The composer of this opera, who died in 1893 at the early age of thirty-nine, was a native of Lucca, where his father was an organist. 'Loreley' is a revised version of an early effort entitled 'Elda,' produced at Turin in 1880. Although not very successful, some years later the librettists, Messrs. Carlo D'Ormville and A. Zanarolini, and the composer decided to give the opera another chance of life and, having reduced the four acts to three and otherwise improved the work, it was mounted again at Turin in 1890.

The book is well laid out for musical treatment. In the first act is shown how Walter, the Lord of Oberwesel, has won the love of a country maid named Loreley, notwithstanding that he is already affianced to a lady of high degree, Anna of Rehberg, and Walter seeks advice from his friend Hermann, who tells him his duty is to marry Anna. Loreley, on learning how she has been deceived, vows to give herself to Alberich, the god of the Rhine, if she be endowed with irresistible beauty. Her offer is accepted, and then ensue troublous times for all concerned. In the second act Loreley interrupts the marriage procession of Walter and Anna, and the latter dies of grief; in the third act Walter commits suicide on learning that Loreley is doomed to sit on a rock and comb her hair with a golden comb. Each character bears a curious affinity to the personages in Wagner's 'Tannhäuser,' and the composer seems to have been influenced by his German model. As to be expected from the history of the work, every page of the score bears evidence of earnestness of purpose and musicianly painstaking; but lack of spontaneity and impressive expression in the most agitating situations are equally apparent, and expectation is excited in excess of realization. The opera is preceded by a short overture chiefly built up with the melody of Loreley's song of fascination, the composer's happiest effort. The entire action takes place on the banks of the Rhine, with distant view of the 'Loreley' Rock between Bingen and Coblenz, and there are two picturesque ballets of water nymphs, the first of which is danced to piquant music. The principal characters were admirably played. Miss Scalar was well suited in appearance and in voice for Loreley; Miss Selmo Kurz made Anna a sympathetic character and gave a most brilliant rendering of the aria 'Amor celeste'; and Mr. Bassi and Mr. Sammarco did their best with the parts of Walter and Hermann. Mr. Campanini conducted, and the smoothness of the performance reflected much credit on the stage management.

The two other additions to the repertoire were Mr. Umbarto Giordano's 'Fédora' and 'Andrea Chénier.' The former work was first performed in England during the autumn season at Covent Garden last year, and, as a detailed account was given in The Musical Times for December last, it is only necessary now to endorse the opinion then given, and to note changes of cast. The part of the unfortunate actress, Fédora, most advantageously displays the gifts of Madame Giachetti, and her impersonation on July 3 deepened the impressions created on her appearance in the rôle last autumn. Mr. Scotti also resumed his personation of De Seriex, but the coquettish Olga was entrusted to Miss Zeppilli, and the hero to Mr. Caruso who, in the later scenes, sang with a wealth of voice and intensity that led to demonstrations of enthusiastic appreciation. The ensemble was excellent, and Mr. Panizza evinced decided skill as conductor.

'Andrea Chénier' is an earlier work than 'Fédora,' and, as might be expected, is musically weaker. This also was performed for the first time in Italian version in England at an autumn season at Covent Garden in 1905, and an account of the work will be found on page 809 of the December number of The Musical Times for that year. Familiarity does not increase esteem for the music, except for the blind woman's touching song 'Son la vecchia madelon' and the final duet between the hero and heroine as they await the arrival of the tumbril to take them to the guillotine. The former was most pathetically rendered by Madame De Cisneros and the latter by Mr. Caruso and Miss Destinn, whose fine singing throughout the opera imparted distinction to their respective impersonations. Mention should also be made of the admirable embodiments of Gérard, Roucher and Mathieu respectively by Messrs. Sammarco, Marcoux and Gilibert. Mr. Panizza also conducted this opera.

Two revivals should be recorded, that of Verdi's 'Ballo in Maschera,' on June 28, and Donizetti's 'Lucia di Lammermoor' on July 17. In the former Mesdames Scalar and Kurz severally sang brilliantly as Amelia and the Page, and Messrs. Caruso and Sammarco respectively rendered full justice to the parts of the Duke and Renato. Madame Melba appeared in Lucia, supported by Mr. Bonci as Edgardo and Messrs. Scotti and Journet as Enrico and Raimondo. At a second performance of the opera on July 22, the heroine was personated by Miss Kurz.

A TONIC SOL-FA JUBILEE.

The jubilee of Tonic sol-fa festivals and the twenty-third annual festival of the Tonic Sol-fa Association were celebrated with much enthusiasm at the Crystal Palace on June 29. The enormous gatherings of singers, now a popular and familiar feature of the musical life of the Metropolis, grew out of a demonstration of the merits of Tonic sol-fa given at Exeter Hall fifty years ago. On that occasion a suggestion was made that a display on a larger scale should take place at the Crystal Palace, then lately removed from Hyde Park. The suggestion was taken up with spirit by the Rev. John Curwen and his colleagues, with the result that in a few weeks the juvenile choir was trained and, supported by a detachment of tenors and basses, the young folks duly appeared on the Handel Orchestra on September 2, 1857. The interesting event was recorded in The Musical Times of October, 1857, in the following words:

> Crystal Palace.—A most interesting concert took place on the 2nd of September, when 3,000 children, instructed on the principles adopted by the Tonic Sol-fa Association, sang. The audience was one of the largest that has yet assembled in the building, amounting to 29,573, and the scene was of a very exciting nature. The applause was unbounded, and the little singers richly deserved the praise, for their performance was most effective, and their shrill voices were well adapted to the peculiarities of the building. The pianos and fortes were admirably sustained. The important duty of conducting this large body of choristers was fulfilled alternately by Mr. Sarll, of the Royal British Institution, Cooper Street, City Road, and Mr. W. S. Young, of the British School, Wood Street, Spitalfields. A comparatively small choir of tenors and basses, members of the Association, assisted; a greater number would have produced a better effect. Between the parts of the concert Mr. Willing performed upon the large organ. His selection consisted of some themes from Lucrezia Borgia, a prelude and fugue by Bach, and Meyerbeer's 'Coronation March.' The fugue was received with the most applause, and was remarkably well played.

Since then a similar demonstration has been held annually under various conductors; and gradually it has been made manifest that choral singing of quite remarkable finish and refinement can be obtained from the children, mostly from elementary schools, who form the choir on these occasions.

This year the singing of the 5,000 children, under the baton of Mr. S. Filmer Rook, was more captivating than ever, indeed it surpassed anything of the kind that hitherto has been heard at these annual gatherings. The programme included one piece, Spofforth's 'Hail, smiling morn,' which found a place in the selection of fifty years ago, and now, as then, it so pleased the audience that it had to be repeated. The youthful singers were at their best in Mendelssohn's 'Lift thine eyes,' sung unaccompanied with much feeling, Sterndale Bennett's 'May dew,' and especially in an arrangement for two sopranos and contralto of Henry Leslie's trio 'O memory,' which was given with a pure but full quality of tone and a refinement of enunciation calling for high praise. Such refined singing bears strong testimony to the training these children receive in the schools, and it is fervently to be hoped that the Education Committee of the London County Council will not allow any consideration to interfere with such excellent voice-production lessons as these little people now enjoy.

The concert concluded with a selection of patriotic choruses, sung while the scholars of the Kirkdale Road School, Leytonstone, dressed in varying national costumes, presented a series of tableaux descriptive of Britannia surrounded by her children and supported by representatives of the Army and Navy. Mr. C. Hugh Rowcliffe supplied an excellent organ accompaniment.

Choral competitions for the Curwen challenge shield followed the juvenile concert, the winning choir, after an interesting contest, proving to be the Mile-End Select Choir, conducted by Mr. G. Day Winter, the Borough of Greenwich Choral Society taking the prize for sight-singing.

The evening concert, by a choir of about 2,000 London and provincial singers, and supported by an orchestra of about 250 players, opened with a powerful rendering of Beethoven's 'Hallelujah' chorus; the remainder of the programme included a number of familiar choruses and part-songs, of which Pinsuti's 'The sea hath its pearls' was the most successful effort. An interesting feature of the concert was the presentation by Miss Lushington of medals to a number of veterans who had taken part in the first Tonic sol-fa festival at the Crystal Palace in 1857: this lady also handed the shield and prizes to the winners of the choral competitions of the day. The band contributed several pieces in excellent style as well as providing an accompaniment to some of the choruses, and Mr. H. W. Weston officiated most ably at the organ. Mr. L. C. Venables, who conducted this concert, is to be warmly congratulated upon having attained his majority as conductor, having held the baton with marked efficiency at twenty-one concerts.

This inspiring and memorable festival was appropriately concluded by a lecture, illustrated by dissolving views, entitled 'The story of Tonic sol-fa,' delivered by Mr. J. Spencer Curwen, President of the Association.

OPERA IN ENGLISH.

The Moody-Manners Opera Company commenced on July 15 a season of eight weeks at the Lyric Theatre. The selection for the first fortnight comprised Nicolai's 'Merry Wives of Windsor,' Mozart's 'Marriage of Figaro,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Lohengrin,' 'Tristan und Isolde,' 'Faust,' 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' and 'Pagliacci,' which were conducted by Mr. Eckhold and Mr. Sapio. Among the principal exponents were Mesdames Fanny Moody, De Vere-Sapio, Toni Seiter, and Messrs. Joseph O'Mara, John Child, Charles Carter, William Dever, Lewys James, Charles Magrath, and Charles Manners. A special feature was the excellence of the choral singing, while the orchestral playing merited praise.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHORAL UNION.

The annual fête of the National Temperance Choral Union was held at the Crystal Palace on July 13. The proceedings included competitions in various choral and solo-singing classes, a concert by 5,000 juveniles, and another concert by 4,000 adult singers. The juvenile concert, given on the Handel Orchestra, was conducted by Mr. S. H. Cooper. The concert was a memorable success, although the tone at times was rough. In the adult choir competitions, the Bristol Temperance Choir (Mr. F. Stone) gained the first-prize in the small choir section, and that in the large choir section fell to the Reading Temperance Choral Society (Mr. A. W. Moss). Dr. J. E. Borland adjudicated.

The evening concert by the great adult choir was conducted by Mr. W. Seemer Betts. The most ambitious number was a choral fantasia, arranged by Mr. Percy E. Fletcher, upon Wagner's 'Tannhäuser.' The selection had evidenly been carefully rehearsed, and, although the performance was not supported by an orchestra, it was very successful. Mr. Betts has served a long apprenticeship as conductor of the juvenile choir, and now that he is promoted to the leadership of the adult choir, he may safely be expected to keep them to the high standard of choral singing looked for at these festivals. Mr. F. Wilson Parish was, as heretofore, an efficient organist.

UPSALA UNIVERSITY STUDENTS' CHOIR.

The visit of this small choir of about forty Swedish gentlemen has been one of the pleasant experiences of the musical season. The members are by no means all young men, as might be inferred from the occurrence of the word 'students' in the title of the choir. No doubt the mature singers whose voices gave solidity to the tone were former students, who are still able to maintain the bond through music. The choir gave three concerts at the Queen's Hall on June 24, 27, and 28. The members must have been gratified at the geniality and warmth of their reception. There can be no doubt that the choir is well constituted and admirably trained. • The distinguishing features of their performances were the good taste invariably exhibited, and on the whole the agreeable quality of tone and general tunefulness. We are very far from desiring to underrate their excellences, but in view of some eulogies earned from generous friends, it may be as well and fair to say that in point of beauty of tone and splendid execution there are more than a few of our own male-voice choirs which could exhibit finer results. The forty pieces named in the programme touched all moods, grave and gay. The folk-song element was an attractive feature. Amongst the most effective of the smaller pieces we mention a charming part-song 'Sing, sing' by Aug. Soderman, which was sung with great delicacy; a serenade by J. Widcen, and 'Norrland melodies,' in a minor key, by A. Janke. The most elaborate piece presented was 'The peasant wedding,' by A. Soderman. This is in four movements, all of which are fairly fully developed. Our old friend 'The march of the men of Harlech' was an unexpected item, and was sung with considerable fervour. Notable points were that all the pieces were sung unaccompanied, that the key was given by the conductor very quietly, that the pitch was well kept and that, so far as we could see, all the singing was from memory. Dr. I. E. Hedenblad conducted very ably and with welcome unobtrusiveness. London will gladly welcome the Upsala Students' Choir again at their next visit.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

An interesting feature of the orchestral concert given by the pupils of the Guildhall School of Music on June 26 was the performance of a manuscript Pianoforte concerto in C minor by Miss Ethel Scarborough, who played the solo part expressively and brilliantly. The principal subject of the first movement is significant and well designed for development, is coherent, and is also effectively instrumented. The second movement is a sympathetic Lento, and the Finale is gay and vivacious. The vocalists were Miss Amy Julie Bean and Mr. Mario Vail, the former the possessor of a powerful mezzo-soprano voice, and the latter a baritone who, when he has acquired greater dramatic perception, should do well by his art. Mention should also be made of the performance by the orchestra of the first movement of Raff's Fifth symphony (Op. 177) and Schumann's well-nigh forgotten 'Julius Cæsar' overture (Op. 128), conducted by the principal (Dr. W. H. Cummings) with his usual ability.

The orchestral concert given by Miss Tilly Koenen at Queen's Hall on June 25 deserves special mention, not only because of the vocalist's achievements, but because it presented the London Symphony Orchestra under the able conductorship of Herr Max Fiedler. Miss Koenen sang 'Ah! Perfido' (Beethoven) with fine power and breadth. One could deeply enjoy the interpretation without having to feel sympathy at obvious effort. The ripe fullness of her voice, and the command of resources both musical and intellectual, enabled Miss Koenen to give a memorable performance of this great aria, as well as of the songs 'Hymnus' (Strauss), 'Die Musikantin' (Max Fiedler), 'Er ist's' (Hugo Wolf), 'Schmied Schmerz' and 'Im Kahne' (H. van Eyken), and 'Die Allmacht' (Schubert). The orchestra performed 'Der Freischütz' overture, 'Tod und Verklärung' (Strauss) and the C minor symphony (Beethoven).

Madame Clara Butt and Mr. Kennerley Rumford's concert 'to say good-bye' previous to their departure for their Australasian tour attracted an enormous audience to the Royal Albert Hall on June 29. The famous contralto was in excellent voice, and her rendering of 'O mio Fernando' from Donizetti's 'Favorita' advantageously showed the superb quality of her vocal organ. Of course she had to give twice as many songs as announced on the programme. Mr. Kennerley Rumford also sang very finely, his interpretation of 'Largo al factotum' from Rossini's 'Barbière' being a remarkable example of vocal skill. The other artists engaged were the Misses Pauline and Ethel Hook, Esta d'Argo and Ada Forrest, Mr. Ben Davies, Miss Gertrude Meller, pianist, Mr. Tivadar Nachèz and Mr. W. A. Squire. Mr. Arthur E. Godfrey was at the organ, and Mr. S. Liddle played the accompaniments.

Miss Fanny Davies has never played better than at her pianoforte recital at Steinway Hall on July 10. Her rendering of Brahms's exacting 'Variations and fugue on a theme by Handel' was most interesting and brilliant, and her subsequent interpretation of Schumann's 'Forest scenes' was fascinating by its significance and poetic character. The musicianship of the gifted pianist was further shown by a performance of her arrangement of the Scherzo from Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer night's dream' music, and by the execution of several short pieces by living French composers.

The Brahms chamber concert given by Mr. Leonard Borwick on July 3 at Bechstein Hall was most successful. The original scheme was a sonata recital, with the co-operation of Dr. Joachim, but the illness of the eminent violinist necessitated other arrangements, with the result that the aid was secured of Herr Halir and Herr Hausmann. The combination proved exceedingly happy, and those who attended the concert can scarcely fail to keep in memory the gracious and significant readings given.

Miss Elizabeth Dodge gave a very successful song recital at the Æolian Hall on June 26. She possesses a soprano voice of excellent quality, which was effectively displayed in the difficult 'Alleluja' from Bach's cantata 'Jauchzet Gott,' and the mad scene from 'Lucia.' Miss Dodge was assisted by M. Fleury (who played the flute obbligato in the air from 'Lucia') and Madame Renée Chemet Decreus (violin). M. Camille Decreus accompanied.

Miss Phyllis Gotch is to be commended for her decision to give a recital of English folk-songs and ballads on June 25 at Steinway Hall, when a large audience gave emphatic testimony to their enjoyment of her tasteful and expressive singing of the old ditties. Pleasing variety was contributed by the attractive pianoforte playing by Mr. Herbert Fryer.

Miss Edith Wynne-Agabeg and Miss Christian Carpenter afforded enjoyment to a numerous audience at Steinway Hall on July 2; the former by her sympathetic singing and the latter by her tasteful pianoforte playing, which included two effective Studies and an Impromptu from her own pen, and Mr. Carlo Albanesi's Sonata in B flat, a refined and graceful work.

The St. Margaret's Musical Society (Westminster) gave a concert performance of Bizet's opera 'Carmen' at the Royal Horticultural Hall on July 2, conducted by Mr. F. W. Bellchamber, in the absence, through illness, of the conductor of the Society, the Rev. Jocelyn Perkins.

PATRON'S FUND CONCERT.

The eighth concert under Mr. S. Ernest Palmer's munificent endowment was given at the Queen's Hall on July 11. An overture by Mr. Walter E. Lawrence, though containing clear conscientious writing, did not prove very exciting, while Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill's scene for contralto (Miss Phyllis Lett) and orchestra, a setting of Shelley's 'To the Night' scarcely intensified the words of the poem; there seemed to be strong effort without strong inspiration. No 'new paths' were opened in a 'Symphonic Scherzo' by Mr. Montague F. Phillips, but the writing was clear and crisp, and the scoring effective. A suite, descriptive of the race for the 'Palio' or standard which takes place at Siena on the Feast of the Assumption, seemed to suggest rampant realism; but the aim of the composer, Mr. George Dyson, was on a higher plane, and the music in itself was interesting. One number in the programme was not the work of a student, but of the great master Beethoven, the Pianoforte concerto in G, the solo part of which was well rendered by Mr. James Friskin. This was conducted by Sir Charles Stanford, the other works being played by the London Symphony Orchestra under the direction of their respective composers.

Musical Competition Festivals.

ASSOCIATION OF MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

The third annual conference was held on July 2 at Messrs. Broadwood's, Conduit Street. There was a large attendance of members representing festivals held in numerous parts of the country. Lady Mary Forbes-Trefusis who presided said that they could congratulate themselves upon the growth of the Association. Since last year the membership had increased from 200 to 400, a fact which augured happily for the future work and usefulness of the Association.

Dr. McNaught, in presenting the annual report, said that the large increase in the membership was a conspicuous feature of the past year's work. New festivals had been held during the year, one of the most successful being that at the Alexandra Palace for Hertfordshire and North Middlesex. Although devised late in the season, it was carried through with astonishing energy by Miss Cecilia Hill and proved a very great success. Another festival, also held for the first time with marked success, was that at Ilkley, or Upper Wharfedale, with which Mr. Crawshaw had been so happily connected. Buxton was another new festival, and this too seemed to have succeeded. Another festival which counted as new, because it realized a fresh idea, was that held at Doncaster, where York, Pontefract, Brigg and Retford were united in a perfectly friendly competition. This co-operation was the beginning of a large and important movement by which the successful choirs of one centre would be able to compete with the successful choirs of another centre. New competitions were also started in Paisley and Belfast.

Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland, in the unavoidable absence of the treasurer, Mr. W. H. Leslie, submitted the audited balance sheet, which showed a balance in hand of £5 11*s*., or an increase of £1 8*s*. over last year.

Mr. Fuller Maitland also presented the report of the committee appointed to consider Mr. Fielding's scheme for a prize competition for a short secular choral work. He said that this idea was put forward at the last conference by Mr. Fielding, it being thought desirable to secure a simple form of choral work, one that would be suitable for combined performance at competition festivals. He observed that although the prize offered was small (£5), the work chosen would most certainly be published, and the copyright would remain vested in the composer.

After considerable discussion as to the subscriptions of members and the affiliation of festival committees, Miss Wakefield read a paper on 'How to put competition festivals on a permanent footing.' She said that the provision of a lasting basis for the competition festival movement was a consideration of supreme importance to those who had given so much of their time to nurturing its infancy. That much-to-be-desired condition of things could only be arrived at by each festival itself. The work of the undertaking should be as widely spread and divided up as could possibly be arranged, for only in that way could its staying powers be arrived at. Great attention should also be given to the perfecting of competition festival machinery. Every musical centre, however small, ought to be properly constituted, with executive committee, chairman, secretary and treasurer. Not merely musical enthusiasm, but good business organization should be adopted and utilized to the needs of these competition festivals. She did not share the feeling which some had that competitions and festivals of the ordinary type would never answer together. She held that the two could be easily worked together and that the competitions lost their chief interest and their binding, enduring power when the combined festival was not the most important part of the undertaking. Endeavour should be made to arouse a genuine popular interest, not a fictitious one, in the festivals. Finance was the crux of the whole question. The preliminary subscription list should amount to a third of what was required for the whole. To obtain subscriptions an organized system of collectors was needful. The sympathy of the local press should be gained. She mentioned in conclusion that it had been computed by Dr. McNaught that 50,000 competitors went in for examination this year; he had recently travelled over 5,000 miles on an adjudicator's tour, and had heard at least 600 choirs. These were splendid competition results—let them see to it that they were permanent.

Mrs. Peake (Retford and Doncaster) spoke on the financial aspects of the festivals, and Mr. Fowler (Bristol) also dealt with this topic. He described the ways and means adopted in the festival in which he was concerned. He had found it very difficult to get outside support and to make ends meet. In his district it seemed necessary to offer fairly large money prizes. One source of income was the charge for admittance of competitors. The selection of good and suitable tests was important. A badly chosen piece drove away competitors. He had always tried to secure the best possible adjudicators, and this was a heavy expense.

Lady Winefride Cary-Elwes (Brigg, Lincolnshire) read an interesting paper on numerous statistics as to finance she had gathered and collated, and Mrs. Laughton (Isle of Man) gave an account of the finance of the Douglas Festival. Incidentally she stated that soon after their festival they always had a 'grumbling' meeting, at which everybody could give vent to feelings. This brilliant idea was greatly appreciated by the chairman and the audience. Dr. McNaught mentioned that Douglas possessed in Mr. Looney's choir one of the finest small mixed-voice choirs in the country. Mrs. Commeline (Berks, Bucks and Oxon) stated that no money prizes were given at their festival, and she explained how they had contrived to attract a record entry of 1,400 school children. The Rev. E. P. Luard (Colchester) thought it was a mistake to make areas very large. Miss Susan Lushington (Farnham), Canon Rawnsley (Keswick), Mrs. Ridley (Tynedale), Major Orde ('Wansbeck' Festival, Morpeth), Mr. Thompson, Mr. A. Aitken Crawshaw (Upper Wharfedale Festival, Ilkley) and Mrs. Mansel (Mid-Somerset) all joined in the discussion.

At the afternoon sitting Dr. H. Walford Davies addressed the conference on 'The maintenance of pitch in choral music.' This subject, he said, was so important as to claim constant attention, but it was too often neglected. He had heard even good choirs spoil a magnificent performance by falling half a tone in pitch, and they seemed to be quite casual about it. The initial difficulty was that people admitted the impeachment and stumbled about looking for its cause, but they seldom seemed to look for its cure. They regarded it as an inevitable fact which had no remedy. Yet it was a musical disease which was easily curable, and the singers held the cure in their own hands. He often came across people whose attitude was 'Hallo, we're flat to-day.' That was the point of view they took, and there was an end of it. If there was a day on which they were not down in pitch they looked upon it as a bit of luck. The lucky days he thought were fewer than the unlucky ones. From his experience with small choirs he was convinced there was a cure, but he was ready to admit that the difficulty was increased in large choirs. In a great festival choir one or two bad tenors could spoil the others, and the tenors in their turn could bring the whole chorus down. The one thing they needed to aim at was to impress individual singers, whether they form choirs of 100 or 200 voices, that by their own individual effort this fault could be remedied. In his young days he had a splendid solo boy who persistently sang flat. He then fancied, as a great many people fancied to-day, that the difficulty of surmounting this flatness, which seemed constitutional, was colossal, but the boy was so good that one day he said to him, 'I will give you a sovereign if you will cure that flatness.' The sovereign went in a surprisingly short space of time. The cure had been effected, and he obtained value for that sovereign in seeing how easy it was in a persistent and chronic case to effect a cure. His own methods were somewhat a rule of thumb. He made a practice of appealing to the boys, be they ever so small and ever so unintelligent, and telling them, 'You are flat, put it right.' He did not give them a note to put it right with, that was not necessary, but got to the radical wrong at once by appealing to what intellect the boys might have and appealing to their memory. They started perhaps in C minor and got down to B or B flat, and he then told them simply, 'You're flat, get back,' and in the process of the piece there would be surprising results even from very small boys. They got interested, and it was amusing to see how quickly and effectually the cure was achieved. Thus there was at hand a far readier remedy than one was apt to think. The evil was serious and important because an otherwise fine performance might be spoiled by this rank piece of carelessness. Those present who had choirs under their control should have a quiet talk with the singers and impress upon them the seriousness of the evil; that it was not a fad of one or two people, and should show them that it was stupid, a grave moral error, a lack of discipline, and a lack of good manners to sing flat. They could be taught that it was worse than wicked, it was vulgar. One practice was extremely useful, especially for voices in large numbers—pianissimo singing on a common chord. Excellent results could be obtained by singing a major or a minor chord, preferably one that was euphonious. Take C in the bass, G a fifth above in the tenor, C above that in the alto, and E flat (or E natural) above that in turn for the trebles—all respectable notes for individual voices—and tell the singers to sustain these chords, devoting a quarter of an hour to them if necessary, until everybody had enjoyed the euphony of their own voices and their own agreement with other voices.

In replying to questions, Dr. Davies went a little further into the details of his methods and said that in rectifying flat singing he always found it best not to sound the note at all on the pianoforte, but to ask the singers to raise their own voices by recollection as soon as they possibly could to the pitch required. He always found this method efficacious.

Dr. McNaught pointed out that choirs sometimes maintained the original pitch after singing much out of tune all through. Many good musicians could not say for certain whether an unaccompanied choir had ended in pitch until the pianoforte announced the fact! They derived deep pleasure from the performance and yet had to condemn retrospectively what they had heard. The problem was an ever present one, and Dr. Davies's sovereign cure, good as it was, would not always apply.

Mr. Harry Evans thought that too much was made of keeping the pitch. He would be glad to see the wretched pitch question done away with entirely, and prizes awarded for interpretative merit.

Mr. W. H. Hadow, in an eloquent address on 'My impressions of competition festivals,' which was highly appreciated by the audience, said that while he had no claim to be considered a festival competition worker, his opinions might be of interest to the members of such an Association as theirs, which consisted of experts. An outside opinion might be of value if only to provoke discussion. Molière used to read his plays to his cook in order to find out what the great public was likely to think of them. He desired to express his sincere thanks to the organizers of these festivals, not only for what they had done, but also for that from which they had spared him and others. It was within memory, for the festivals were little more than twenty years old, what kind of undefinable, hybrid, miscellaneous entertainment used to represent the art in our country districts, where the vicar read Longfellow and the doctor read Artemus Ward, where the squire's daughters played 'Un morceau brillant' by Sydney Smith, where the solo songs 'Meet me by moonlight alone,' very arch and coy, and 'The death of Nelson,' very full and throaty, were sung, and the choir performed some artless ditties under the direction of a worried and rather irritable schoolmaster. Not only were these performances of themselves deplorable, but still more deplorable was the total absence of any kind of criticism. Every single item in the programme was equally assured of its encore, and next Saturday's local paper had an article in which every performer was equally and sedulously praised, in which the 'Ladies from the Hall' were commended, the doctor was duly praised, and the other readers were told they had surpassed themselves in their endeavour to combine amusement with instruction, while even the choir was patted on the back for the 'rendition' of its 'morceau.' They provided an organization for the selection of pieces that met what he believed was really a national need—the need of good music. At the same time he hoped it would not be taken amiss if he suggested one or two points of criticism. For one thing, he felt the works sometimes selected for choirs were a little bit too difficult. Had they not sometimes been selected more on the ground of undeniable intrinsic beauty than of their adaptability to the half-developed resources of those by whom they were to be presented? He sometimes felt that small choirs had to undertake larger tasks than they could reasonably be expected to perform. He was also of opinion that there might be a little too much attention paid to solo singing at these festivals. The soloist was quite certain to come to the front anyhow, and these festivals were primarily intended to encourage the corporate feeling of choral singing. If our heaven-born tenor conceals himself in the garb of a tram conductor the discriminating eye will penetrate his disguise.

Mr. Hadow thought there was room for a little further advance and improvement in the training of musical intelligence. It was imagined that musical intelligence and musical performance were two separate things, that one could be had apart from the other. That was heresy. Another point on which he had heard the festivals criticised was that they were bad in so far as they were competitive. He entirely disagreed with that view, because people must have something 'to play for,' so to speak. When Ruskin came as a professor to Oxford he preached that outdoor games like cricket, football and so on were immoral because they fostered competition and desire for victory. He got young Oxford to give up the games and to go with him to a village to make a road, which he said would provide better exercise and have no taint of competition. The main result to-day is that at Oxford there are ten times as many competitive games as there were in Ruskin's time, and the road is an elongated quagmire. Competition when it was personal was liable to all sorts of evils and diseases; but when competition was corporate, not playing for one's own hand, but for one's institution, then he believed it was a healthy thing. He would not give a straw, as human nature stands at present, for a boy who did not want to win something for his school, or an undergraduate who did not want to win something for his college. When he saw, as he had seen, a winning choir at a competition festival fly from the judge's award to the telegraph office, in order to send to relations and friends the news of its victory, not a victory of winning something for itself, but a bannei or a cup or a shield to put up in the village hall, then he thought that it was not a slur on or a defect in these festivals, but a distinct advantage and merit. The esprit de corps of the village choir was an altogether wholesome thing. It might be that, as the philosophers said, the day might come when we should only have wisdom for a pleasure, but when that day came the millennium would have arrived and he would be dead.

There was another advantage of these competition festivals. We had been a little too much inclined in the past to rank artistic achievement in music, in literature, in everything in fact, not so much by the general devotion and level of intelligence in the country, as by our great men. That was just as irrational as it would be to refuse to eat anything at home on the ground that once or twice every few years one dined with a city company. We were justly proud of our great names, but it was not by our great names that we should be saved, but by the general level of intelligence throughout the country. It was salutary to remember that while we plumed ourselves as being the nation that produced Shakespeare, we were also the nation which, if it did not produce, had at any rate imported without duty the controversy whether or not the works of Shakespeare were written by Francis Bacon. If our Continental neighbours admired us for the one thing, they looked upon us simply with stupefaction for the other. There were the great musical festivals, but unless the general level of public taste rose to meet their demands, there would not be any hope of getting continuous texture of musical taste or standard of ideals throughout the country. This was the work those engaged in the competition festivals were engaged upon; they were working up the dead level of the penny reading and getting hold of people who had never known what it was to sing Bach or Mozart, and lifting them to meet the level of the great musical festivals. So long as he saw this work increasing year by year he would be grateful and wish God-speed to the Association.

The Hon. Maude Stanley read a paper on the utility of the competitions in connection with girls' clubs. She described in detail the working of the Girls' Club Union which she founded many years ago, and which had now grown into an important institution. The influence of the choral practice had been most salutary. Mr. W. Holmes (London) also gave his testimony as to the refining influence of the singing practises and to the stimulus of the competitions. The great success of the factory girls' classes in Ancoats, Manchester, under Miss Ashworth, was mentioned.

The last paper read was by Dr. McNaught on 'Points from Competition Schedules.' The various conditions as to prizes and sight-singing, &c., were described and reviewed.

The Conference then separated. It was generally acknowledged to be the most useful that had been held by the Association.

Southport.—July 4, 5 and 6.

This was the second competitive festival held in this attractive sea-side town. It was promoted with great energy by the secretary, Mr. F. W. Jackson; and a strong committee, with Mr. W. C. Lord as chairman, gave the undertaking influential support. The entries were numerous and the audiences large. The children's day brought forward troops of vocal and instrumental soloists, six school choirs in a local class, ten school choirs in an open class, five band of hope choirs and five action-song choirs. The results in these classes are recorded in this month's School Music Review. On the second day over 200 adult solo-singers, six girls' friendly society choirs and eleven church and chapel choirs appeared. The choral honours fell in one class to St. Luke's Church, Southport (Mr. J. C. Clarke), and in another class to the Wigan Choral Class (Mr. A. Knight). On the third day the classes were all choral and, with one small exception, were open to the whole country. Nine female-voice choirs competed, and Preston Lyric (Mr. Joseph Smith) came out first. There were only three male-voice choirs, but these were of the very best, viz., Habergham (Mr. E. Hitchon), Manchester (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt) and Southport (Mr. J. C. Clarke). The tests were 'O peaceful night' (Edward German), 'Battle song' (Schumann), 'Liebe' (Strauss), and 'The word went forth' (Mendelssohn). The performances were all impressive. 'Liebe' was sung very finely by Mr. Clarke's choir, and Manchester excelled decidedly in the first two pieces and the last. Habergham displayed its characteristic virility and extraordinary resonance, but did not succeed so well in subtle passages. The result announced was somewhat of a surprise, inasmuch as Southport and Manchester were tied for the first place.

The chief mixed-voice class attracted five choirs, viz.: Southport (Mr. W. Tattersall), Salford (Mr. F. W. Blacow), Padiham Vocal Union (Mr. E. Hitchon), Hanley Cauldon (under its new conductor, Mr. W. Sherratt) and Slaithwaite (Mr. T. E. Pearson). The test-pieces were: 'O death, thou art the tranquil night' (Cornelius), 'The Cruiskeen Lawn' (Stewart), 'On the Alm' (Elgar), and 'Tell me, thou soul' (Havergal Brian). The five choirs sang the first two pieces, and three had to be selected to sing the other two pieces. While all the first performances presented features of interest, it cannot be said that the Cornelius piece was satisfactorily interpreted by more than one choir, namely, the Padiham Choir. They at least realized the profound and moving beauty of this wondrous piece, and in doing so displayed beautiful tone and fine training. The Hanley Choir also sang with rare beauty of tone, but with not enough penetration into the inwardness of the piece. The official result of this first hearing spread consternation over probably nearly everybody concerned, including the adjudicators, for it turned out that Padiham was not one of the three choirs selected for the final tests. Hanley, Slaithwaite, and Southport were the three fortunate choirs chosen, and in the end they were placed in the order named.

Sight-singing was treated in a regrettably casual way. By a mischance copies were not available at the appointed time and, later, after a search in the town had yielded some music, the Manchester Orpheus strained their memories more than their intellects by singing Bishop's 'What shall he have that killed the deer,' at sight! There is undoubted vitality in the competition festival movement when it can survive such incidents as these.

We have left to the last a description of the method of adjudication adopted. The three judges in all the important classes were screened and separated and not permitted to confer, and they gave no detailed criticisms, the results in figures being announced by a member of the festival committee. Then, in case a furtive look at a programme might enable them to discover which choir was singing, another order of numbering was announced from the platform. Further, an objection was made to the secretary collecting the marks from the three boxes, or 'bathing tents,' as Mr. Noble aptly described them, because in doing so he might be tempted to make revelations. The judges so 'cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in,' were three of the foremost men in the profession, viz., Dr. Cummings, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor and Mr. T. Tertius Noble; Dr. Challinor and Mr. R. J. Forbes also assisted. The separation of the judges was the worst feature of the plan. A rapid exchange of ideas in the box is one of the best safeguards against mistakes and the surest means of arriving at the average mind. As it was, the figures showed that in more than one case the opinion of two judges was over-ridden by the contrary opinion of the remaining one, because of the adoption of different standards of marking. We cannot help thinking that the whole tone of the competition festival movement will be lowered and the cause seriously damaged if this method of treating the judges is generally adopted. A fine aroma of friendly trust and mutual respect will be displaced by an odour of suspicion. A judge with a reputation to lose has the strongest possible motive not to show a bias, especially as he works in public in the fierce light that beats about the adjudicator's throne. His great anxiety is to arrive at a fair and honest conclusion and to be true to himself. We trust the Southport committee, in their praiseworthy zeal for perfection, will not persevere in a scheme which has been condemned alike by competitors, audiences and adjudicators.

Manchester.—A competition organized by the Nonconformist Choir Union was held on June 29. Ten choirs competed. Stretford (Mr. T. Corlett), Oxford Road (Mr. Mottram) and Cheetham Hill (Mr. J. Taylor) were winners in their respective sections. Mr. H. Whittaker adjudicated.

Foreign Notes.

BAYREUTH.

Various reports have been circulated to the effect that in future Herr Siegfried Wagner will have sole direction of the Bayreuth festivals, but it is now stated that Frau Cosima Wagner has no intention of withdrawing from the post she has held for so many years. Her reported retirement was said to be owing to the state of her health. In connection with these festivals it may be noted that July 26 was the twenty-fifth anniversary of the production of 'Parsifal.' Of the original cast, H. Winkelmann (Parsifal), T. Reichmann (Amfortas), Scaria (Gurnemanz), Kindermann (Titurel), and Materna (Kundry), only the last is still living.

BERLIN.

The following works will be produced at the Hofoper next season: Resnicek's 'Donna Diana,' Eugen d'Albert's 'Tiefland,' Richard Strauss's versions of the two Iphigenias of Gluck, and Leon Blech's 'Aschenbrödel.' Also, by command of the Kaiser, Verdi's 'Don Carlos' and Massenet's 'Hérodiade.'

COLOGNE.

The Lower Rhenish Musical Festival was held here from June 29 to July 1, under the direction of Herr Fritz Steinbach. The choir consisted of 400 and the orchestra of 132 players. On the first day Bach was represented by three works, including the great unaccompanied motet 'Singet dem Herrn,' the rendering of which was most impressive. Another triumph was the performance of the 'Choral Symphony.' The second day was devoted to Brahms, of whose music Steinbach is one of the greatest interpreters. Brahms was worthily represented by the 'Haydn' variations, the Symphony in C minor, the Pianoforte concerto in D minor, with Mr. Frederic Lamond as soloist. On the last day Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto, with Mischa Elman as soloist, Strauss's 'Don Juan,' important excerpts from 'Parsifal,' and songs with orchestral accompaniment by Mahler, provided a varied and interesting programme.

FERRARA.

In the year 1609 the great composer and organist, Girolamo Frescobaldi, published his first work, a collection of Madrigals a 5 at Antwerp. The three hundredth anniversary of this event is to be celebrated in this city, where Frescobaldi was born in 1583, by the publication of an album of his works issued under the auspices of the Società del Quartetto.

MILAN.

Two brothers, Cesare and Alberto Mangili, have offered to present the Conservatorio with a sum of £2,000 in order to provide purses for poor pupils who wish to study music. A royal decree has been issued authorizing the institution to accept the gift.——Madame Parmentier, better known by her maiden name Teresa Milanollo, who died at an advanced age in 1904, bequeathed 90,000 francs to the Milan Conservatorio, the interest of which is intended to assist gifted but poor students in the classes of string instruments. The sum has just been handed over to Signor Gallignani, Director of the Institution. A letter in Le Ménestrel, written by M. le Général Parmentier, gives the further information that his wife bequeathed exactly the same sum to the Paris Conservatoire; also that she left all the artistic souvenirs of herself and her gifted sister—who died at an early age in 1848—to their native city, Savigliano in Piedmont.

MUNICH.

An executive committee of seven members has been appointed for the organization of the festivals and concerts to be given during the Exhibition to be held here next year. MM. Siegmund von Hausseger, Felix Mottl, Max Reger, Richard Strauss, and Felix Weingartner have been named honorary members.

PRAGUE.

On the third anniversary (May 1) of Antonin Dvorák's death a bust of him was placed in the foyer of the National Theatre, by the side of those of his eminent fellow-countrymen, Smetana, Fibich, Bendl and Joseph Leva.

PARIS.

The much-coveted Prix de Rome has been awarded by the Institut to M. Leboucher, who won the second prix in 1906. He studied with M. Widor the eminent organist. The second prix has been awarded to M. Mazellier, a pupil of M. Lenepveu. Fortune was unfavourable to MM. André Gailhard and Gaubert, who had previously gained the second prix, the one in 1905, the other in 1906.——MM. Messager and Broussan have acquired from Messrs. Schott the right to perform 'Götterdämmerung' at the Opéra; so now they will be able to perform the whole of the Tetralogy.

VIENNA.

The following novelties are announced for the forthcoming season at the Hofoper: v. Zemlinsky's 'Der Traumgörg,' Bittner's 'Die rote Gred,' Goldmark's 'Das Wintermärchen,' Roller's 'Rübezahl,' and Debussy's 'Pelléas et Mélisande.'

The Sunday afternoon recitals of sacred music instituted at Dover College by Mr. J. Edis Tidnam, the newly-appointed director of the music, have attracted large audiences. The music performed has comprised Schubert's Unfinished and Beethoven's Fifth Symphonies which have been well rendered by the College orchestra, as also have Stainer's 'Crucifixion,' and various part-songs by the College choir. In addition there have been given Rheinberger's Suite for violin, violoncello, and organ, and trios by Schumann and Mendelssohn. These Sunday concerts take place in the College hall, which contains a large four-manual organ, presented by the late Dr. Astley. During the present vacation the chapel organ is being entirely rebuilt and enlarged at a cost of about £1,200, the last munificent gift of Dr. Astley to the College.

An appeal for contributions towards a memorial to be erected over the grave of the celebrated clarinettist, Richard Muhlfeld, who died in June last, and for whom Brahms wrote some of his finest chamber compositions, has been issued in Germany by the conductor of the Meiningen Orchestra, and is addressed to all the friends and admirers of the late great artist. Contributions may be sent to Professor Wilhelm Berger, Meiningen, Germany.

Mr. G. F. Sewell, on his retirement, on the ground of ill-health, from the honorary secretaryship of the Bradford Festival Choral Society, has been presented with a testimonial, in the form of a cheque for £250, in acknowledgment of the splendid services rendered by him to the Society during the twenty-five years he has discharged his arduous duties.

Clifton College includes among its open Scholarships one of £25 for Music: it has been gained this year by D. G. A. Fox, a boy in the school. The head-master, the Rev. A. A. David, himself a violinist, is keenly interested in the musical department of the College, which is under the efficient supervision of Mr. A. H. Peppin.

The Magdalen College commemoration concert took place on June 26, when an interesting and varied selection of vocal and instrumental music was performed. Unlike other college concerts, at Oxford, the programme was carried out entirely by Magdalen men and choristers. Dr. Varley Roberts conducted.

At the meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Buckinghamshire, held at Freemasons' Hall on July 11, Mr. George F. Andrews, organist and choirmaster of High Wycombe Parish Church, was appointed Provincial Grand Organist by the Right Hon. Col. Lord Addington.

Mr. C. W. Stear has been appointed conductor of the Bristol North Choral Society in succession to Mr. J. Bending, who has been compelled to leave England on account of ill-health.

The Christchurch (N.Z.) Musical Union on June 11, performed, under the direction of Dr. J. C. Bradshaw, Stanford's 'Revenge' and a cantata entitled 'Hinemoa,' a Maori legend, composed by Mr. Alfred H. Hill.

Mr. Henry Beauchamp and Mr. Edward Iles have been appointed professors of singing at the Royal Academy of Music.

Dr. W. B. Ross has been appointed conductor of the Philharmonic Amateur Orchestral Society, Edinburgh.

Answers to Correspondents.

A. O.—With regard to the air 'Ombra mai fù di vegetabile,' from Handel's opera 'Serse'—made famous by the so-called Largo as adapted by Hellmesberger—the most detailed information about the opera is to be found in Burney's 'History of Music,' Vol. iv., p. 423. Space will not permit us to give the whole of this interesting extract, but Burney truly says that the above air is in 'a clear and majestic style, out of the reach of time and fashion.' As to the libretto, he says: 'I have not been able to discover the author of the words of this drama; but it is one of the worst that Handel ever set to Music: for besides feeble writing, there is a mixture of tragi-comedy and buffoonery in it, which Apostolo Zeno and Metastasio had banished from the serious opera. However, it gave Handel an opportunity of indulging his native love and genius for humour; and the airs for Elviro, a facetious servant in this opera, are of a very comic cast.' In spite of its humour, the opera was only performed five times under Handel's direction, the first of which was on April 15, 1738. The comic nature of the libretto is somewhat against the idea that the above song 'represents the tribute to the simple beauty of Nature extorted from one of the mighty ones of the earth.' Handel wrote the air in the key of F, and it is headed Larghetto.

LEBA.—The following speeds are suggested for the pianoforte pieces you name.—Bach's 'Italian concerto': Allegro, crotchet = 96; Andante, quaver = 104; Presto, minim = 112. Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 7): Allegro molto, dotted crotchet = 126; Largo, quaver = 92; Allegro, dotted minim = 76 (minore section = 66); Rondo, crotchet = 60. Beethoven's Sonata in E (Op. 14, No. 1): Allegro, crotchet = 138; Allegretto, dotted minim = 60; Rondo, minim = 76. There are two Studies in A major by Cramer in Book 3 (Peters edition). That headed Allegro should be played at crotchet = 144; the other one (Arpeggio), in 2-4 time, at quaver = 160.

H. G. D.—For your lecture on 'Mendelssohn' you could not do better than consult Sir George Grove's biography in the 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians.' As you ask for the dates of articles on the composer which have appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES, and which may be of some use to you, we gladly give them: 'Reminiscences of Mendelssohn,' August, 1892; 'Mendelssohn's drawings,' November, 1897; and 'A humorous sketch by Mendelssohn,' November, 1900. An article on Mendelssohn's music associated with 'Hark! the herald angels sing' appeared in our issue of December, 1897.

F. B. H.—The only suggestion we can make in order that you may realize your 'ambition to travel as musical director to some light opera' is to apply to the managers of opera companies, stating your qualifications and experience. An advertisement in the Era might be a useful method of making your ambition known.

G. R.—You could not do better than article yourself to an English cathedral organist. We cannot give even an approximate cost of taking such a step, but you could easily ascertain this by answering the advertisements of that nature which appear in this journal.

G. E. B.—We should advise you to practise on an ordinary church organ rather than on an American organ with pedals, because the pedals of the latter are often not according to scale. We regret that we cannot undertake to give the names of instrument makers.

ORGE.—For a 'Pedal method for the pianoforte' see that by A. F. Venino, also the pianoforte pedal studies from Rubinstein's 'Historical Concerts.' For octave studies, try Franklin Taylor's 'Progressive Studies for the Pianoforte,' Books 35 and 36.

A SUBSCRIBER OF TWENTY-SEVEN YEARS' STANDING (TASMANIA).—We are afraid the two volumes belonging to your friend are not of much intrinsic value. You might, however, advertise for a purchaser if the lady wishes to dispose of them.

J. G. M.—This is a free country, and no one is 'barred from entering pupils for exams.' Why not keep on with your trade of boiler-plating and continue your 'little teaching in the evening,' instead of 'thinking of taking up teaching music as a profession'?

ARGENTINE PIANIST.—The addresses of the distinguished pianists are unknown to us. You are doubtless quite correct in saying that 'only very few of these great men ever care to answer correspondence, even if it is only to ask advice.'

TRADE.—The Music Trades Review, published monthly at 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, is doubtless the publication you require. We cannot give 'the names and full postal addresses of four or five German piano makers.'

A. W.—The correct form in which the recitatives and airs in Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' should be sung will be found in the book of the solo music—one for each class of voice—edited by Mr. Randegger and published by Messrs. Novello.

W. H. G. — For good German songs having 'not too difficult accompaniment,' see 'Das Vaterhaus,' 'Gute Nacht,' and 'Schlaf wohl,' by Abt; 'O lieb,' by Blasser; 'Waldeslied,' by Kreutzer; and 'Trompeter,' by Speyer.

CLAVIER. — The following daily studies, by different composers, may profitably follow your achievement of having worked Herz's 1,000 of that species—Loeschhorn, Pischna, Philip, Rosenthal, Tausig, and Liszt.

H. G. L.—We do not know of any choral society in London which holds its rehearsals on Sundays. The hon. secretary of the Magpie Madrigal Society is Mr. A. C. Curtis, 68, Elm Park Road, S.W.

ENQUIRER.—Both the terms you give—'Raseggiando' and 'Cédez' mean a slackening of speed.

ALERTE.—The bar with the $\frac{2}{8}$ signature is obviously a half-bar of the $\frac{2}{4}$ bars of the context.

B. E. S.—No biographical sketch of the lady you name has appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED
BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

This Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

FROM THE ABOVE:

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

The present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of Daily Technical Practice. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

TEN HYMN TUNES

COMPOSED BY

CONSTANTIA A. ELLICOTT.

"This small collection of Hymn Tunes is in many ways interesting. The melodies are broad, parts clear, and the general style dignified and suggestive of a good school of Church music. 'Courtney,' on the whole, is the most striking.—
"J. Kendrick Pyne, Mus. Doc.,
"Organist of Manchester Cathedral."

"They are very melodious, and most singable. Those which I have introduced at the Recitals and Services in Gloucester Cathedral have been instantly taken up by the congregation.—
"A. Herbert Brewer, Mus. Doc.,
"Organist of Gloucester Cathedral."

"The Hymn Tunes composed by Mrs. Ellicott are excellent, particularly numbers 1, 6, and 7.—
"C. W. Perkins, Organist, Birmingham Town Hall."

Price Threepence.

SCHOOL BAND MUSIC

Edited by W. G. McNAUGHT.

This Series, as its title suggests, is intended to meet the needs of School String Bands. It will include arrangements and original pieces of every suitable description.

FIRST SELECTION.

1.	WHERE THE BEE SUCKS	Arne.
2.	THE GOLDEN VANITY	English Air.
3.	THE BAY OF BISCAY	John Davy.
	O WERT THOU IN THE CAULD BLAST	Mendelssohn.
4.	GOOD MORROW, GOSSIP JOAN	English Air.
	AULD LANG SYNE	Scotch Air.
5.	THE ASH GROVE	Welsh Air.
	MARCH OF THE MEN OF HARLECH	Welsh Air.
6.	THE ARETHUSA	Shield.
	THE MINSTREL BOY	Irish Air.
7.	FAIREST ISLE	Purcell.
	WELCOME THOU WHOSE DEEDS CONSPIRE (from Jephtha)	Handel.
8.	HEART OF OAK	Dr. W. Boyce.
	THE HARP THAT ONCE IN TARA'S HALLS	Irish Air.

The above are all very simply arranged by Percy E. Fletcher. The 1st Violin parts do not go beyond the third position, and they are often written divisi in order to fill out the harmony. The viola parts are ad lib., the actual notes being written as the second of the divisi parts for the second violin. The bowing and fingering are carefully marked. The arrangements are complete in themselves with or without the vocal parts, and they can also be used as accompaniments to Novello's School Song edition of the pieces.

1st Violin, 2nd Violin, Viola, 'Cello and Bass Parts, each number and part in a separate cover, price 3d.
Pianoforte Parts can be obtained of each of the above Pieces, price 1½d. or 2d.
Further numbers will shortly be issued.

PROGRAMME MUSIC
IN
THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES
A CONTRIBUTION TO THE HISTORY OF MUSICAL EXPRESSION

BY

FREDERICK NIECKS, Mus.D.

Reid Professor of Music in the University of Edinburgh.

(Author of "Frederick Chopin as a Man and Musician"; &c.)

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A contribution to musical literature which will stand as a monument of research and as a text-book for all students of the art, in one of its most important aspects, to which the book's pages are devoted. . . . As a work of reference its completeness should certainly make it invaluable. . . . The volume now published, full as it is of the fruits of well-directed industry and research, and containing as it does vastly more information on the important subject with which it deals than any other work yet written in our language, is one for which its author deserves the lasting gratitude of everybody interested in music and its development.

STANDARD.

It is safe at the outset to say that by this thoroughly interesting and helpful book Professor Niecks has enriched our literature to an extent only equalled in recent times by the Oxford History of Music. . . . An exceedingly well written epilogue concludes this book, which cannot fail to be helpful to composers at the moment. . . . Professor Niecks brings his immense labour—one that is not likely to be superseded for a long time—to a worthy finish.

MORNING POST.

The present volume deserves to rank among the most valuable works on the history of music which have appeared for many years. The subject is one of engrossing interest, and in treating it the author has not only displayed his erudition and marshalled his facts with the greatest accuracy, but has in the expression of his ideas shown himself thoroughly impartial.

DAILY NEWS.

Professor Niecks has done valiant work in clearing away many of the errors and misunderstandings which have obscured the vexed subject of programme music. He took up his task in the impartial spirit of the historical investigator, and has carried it through with such success that his bulky volume will be an historical document. . . . The value of the historical survey and the criticism connecting it cannot be exaggerated.

MORNING ADVERTISER.

Not only is it a sound as well as an exhaustive volume on the art which he knows so well, but it has the fine merit, from the amateur's point of view, of being extremely readable. . . . If I wanted to place in the hands of a man the history of music for the last four hundred years I should give him the work under notice, for by reading it he would gain a clearer view of what had been accomplished than by wading through half the academical histories written in the formal manner of the pedantic historian.

MORNING LEADER.

Professor Niecks's book fills a lamentable gap in our musical literature, though it cannot be said to exhaust the subject, which is, in a sense, co-extensive with the whole history of music. . . . The whole book is a valuable contribution to the study of the subject. It deprives people of the excuse of not having all the facts before them in an accessible form, and many will be surprised to learn what a vast body of facts has been accumulating in the last four centuries. Finally, his lucid definition of the various kinds of programme music should put an end to much loose thinking and looser writing on the subject.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Dr. Frederick Niecks, the professor of music at Edinburgh, may be congratulated on his latest book, "Programme Music," which Messrs. Novello have just published. For years past he has been collecting material for this very interesting history of composition, and the time he has devoted to the task has resulted in a volume which will become a standard work, and will consequently, have to be read by every earnest musician, amateur or professional.

ATHENÆUM.

Prof. Niecks's book is a veritable cyclopædia of information on programme music, and full of valuable comments and criticisms. In his Epilogue he sums up the matter tersely in the following words: "Programme music in its widest sense is co-extensive with expressive music; in its narrower sense it is a species of this genus."

SATURDAY REVIEW.

This immense book, "Programme Music in the Last Four Centuries (Novello and Co.), was a book well worth writing, for it is filled with information of many curious kinds, and it tells us incidentally a great deal about music and "musical expression." . . . Too much praise cannot be given to the care with which the actual sayings and writings of composers themselves, on their own intentions and on what they consider should be done in music, have been gathered together and set in a convenient and significant order.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Professor Niecks's work will be welcome to many who, whether or not they endorse all of the author's conclusions, will find in its pages much information on the subject previously unknown or inaccessible. The data brought together in the work will indeed surprise many. . . . Enough for the present to congratulate Professor Niecks heartily on the production of the work, which must have cost infinite labour and the value of which is incontestable.

EVENING STANDARD AND ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

By its lucidity of expression, the thoroughness of the examination of material, and by sound critical judgment, Professor Niecks's book stands as a great achievement and a most valuable contribution to the history of musical expression.

OBSERVER.

From the historic house of Novello has come a book by Professor Frederick Niecks, which, it is safe to say, is one of the most important contributions to the literature of music since the Oxford History. . . . Not only will this wonderfully written and planned volume be of the greatest help to music-lovers, but it should do much to influence all our modern composers to return to the simpler paths.

REFEREE.

Dr. Niecks's book is the most advanced, comprehensive, and valuable consideration of the subject extant, and should be read by every thoughtful musician, who, it may be added, will derive no small profit and pleasure from its perusal.

BRISTOL TIMES.

It is "a contribution to the history of musical expression" which will take a foremost place among works of the kind.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.

As a contribution to historical musical literature, the book is one of the most important publications of recent years.

BIRMINGHAM POST.

It is undoubtedly the most notable contribution to the question in any literature. For the thoroughness with which he has done his work no praise can be too high.

WESTERN MORNING NEWS.

Professor Niecks has set himself a mighty task, but no less a fact is it that he has achieved generous accomplishment. The volume which he has produced will, not only on account of the incalculable importance of its subject at the present day, mark a period in musical publications, but also on account of its exhaustive, comprehensive, and fully-detailed matter, supply a concise and full history of music throughout the period dealt with. . . . Valuable as is the earlier portion of the book for its historical data, the critical manner in which the author treats the fifth and sixth periods, which comprise practically the second half of the volume, will be to the modern student the most interesting.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

EXAMINATION QUESTIONS AND HOW TO WORK THEM

BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS,

Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

PREFACE.

This Primer is intended more especially for those who purpose presenting themselves for examination in the theory of music. While the subjects dealt with may be found in all examination schemes for musical degrees and diplomas, it is hoped that the following chapters may prove useful more especially to candidates for the diplomas of the Royal College of Organists.

The object of this book is to stimulate and cultivate method in answering examination questions. Considerable experience as an examination "coach" has proved the success of the method, herein followed, of dissecting the questions, and—by dividing the points for consideration under several heads—thus directing the student's attention to one point at a time.

VOICE CULTURE FOR CHILDREN

A PRACTICAL PRIMER

ON THE

CULTIVATION AND PRESERVATION OF YOUNG VOICES

WITH EXERCISES FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS, CHOIRS, SOLO-BOYS, ETC.

BY

JAMES BATES.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the extreme delicacy of the child's voice, yet how often have these frail instruments been irreparably ruined for want of a little knowledge or a little care! Let the teacher sternly discourage anything like "shouty" singing, especially in class or choir, or misguided attempts to sing notes which are too high or too low. It may safely be said that soft singing (of course within the compass of the voice) will never do harm, no matter how continuous, but loud singing will inevitably lead to disaster. The teacher who successfully instils the principles of correct singing, and thereby renders possible the life-long use and enjoyment of a pleasing voice, is conferring on his young charges a boon of inestimable value. This thougnt should be his constant encouragement in times of difficulty and lack of immediate success.

Extract from Introduction.

The benefits of sight-singing cannot be over estimated. The vocalist becomes independent and self-reliant: he has a wide and varied field open to him: the music he learns does not stale with wearisome repetitions. In course of time he will be able "to hear in his mind what he sees on paper." There will be the possibility of his becoming a musician, for there is nothing so vital to true progress as the power to imagine sounds from notation.

OPINIONS OF THE LONDON AND PROVINCIAL PRESS

ON

A. R. GAUL'S CANTATA

"JOAN OF ARC"

PRODUCED WITH GREAT SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ATHENÆUM.

"An advance on the earlier work, 'The Holy City.' . . . The choruses are written with much knowledge of effect, and an 'Ave Maria' and the final chorus of the 'Spirit Voices' may be named as really charming."

LONDON FIGARO.

"Bound to be widely taken up, doubtless to attain which end the composer has employed but three soloists, and has given a more than usually large degree of importance to the choral work. . . . The 'Ave Maria' is singularly beautiful."

DAILY NEWS.

"Obviously written with a special view to the requirements of choral societies, and likely to become highly popular."

REFEREE.

"Calculated to delight performers and listeners, being full of melody and taking effects."

WESTERN TIMES.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"

THE SHIELDS DAILY NEWS.

"One of the most delightful concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."

LEAMINGTON SPA COURIER.

"St. Paul's Choral Society brought their season to a close with a performance in the Town Hall of 'Joan of Arc.' The cantata, both in verse and music, is essentially fascinating and contains all the elements necessary to make it one of the standard works for performance by musical societies, the choral writing and orchestration being simply charming."

TEWKESBURY REGISTER.

"The Conductor of the Philharmonic Society is to be congratulated on his selection of a Cantata possessing such attractive music as that which goes to make 'Joan of Arc' what it undoubtedly is—viz., the best work I remember having heard in Tewkesbury."

NORWICH DAILY PRESS.

"By the invitation of the Head Mistress of the High School, a large company assembled to hear a performance of 'Joan of Arc.' There is probably no living English composer who has obtained more popularity with provincial choral societies than Mr. A. R. Gaul. His sacred cantata, 'The Holy City,' is more extensively known than any other modern English composition of a similar character, and 'Joan of Arc' has already been successfully performed in London and many of the largest provincial towns. Mr. Gaul's writing is characterised by the most perfectly neat workmanship and spontaneity, combined with a never-failing resource of melodic invention."

CRYSTAL PALACE REPORTER.

"The music throughout is of a very high order, and full of beauty and interest, so much so that it is hardly possible to single out any numbers for special praise. The various movements are widely contrasted in style, in some considerable dramatic power being manifest, but all overflow with melody, and there is a happy absence of the restlessness of tonality which disfigures so many modern works. The vocal parts, whether for soli or chorus, are written within the range of average vocalists, and are therefore grateful alike to the singers and hearers. The cantata is a credit to English art, . . . one of the most interesting works yet given by the Anerley Society."

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.

"Will further enhance the reputation of the composer of 'The Holy City,' as a writer of bright, melodious, attractive, and musicianly Cantatas."

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON HERALD.

"In 'Joan of Arc,' particularly in the latter part, there are some exquisite passages—some charming descriptive pieces. The lovely 'Hark! thy spirit voices call,' carried one away in the spirit into veritable realms of dreamland, and the chorus, 'Fret not thyself to-day,' is picturesquely beautiful, graceful, and effective."

THE WESTERN NEWS.

"Few cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall last evening."

THE WESTERN DAILY MERCURY.

"Proved an unqualified success. . . . the bulk of the Cantata is allotted to the chorus. In fact, the choir of this Association has seldom had such a good opportunity for giving their sterling worth a good display."

LEEDS MERCURY.

"Drew forth enthusiastic plaudits. . . . Of the Cantata, as interpreted last evening (in the Town Hall, Leeds, with a band and chorus of 250 performers), it is impossible to speak in terms of anything but praise. Solos and choruses alike are full of melody, while the orchestration is descriptive to a degree. For each of the principal vocalists there is one song that singles itself out, and each received an encore."

HERTS AND CAMBRIDGE REPORTER.

"The theme is one of the most romantic in the pages of history. In the earlier and poetic passages there is something of the charm of Sir Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The last chorus is set to music which would be not unworthy of the great masters."

LIVERPOOL COURIER.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."

HUDDERSFIELD EXAMINER.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE DAILY CHRONICLE.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."

BRADFORD OBSERVER.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY TIMES.

"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form. . . . A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."

OF
JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH
EDITED BY
J. F. BRIDGE, Mus. Doc. Oxon., and JAMES HIGGS, Mus. Bac. Oxon.

In this, the first complete English Edition of John Sebastian Bach's Organ Works (the Chorale Preludes excepted), the distribution of the parts between the hands is, in all doubtful cases, clearly indicated by the notes that are to be performed by the right hand being printed on the upper of the two manual staves, while the notes that are to be played by the left hand will be found on the lower of the two manual staves. As far as possible care has been taken not needlessly to divide a middle part between the two hands when it can be conveniently performed by one hand continuously. The text has been carefully collated with former Editions, but generally where it differs from Griepenkerl's reading (Peters) it will be found to agree with the more recent Edition of the German Bach Society. Much thought has been given to secure convenient points for turning over, a matter of considerable importance to the performer. (See the "Great" G minor and the "St. Ann's" Fugues.) Suggestions as to the rate of performance and general treatment are given without encumbering the page with too detailed directions, and it is hoped the work in its complete form will be found a boon to the earnest Organ Student.

MACDONALD SMITH SYSTEM

OF TOUCH AND TECHNIQUE.

("FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD.")

WHEN PUPILS SAY

that my system has "worked wonders," has "completely transformed" their playing, that they can "see their technique grow," that their "vast" improvement "cannot be expressed in words," that it is "amazingly effective," "as necessary for the muscles as food is for the body," an "incalculable boon," "epoch-making," a "veritable treasure-trove," "the best £3 3s. worth they have ever had," &c., and that the results of the course are "like a miracle," &c., the matter is clearly worth the serious consideration of every pianist.

A PERFECT TECHNIQUE
BY CORRESPONDENCE.

A FEW RESULTS OBTAINED BY PUPILS.

"Your system is effecting a wonderful improvement. Passages which formerly were difficult are now a pleasure to play, and the ease with which I can now play octaves is wonderful."—E. L., Glam.

"Further working on your principles has strengthened my faith in them, and nearly all my difficulties have vanished."—G. J., Swansea.

"Your exercises have thoroughly loosened my fingers and wrists." —An Organist, Retford.

"Yours are the first exercises to improve my touch and tone, and to render my finger passages smooth and connected."—London, W.

"Your exercises and apparatus are splendid, and their use is greatly improving my technique."—L.R.A.M., Devon.

"Your system has done wonders with my hands. I consider it the only one for technique. The more I do your exercises the more splendid I think them."—L. B., Dorset.

"Exercise No 1 is entirely the finest loosener for the fingers I have ever used. The old chronic muscle-bound feeling is fast disappearing, and a flexibility and power becoming daily more a permanency. The use of the apparatus in the octave exercises is most valuable."—A Teacher, Swansea.

"Your system does all you claim for it."—A Teacher, Suffolk.

SECOND EDITION.

THE HISTORY OF MENDELSSOHN'S ORATORIO "ELIJAH"

BY

F. G. EDWARDS.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

And a number of Portraits, including one of the COMPOSER.

"Another work of distinct value to musical historians. . . . The temptation to gossip over the incidents of the first performance has been quite successfully resisted, and the author lets Mendelssohn's own letters tell the story for the most part. . . . There are several portraits of those who took part in the original performance, and one most interesting portrait of Mendelssohn from a drawing in the possession of Mrs. Victor Benecke. The work of compiling the necessary information has been excellently done, and the publication comes as a fitting celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the production of the work."

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE)
Of the Royal Choral Society, Queen's Hall Symphony and Promenade Concerts, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace Concerts, Glasgow Choral Union, Belfast Philharmonic Society, &c.

"SAMSON." Coleraine, March 4, 1907.
"Mr. Montague Borwell, now a great favourite in Coleraine, as elsewhere, added to his former laurels as an oratorio baritone singer. In the music of Harapha, the Philistine braggart, he was better than we have heard him ever before in any work, and as the father of the downfallen Samson, he sang the music of Manoah with great pathos and nobility of expression. He has the deeply emotional gift, a rare and enviable one. His voice is finer, more powerful, true in intonation AND HIS WHOLE ART FINER THAN BEFORE. A great future is before this vocalist, who will certainly do most ambitious and remarkable work some of these days. Already he stands in the front rank of contemporaries in his line. In opera, we surmise, would lie his real opportunities. There he would be free and expansive, vocally and histrionically fit. In the well-known 'Honour and Arms,' a much-abused air received a fresh and vivid rendering. His recitative style ranks with that of the finest traditions: nothing could well be finer, and he succeeded in galvanising the stereotyped phrases into renewed life and significance. He had a very eulogistic reception."—Belfast Evening Telegraph, March 6, 1907.

MR. JOHN BROWNING

(BARITONE),

Soloist Leeds Musical Festivals, and of the leading English and Scotch Concerts. Extensive répertoire of over 120 works.

LEEDS CHORAL UNION.

ELGAR'S "THE APOSTLES," with HENRY J. WOOD'S QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA. March 13, 1907.

"Mr. John Browning gave a thoroughly artistic reading of the part of St. Peter; warm, yet reticent in expression."—Yorkshire Post.

"Made a thoroughly satisfactory St. Peter, being dignified and impressive without exaggeration."—Musical World.

HARROGATE KURSAAL CONCERTS.

"A more pleasing baritone than Mr. John Browning, who has been appearing at the Kursaal during the week, one could not possibly wish to hear. Unmistakable was the praise accorded on Monday evening, when for each effort he was enthusiastically applauded and encored. The effective colouring which the singer is able to give to his songs, which are rendered in a style worthy of the best, has a most gratifying result. The rich, capable voice has been developed to a remarkable extent, and it is a real treat to listen to a singer of the stamp of Mr. Browning His first item was Handel's 'Ruddier than the cherry,' rendered in perfect style, and the severe test which this composition sometimes presents was passed without the slightest difficulty."—Times, June 29, 1907.

Address—Marlboro' Grove, Leeds.

MR. SIDNEY STODDARD

(BASS-BARITONE).

(Lay-Clerk, Birmingham Cathedral.)

"ELIJAH."—"As representing the titular character, Mr. Stoddard, in voice, method, and style, carried out his task in a manner which bespoke the cultured artist. Energy and power, combined with dramatic instinct, characterised his efforts, and he fulfilled the rôle to the entire satisfaction of his auditors."—Grantham Journal.

"JUDAS MACCABÆUS."—"In Mr. Sidney Stoddard (Simon) a wise selection clearly had been made, and though it was, we believe, his first visit to the carpet town, we shall be greatly surprised if we do not have the pleasure of hearing him on many future occasions. He has a full voice, rich and deep, musically sonorous in every note, and Mr. Stoddard used it with telling effect and power in his several numbers of the work, gaining well-merited applause for his singing, which was altogether a capital performance "—Kidderminster Times.

AN ELEMENTARY SIGHT-SINGING COURSE

STAFF NOTATION THROUGH TONIC SOL-FA FOR CLASS USE
BY GEORGE LANE.

PART I.
Price Sixpence.
PART II. (in the Press).

Extract from Introduction.

The benefits of sight-singing cannot be over estimated. The vocalist becomes independent and self-reliant: he has a wide and varied field open to him: the music he learns does not stale with wearisome repetitions. In course of time he will be able "to hear in his mind what he sees on paper." There will be the possibility of his becoming a musician, for there is nothing so vital to true progress as the power to imagine sounds from notation.

JOSEPH JOACHIM.

Born, June 28, 1831.
Died, August 15, 1907.

One of the greatest interpreters of music—using the word 'greatest' in its truest and deepest sense—has entered upon his long last sleep. The death of Dr. Joachim—at Berlin, on the 15th ult.—is recorded with regret mingled with thankfulness for his long life, a life unreservedly and reverently devoted to the art of music which he so brightly adorned. Throughout the whole of his artistic career, covering a period of nearly seventy years, he, with unfaltering steps, trod the path which leads to the highest ideals, turning not to the right hand nor to the left of self-seeking and popular favour. He has left an unsullied name which will long be held in grateful remembrance, and his life-work is a stimulation to all who would follow so good an example. His wonderful achievements, no less than his simple character, make him a model to whom all students of music may be directed with the injunction, 'Go, and do thou likewise.'

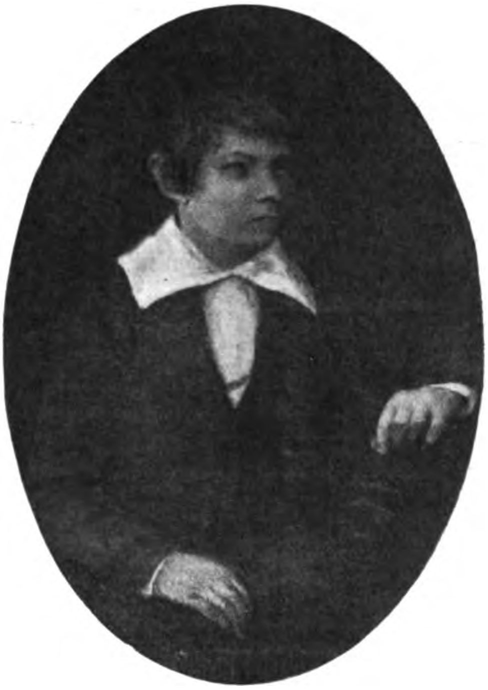
The details of Dr. Joachim's life have been recently so much before the public eye that there is no need to recapitulate them here, the more especially as a biographical sketch of him appeared in The Musical Times of April, 1898. The present writer vividly recalls that pleasant hour nine years ago when the eminent violinist quietly related his life-story—how Dr. Joachim himself poured out the afternoon-tea with the question 'Do you like it weak, or strong?' and so on, including the droll manner in which, on that occasion, he told the Carlyle story. This is so good that it must be repeated:

> One day his friend (and the friend of Thackeray), the late Rev. W. H. Brookfield, took him to the house of the great philosopher at Chelsea, and introduced him as the eminent violinist, &c. Brookfield had another engagement, so he said: 'I'll leave you two together,' and he departed. As Carlyle was just about to take his morning 'constitutional' he asked Joachim to accompany him. During a very long walk in Hyde Park the Chelsea sage talked incessantly about Germany—the kings of Prussia, Moltke, Bismarck, the war, &c. At last Joachim thought that he ought to say something, so he innocently asked his irascible companion: 'Do you know Sterndale Bennett?' 'No,' replied Carlyle—(pause)—'I don't care generally for musicians. They are an empty, windbaggy sort of people.'

'This was not very complimentary to me,' Dr. Joachim laughingly said.

In what form then shall this In memoriam of the illustrious dead be cast? Like his great benefactor, Mendelssohn, Joachim looked upon England as his second home: here he found some of his best friends and nowhere was his name held in greater respect. Therefore it seems natural that a few words on the earliest appearances of the great man in this 'smoky nest'—to adopt Mendelssohn's designation of London—and matters cognate thereto may not be unacceptable to the readers of The Musical Times.

Joseph Joachim had not completed his fourteenth year when he first set his foot upon these shores. He had an uncle, Figdor by name, living in London at the time; but he came armed with letters of introduction from Mendelssohn to Klingemann, Moscheles, Benedict and Sterndale Bennett, four of the most influential men in London musical circles. One of these, Moscheles, wrote in his diary:



JOSEPH JOACHIM, AT THE AGE OF 14 OR 15.
FROM A MINIATURE PAINTED BY EMIL ARNOLD PRAEGER.
(Reproduced by kind permission of Mrs. E. A. Praeger.)

> Joachim, a boy thirteen years of age, has come to London, bringing with him a letter of recommendation from Mendelssohn; his talent, however, is his best introduction. We organised a small party expressly for him. I listened with delight to him and Emily [Moscheles] playing in Mendelssohn's lovely D minor trio; after that I was fairly taken by surprise by Joachim's manly and brilliant rendering of David's 'Variations' and De Bériot's 'Rondo.' Mendelssohn is right, here we have talent of the true stamp.

The boy fiddler made his first appearance in England at Drury Lane Theatre on March 28, 1844, at one of those monster hotch-potch affairs of former times known as 'benefits,' on this occasion for the impresario Alfred Bunn. The play-bill of that entertainment stated that

> The celebrated Hungarian Boy
> Master Ioachim
> will make his first appearance > before an English audience, and perform
> Grand Variations for the violin, > on a theme from Rossini's Otello by Ernst.

This formed one piece in a concert sandwiched between the first and second acts of Balfe's Bohemian Girl, and the inference is that Mr. Bunn regarded the juxtaposition of the Hungarian Boy and the Bohemian Girl as a capital joke. Joachim was, however, much annoyed at being thus designated; Mendelssohn, to the day of his death, constantly teased him about it, saying, 'Now, you Hungarian Boy.'

Contrary to what is stated in the various biographies and obituary notices, Joachim made several public appearances here between Bunn's benefit and the memorable Philharmonic concert two months later. On April 6 he took part in a concert given by a Mr. Allcroft, thus briefly reported in the Musical World:

> Mr. Allcroft's concert came off at the Hanover Square Rooms on Saturday night. The artists employed were too numerous to mention. The room was crowded.

No mention whatever of the first concert appearance of the clever boy violinist, nor did he fare any better in the much longer account given in the Dramatic and Musical Review, although space was found for the following concluding sentences:

> We left at half-past eleven o'clock with nine pieces unperformed . . . we understood our admissions to be of course for the reserved seats; and upon stating this fact to an elderly gentleman at the door, who took the tickets, were rather offensively received. Mr. Allcroft would do well to give this gentleman an opportunity, at the next concert, of exercising his ability—elsewhere.

Such was musical criticism sixty-three years ago. The Dramatic and Musical Review, in recording the concert (orchestral) of the Societa Armonica, given on April 22, said:

> The lion of the evening was a youth named Joachim (fourteen years of age), certainly one of the greatest violin players of the day. He performed Scena cantante from Spohr's eighth concerto (the one chosen by Ernst at the Philharmonic), which he played perfectly in tune—a compliment we were unable to pay to Ernst—and with a correct conception of his author; his reading of it, indeed, was occasionally very fine; he is the best youthful violinist we have heard.

On April 25 Joachim performed at the dinner of the Melodists' Club at the Freemasons' Tavern; on May-day he played at the first of a series of 'Drawing Room Concerts' given by a Miss Alicia Nunn at 51, Great Marlborough Street; and on May 17 his name appeared in the programme of Madame Caradori-Allan's benefit concert, given in the concert-room of Her Majesty's Theatre.

This brings us to the eventful Philharmonic concert of May 27, at which Joachim created a sensation by his extraordinary performance of Beethoven's Violin concerto. Mendelssohn, who conducted the concert, beamed upon the 'Posaunen-Engel' (trombone cherub), as he called his boy-violinist protégé. Not only did the boy's wonderful interpretation of this masterpiece call forth a chorus of praise, but the cadenza which he composed specially for the Rondo movement excited no less astonishment. The autograph of this cadenza—presented by Joachim to the distinguished viola-player, the late Mr. Henry Hill, on May 12, 1844—is now in the possession of Mr. Arthur F. Hill.

Joachim's next public appearance—so far as can be ascertained—was at Mrs. Anderson's concert held in the concert-room of Her Majesty's Theatre, at which Piatti made his first appearance in England, and 'little Kate Loder [afterwards Lady Thompson] played admirably.' At a musical soirée given on June 3 by Georg Hausmann—the violoncellist and uncle of Prof. Robert Hausmann, of the Joachim Quartett—the Wunderkind led a quartet. On the next day (June 4) he was 'commanded' to Windsor Castle, where he played before Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, the Emperor of Russia and the King of Saxony—then on a visit to the English Court—the Duke of Wellington, Sir Robert Peel, and other celebrities. At that stately function and before that brilliant audience, Joachim performed Ernst's Fantasia and De Bériot's 'Andantino and Rondo Russe,' accompanied by the Queen's Private Band, conducted by Mr. G. F. Anderson. With Mendelssohn (pianoforte) and Hancock (violoncello) he played in Mendelssohn's D minor Trio at Purdy's concert, given on June 5 at Radley's Hotel, Bridge Street, Blackfriars. In that connection the eminent violinist related the following interesting anecdote:

> It so happened that only the violin and violoncello parts had been brought to the concert-room, and Mendelssohn was rather displeased at this; but he said, 'Never mind, put any book on the piano, and someone can turn from time to time, so that it need not look as though I played by heart.' Nowadays, when people put such importance on playing or conducting without a book, I think this might be considered a good moral lesson of a great musician's modesty. He evidently did not like to be in too great a prominence before his partners in the Trio. He was always truly generous!

On June 7 he played at two concerts of very different character—one given by John Parry, the humorist, the other being one of three concerts of chamber music given at the Princess' Concert Room, Oxford Street, by Messrs. G. A. Macfarren and J. W. Davison. The concert opened with Mendelssohn's D minor Trio, played by the composer, Joachim and Hausmann, and closed with Mendelssohn's String quartet in D (Op. 44), performed by Joachim, Goffrie, Hill and Hausmann. The remainder of the programme consisted of songs by Macfarren and Davison and Bach's Adagio and Fugue in G minor for violin (unaccompanied), played by Joachim in such a 'perfectly wonderful' manner that it was encored. A lady—Miss Robinson, daughter of the Ven. Archdeacon Robinson—who was present has recorded her impressions of the boy's performances in the following letter, hitherto unpublished, which Mr. Arthur F. Hill has kindly lent for the purposes of this article:

14, Euston Square,
June 8 [1844].

MY DEAR MR. WOOD,

How much have we to thank you for! The Concert last night was a rare treat, and the boy Joachim is beyond my poor powers of description. He is 'a marvel and a mystery' if ever one existed. How I wish you could have heard him! It is impossible otherwise to form a notion of his power. Papa and I were convinced that, however wonderful, it seemed impossible that such a child could equal or even approach a master of the art like Ernst; but we came away satisfied that the impossibility was accomplished. I should say Joachim is fully equal to Ernst both in power of expression and execution. The firmness and delicacy of his touch (is that a right epithet for the violin?) and the taste with which he applies both, is something quite mysterious when you remember what a > mere child he is. There is no accounting for it by any method of ordinary reasoning. He has been endowed with the gift, 'the faculty divine,' and that has lifted him above all education.

> In case you have not seen him I will just give you an idea of his appearance. He is rather short for his age, and has shaggy hair which completely covers his brow and shades his eyes, which are deep set with an earnest sort of gaze in them, the eyebrows being slightly contracted, which throws an expression of thought and intellectual grasp over his countenance. He has a most genius-like awkwardness about his figure and great simplicity and childishness of carriage. His bow of acknowledgment to the thunders of the room seemed rather to say 'do be quiet and let me be at it again,' than the usual 'I am much obliged to you' air of a bow. He just gave it as a necessary quietus, and no more. His enthusiasm in playing was intense; in the pieces, at which he played seated, he would every now and then get up and every nerve appeared to thrill as the music burst into form at his spell, while at some of the soft wailing tones which his little instrument sent forth, he bent his head close to it and shut his eyes till you might well fancy it was a spirit breathing out his plaint into his master's ear. His face is very pale and perfectly free from vanity or consciousness of being anything extraordinary; altogether, he is a very interesting looking child. So much for his personal appearance, which I hope has not been a tedious detail. I always, myself, like to have a picture to look at, and so I tried to give you one.
> What am I to say of that 'Boy-God's' solo and the quartett? They were both perfectly wonderful. The Fugue, played without notes, was delicious, and the extreme grace with which he managed the reiterations surprising. I thought the house would have been down with the shouting 'again, again, encore,' and the clapping and thumping. In the quartett he seemed to be the master-spirit of the thing and, without the slightest effort, accomplished the most difficult passages. His shake is beautiful, clear and distinct; I thought Ernst was matchless there, but this boy is his equal. The Concert was crowded to excess, so much so that even the orchestra up to the top was thronged.

This letter was evidently sent to Macfarren for perusal, who returned it with the following comment:

> 73, Berners Street,
> Friday.
> MY DEAR SIR,
> I return you Miss Robinson's sprightly and clever letter with thanks for its perusal.
> Joachim is surely a prodigious fellow—I do not mean a 'prodigy.' This is a term that has been so abused that we conventionally understand it as a mountebanking charlatan. I assure you that on his instrument, in his general capacity for music, and in his mental powers in matters unconnected with the art, he is at once one of the most minded and most interesting persons I have ever known. It has been my great pleasure to be very intimate with him during his stay in London, and I have had perhaps better opportunities than most people of estimating his transcendent talents, for he has played my music and I have given him lessons during his sojourn. I speak therefore most advisedly, and I am most delighted to find that I am not alone in my opinion, but that he is generally understood and appreciated.
> Sincerely yours,
> G. A. MACFARREN.
> G. H. Wood, Esq.

Joachim's last appearance during this his initial visit to London was at Benedict's monster benefit concert held in the concert-room of Her Majesty's Theatre on June 14. (In Moser's 'Life' of Joachim, the date of this concert is wrongly given as May 19, an error which unfortunately has been copied in the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' vol. ii, p. 533, and elsewhere.) According to his usual custom, Benedict had secured a veritable galaxy of talent. In addition to seventeen vocalists, the instrumentalists included Thalberg, Sivori, Joachim, Offenbach (then a violoncellist but afterwards better known as the composer of 'Orphée aux Enfers'), Madame Dulcken, and Mendelssohn. Costa and Benedict 'conducted' the concert, and Mendelssohn accompanied Mario in Beethoven's 'Adelaida.'

According to The Musical Examiner—a journal edited by Mr. J. W. Davison—Joachim left England on the evening of Benedict's concert, a paragraph in the issue of June 15 reading:

> Joseph Joachim left London last night by the Hamburg steamer for Leipzig, where he goes to study under Hauptmann, the contrapuntist. Query: does he better himself by leaving Macfarren? But there are other educational reasons. Little Joseph's departure will cause many a heart pang. He is as much loved for his amiability as for his most wonderful talent. He has had no reason, we hope, to feel discontented with his reception in England.

From the above information, derived from London journals of the time, it will be seen that Joachim made, at least, thirteen public appearances during his first visit to England. He not only received lessons in composition from G. A. Macfarren, but to him he 'was indebted for his first instructions in the art of writing for an orchestra.' *

Joachim attained to such pre-eminence as an interpreter of chamber music, especially as a quartet-leader in such works as Beethoven's posthumous quartets, that brief reference must be made to his chamber music achievements during his second visit to England, three years after his first sojourn here. He arrived in London on April 12, 1847, having had Mendelssohn as his travelling companion from Germany; this was the composer's last visit to this country. Joachim repeated his former triumph by playing Beethoven's Violin concerto at the Philharmonic concert of May 10, Costa this time conducting. But it is with performances of chamber music that we now have to do. At three concerts of the Beethoven Quartet Society he led three of the posthumous quartets of Beethoven—A minor, E flat, and B flat—his colleagues being Sainton, Hill and Rousselot. With the same artists and W. Thomas (second viola) as colleagues he led Beethoven's Quintets in E flat, and C, and Mozart's in G minor.

The Beethoven Quartet Society invited Mendelssohn to a concert of his own compositions on May 4, at which his 'Ottet' was performed, with Vieuxtemps and Sainton as first violins, Joachim one of the second violins, Hill one of the tenors, and Piatti and Rousselot the violoncellists. It was on this occasion that Mendelssohn, on being asked to 'play something,' gave a masterly rendering of Beethoven's thirty-two variations on an original theme in C minor. On July 19 the Society arranged a special music-making in honour of Spohr, then on his fourth visit here, consisting entirely of his compositions. Joachim played second violin in the G minor quartet (Op. 4), and, with Sainton, the duet for two violins in E flat (Op. 39, No. 2). The great event of the evening was, however, a performance of Spohr's double quartet, No. 3, in E minor, which the composer himself led. Here are the names of the eight players, which speak for themselves:

Spohr.
Joachim.
H. Hill.
Piatti.
Sainton.
Goffrie.
W. Thomas.
Rousselot.

At John Ella's Musical Union concerts—or séances, as he called them—Joachim played on three occasions during his second visit here. At the first (June 8, 1847) he led quartets by Haydn and Beethoven, and with Jules Schuloff, the composer of much light pianoforte music formerly in vogue, he played the Kreutzer Sonata. In a performance (on July 8) of Mozart's lovely G minor quintet, which Joachim led, the Brothers Hellmesberger played first and second violas. On June 3 he played Mendelssohn's Violin concerto at a concert of the Dublin Philharmonic Society, probably its first performance in the sister isle.

It should not be forgotten that all these remarkable achievements were those of a boy of sixteen, who triumphed over every difficulty with the confidence and reverence of a mature artist. That he had made good progress with his English is shown by the following letter which, though undated, bears the watermark '1846,' and may be assigned to the year of this visit (1847). We print this letter—kindly lent by Mr. Arthur F. Hill—literatim et verbatim—including the superfluous vowels:

> Saturday morning.
> My dear Mr. Hill!
> Mr. Goffrie has written to me, that you will bee kind enough to play quartetts with me. I shall bee in town tomorrow, and if you will bee at Mr. Hausmann about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, I shall fetch you and him and we can then go together to Tulse Hill, dine and enjoy ourselves, quite 'entre nous.'
> I will thank you, if you will bring to Mr. Hausmann some of your Quartett-parts. What doo you think about playing the one in F minor [Beethoven, Op. 95]? but quite as it is convenient to you.
> With my kindest regards,
> Believe me dear friend to bee
> Yours
> J. Joachim.

It is not generally known that Master Joachim appeared as a composer during his second visit to England. At a concert given by the Musical World on July 14 at Hanover Square Rooms, 'a little song by Joachim, "Kleine Blumen, kleine Blätter" ('written in Mr. Macfarren's Album') was sung by Madame [now Lady] Macfarren, and much applauded.' On that occasion Sterndale Bennett and Joachim played Beethoven's Sonata for pianoforte and violin in C minor, and the last item on the programme reads:

Chaconne (pianoforte accompaniment by Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy), Violin, Herr Joachim; Pianoforte, Herr Luders - - - - - - - - } J. Sebastian Bach.

Among the many friends whom Dr. Joachim had in England, none was more true or devoted than Sir George Grove. The two men were eleven years apart in regard to age, but they had a close bond of sympathy in their mutual reverence for Beethoven and Mendelssohn. If proof were needed that 'Jo' had a genuine affection for 'G.,' it is furnished in some letters written by the former to the author of 'Beethoven and his Nine Symphonies,' which Lady Grove has kindly placed at our disposal for the purposes of this In Memoriam article. These letters contain such endings as: 'every kind wish from your devoted friend'; 'with best love, yours affectly.'; 'good bye and "Gute Besserung," dear friend, yours always J. J.'; 'with best love from all, Joe Joe.' Three of these letters—all of them in Joachim's excellent English and hitherto unpublished—may be quoted from by reason of their special interest:

> Euston Railway Station.
> [no date]
> Dear Grove—I have just missed the 9.45 train to Liverpool by a minute! Shall now go at 10; very unpleasant this!
>
> A pity you did not hear Schubert's jolly Octet-music; it is full of life and sweetness.
> I shall play (a) 'Romance from the Hungarian Concerto,' (b) 'Presto, Bach,' with orchestral accompaniment. The latter is the known Preludio from the 6th violin sonata, but likewise a symphony to a Cantata for organ and orchestra. From the latter I have only had to transpose it from D to E, and just change the trumpets where they are too high.

He concludes this letter in a humorous vein:

> I thought that we had arranged that I shall stay with you after Saturday 16th. Is it convenient to you and My Lady?
> I remain, my Lord Esq.
> most humbly and devotionally yours,
> Joseph J.

Writing from Berlin on January 31, 1890, he says:

> My dear Grove!—I am truly thankful for the generous impulse that led to the idea of giving a concert in London for the 'Beethoven Haus.' The relations of the great genius to the English musical community, even during Beethoven's lifetime, are so manyfold that I am sure success cannot fail to attend your and your friends' exertions in favour of the Bonn Committee.
> I am only afraid regarding the plan you communicated to me, that I am so little known as a conductor to the generality of the English public, that I ought to leave it to other hands to act in that capacity, although of course willing to devote all I can do to help in the carrying out of your idea.
> It is this doubt about the advisability of my conductorship which made me postpone my answer. I reflected whether a chamber-music concert in St. James's Hall on a grand scale might not perhaps forward the financial success even better than an orchestral performance, which makes the cost and the trouble of the organization much larger, and our friend Arthur Chappell being on the Committee, it is at all events worth while to consider the matter.
> But whatever it is to be, I beg that you will dispose entirely of all my faculties, if you think they can be in any way useful to the object we have at heart. . . .

The conclusion of the letter reads thus:

> I delivered your 'Gruss' to Brahms, who returns it cordially. The Vienna public behaved most delightfully warmly to me and our Quartet. 'Auf Wiedersehn, lieber Freund, bald!' Remember me most cordially to Stanford, and believe me ever to be, dear G
> Most faithfully yours,
> J. J.

From Cambridge he wrote, on February 25, 1891:

> My dear Grove!—We were all so glad to hear from you, for an account about an accident in the fog had made us all uneasy. Thank God, that your good spirits have not left you even in those trying circumstances.
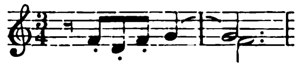
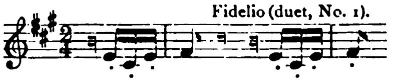
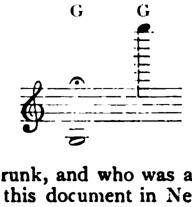
> We had a very jolly concert last night; but it wasn't the F Quartett as I thought it would be. We played its partner in Op. 59, the one in C major [Beethoven]. As you are so fond of reminiscences, there's one for you: the transition from the Trio to the Menuet:





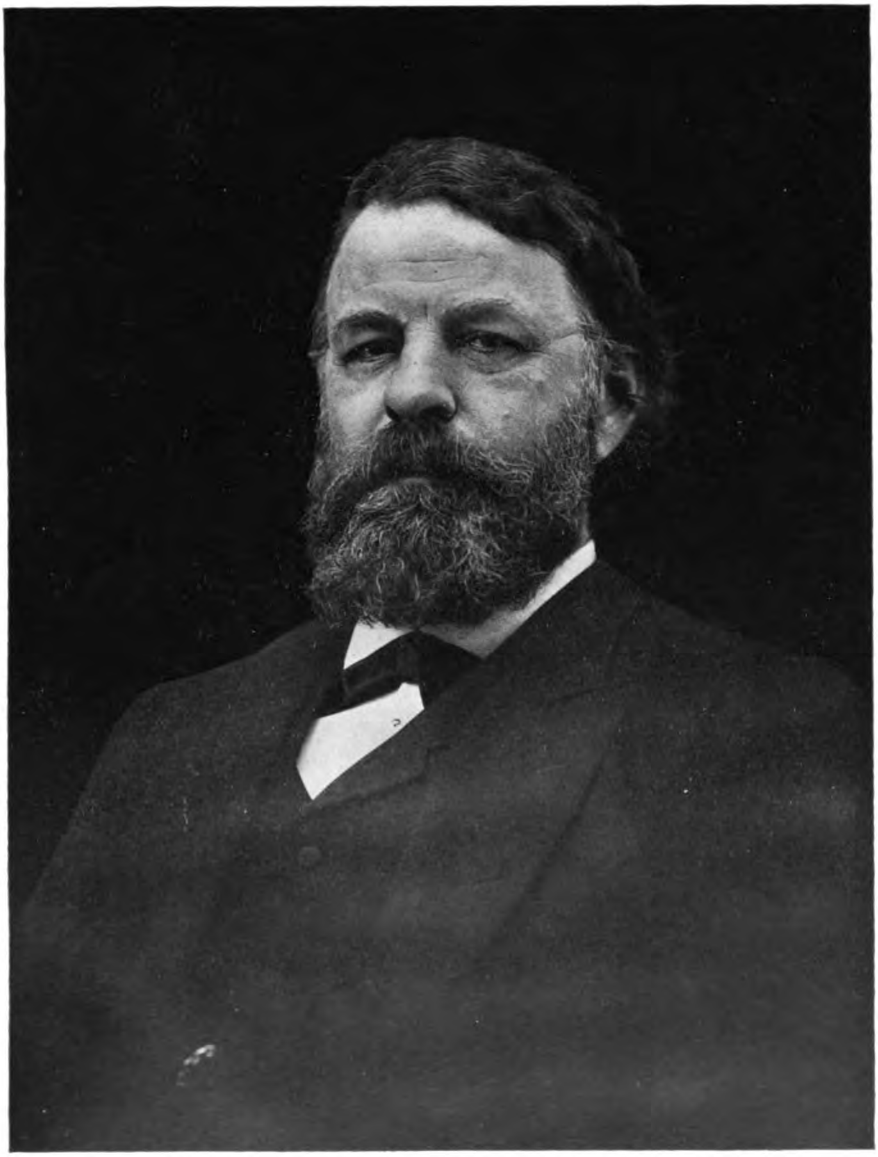
> I think it is quite as good as the one you mention from the Allegretto scherzoso!!

One little note—or rather two notes—must be given from Mr. C. L. Graves's 'Life of Sir George Grove':



> whose health was drunk, and who was awfully missed by all present who signed this document in Nevile's Court, Trinity College [Cambridge], March 13, 1884.

The twenty-one signatures which followed these notes were headed by 'J. J.' and included the names of Stanford, Parry, Sedley Taylor, and others. One more extract from Mr. Graves's valuable biography



From a photograph taken about the year 1884 by the late Mr. A. G. Dew-Smith, and reproduced by kind permission of Mrs. Dew-Smith.

must be given. In a letter to Mrs. Wodehouse, dated March 29, 1891, Grove wrote:

> 'Rest and change.' I heard of a poor man who had gone to Harrogate and left this record behind him in the hotel book. 'I was sent here for rest and change. The waiter took the change and the landlord the rest.' Very witty.
> I asked Joachim the other day if it could be translated into German. He was patriotic enough not to say no, but he could not do it himself.

The funeral of Dr. Joachim took place on August 19, the interment being in the cemetery of the Kaiser Wilhelm Gedächtnisskirche, Charlottenburg, Berlin. The previous evening the remains were taken from his residence, where he died, to the Königliche Hochschule für Musik—an institution to which he devoted so much of his energy during his busy life—where a service was held at which the Kaiser was represented by a special Envoy. Among the many expressions of sympathy which the lamented violinist's family received, was a message from King Edward, who said, 'I deplore very much the loss of so great an artist.'

The four portraits of Dr. Joachim which illustrate this article have been obtained through the friendly offices of Mr. Arthur F. Hill. The supplement portrait is from a remarkably fine photograph taken by the late Mr. A. G. Dew-Smith, of Cambridge, in or about the year 1884. The boyish portrait on p. 579 was drawn from life by Wilhelm Girtner as a birthday present (January 13, 1845) for Miss Annette Presseur, of Leipzig. This lady bequeathed it to Mr. Arthur O'Leary, a friend of Joachim's for sixty years, who has kindly allowed it to be reproduced in this In Memoriam. The miniature (p. 577) was painted by the late Emil Arnold Praeger, a brother of the late Ferdinand Praeger and son of Henry Aloysius Praeger, violinist and composer, and Capellmeister to the Court of Hanover. Herr E. A. Praeger was on terms of friendship with Mendelssohn, Spohr, Berlioz, Moscheles, Liszt, and other musicians of that period. This miniature, painted when Joachim was about fourteen or fifteen years old, is reproduced by the kind permission of Mrs. E. A. Praeger. None of these four portraits of the eminent violinist have hitherto been reproduced.

THE RISE OF LULLY.

Within the last few weeks a Commemorative tablet has been affixed to a 17th century house in Paris, at the corner where the Rue Saint-Anne and the Rue Neuve-des-Petits-Champs cross. The building is four-square, has three floors, besides an attic storey in the high-pitched roof, and the upper main floors have each nine windows looking upon the Rue Saint-Anne and five upon the side street. It is an imposing structure with attractive architectural features. Above the central window of the main front is sculptured a group of musical instruments which probably have been unnoticed by many a passer-by who would have been keenly interested in their significance if attention had been attracted to them. The house is the Hotel-Lully, built for the famous Florentine, Jean Baptiste Lully, whose name bulks so largely in the history of French music in the 17th century. Lully had become a great man at the time when he projected this mansion. His music, thanks to the favour of the king, had proved a mine of wealth to him; but, in addition, this strange combination of man-of-business and artist was a great speculator, for those days, in lands and houses. In one respect his strange double nature shows itself in this building. It is situated in what was then the aristocratic quarter of Paris, and while the upper floors were fit for the residence of a nobleman, the ground floor was let to various merchants, one of them a merchant of wines, a certain Louis d'Arbouhi, in whose shop is still carried on the same trade. Unhappily, both the interior and the exterior of this interesting house are much changed. Gone are the original wainscotings, the staircase, the painted panellings. In the inevitable march of the city westward, the aristocratic quarter is removed nearer to the setting sun, and the insignia of commerce replace the coats-of-arms of an ancient nobility. The nouveau-riche Lully has fared no better. Hoardings and posters disfigure shamelessly the classic lines of his 17th century architect, and shout remorselessly to the plain man and to the artist alike: Sic transit gloria mundi. 'Le grand Monarque' is gone, 'l'incomparable Lully' is gone. 'Le marchand de vins' remains.

In the year 1646 few would have ventured to predict so brilliant a future for the youth whom the Chevalier de Guise then brought from Florence in response to the request of Mademoiselle de Montpensier, known as 'La Grande Mademoiselle.' She had asked for 'un joli petit Italien.' His appearance did not quite please the great lady, and he was relegated to the kitchen as a scullion. But the cool impudence which never deserted him throughout his adventurous career was already his. He was by no means cast down, and continued to sing and make merry with his guitar. He also added violin-playing to his accomplishments, and was in due course promoted to a better position upstairs. But the lively boy soon lost his place through composing a satirical song at the expense of Mademoiselle, who promptly had him kicked out. His talents as an entertainer, however, were already recognised in aristocratic circles; the king, Louis XIV., sent for him, had a hearty laugh over his escapade, and took him into his own service—a stroke of luck for 'Baptiste,' and the foundation of his fortune. Everything then was in his favour; the king was young and was bent upon enjoying himself; and 'Baptiste' was precisely the person to assist him in this direction. Day by day brave shows were arranged at Court; the king and his nobility thought it by no means beneath their dignity to take part in Mascarades and Ballets-Divertissements; and already the first steps had been taken towards the introduction of Opera in France.

Early French Opera ultimately owed more to the Mascarade and other Court spectacles than to Italian models, but it was undoubtedly the Italian operas which gave the final impulse. In 1645 Cardinal Mazarin introduced an Italian troupe for the entertainment of the queen, Anne of Austria, and Strozzi's 'La Finta Pazza,' with music by Francesco Sacrati, was performed. Slight as this work was, in plot and in musical texture, it was so much longer and more solid than the gay French society people had hitherto known that it was voted dull. Madame de Motteville wrote: 'For my part I find that the length of the spectacle diminishes greatly the pleasure, and that lines simply declaimed represent conversation more easily and touch the soul more than singing delights the ear.' On another occasion the same writer recorded that 'the company nearly died of cold and boredom,' nevertheless the description of these pieces does not now sound particularly solid or serious. In Strozzi's work there was much amusing dialogue, besides dancing and songs, and still more important features were 'les machines.' The artist who invented and controlled the stage-machinery was always in those days mentioned at least on a level with the composer and librettist, and so long as the spectacle was magnificent and astonishing, little account was taken of incongruities and anachronisms. Giacomo Torelli, the artist for 'les machines' in 'La Finta Pazza,' for example, in the scene of Achilles' embarkation from Scyros, had the hardiness to show a stage-setting of the view from the Louvre, including the Pont-Neuf, the statue of Henry IV., and the towers of Notre-Dame in the distance. Other features in the opera were a ballet of monkeys and bears, and a dance of ostriches. Thus did Opera make its début in France in the guise of Pantomime.

More serious work followed, and gradually led up to the creations of Perrin and Cambert, Lully and Quinault, though Frenchmen were slow to believe that any serious form of music-drama could be established permanently in France, on account of a supposed unfitness of the French language for musical declamation. The experiments and struggles between 1650 and 1670 are too long to be recounted here, and readers who are interested must be referred to such books as Arthur Pougin's 'Les Vrais Créateurs de l'opéra Français' and Nuitter and Thoinan's 'Les Origines de l'opéra Français,' the latter being especially valuable as an impartial record of the quarrels between Perrin and his associates, and their ultimate displacement by the astute Lully.

The advancement of the last-named was rapid and certain. In 1652 the king, delighted with his violin-playing—which, according to contemporaries, was really good—formed for his benefit the 'Bande-des-Petits-Violons,' which very soon rivalled 'les Grands Violons,' the Court band which had been established by Henry IV. Step by step the young musician entered deeper and deeper into the favour of the king, and soon no great event took place at the Court without the presence and assistance of 'Baptiste.' His life in those days was irresponsible and distinctly irregular, but his dissipations seem to have formed little or no hindrance to his composing a large number of ballet-divertissements, songs and even church pieces. He had the sense to improve his musical education by taking lessons on the harpsichord and in harmony, and when in 1660 Cavalli's opera 'Sersè' was performed at the Louvre as a part of the festivities in connection with the king's marriage, 'Baptiste' was selected to write the inevitable ballet. He now began to be spoken of more respectfully as 'le Sieur Lully,' and, on May 16, 1661, he received the appointment of 'Compositeur et Surintendant de la Musique de la Chambre du Roi.'

The laughter of monarchs and its effect in making history would form a fine subject for a book. In notable instances kings have been more swayed by a humorous remark or a piece of buffoonery than by the most weighty arguments of the statesman; and that most puissant of potentates, Louis XIV. of France, though a hard worker in affairs of State, was also a complete voluptuary in the hours beyond the four or five daily which he rigidly devoted to work. Music of a light order, and the drama, were his joy—'Baptiste' the musician and Molière the dramatist were his ministers outside of his public duties. He has been called 'if not the greatest king, the finest actor of royalty the world has ever seen'! And this actor of royalty dearly loved all other actors who could carry his mind away from troublesome realities and make him laugh. 'Baptiste' joined the art of the perfect mime to his numerous other accomplishments, and not only wrote and performed music for the comedies of Molière, but also on occasion would himself take a comic rôle. Once, having temporarily come under an eclipse in the king's favour, 'Baptiste' literally leapt back into the royal sunshine: it was in Molière's 'M. de Pourceaugnac,' the rattling farce in which the physicians are so mercilessly satirized, and Lully was playing the title-part. In the scene where the apothecaries are pressing upon M. de Pourceaugnac, Lully acted with such comic abandonment that he forgot the stage-limits and jumped clean into the orchestra, alighting in the midst of the clavecin, in the ruins of which he sat while the king nearly laughed his head off. To know how to raise royal laughter is truly a priceless gift, and may make amends for many an offence. And Louis appears to have been equally tickled by unblushing impudence. On another occasion, when a performance was about to begin, and a messenger arrived from the king to say that His Majesty had come and was waiting, Lully coolly answered: 'His Majesty knows that he is master here and is perfectly free to wait as long as he pleases.' It is not surprising that a man who could thus speak to 'Le Grand Monarque' with impunity should have risen as Lully did, and have held to his death an almost complete monopoly as a royal and society entertainer. He even secured an injunction against the employment of more than two singers

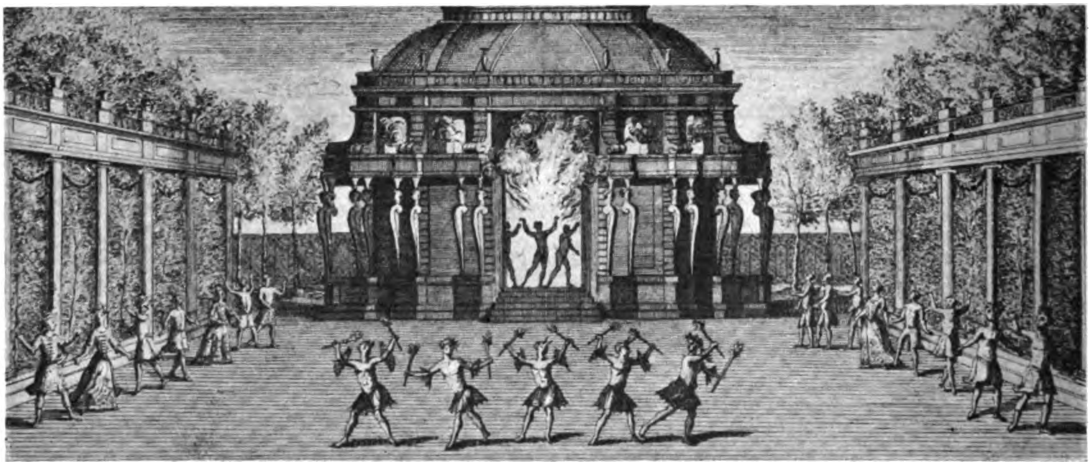
THE BALLET IN MOLIÈRE'S 'LA PRINCESSE D'ÉLIDE.'

PERFORMED WITH LULLY'S MUSIC IN THE PARK AT VERSAILLES (1664).

According to this picture, a stage was erected in the Park at a point where a natural avenue provided a long vista with a striking effect of perspective. The orchestra, screened stage-high from the onlookers, appears to consist of about forty players. The king and his party are in the centre of the foreground, facing the stage.

and two violins at any theatre but his own—notwithstanding that Molière was his friend and had advanced him a large sum of money towards the building of the house in the Rue Saint-Anne—11,000 livres in all.* But Molière also had the king's ear, and the vexatious restriction was modified, the comedians ultimately being permitted to employ six singers and twelve instrumentalists.

Bitter was the controversy that raged for nearly half a century as a result of Lully's schemings. There can be no doubt that at his death in 1687 he was one of the worst-hated men in Europe, besides being one of the wealthiest. His property in houses, lands and securities amounted to the gigantic value, for that day, of 800,000 livres, including, of silver, 16,000 livres; of jewellery, 13,000 livres; fifty-eight sacks filled with louis-d'or, 'doublons-d'Espagne' and bullion! A contemporary wrote: 'One cannot help admiring the continuation of the insolences of Lully . . . His affluence is more considerable than that of the first ministers of the other princes of Europe!!'



LULLY'S 'PHAËTON' (ACT III.). 1683.

SCENE AT THE TEMPLE OF ISIS. INCANTATIONS, CALLING FOR THE VENGEANCE OF ISIS AND JOVE UPON PHAËTON.

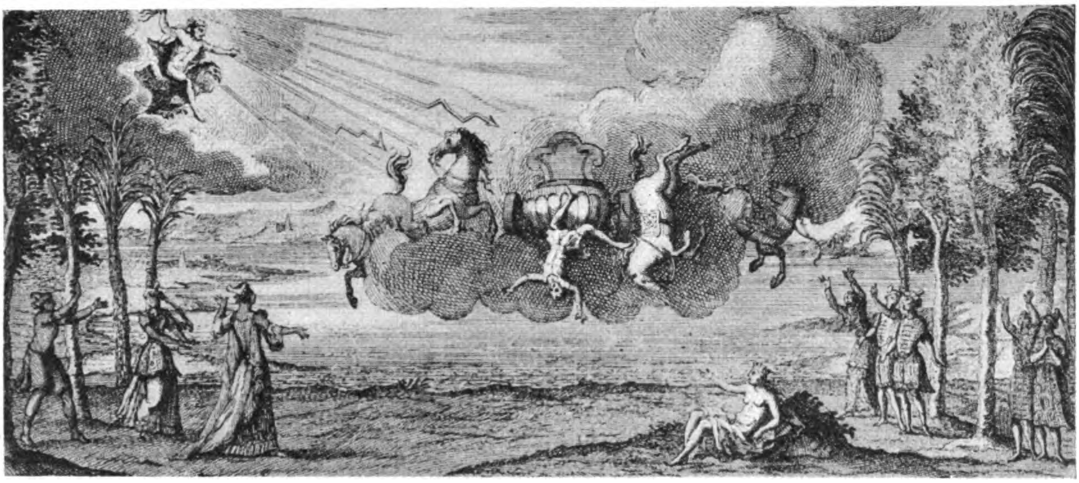
The stage-setting is a typical example of a favourite kind of architectural perspective.

M. Edmond Radet says, in his 'Lully, Homme-d'affaires, Propriétaire et Musicien,' that in December, 1681, he obtained from the king not only his naturalization but also Letters Patent of nobility, and adds, 'from "Baptiste" to "M. de Lully" the distance was great, and the road had been passed over so rapidly . . . that a crowd of envious ones had not failed to gather from all quarters.' After his death one of his detractors did not hesitate to publish a pamphlet of a satirical nature, in which Lully was charged with compassing, in England, the death of Cambert, whom he had superseded in the 'privilège du Roi.' In this brochure the scene is imagined in the Elysian Fields when Lully's spirit arrived to take his place among the shades of the illustrious. Perrin and Cambert were among those who objected to his admission, Perrin demanding his rejection as a thief of the brains of others, and telling how he was the real creator of French Opera, but that Lully's greed had filched his reward and reputation, the 'Corsair' abusing his official position to secure from the king the exclusive privilege which had cut the throats of so many people. 'Yes, yes, cut the throat,' cried terribly a furious shadow who, pushing aside the crowd, was at once recognised as the poor Cambert, still quite disfigured with the wounds by which he had been assassinated in England. 'You see, Madame,' he continued in the same tone, 'to what the tyranny of Lully has reduced me. The applause which I received from the public for the beauty of my compositions excited his indignation; he wished to possess the lands which I had discovered, and to reduce me to the cruel necessity of going to seek for bread and for glory in a foreign court, where envy found means to complete, by killing me, the crime which had been commenced in exiling me from my country. But by whatever hand the blows were given which took my life, I impute them only to Lully, whom I consider my veritable assassin and against whom I demand justice. And it is not for myself alone, Madame, that I implore your equity; it is also in the names of all those who were distinguished in his time by some rare talent in music, whom he has not ceased to persecute in all sorts of ways.' This biting satire has never been taken seriously, but the fact that it was published at all is an indication of the bitterness of feeling which Lully's success, and especially his methods of working for it, had aroused. Lully undoubtedly ousted Perrin and Cambert from their position, but it was rather by indirect than by direct means; he simply took advantage of the quarrels of these two and their partners to secure the royal privilege for himself; and it is certain that, in fair competition, Perrin was no serious rival of Lully's exceptionally capable librettist, Quinault, even if Cambert might possibly have held his own against Lully himself as a composer.

---

* The livre, originally a pound-weight of silver, suffered many depreciations. Under Louis IX. (ob. 1270) it had less than one-fourth of its name-value; under Louis XI. (ob. 1483) it had sunk to one-fifteenth; between 1610 and 1680 a reduction of fifty per cent. took place; and by 1789 the livre was only one seventy-eighth part of its original weight, and livres were converted into francs at the rate of l.81 to f. 80. It is very difficult to compare ancient with modern values, but it is perhaps not far wrong if we convert Lully's livres into pounds sterling by dividing by 10, i.e., 800,000 livres = £80,000 of present day currency.

Advocates of the claims of Cambert as the first composer of French music-drama have sometimes been inclined to belittle the work of Lully, but this is to follow injustice with injustice. Lully was strong enough to have made a noise in the world even without the adventitious aids to which he resorted. He was lucky, he was also a schemer, but he was a capable artist who needed not to fear any fair contemporary competition. The scores of his operas speak for themselves without the corroboration of public opinion of his day, which, be it added, was almost entirely on his side if we except the utterances of his injured rivals. The most striking feature in Lully's stage-music is his exact proportioning of means to the desired end. There is no wastage of effort; Lully could rise to a height on occasion, but he never attempted to remain on a lofty eminence when his doing so might not attract attention. We find this characteristic in the early ballets, where the dance-tunes were never elaborated beyond the needs of the moment, and the same economy of resources is observable throughout the operas. His overtures were of uniform pattern, beginning with a stately movement usually in dotted rhythm; this was followed by a quick movement of fugal character, but the imitative writing was curiously deceptive, the string parts being kept very busy and making frequent fussy entries which passed for fugal leads and served their purpose sufficiently well. Lully was not the man to waste good work merely to cover conversation. After the mythological prologue, which was an invariable feature of the operas, the same overture served as entr'acte, and ushered in the drama proper. In this, Lully's supreme merit is seen. The entire libretto is set to music which shows almost throughout the master-hand. We find none of the stilted recitativo secco of the Italian School; the frequent full-closes with their irritating dominant-tonic chords are as conspicuous by their absence from the Lullian opera as they are by their presence in the works of the Scarlatti-Handel group; and whereas the Italian composers early forsook the dramatic ideals of Monteverde and made their operas mere vehicles for the display of solo voices, the dramatic instinct of the French saved their national opera from at least that form of degeneracy. Lully's music is continuous, and it is difficult to draw any rigid line between recitative and aria. The comparative importance of the verbal phrases is indicated by the musical treatment; mere description is effected by simple recitative with harpsichord accompaniment; more weighty utterances are made with the help of balanced musical phrases and complete orchestral background; formal airs of surpassing grace and dignity occur, in rare moments when the emotion is tense, for Lully had a fine ear for melodic outline and balance, and a true instinct for a dramatic climax. Where is music more simple, yet more haunting, than the funeral scene in 'Alceste'?



LULLY'S 'PHAËTON' (ACT V.). 1683.

JUPITER'S VENGEANCE UPON PHAËTON FOR HIS TEMERITY IN ESSAYING TO DRIVE THE CHARIOT OF THE SUN.

An example of one of the more difficult problems in stage-setting in the spectacular French operas. Some allowance must probably be made for imagination on the part of the artist, but the stage-directions are explicit, and this scene was certainly enacted in view of the audience.

Where is the superior, for nobility and breadth, of the familiar 'Bois épais, redouble ton ombre,' in 'Amadis' (1684)? Where is finer humour in music than old Charon's song in 'Alceste,' where the one-eyed boatman of the Styx haggles with the disembodied spirits upon the bank before rowing them across the river? Where (in that day) was finer declamatory music written for the chorus than the sacrificial scene in 'Cadmus et Hermione' (1674)? From the days of 'Baptiste' to the grand climax of 'M. de Lully, Escuyer, Conseiller, Secrétaire du Roi . . .' &c., the man may have been throughout a 'corsair,' a roué, a grasping speculator, but there is no doubt of his artistry, and in this strange combination lies a complex problem for the student of human nature.

GAMES OF MUSIC.

The present age is essentially an age of games. It certainly is an obvious fact that no form of play can be carried on without them, and it is almost equally obvious that nowadays very little work can be done without them, at any rate where small children are concerned. The instructive game has become a prominent feature in our modern education, and is employed in the teaching of nearly all branches of knowledge, music included.

Although, so far as our times are concerned, it was only during the latter half of the 19th century that educational games became general, it cannot be said that they were previously altogether unknown. In France, after the Revolution and under the first Republic, a great educational craze set in and many instructive games were invented as a means of teaching all kinds of subjects, especially geography and the history of the Revolution. These games were invariably card games, and were designed more for the edification of older people than for quite young children. In the 18th century the rage for card-playing was almost universal over the whole of Europe, and every kind of game that could be played by means of cards was at once eagerly adopted. To gain information was excellent, provided it could be combined with card-playing. Even ordinary playing-cards served the double purpose of instruction and amusement; for, in addition to the usual symbols — hearts, clubs, &c. — they were often adorned with pictures representing historic persons, events, places, or moral maxims, all calculated to improve the mind and counteract the excitement of high play. But none of these revolutionary playing-cards were musical, and the only actually instructive musical card game was one of a still earlier date advertised in the Paris journals of September 24, 1759, in the following terms :

> Jeu de cartes harmoniques pour composer des airs de musique toujours différens, en tons majeurs et mineurs avec la basse continue, propres à être executés sur le champ sans le secours du calcul, de la plume ni du papier, en distribuant seulement et en arrangeant un certain nombre de cartes selon l'ordre naturel des nombres 1, 2, 3, 4, etc. ; ce jeu se vend avec l'explication 3 livres 12 sols aux addresses ordinaires de musiques.

This is the first record we have of musical playing-cards in France, and the only one, so far as can be ascertained, that claims to instruct as well as to amuse. No record of any other instructive musical game appears till 1801, when a Scotch lady invented and patented one so clever and ingenious, so full of nice detail, that all the music games of the present day seem poor in design and clumsy in execution in comparison with it. This game, or set of games, is far more complete than anything of the kind that has been brought out since; for it professes to teach not only the elements of music, but also the 'principles of thorough bass and modulation.' Its inventor, Miss Ann Young, was a teacher of the pianoforte who lived in Edinburgh. She would seem to have possessed an uncommon order of mind, and must have been a very original teacher. If she made use of her own invention in her lessons, no doubt her pupils were both interested and amused, though progress must have been somewhat slow; for, as will presently be seen, the games were games of pure chance determined entirely by the casting of dice. Miss Young took out a patent for her invention in March, 1801, and the quaint terms of the provisional specification are so different from those of the present day as to be worth quoting :

> To all to whom these Presents shall come, Ann Young of Saint James Square, in the City of Edinburgh sendeth Greeting :
> WHEREAS HIS PRESENT MAJESTY KING GEORGE THE THIRD BY HIS LETTERS PATENT UNDER THE GREAT SEAL OF THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND BEARING DATE 11TH DAY OF MARCH IN THE 41ST YEAR OF HIS REIGN, DID GIVE A GRANT UNTO THE SAID ANN YOUNG HIS SPECIAL LICENSE THAT THE SAID ANN YOUNG SHOULD AND LAWFULLY MIGHT DURING THE TIME OF 14 YEARS THEREIN EXPRESSED, MAKE, USE, EXERCISE, AND VEND WITHIN ENGLAND, WALES AND TOWN OF BERWICK UPON TWEED, HER

> New invented apparatus consisting of an Oblong Square Box, which, when opened, presents two faces or Tables, and of various dice, pins, counters, &c. contained within the same, by means of which six different games may be played, which besides being amusing and interesting, and such as children of eight years old may be taught to play, are at the same time an improving exercise upon, and serve to render familiar and impress upon the memory, the fundamental principles of the science of music, particularly all the Keys or Modulations, Major, and Minor, both with the Common and Uncommon Signatures, Musical Intervals, Cords, discords with their resolutions and the most useful rules of Thorough Bass : in which letters patent there is contained a clause or proviso, that she, the said Ann Young, should within one Calendar Month next after the date of the said Letters Patent, cause a particular description of her said Invention under her hand and seal, to be inrolled in His Majesty's High Court of Chancery as in and by the same Letters Patent related being thereunto had, may more fully and at large appear.

In the same year Miss Young issued the first edition of her book describing the games and the manner of playing them. She calls the book

> An Introduction to Music in which the Elementary parts of the Science and the Principles of Thorough Bass and Modulation, as illustrated by the Musical Games and Apparatus, are fully and familiarly explained with copious examples ; together with a Description of the Apparatus, complete Directions for playing the several games, with introductory and additional games, illustrating the different Cliffs, on a Plan Entirely New.

There are indeed complete and minute instructions for playing the games, and in addition the book is a very excellent treatise on harmony from the first elements up to modulation. The language and terms of expression are quaint and sometimes a little cumbrous, especially in the latter portion of the work. For the most part, however, the elementary theory of music is clearly set out, and the musical examples with which the book abounds are simple and to be easily understood even without the help of the 'Apparatus.'

The games are played upon the two faces or tables of the 'Oblong Square Box,' and the 'Apparatus' is contained in two drawers at either end of it. Before the student is allowed to play any of the games he is carefully instructed as to the 'clavier or keyboard,' notation, time, intervals, scales and modulation, to which the five introductory chapters of the book are devoted. He is then familiarised with the 'Game Tables' by comparing them with the careful description given in the book, and after that he begins to learn to play the games. Including the introductory game there are eight games, but each is divided into two or more parts that are really separate games, making twenty-two in all, and when the student has thoroughly mastered them he will be supposed to be so well grounded in harmony as to be able to modulate in various ways into any key and to begin composition. The introductory and first games deal with signatures 'common' and 'uncommon,' the second with 'the various Cliffs,' the third with intervals, the fourth with cadences, the fifth with the 'Rule of the Octave,' the sixth with the resolution of discords and 'chords by license,' the seventh with modulation. All these are played by means of the dice and counters according to very strict rules fully set forth in the book. Like all games of chance, it would be very easy to turn this into a gambling game, and it would take much less time to lose a fortune than to learn harmony by its means. It is possible, however, that Miss Young thought the very slowness of her method necessary to thoroughly impress musical knowledge upon the minds of her pupils. Doubtless it was an excellent exercise for the memory too, and as young people were not hurried over their studies a hundred years ago as they are now, they could afford to acquire their knowledge of harmony in a leisurely way.

Miss Young married John Gunn, the well-known violoncellist. She died in 1827, and her system of teaching did not long survive her. Her book and game are now only to be found in collections—a fate that may presently overtake all other similar inventions. For some forty years after Mrs. Gunn's death educational games for all subjects were in abeyance, until the revival mentioned at the beginning of this article; and music was one of the last subjects to be affected. In 1886 a method of teaching music that could be treated as a game was invented. The idea took the shape of a staff or stave of five lines on a large sheet of paper, with each line of a different colour. The notes are all stamped out of cardboard, in colours corresponding to the lines, those notes that fall on lines in both bass and treble clefs being of the same colour. Thus, supposing G, the first line in the bass, to be blue, G, the second line in the treble, will also be blue. The notes representing the spaces are parti-coloured, the top half being the colour of the line above, the bottom that of the line below. The flats, sharps and leger-lines are also coloured, but the time-marks are black. This seems a not unreasonable invention, though its advantages over the more ordinary methods of teaching music may be open to question. It is, however, plain and straightforward as compared with a system for teaching musical notation evolved some six years later by an ingenious lady living in Paris. For this, instead of notes, are used various kinds of curious symbols: 'circles, half and quarter circles, angles, semi-angles,' with algebraical signs, and Roman and Arabic numbers. All these are grouped in different ways, and the groupings express the several names and values of the notes. There are also cards with these symbols engraved upon them for playing various games, such as lotto; and a special feature of the invention is that every child is furnished with several small batons about the size of sticks of sealing-wax. Each of these has on one end of it one or more of the necessary signs in type that can be used either for printing in ink or for perforating cards or paper, and the child is encouraged to do his own music printing, which makes the game or lesson more interesting. The invention is exceedingly ingenious, but so complicated that the child would probably spend more time in mastering the details of the apparatus and all the mysterious signs, than he would in learning musical notation in the ordinary way under a competent teacher.

What appears to be the most practical of musical games has been invented by a Canadian lady living in Toronto, and during the past ten years it has become very largely used in the infant schools of both Canada and the United States. This consists of a portable staff composed of five black tapes or ribbons stretched between two vertical bars of sufficient size and weight to keep the apparatus steady on the floor. One bar is provided with spools on which the ribbons are wound, the other bar has hooks to which wire loops on the free ends of the ribbons can be fastened, thus keeping the whole thing taut and in position. The clefs, bar-lines, notes, rests, time figures and other necessary musical signs are made in block form to be placed in their proper places on the ribbon staff, and the inventor has devised several games in which it is said the children concerned not only take great delight, but quickly learn to read music at sight. In addition to this staff there is a portable keyboard copied from that of the pianoforte, but with detachable notes, and in one of the games all the notes are mixed up in a heap and the child has to pick them out and set them in their proper order in the frame, thus actually constructing a pianoforte keyboard for himself. To facilitate this, each note has printed upon it a staff of five lines with the bass or treble clef and a representation of the note in its proper position with regard to the clef. The ten white notes from F, the fourth line in the bass, to A, the second space in the treble, have each two staves, showing the position of the same note when written in either the bass or treble clef with its proper leger-lines. Each black note also bears two staves showing the position of the note when used as a flat or sharp respectively. This part of the invention was anticipated some years previously, for in 1892 a Silesian merchant brought out the model of a pianoforte keyboard with movable notes and with similar representations on each to those described above.

It is a curious and interesting fact that, among musical games, those invented by women are very complicated and extraordinarily full of detail, while those invented by men are, with very rare exceptions, quite simple and generally adaptations from other games. From this we may draw one of two conclusions: either that in this particular line woman has more originality than man, or that when she begins to invent, her mind becomes so engrossed with details as to lose sight of the main issue, and, in the words of the proverb, she 'cannot see the wood for the trees.'

Of the few other modern musical games, most are concerned with the teaching of ordinary notation on keyed instruments; but one ingenious game deals with changes in bell-ringing, an art once nearly lost, but now happily being revived in many country places. The game can be played by from two to six players, and represents a set of six bells. It consists of a board similar to that used for draughts, but divided into 120 squares. There are six sets of counters, each set of a different colour, and each numbering 120. The board has to be covered with counters in such a way that no two of the same colour may be on the same line, and by this means the 720 changes possible on a peal of six bells can be illustrated. Another invention, in which colour plays an important part, comes from Nuremberg, and is designed for teaching young people the trumpet. There are certain technical improvements in the connections between the keys and valves of the instrument, but the main point is that each key is of a different colour. The tunes are written in notes of corresponding colours, and it is only necessary to press a pink or blue key to produce the note written in the same colour, so that a child can learn to play melodies without any previous knowledge of musical notation.

A game of English origin concerns itself with composition, and is played by means of dice, something after the fashion of Mrs. Gunn's game, and possibly suggested by it. It can be played by two, three, or four players, and consists of a board with four slots or grooves, each representing a staff of five lines, the whole forming a four-part score. The notes are printed on blocks suitable for placing on the grooved staves, and the dice are engraved with notes of different values. Each player has to take a staff and make eight bars of music in harmony with the others, and the one who first completes his eight bars wins. This game is more suitable for older students with some musical knowledge than for children, and though the dice impart to it the element of chance, it would be possible for skilful players to work out some scheme of composition, treating it as a musical puzzle.

A game for class teaching in schools comes from America, where it appears to be used for the instruction of small children. The teacher has a large chart with music staves ruled on it, and in addition pictures of various articles, the names of which can be spelled with the letters of the notes belonging to the staves. The children are given little cards or slates, each having a staff of five lines and a picture corresponding to one of the articles on the chart, such as a cabbage, a bag, a bee; and the names have to be spelled by writing the notes proper to each letter on the staff. There are also cubes connected with this game with staves on all six sides of each and a portion of the object pictured in one corner so that all the cubes must be put together before a complete picture can be made. Another and simpler cube game was invented by a Hungarian, who certainly appears to have wished to combine amusement with instruction. One side of each cube forms part of an agreeable and amusing picture, while on the other sides are printed musical signs, and in some cases words of national songs. By arranging these cubes in different ways little tunes can be made up. Dominoes have been pressed into the service of music, and two individuals, one in the North of England and one in Wales, have issued each a set of dominoes for purposes of musical instruction and amusement; but it is doubtful whether they have fulfilled their inventors' expectations. English children, as a rule, are not much given to the playing of dominoes; it is a tedious entertainment at its best, and a tedious game is not a good means for imparting knowledge.

Of musical games for the pure diversion of grown-up people none now exist, nor would they be played if anyone had the courage to invent them. But our old card-playing ancestors of the late 18th and early 19th centuries added all sorts of amusing subjects to their card games in addition to those for instruction previously mentioned, and musical playing-cards were in use in different parts of the Continent as well as in England. A beautiful pack of French cards, edited by Joseph Galler, dates from the beginning of the 19th century, and is a fine example of engraving. On the upper half of each card are the usual spots, and figures for the court cards, and on the lower half is a charming air for the flute or violin. Each card has its own tune complete in itself, but in 1830 a pack of musical playing-cards was produced at Vienna from which it was claimed 1,001 waltzes for the pianoforte might be played. On the lower half of each card two bars of music for pianoforte were engraved, and the music was so ingeniously written that any two bars could be followed by any other two bars. A complete waltz of sixteen bars could be made by any eight cards, either of one suit or of various suits, without any relation to the numerical sequences of the spots. In England there are two or three interesting musical packs. One, supposed to have been published about 1730, has a complete song engraved on each card with an accompaniment for the flute. To a certain extent the songs are appropriate to the suits, all the hearts bearing love songs. The titles of those on the court cards of that suit are as follows: for the king, 'Cupid's dart useless'; queen, 'Broken heart'; knave, 'Sly knave'; ace, 'Faithful lover.' The knave of spades' song is 'The miser,' and that of the knave of diamonds, 'Jack Sheppard.' Another set, published after 1775, has a series of dance tunes, chiefly country dances, but including the famous tunes 'Lango Lee,' the 'Four seasons,' and Dibdin's 'Jolly young waterman.' This pack had twenty-four additional cards for playing the game of quadrille, to which the 18th century ladies were so devoted. Each of these cards also had engraved on it the music of a dance or cotillion. The late Mr. Julian Marshall possessed a pack of cards with songs from the 'Beggar's opera' engraved on them. These were sold by auction in 1884. A German pack of the 18th century has a set of dance tunes, and it is interesting to note that in all probability Germany produced the earliest examples of musical playing-cards. In 1545 a pack of cards used for a satirical German game had musical notation inscribed on the back of each card. It took the form of a discant written on a staff of five lines in a given key and with a time-signature, but no bar-lines. This is probably the first game connected in any way with music of which we have any record.

It is difficult to leave this subject without mentioning one more pack of cards, which, though not concerned with the playing or teaching of a musical game, is of great interest from a musical as well as other points of view. The cards are the work of the famous Swiss engraver, Jost Ammon, who was born at Zurich in 1539, and are among the finest specimens of his art. The pack was used for a remarkable moral and instructive game of which Ammon is supposed to have been the inventor. The four suits are represented by (1) the ink-pads used by old-fashioned printers; (2) books of different shapes and sizes; (3) metal beakers; (4) glass drinking goblets. The suits typify certain virtues and vices; the ink-pads signify industry; the books, learning; the beakers, idleness; the goblets, drunkenness. The symbols are arranged in the proper order on the upper part of each card, interwoven with a decorative design of leaves or flowers, while the lower part is occupied with a picture representing some scene of human life typical of the special virtue or vice. Among them are many representations of musical performers; notably a band of musicians playing the harp, bass viol and German flute; a man playing pipe and tabor to a couple, who walk away from him with scornful gestures; a richly dressed lady playing an organ that is being blown by a small boy; another lady playing the virginals; a man playing a large lute to a lady; two persons singing from a musical score. All of these and the other scenes and persons are depicted with the minute detail characteristic of all artistic work of that period, and serve to show how music has been in some way associated with instructive games for at least four centuries.

Supper being ended, and Musicke bookes, according to the custome being brought to the table: the mistresse of the house presented mee with a part, earnestly requesting mee to sing. But when after manie excuses, I protested unfainedly that I could not: everie one began to wonder. Yea, some whispered to others, demaunding how I was brought up: so that upon shame of mine ignorance I go nowe to seeke out mine olde frinde Master Gnorimus, to make my selfe his scholler.

The announcement that the village and advowson of North Aston, near Woodstock, Oxfordshire, is for sale, recalls the fact that Bernard Gates lived there in retirement in his old age and died November 15, 1773, at the age of eighty-eight, according to the Burial Register of Westminster Abbey. His pupil, Dr. Thomas Sanders Dupuis, erected in the church a monument to Gates's memory, which bears the following inscription, kindly copied by Mr. George W. South, organist of the church.

In Memory of BERNARD GATES Esq.
Late of this Parish, Senior Gent. and many years Master of The Children of His Majesty's Chapel's Royal, Tuner of the Regals, one of the Choir and Master of the Children of Westminster Abbey.
In the year M.DCC.LVIII he retired to North Aston, where he died on the XV Novr. M.DCC.LXXIII. aged LXXXVII years, and was buried in the cloisters of Westminster Abbey near the remains of his wife and daughter.
This Monument is erected as a mark of esteem, and gratitude by his pupil and much obliged friend
T. S. Dupuis, Organist and Composer to His Majesty.

Bernard Gates was not, however, buried at North Aston. He directed in his will that his body should be carried to the Swan and two necks in Tothill Street, Westminster, and thence buried in the Abbey Cloisters near his wife and daughter, a request that was duly carried out, and Gates's remains rest in the North Cloister of Westminster Abbey. That he was a kind-hearted man is shown by a clause in his will whereby he directed that his chaise horse should be kept on his estate at Aston without doing any work, and never to be killed, and that when the animal died it should 'be buried without mutilation of any sort.'

The village of North Aston is (or was) noted for the once favourite Nonpareil apple, which, brought direct from Normandy to the place in 1593, was propagated under the name of the North Aston apple, commonly called 'Folks' apple.' Bernard Gates—whose only brother bore the curious christian name of 'Gabriel-Abel'—owned the old manor house in the village. Among his possessions was 'a cabinet wardrobe, lined with crimson velvet and marked with the initials of Queen Anne.' One of the children of the Chapel Royal, afterwards a Gentleman of that establishment, and a member of the choir of Westminster Abbey, Bernard Gates held the sinecure office of Tuner of the Regals in the King's household.

It was, however, in his capacity as Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal that Bernard Gates is best known to fame. Among the children he educated were John Randall and Samuel Howard, who both became doctors of music, and John Beard, Handel's celebrated tenor. Moreover, in his official capacity, Gates organized a performance which had far-reaching consequences upon the development of oratorio in England. How this came about is related by Mr. W. S. Rockstro in his 'Life of Handel' (London, Macmillan, 1883), from which we venture to quote:

> On Handel's forty-seventh birthday, the 23rd of February, 1732, the Children of the Chapel Royal gave a private performance of the first English Oratorio, Esther, with scenery, dresses, and action, at the house of their master, Mr. Bernard Gates, in James Street, Westminster.

The following is the cast of the first performance of 'Esther' given in Bernard Gates's house:

Esther	John Randall.	Harbonah	Price Clevely.
Assuerus, and First Israelite	James Butler.	Persian Officer and Second Israelite	James Allen.
Mordecai, and Israelite Boy	John Brown.	Israelites and Officers	Samuel Howard. Thomas Barrow. Robert Denham.
Israelitish Priest	John Beard.

To continue Rockstro's narrative:

> The performance, on this occasion, consisted of two Acts only; beginning, as it had begun at Cannons, with the Recitative, 'Tis greater far. The Chorus, placed, like that of an antient Greek Tragedy, between the orchestra and the Stage, consisted chiefly of the Choristers and Gentlemen of the Chapel Royal and Westminster Abbey. The Instrumental Accompaniments were played by members of the 'Philharmonick Society.' And the performance gave such pleasure to the invited guests, that, by general request, it was repeated, with the same Singers, at the 'Crown and Anchor' Tavern in the Strand, on two of the subscription nights of the 'Academy of Antient Musick.' On one of these occasions, Handel himself was present, and took so much pleasure in the performance, that he afterwards described it to the Princess Royal, who wished to see the Oratorio performed, by the same young Singers, at the Opera House. This, however, was forbidden, by the then Bishop of London, Dr. Gibson, who refused to allow it to be sung in costume, even on condition that the Children should hold books in their hands. Of course, the prohibition did not extend to performances without dramatic action; and this exception exercised a most unforeseen effect upon Handel's subsequent career and fortunes. Though the first performances were strictly private, they attracted sufficient attention to excite the cupidity of a greedy speculator, who, some weeks later, inserted an advertisement in the 'Daily Journal,' to the effect that Esther 'as it was composed for The Most Noble James Duke of Chandos, by George Frederick Handel,' would be performed, on the 20th of April, 1732, at, 'the Great Room in Villar's-Street, York Buildings. Each ticket five shillings.' Handel's natural indignation at this act of piracy resulted in a counter-advertisement from himself, announcing that, 'By His Majesty's command,' Esther would be performed at the King's Theatre in the Haymarket, on the 2nd of May, 1732, 'by a great number of Voices and Instruments.' The conclusion of this advertisement is so important, as an indication of the manner in which the first English Oratorio was first publicly performed in London, that we give it in Handel's own words:
> > 'N.B. There will be no acting on the Stage, but the house will be fitted up in a decent manner, for the audience. The Musick to be disposed after the manner of the Coronation Service. Tickets to be delivered at the usual prices.'

Little did Mr. Bernard Gates realize that his private performance of 'Esther' would form an important incident in the history of oratorio in this country.

The programmes of the Popular Concerts and three special concerts given by the Municipal Orchestra of Rome between November, 1905, and May, 1907, have been issued in book form. From this interesting pamphlet it is pleasant to learn that English music has not been neglected. We find that the following works were performed during the period above referred to:

Four characteristic waltzes (Op. 22)	Coleridge-Taylor.
Four dances in the ancient style	Cowen.
Variations on an original theme for orchestra (twice)	Elgar.
Dorabella Intermezzo, from the above
Chanson de nuit and Chanson de matin (Op. 15, Nos. 1 and 2)
Meditation on Lux Christi
Three dances. Henry VIII.	German.

Signor A. Vessella, the able conductor of the orchestra, is to be congratulated upon the eclecticism of his programmes, and a word of acknowledgment is due to him for the attention he has given to English music.

It is no doubt a tradition in the Coulanges family that the picture by Rigaud recently acquired by the Trustees of the National Gallery actually contains a portrait of Lully. Such traditions die hard. Presumably in support of this opinion the Marquise de Coulanges has just presented an engraved portrait of Lully, which now hangs near to the picture. This engraving makes no claim to be a contemporary portrait. As stated on the plate, it is engraved by Augustin de St. Aubin, from a drawing by C. N. Cochin after the bust by Colignon. Now there were two C. N. Cochins, father and son, but as the father was born in 1688 and Lully died in 1687 neither can claim to have seen the composer. Of the bust by Colignon we have no information. It is difficult to reconcile this portrait with either the Edelinck engraving reproduced in our May number, or with the Roullet engraving after Mignard. The sculptor may possibly have worked from a death mask, which often produces deceptive results. But it is equally difficult to find the resemblance between the engraving exhibited and either of the persons represented in the picture.

Favoured with a better light and a magnifying glass, we have no doubt that the book lying open on the table has the inscription 'Trio de M. de Labarre.' Now, Michel de Labarre was, according to Choron and Fayolle, born 'vers 1680,' according to Fétis, in 1675. This would make him at the outside twelve years of age at the time of Lully's death, and renders it perfectly impossible that the latter could form one of a party where any work of Labarre's was on the table.

In connection with the twenty-fifth anniversary of the production of 'Parsifal,' Herr Humperdinck has given in an Austrian paper some reminiscences of his first meeting with Wagner and the private performance of the 'Liebesmahlszene' at the Villa d' Angri, near Naples, to which he was invited. Before that memorable day had closed, Wagner told Humperdinck that if he came to Bayreuth, there was work of all kinds to be done which might amuse him. And he added, 'Yes, my dear young fellow, the old, great masters of painting had first to grind colours before they could work independently.' Whereupon the future composer of 'Hänsel und Gretel' replied, 'All right, I will come as a colour-grinder (Farbenreiber).'

A portrait (in relief) of Schubert, together with a commemorative tablet, has been placed on the front of the house at Graz where the composer stayed for several weeks during the autumn of 1827. The portrait, the work of the Viennese sculptor Hans Mauer, was made after original drawings by Moritz von Schwind, Schubert's friend. In his invaluable monograph on Schubert in the 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' Sir George Grove, referring to Schubert's poverty, says:

> But the fact is that he was mixed up with a set of young fellows who regarded him as a Crœsus, and who virtually lived upon his carelessness and good-nature under the guise of keeping house in common. Bauernfeld, in an article in the Vienna 'Presse' of April 17, 1869, has given us the account with some naïveté. A league or partnership was made between himself, Schwind the painter and Schubert. They had nominally their own lodgings, but often slept all together in the room of one. The affection between them was extraordinary. Schubert used to call Schwind 'seine Geliebte'—his innamorata! A kind of common property was established in clothes and money; hats, coats, boots, and cravats were worn in common, and the one who was in cash paid the score of the others. As Schwind and Bauernfeld were considerably younger than Schubert, that duty naturally fell on him. When he had sold a piece of music he seemed to this happy trio to 'swim in money,' which was then spent 'right and left' in the most reckless manner, till it was all gone and the period of reverse came. Under these circumstances life was a series of fluctuations, in which the party were never rich and often very poor.

The scheme of the Association of the Universities of Melbourne and Adelaide in conducting Local Examinations in music came into operation on July 1. The first of these examinations will be held throughout Victoria, South and Western Australia, and Tasmania in September and October.

'One shall be taken, the other left.' Last month the great violinist Joseph Joachim passed away, and Johann Christoph Lauterbach, pupil of De Bériot, a violinist of long-established reputation, celebrated, and in good health, the seventy-fifth anniversary of his birth. But he retired from public life eighteen years ago; Joachim worked almost to the very last.

Dr. Albert Kopfermann, the courteous director of the music department of the Royal Library, Berlin, has had the title of Royal Professor bestowed on him. Hearty congratulations to Dr. Kopfermann on this well-deserved honour.

Great singers come and go, but they do not always leave behind them a permanent record of fame. Jenny Lind was an exception. In the city of Norwich her fame is variously kept in remembrance by the Jenny Lind Infirmary for sick children, the Jenny Lind Steamboat Company, and the Jenny Lind public house! A public-house in a Surrey town is also named after the 'Swedish Nightingale'—indeed, the subject of tavern signs having musical associations is an interesting one; in London, for instance, there is a Gregorian Arms!

The harp of the minstrel is untruly touched if his own glory is all that it records.—RUSKIN.

MOZART AND BEETHOVEN.

SOME PRECIOUS AUTOGRAPHS.

Miss Harriet Chichele Plowden, of Albion Villas, Folkestone, who died on June 26, aged seventy-six, bequeathed, by her will, some precious autographs of Mozart and Beethoven to the British Museum. These treasures consist of ten string quartets by Mozart—the best known by that master—and a sonata for pianoforte and violin by Beethoven. Let us trace the history of these important autographs.

The manuscripts of the Mozart quartets were formerly in the possession of John Andrew Stumpff, the friend of Goethe and Beethoven, who became a harp and pianoforte manufacturer in London, his place of business being in Great Portland Street. After Stumpff's death his effects—manuscripts, instruments, and even clothing—were sold by Messrs. Puttick & Simpson on March 30 and 31, 1847. In the priced catalogue, now in the British Museum, of this interesting sale we find that his Mozart manuscripts are set forth as follows:

Manuscripts in the autograph of Mozart, purchased by the late Mr. Stumpff of the widow of Mozart in 1811 for £350.

		Amount.
Lot.		£	s.	d.	Purchaser.
36.	Six quartetts, dedicated to Joseph Haydn	5	15	0	Mr. Plowden
37.	Three quartetts, dedicated to the King of Prussia ...	4	6	0	,, Hamilton
38.	A Quartett in D major ...	3	3	0	,, Plowden
39.	A Quintett in E flat major...	3	10	0	,, Schmidt
40.	A Quintett in C minor ...	2	0	0	Money
41.	Fantasia and Sonata in C minor	2	0	0	Money
42.	Favorite Sonata in B flat major	3	3	0	Mr. Caulfield
44.	Various small pieces, viz., Variations on the air 'Le Bergere Célimène,' a Fugue, an Adagio for the Piano Forte, Theme for the Piano Forte and Violin and an Adagio for two Violins, Tenor and Violoncello	3	17	0	Mr. Caulfield
45.	A Quintett in D major ...	2	11	0	Money

'Money' in the above quotation means that the unknown purchasers simply put down the cash and took the Lots away with them. Lucky men!

The price of Lot 37, by-the-way, is wrongly given as £4 16*s.* by Otto Jahn in the German edition (1859) of his 'Life of Mozart' (vol. iv., p. 69), and this error has been copied by Köchel in the first edition of his Mozart catalogue and by subsequent writers. In the new edition of Köchel the prices are not given.

To resume. The six quartets dedicated by Mozart to Haydn—with the touching inscription (in Italian), 'Al mio caro amico Haydn'—are Köchel 387, 421, 428, 458, 464, and 465. The three quartets dedicated to the King of Prussia—who on the receipt of the first of them presented Mozart with a gold snuff-box and £75—are K. 575, 589, and 590; while the Quartet in D is K. 499. Thus it will be seen that at Stumpff's sale sixty years ago the ten quartets bequeathed by Miss Harriet Plowden to the nation averaged under twenty-seven shillings each! The 'Mr. Plowden' who purchased Lots 36 and 38 on that occasion was the father of that lady, and he probably bought from

'Mr. Hamilton' Lot 37 at the same time in order to make up his set.

The Mozart manuscripts, however, by no means exhaust the wonders of Stumpff's sale, as the following descriptions and the amounts the Lots realized will testify:

		Amount.
Lot.		£	s.	d.
4.	Portrait of Beethoven, with two locks of his hair	4	0	0
6.	Portrait of A. J. Stumpff, a drawing, made at the desire of, and presented by Goethe...		12	0
29.	A chased silver snuff-box, gilt inside, with lock of Beethoven's hair set in a locket outside, and original verses by A. J. Stumpff engraved within	7	7	0
45*.	Beethoven, 6 leaves of music in his autograph	2	2	0
47.	Quartet and Scherzo, in the autograph of Louis Spohr		8	0
48.	Bach (J. S.), a wedding service, in his autograph, full score composed in 1734...		16	0
54.	A Scrap of Music, 'L. van Beethoven's own handwriting; written on his death bed for me, J. A. Stumpff'		15	0
55.	Three pieces of German poetry, each with the autograph of the illustrious Goethe and his father		8	0
58.	Beethoven, an autograph Letter 2 pages 8vo, with a transcript, Sept. 29, 1824 ...	1	0	0
61.	Beethoven, an autograph Letter, 1 page 4to, 1824	1	0	0
63.	A small quantity of the hair of Goethe, Stumpff's personal friend	0	6	0
64.	The initials of Mozart and of his wife, worked in their own hair	1	2	0

Are not the above amounts enough to make the present-day collector green with envy? To think of the autograph of a Bach Cantata being sold for 16*s*.!

Lot 53 forms a marked contrast with those in its immediate surroundings; it is catalogued 'Manuscript music by A. J. Stumpff, including his "New Comic Song in an old coat,"' and realized the sum of 6*s*. Even Mr. Stumpff's nether garments were included in the sale, as Lot 173 reads: 'One pair of duck trowsers, 1 pair nankeen ditto, shirt, cravat, stock, piece of linen.' To think that all these habiliments, worn by the friend of Beethoven and Goethe, should have been knocked down for a paltry half-crown!

To return to Miss Plowden's bequest in respect of the Beethoven sonata. In a summary of the will which appeared in the newspapers this is stated to be 'Beethoven's first sonata for violin and piano,' i.e., Op. 12, No. 1, in the key of D. Miss Plowden kindly allowed her manuscripts to be shown at the Loan collection of the Inventions Exhibition, held in the Royal Albert Hall in 1885. The hand-catalogue of that most interesting display gives the key of this exhibited sonata as G. Now Beethoven wrote two sonatas for violin and pianoforte in that key—Op. 30, No. 3, and Op. 96. The autograph of the latter was exhibited at the Vienna Music Exhibition in 1892, the catalogue giving its owner's name as Dr. A. M. Nürchten, of Vienna; therefore, assuming the 1885 catalogue to be correct, the sonata which belonged to Miss Plowden is doubtless Op. 30, No. 3, in G. Whether it formed the 'Six leaves of music' in Beethoven's autograph sold at Stumpff's sale (Lot 45* referred to above) we are unable to say.

Church and Organ Music.

DR. S. S. WESLEY ON THE COMPASS AND TUNING OF THE ORGAN.

Dr. S. S. Wesley, one of the most strenuous and persistent of opponents to the C compass of the organ and equal temperament, had the courage of his convictions. When the famous organ, built by Father Willis, in St. George's Hall, Liverpool, was contemplated in 1851, the Corporation of Liverpool engaged Dr. Wesley as their chief professional adviser in the planning of the instrument. Wesley urged that both manuals and pedals should be of the G compass. Father Willis gave in to him in regard to the manuals, but he said 'unless you have the pedal compass to C I shall absolutely decline to build the organ.' This was agreed to, but after Wesley's death the manuals were altered to the C compass.

When the question arose for the building of an organ in Leeds Town Hall, in 1857, much correspondence, relevant and otherwise, took place on the subject in the Leeds newspapers. A Mr. William Lyndon Smith wrote a letter to the Leeds Mercury to the following effect:

> There is a strong feeling amongst musical men, both in Liverpool and Manchester, that the employment of professional men in the construction of organs is not only perfectly unnecessary but undesirable; in fact, that their interference in such matters may be looked upon as little less than an impertinent reflection upon the efficiency of the organ-builder. And indeed, most professional men are too careful of their reputation and honour to compromise themselves by interfering where their motives are so liable to misconstruction.—(Leeds Mercury, November 15, 1856; revised version of letter in the issue of November 18.)

Wesley answered this letter of Mr. Smith—'who may, or may not be a very important person,' he said—in a long communication which he addressed to a Leeds friend, who inserted it in the Leeds Intelligencer (now the Yorkshire Post) of February 7, 1857. The following extracts from Wesley's letter will be read with interest:

> I will not enlarge upon the desirableness of securing the first professional advice whenever any considerable amount of public money is spent upon an organ. In my opinion, a bad musical instrument is good for nothing, and a first-rate one is cheap at double its cost price.

. . . .

> So far am I from thinking the services of a really eminent professor undesirable, I would claim the most extensive acquirements on the part of one called upon to advise in so important a matter as that of providing a large public hall with an organ, suitable for all the various uses to which it may be applied, amongst which I consider the accompaniment of vocal music will be the most frequent; hence, the arrangement of the qualities of tone and manual compass by a professor seems indispensable; for it is an axiom amongst great singers that none can accompany well unless they have themselves been public singers. The accompaniment of great singers on an organ, in public, is a task which requires very great taste and judgment, and the organist should have his qualities of tone, and manual compass, carefully arranged for the purpose. If singers are correct, and I think they are, and I can form some opinion on the point, having, when a boy, been a public singer myself, it follows that the vocal element must appear among the qualifications required of the person engaged in arranging the plan of a large concert-hall organ, and I do not hesitate to say that such an one would require things in an organ which most organ-builders would pronounce unnecessary. But the accompaniment of solo singers is not everything. All the great works wherein voices and instruments are combined—as in oratorios, operas, &c.—have to be considered in the arrangement of such an instrument. To say that an organ-builder possesses all requisite knowledge would be wrong, for it is the duly > educated and experienced professor who alone can possess it. The mere organist or organ-builder would most probably design his organ for organ performance exclusively.

> At Liverpool [St. George's Hall] I had to reflect on what were all the various uses to which a truly grand organ might, in the progress of time, be applied.
> I considered that Liverpool might desire to have a Handel or Mozart at their organ, who should compose oratorios, and assemble the vast choral force of Lancashire for their performance, and I wished the instrument to be efficient for the accompaniment of every vocal effect which could possibly occur in that building; for that of a single voice, a quartet, a semi-chorus, or chorus; for a body of vocalists filling the hall, or for maintaining its dignity as an organ when joined both with these and the largest orchestral force ever to be there assembled.
> For this species of requirement I consider the CC compass to be quite improper, and that our established, extended, English compass, GG, is indispensable. FF is better. I declare that, for the accompaniment of voices, the limited CC manual is so inefficient that almost every passage the player attempts in octaves with his left hand has to be transposed; to be constantly buzzing with pedal scales would be intolerable. Even in the music of public worship at a cathedral this deficiency is serious, and how much more important are the five lower semitones where an organist has to play through an oratorio, publicly, on his instrument. Organists have been led into the silent admission of this deplorable curtailment of our noble English compass from fear of not being viewed as pedal players; but with how little reason. With two octaves and a-half of pedals to a GG keyboard we need not transpose Bach's organ music. In the effort to introduce the CC compass Bach's name has been employed unfairly. Bach, of course, wrote for the organ of his country as he found it. An organ it is, well adapted for the accompaniment of congregational psalmody and for other true organ purposes, but, as regards compass, by no means so efficient for modern uses as that one—GG—which until very recently was all but invariable in England.
> An anonymous writer in a Manchester paper, long since, of whom I have hitherto taken no notice, terms the GG compass 'a crotchet which entails a vast amount of additional expense without one atom of advantage, but with positive injury to the general completeness and efficiency of the instrument.' Truly, beyond this, the folly of fashion cannot go. Until lately, the limited CC compass did not exist in England, or only in a small chamber organ. Can my adhering to the established compass of this country be termed, with propriety, 'a crotchet,' when that compass is greater and infinitely more important than the limited one of recent adoption, the whole of which is included in the former. The CC compass is the 'crotchet,' and the value of the five discarded semitones is enormous. There is no waste of funds in taking the manuals to GG. It is in taking the pedal organ below GGG or FFF that unnecessary expense is incurred: or, at least, it must ordinarily be viewed as an outlay of but questionable advantage. . . . . What most small church organs get in exchange for these valuable notes [the five displaced semitones] is something like a flute stop or a trumpery Bourdon. I have seen what Dr. Rimbault and Mr. Hopkins say in their valuable work on this subject, and, although I think their book deserves to be placed in every musician's hands, I cannot agree with all I find on more subjects than one. The illustrations of their view of this matter appear to be one-sided and open to complete refutation.
> From causes to which I need not refer, it happened that the Liverpool organ plan was referred, by the authorities, to several professors for opinions. These were: Professor Walmisley (alas! he has left us), Mr. Turle, of Westminster, and Mr. Hopkins, of the Temple. Mr. Vincent Novello, at my own request, expressed an opinion also. These gentlemen were unanimous in recommending CCC manuals: that is seven semitones lower than GG, and one whole octave below the old CC keyboard, Mr. Novello being of opinion that anything less than CCC manuals, for so grand an occasion would be quite unsatisfactory. . . .
> I have felt it necessary to be thus prolix on the question of 'compass,' although Mr. W. L. Smith has not given us his views. I now again turn to this gentleman. He says: 'Great praise is due to Messrs. Willis for the able manner in which they have remedied the faults of an imperfect and unsuitable specification, and the disagreeable effect consequent on the adoption of the system of unequal temperament. Had the organ been intended for a cathedral, perhaps the design, though still faulty, might have been appropriate, but the instrument being required exclusively for secular purposes a different arrangement of detail was desirable.' Then follows an anathema against 'professional advice,' which comes in like one of the nonsense burdens to an old song, for instance:
> Adam was the first man alive,
> Niggins—niggins—ads niggins.
> Now I really do not understand this allusion to cathedral and secular purposes. Mr. W. L. Smith's criticism is in no respect original, and the sources, whence he derives it, all point to the German church organ as the right model. The Liverpool plan being different, and having GG manuals, I am quite at a loss to guess his meaning. No matter, 'Where ignorance is bliss,' &c.
> However, the effort to make it appear, concerning equal temperament, that I had compelled the builder of the organ to take a course opposite to his inclination and judgment, I venture to pronounce inexcusable, because Mr. W. L. Smith might have easily ascertained that Mr. Willis had never at any time thought proper to tune his organs by what is called equal temperament. It is quite in his power thus to have tuned them had he been so disposed; but he never tuned one so, and, since the completion of the Liverpool organ, he has only tuned one instrument that way, i.e., the organ at Carlisle Cathedral, and this was done at the desire of the organist who designed the instrument. Notwithstanding the influence the work of Messrs. Hopkins and Rimbault may have in the organ-playing world, I hesitate not to express my opinion that equal temperament will not do for organs. This question was settled at least three generations ago, and will remain settled until Dame Nature is pleased to alter her fundamental laws.
> I have heard the French organs and also Mr. Hill's fine instrument in Leicester Square, and I consider these organs greatly injured by the tuning, as all organs must be by having nothing in bearable tune. At Liverpool Mr. Willis thought it proper to give the two systems of tuning a formal trial, and had stops tuned to both principles, and to these we listened carefully before we would decide either way. The trial—I have no reason to suppose it could be anything but a fair one—was most convincing as to the great error of the equal temperament system; so much so, that upon the strength of it I think we may fairly question the accuracy of any man's ear who can endure equal temperament in the tuning of an organ. I quite agree that, in certain keys, it is impossible to use an organ in connection with the orchestra. Whoever would so use it? But it is, in my opinion, quite wrong to tune any organ by equal temperament because it had, in addition to other uses, to be employed occasionally with the orchestra.

Mr. Lyndon Smith replied to Wesley's diffusive communication in a brief letter which contained the following parting shot:

> I have the authority of the builder who had the management of the Leeds Parish Church organ at the time Dr. Wesley officiated there, to state that the dust on the half-dozen lowest keys on the GG manuals remained undisturbed for months, clearly proving that those parts of the keyboards were almost altogether in disuse as regards the fingers.

THE ARTICLE 'PSALTER' IN GROVE'S DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS (NEW EDITION).

Dr. Henry Watson, of Manchester, writes: 'I should like, with your permission, to amplify the corrections, &c., in the above article suggested by Mr. William Cowan in your July issue, p. 455.

'On p. 837, col. 2 of vol. iii. in the new "Grove" it is stated, in reference to the Sternhold and Hopkins Psalter:

> As in the edition of 1560, so also in 1561, 1564, and again in 1577 and 1581, there was published An Introduction to Learn to Sing, consisting of the scale and a few elementary rules, for the benefit of the ignorant. The edition of 1607 contained a more elaborate system of rules, and had the sol-fa joined to every note of the tunes throughout the book; but this was not repeated, nor was any further attempt made, in this work, to teach music.

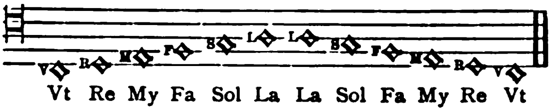
'Now, as proving that the above paragraph needs correction, I have in my possession the following editions (with music) of Sternhold and Hopkins, to which, after the dates, I have added their contents as regards "Sol-fa letters" and "Instructions":

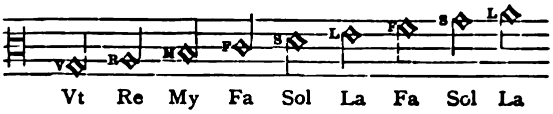
1573	Sol-fa letters to each note	and Instructions.
1583	do.	do.
1584	do.	do.
1588	do.	do.
1590	do.	do.
1591	No Letters:	no Instructions.
1594	With Letters	and Instructions.
1595	do.	do.
1598	do.	do.
1603	do.	do.
1607	do.	do.
1608	Letters:	no Instructions.
1622	do.	do.
1629	With Letters	and Instructions.
1630	do.	do.
1631	do.	do.
1638	No Letters:	no Instructions.
1639	No Letters,	but with Instructions.
1641	No Letters:	no Instructions.

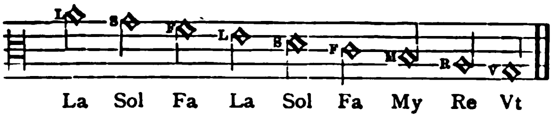
'By the word "Instructions" I do not mean the Rudiments which appear in the "unique" first edition, but an address thus set forth:

To the Reader.

Thou shalt vnderstand (gentle Reader) that I haue (for the helpe of those that are desirous to learne to sing) caused a new print of Note to be made with letters to be ioyned to euerie Note. Whereby thou maiest know, how to call euerie note by his right name, so that with a very little diligence (as thou art taught in the introduction printed heeretofore in the Psalmes) thou mayest the more easilie by the vewing of these letters, come to the knowledge of perfect Solefayeng: Whereby thou mayest sing the psalmes the more speedilie and easilie: The letters be these V for Vt, R for Re, M for My, F for Fa, S for Sol, L for La. Thus where you see any letter ioyned by the note, you may easilie call him by his right name, as by these two examples you may the better perceiue.







Thus I commit thee vnto him that liueth for euer, who grant that we sing with our harts vnto the glorie of his holy name. Amen.'

[In this connection the valuable paper 'On the Musical Introductions found in certain Metrical Psalters,' read by Sir John Stainer before the Musical Association on November 13, 1900, may be consulted. (Proceedings of the Musical Association, vol. xxvii., 1900-1901.)—Ed. M. T.]

A GAUNTLETT RECITAL.

Dr. Gauntlett is well known by his hymn-tunes, but it should not be forgotten that he was a sturdy champion for the introduction into England of the C compass of the organ. During some recent research, in the Morning Post of 1844 we came upon a long account of an organ recital given by Gauntlett at Messrs. Hill's organ factory, on April 29, 1844, upon an instrument built by that firm for St. John's Church, Calcutta. The account refers to some 'newly-invented stops' contained in the instrument, their names being octave clarion, viol di gambe, suave flute, flageolet, piccolo, cornopean, decima quint, oboe flute, wald flute, salcional, and posaune 'designed by Dr. Gauntlett.' The powers of this Calcutta organ were displayed by Dr Gauntlett in the following selection of music:

PART I.

Concerto, G major	Handel.
Selection from Der Freischütz	Weber.
Mermaid Song	Weber.
Air, Il mio tesoro	Mozart.
Nightingale Chorus	Handel.
Chorus, Hallelujah!	Handel.

PART II.

Grand Fugue	J. S. Bach.
Air, Non più andrai	Mozart.
Duett, La ci darem	Mozart.
Air, Rose softly blooming	Spohr.
Air, Oh! Araby, dear Araby	Weber.
Chorus, The Lord shall reign	Handel.
Andante movement	Handel.
Overture, Euryanthe	Weber.

It is interesting to compare the above selection with an organ-recital programme of the present day. From the subjoined account of the performance it will be seen that an additional Bach Fugue was played, by special request, 'to display the pedal power' of the new instrument:

The concerto was performed on eight different kinds of flutes, as was the andante on the flute. The drinking song of Weber was played on the posaune, and Weber's 'Mermaid Song' on the violoncello stop. 'Il mio tesoro' was heard from the bassoon stop. In the Hallelujah chorus a curious circumstance occurred. Dr. Gauntlett played it first just as if it were on the old English organ, and then with the improved plan. The effect was not to be mistaken. At the desire of Sir Griffin Wilson, he added to the first part one of Bach's fugues to display the pedal power. The 'Non più andrai,' on the posaune, obtained considerable applause, as also Spohr's charming air (stolen, by the way, from Mozart's 'Voi che sapete') on the claribel stop. The 'Araby' had a delicious effect on the viol di gambe and the suale (sic) flute. 'The Lord shall reign,' on all the reed stops, was magnificent. Altogether, independently of the great attributes of the organ, a great treat was afforded by the superb playing of Dr. Gauntlett. He has rarely been heard in such force, and, as usual, his pedal playing was the wonder of the amateurs.

At the annual meeting of the Royal College of Organists—held at the College on July 30, Sir Walter Parratt, the President, in the chair—the resignation of Mr. John Norbury, the treasurer, on the ground of ill-health, was regretfully accepted, and Dr. Warwick Jordan was elected to succeed him. The report stated that the new members reached a record number, and that the lectures delivered in the leading provincial centres had been one of the special features of the year's work.

Mr. Alderman John Miles, J.P., has been the gratified recipient of a testimonial in acknowledgment of his faithful services as organist and choirmaster of Deane Parish Church, Bolton, Lancashire, during the long period of forty-three years. The gift consisted of three elegant solid silver fruit dishes, bearing the following inscription: 'Presented to Alderman John Miles, J.P., organist and choirmaster of Deane Parish Church, 1864-1907, by the past and present members of the choir, and a few old friends. July 27, 1907.'

Mr. Arthur Mason, who has held the organistship of Sydney Town Hall since 1901, is leaving Australia in order to take up an appointment in London. As organist of St. James's Church, Sydney, Mr. Mason has done excellent work during the past ten years, having conducted—in the church, with full band and augmented chorus—performances of the 'Messiah,' 'Hymn of Praise,' and Brahms's 'Requiem,' the last-named work for the first time in the colony.

Dr. W. G. Price, formerly of Belfast, continues to give recitals on Saturday evenings on the organ in Melbourne Town Hall with much acceptance. It speaks well for the excellence of Dr. Price's performances that, after a year's continuous recitals, the audiences are steadily improving and that the performances are attracting more and more attention.

At St. Thomas's Church, Sunderland, the music sung at the services on 'Choir Sunday,' July 21, included the anthems 'Ascribe unto the Lord' (Travers) and 'Blessing, glory, wisdom, and thanks' (Bach), in addition, at the afternoon service, to a selection from Haydn's 'Creation.' Mr. Percy C. Watson is the organist and choirmaster of the church.

MR. J. W. DAVISON AT THE GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL SIXTY YEARS AGO.

The Gloucester Musical Festival, to be held in the second week of this month, will, as heretofore, act as a lodestone to the musical critics of various London and provincial newspapers. In this connection it may not be without interest to know how Mr. J. W. Davison discharged his duties at Gloucester exactly sixty years ago. The great critic had been paying his first visit to Paris—'the ancient, celebrated, and never-enough-to-be extolled city of Paris,' to use his own words—whence he made his way to the city on the banks of the Severn. His account of the festival is contained in a series of letters which appeared in the Musical World, of which his friend, Michael Desmond Ryan, was the sub-editor. The first letter, dated 'Gloucester, Friday, Sept. 24th, 1847,' begins thus:

Dear Ryan,—The journey from Paris to Gloucester involves a distance of between three and four hundred miles. I left Paris on Sunday morning, and (after sleeping on Sunday night at Boulogne) arrived here on Tuesday morning, in the middle of the night—to employ an Irishism—by the mail train from London. You will say I am a great amateur of festivals to travel such a long way for the sake of assisting at one, and to leave such a city of delights as Paris for an out-of-the-way corner of the world like this very ancient and venerable city of Gloucester—and in such stormy weather. But 'business before pleasure' is an axiom from which I have so often swerved, that the novelty of sticking to it, for once in a way, amuses me. And I have not been ill repaid for my trouble, since I have listened once more to Elijah, the great masterpiece of modern music and exceedingly well rendered by the way.

After giving details of his journey from Paris to Gloucester, viâ London, 'J. W. D.' continues:

Well—at Gloucester, arriving in the middle of the night, I was glad to get a bed wherever I could find one; and so it was my fate to pitch upon the dearest inn in the city—The Bell—where, in company with Lord Ellenborough, Sir Edward Codrington, and a Bishop, I have the honour to pay five shillings a night for an exceedingly small bed-room, where albeit 'The Bell' is the name of the inn, no bell is to be found to ring for the chambermaid, or 'boots,' in case of need. Never mind—let that pass.

The opening service of the festival failed to make a good impression on the genial journalist. He writes—on Tuesday morning:

Rain! rain!! rain!!! Such a day for a festival! The Cathedral not half full—gloom issuing from the hearts of the company, and hanging in the atmosphere like a pall—the orchestra and chorus looking damp and miserable—and Tom Cooke as dull as he is humorous in fine weather. The service was read by a not very impressive speaker, and the echos [!] were uttered by a not very impressive clerk. The congregation [? choir], like the clergyman and his assistant, chaunted dolefully out of tune and capriciously out of measure; while the congregation strove lustily (but vainly) to outdo them in these particulars.

The responses were anybody's—that is, nobody's of any consequence; and the 'Venite cantiamus' ('Come let us sing'), a monotonous section of a phrase, was repeated ad perpetuum and without mercy. At length Handel's sublime 'Te Deum' (the Dettingen) rose from the prevalent dulness, like a giant from a long sleep, and music spoke, as a God, in thunder.

The two anthems which followed the Te Deum found no favour in the eyes (or the ears) of Mr. Davison. 'Dr. Boyce's anthem, "Blessed is he," is a preposterously dry and uninteresting effusion,' he writes, and in spite of all that was done to secure a good interpretation—including 'the shouting of the choir'—the anthem 'fairly died of its own dulness.' 'The coronation anthem of Attwood, "I was glad," is more noisy and brilliant, but not much better as a composition, and, well as it was interpreted, produced no effect. "I was glad" when it was over.'

In the evening a concert was held in the Shire Hall—'a building of no note or character'—when Rain still prevailed, and as pedestrianism was impossible, I, and a comrade of the press, were supplied with a coach to carry us. The coach was lined with striped dimity, for which the sum of three-shillings was charged in the bill, albeit the distance from the 'Bell' to the Shire Hall is scarcely more than the third of a furlong.

The programme—'much too long, and in some particulars dull'—opened with Mendelssohn's 'First Walpurgis Night', and included Sterndale Bennett's overture to the 'Naïads,' due to 'the repeated and urgent suggestions of a gentleman resident in Gloucester, who takes great interest in the festival and is noted for his musical enthusiasm.' Mr. Davison's comments on the concert do not call for quotation, except that he uttered a just protest against the shortcomings of some of the orchestral players: 'What a pity,' he says, 'that the competent artists should have been fettered by the incapacity of incompetent companions.' The letter concludes thus :

> Finally, the immortal John Parry, shaker of sides, was received uproariously, was in uproarious humour, and was uproariously encored in both his ingenious pasticcios.* Further than this I have only to say, that Mr. Grantley Berkeley, who abuses his brother, was in the room ; that the programme was twice too long ; that more than half the company remained for a ball, to accommodate which the benches were cleared away directly after the concert ; that I did not stay for the ball, but rode home, with my companion of the press, in the coach lined with striped dimity, fare 3*s.* ; and that I slept as sound as could be expected under the circumstances.
> As I am presently going up to the top of the tower of the Gloucester Cathedral, I must defer writing you the other particulars of the festival until next week. Meanwhile, be thankful for what you have got, and hope for the sequel in due time, from yours very faithfully, D.

The second letter—dated 'Gloucester, Sunday, Sept. 26th, 1846'—thus began :

> Dear Ryan,—My last was cut short by the anticipation of an immediate ascent to the top of Gloucester Cathedral. But I did not go, and might have got to the end of my letter without interruption. The reason of my non-ascent I have forgotten. Therefore, without further preface, let me pursue the main subject of the present communication—the Festival.
> To begin at the end—there has not been for many years a meeting which has given so much satisfaction and proved so light a burden on the shoulders of the stewards, who do not like paying through the nose, gentlemen though they be. But to return to the beginning—I have already furnished you with an account of the first day's proceedings, and the following are the remaining contents of my common-place book :
> Wednesday.—The clouds are gone to the hills ; the sun rides alone in the sky ; birds are singing, insects buzzing, bells chiming, carriages rolling ; the old city is alive again, and the aspect of things proclaims a joyous Festival. It is strange—but I have remarked, since 1836, in the month of May, when Paulus was first performed, at the triennial Rhenish Festival, held that year in Dusseldorf—that the name of Mendelssohn is sure to bring fine weather. I cannot recall, during eleven years, any musical event in which Mendelssohn has been concerned, without the memory of blue sky and sunshine spontaneously accompanying the recollection. It will seem odd, but it is nevertheless true, and I have taken such particular note of it that I cannot be mistaken. The Elijah, this morning, the grand event of the Festival, is another instance to add to my collection. You will say, the oratorio opens with a prophecy that there shall be neither rain nor dew 'for these years' ; but this is merely punning upon the circumstance, and is unworthy of you. Certain it is, however, that the sky, which yesterday was all brown, to-day is all blue, and I have a superstitious credence that Mendelssohn's Elias is the real cause of the change.

J. W. D. then gives a brief account of the rendering of the oratorio, from which one sentence may be quoted : 'The organ, in the hands of Mr. Townsend Smith, was what Mendelssohn intended :—a medium for strengthening the harmony and varying the instrumentation, not a coarse obtrusive feature, as it has been made elsewhere.' The second evening concert began with Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, whereupon Madame Alboni came upon the scene, to whom 'J. W. D.' humorously refers in a study of contrasts :

> After the last echo of Mendelssohn's faëry music had died away, Alboni, the gorgeous Alboni, with her portly frame and winning smile, came forward and sang 'Una voce poco fa,' after her own peculiar fashion, and at once produced an impression which has had no parallel in the musical annals of Gloucester.

Weber's 'tremendous Euryanthe overture, capitally played,' began the second part, and > Then once more the voice of Alboni pealed through the building, until it was alive with pulsatory vibrations, that made the atmosphere quiver, as with delight at being thus deliciously oppressed. The air was 'Il segreto,' the well-known bacchanalian from Lucrezia. To describe the sensation and the triple encore demands a pen more used to apostrophe than mine, which I lay down in despair. It was a rare treat, however, to behold the crowd, moved as the sea by tempestuous winds, roar and roar again with convulsions of satisfaction.

Later on in his letter 'J. W. D' refers to Alboni's 'oily tones.'

The hotch-potch programme performed in the cathedral on the Thursday morning did not please the redoubtable critic, who rightly said 'this motley classification of good and indifferent music produced an universal effect of ennui . . . . pot pourris are going rapidly out of fashion, and strong hopes may be entertained of their ultimate abolishment, never to be revived again, by which music will be an immense gainer.'

At the third evening concert John Parry again roused the enthusiasm of the audience in a 'new song' entitled 'Miss Harriet and her governess ; or, a young lady's thoughts on education' ; but 'the only great piece attempted, Beethoven's Symphony in B flat, was shorn of the two last movements [!], and what was given was in a style that may be called slovenly, with strict adherence to truth.' On the last day the Messiah was performed. 'It is unnecessary to say more about this undying work,' records Mr. Davison, 'which every musician and amateur knows by heart or ought to know.' He then goes on to remark :

> In the evening there was another ball at the Shire Hall, which was not so well patronised (although by no means ill-patronised) as was anticipated. I amused myself by looking at the dancers for an hour or two—and then for an hour or two more—and eventually got to bed at five in the morning, and rose in time to miss the train for London by which I had calculated on going. And so I took a solitary walk in the country instead, and was enchanted with my excursion—for Gloucestershire is really beautiful and romantic.

Mr. Davison's second and last letter, describing the Gloucester Musical Festival of sixty years ago concluded with these words :

> On the whole I have spent a very agreeable week at Gloucester, which I am not sorry to have visited, if only for the sake of the Cathedral, which is one of the finest in the world, and is a glory to the city of which it constitutes the almost solitary monument. For the present, adieu. You will probably hear from me again next week.—Yours as ever, D.
> P.S.—If you want a list of the company that has attended the Festival, you will find it in The Times, from Lord Ellenborough down to Mr. Grantley Berkeley, who was brilliantly conspicuous at the evening concerts, and wore his shirt collar nello stilo Byrono. He is a well-looking man, considering his letters and speeches.

The reader may be disposed to ask 'Who was this "Mr. Grantley Berkeley" that attracted the attention of Mr. Davison?' This gentleman was the Hon. George Charles Grantley Fitzhardinge Berkeley (1800-1881), sixth son of the fifth Earl of Berkeley. He wrote a romance entitled 'Berkeley Castle,' which, in 1836, was savagely reviewed in Fraser's Magazine. Berkeley, in consequence, publicly assaulted Mr. Fraser, the publisher—who brought an action against him and obtained damages—and the aggrieved author fought a duel with Dr. Maginn, the writer of the review, who, by-the-way, was the original of Thackeray's 'Captain Shandon.' As M.P. for West Gloucestershire from 1832 to 1852, the Hon. Grantley Berkeley has the best claim to fame in that he proposed (in 1836) and obtained (in 1841) the admission of ladies to the gallery of the House of Commons.

* These pasticcios were: Historical romance, 'Fayre Rosamunde,' and a song entitled 'Matrimony.'

SIR HUBERT PARRY'S NEW WORK FOR THE CARDIFF MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

As in other of his choral works, Sir Hubert Parry is his own librettist in this his latest composition, written specially for the Cardiff Musical Festival to be held at the end of this month. Entitled 'The vision of life,' it is a symphonic poem for soprano and bass soli, chorus and orchestra. In writing the words of this symphonic poem the composer has had in his mind the ceaseless march of humanity from the earliest traces of life in conditions of awful helplessness, through various great issues up to our own time, and passing onward to the dimmest and most distant future. In spite of appearances to the contrary, Sir Hubert strongly believes that humanity is always keeping a firm hold on the undying aspirations after good, and progressing slowly, very slowly perhaps, towards the attainment of general well-being. The opening lines will serve to give a sample of the composer's conception of the ceaseless march of humanity—a splendid subject for musical treatment:

> From utmost distance of the dreams of thought,
> The long procession comes;
> Shadows that follow shadows.
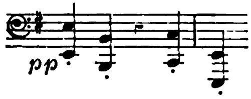
> Changeless in change, tireless in weary wandering,
> Death strews the path, yet the living ever come!
> Millions on millions!

Here it may be stated that 'The Dreamer' is personated by a bass soloist, suggestive of one of those 'old men who dreamed dreams,' that the music of 'The Spirit of the Vision'—much more of an optimist than 'The Dreamer'—is assigned to the soprano soloist, and that 'The Voices' of the poem are naturally those of the chorus.

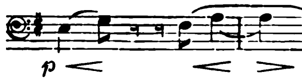
The thematic material is restricted to a few musical subjects, which represent the essential ideas of the poem, and undergo transformations as it proceeds. Thus the first hesitating and uncertain pulsations of life are portrayed in what may be called the Subject of Destiny:

No. 1.



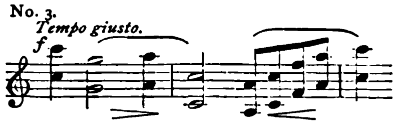
and conjoined with it is the motiv suggesting the ceaseless impulse to rise to a better outlook:

No. 2.



These two subjects pervade the whole work in a great variety of forms. Ex. 1 passes at the beginning into a sort of motiv of the wandering; No. 2, passing through many modifications, ultimately becomes the motiv of human joy and content; by which the composer means that mankind so ultimately realize the meaning of destiny that it becomes a source of happiness instead of dread. In this sense it becomes, in the latter part of the work, the prominent motiv in the treble:

No. 3.



and when the travellers of life's journey are imagined to look back, they praise the good of times long past in a kind of inversion of it:

No. 4. ALTOS & BASSES in Octaves.

All this is developed with that intellectual strength and masterly musicianship which are always associated with the creative work of Sir Hubert Parry. An instance of his melodic stability is the following fine tune:

No. 5. TENORS AND BASSES in Unison.

f
To us on - ly . . is the truth known
Più mosso, Allegro feroce.
f
ff
. . Ours . . the word . . that bringeth safe - ty.

Other passages might be quoted to prove how intimately the music reflects the words of a really fine poem on a great subject—one which sets its seal of the 'general well-being' in the final choral outburst:

> We sing the joy of winning the way
> To fellowship boundless and frank as the sea,
> To all goodwill!—To all the light of day!
> And hearts that beat high in a world of the free!

Reviews.

Violoncello Method. By Carl Fuchs.
[Schott & Co.]

This important work, by the distinguished violoncellist of the Hallé Orchestra and Professor of the violoncello at the Royal Manchester College of Music, is as complete a guide to violoncello-playing as could well be desired. Attention is first arrested by the numerous excellent photographs, showing the correct way of holding the instrument and bow, and of placing the left hand in its various positions. Goethe's saying 'Who gives much will give something to many' is quoted as a reason for presenting so many of these illustrations, and there is no question that they will prove valuable to all who adopt the book. Learning by 'interval playing' being now generally accepted as the best method for a beginner on a stringed instrument, the author naturally starts with identical intervals on each string, the advantage of a thorough acquaintance with perfect fifths being further demonstrated by a complete table of those which lie opposite one another on the four strings. A wise suggestion is given at the beginning to first play the notes pizzicato ; by this means better attention can be given to intonation and the correct placing of the fingers. Care has been taken thoroughly to describe each new point of technique, the student being introduced to a fresh lesson with examples in the simplest form. Concise and, on the whole, explicit explanations of the rudiments of music are given as occasion arises. Exception may, however, be taken to the definitions of intervals. It is surely unnecessarily confusing to a beginner to describe the perfect fifth as having three-and-a-half tones, and the diminished fifth as having two whole-tones and two half-tones, and so on.

In order to facilitate the learning of positions the excellent plan is adopted of letting the pupil become familiar with the sound of a passage in a position he knows before allowing him to play it in a new position, so that his ear affords him as much help as possible. Part II. deals principally with varieties of bowings, the treble and tenor clefs, &c., and leads the student to the seventh position. Part III. treats mostly of the thumb positions, with numerous advanced examples of bowing and finger technics. In conclusion, a word of praise is due to Mr. Edward Isaacs for the pianoforte accompaniments he has supplied to the pieces and principal studies. They are included as supplements to each part, and will be of great value in teaching intonation, rhythm, expression, and time. They have the advantages of directness and simplicity.

Strike, thou hour so long expected. Cantata for contralto solo. Composed by J. S. Bach.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The term cantata as applied to this composition must be understood in its original significance of a 'song,' and one moreover in the form made familiar by Handel's airs in his oratorios. The music is extremely dignified, as befits the words, which express the Christian's hope of a bright and serene future life. The central section, beginning 'Come, ye angels, to my side,' is perhaps the most attractive portion, and provides a very effective contrast to its context. Several phrases are of a kind to rejoice the heart of a contralto, and the song may be warmly recommended to singers at church organ recitals.

Jamaican song and story. Collected and edited by Walter Jekyll. [David Nutt, for the Folk-Lore Society.]

Praise, and that unstinted, must be given to Mr. Walter Jekyll for the results of his industry in the compilation of this interesting and often amusing book. He has here gathered together a delightful collection of Annancy stories, digging songs, ring tunes, and dancing tunes. These he has taken down from the mouths of the men and boys in his employ, in the district of the Port Royal Mountains behind Kingston. 'The book as a whole,' he says, 'is a tribute to my love for Jamaica and its dusky inhabitants, with their winning ways and their many good qualities, among which is to be reckoned that supreme virture, cheerfulness.' Would that some of our young native composers were thus Jamaicanized !

The Annancy stories, all musically illustrated, number 88 ; the ring tunes, 28 ; and the dancing tunes, 80, making a total of 196 negro melodies. Mr. Jekyll tells us with what delight the Jamaican darkies listen to the Annancy stories, how 'they fling themselves on the ground and wriggle in convulsions of merriment.' It is quite possible that their hilarity is intensified in that Annancy is a legendary being whose chief characteristic is trickery !

With regard to the tunes sung by these merry, dusky songsters, Mr. Jekyll says, 'They gain a peculiar and almost indescribable lilt from a peculiarity in the time-organization of the negro. If you ask him to beat the time with his foot, he does it perfectly regularly, but just where the white man does not do it. We beat with the time ; he beats against it. His first beat in the bar will be exactly midway between our first and second beats. The effect of this peculiarity in their singing is, that there is commonly a feeling of syncopation about it.' No doubt.

To what extent do the melodies which have been so carefully noted down by Mr. Jekyll represent genuine negro folk-songs? This question is answered by Miss Lucy Broadwood, a capable expert on this subject, who contributes a short but valuable appendix to the book. She says : 'By far the greater part of these Jamaican tunes and song-words seem to be reminiscences, or imitations, of European sailors' "chanties" of the modern class, or of trivial British nursery-jingles adapted, as all such jingles become adapted.' This opinion is confirmed by Mr. C. S. Myers, who also contributes an interesting appendix on 'Traces of African melody in Jamaica.' He says : 'I quite agree with Miss Broadwood that the majority of the songs are of European origin. The negroes have learnt them from hearing sailors' chanties or they have adopted hymn-tunes.' But, as he truly says, 'adoption always involves adaptation. A song is modified to suit the current canons of taste.' He gives two instances from Mr. Jekyll's book : (1) 'Home, sweet home' joined to a hymn-tune he (Mr. Myers) heard in the Torres Straits, and (2) 'The British Grenadiers,' these two melodies being respectively Nos. 50 and 139 in the volume under notice.

If then 'Jamaican song and story' does not furnish us with the real, unadulterated article of negro folk-song—even supposing our notation was capable of expressing it—a warm welcome is extended to this book. It provides much information set forth in a pleasant way, and its perusal will give keen enjoyment to those, and they should be many, who turn to its attractive pages. Mr. Jekyll is to be warmly congratulated on the success of his labour of love.

NEW PART-SONGS FOR MIXED VOICES.

Allen-a-Dale. Words by Sir Walter Scott. Music by John B. McEwen.
The Brownies. English words by W. G. Rothery. Music by Willy von Moellendorf.
In the garden. Words by Jetty Vogel. Music by C. Lee Williams.
Dry those fair, those crystal eyes. Words by Henry King. Music by John E. West.
The shepherd's song. By Herbert W. Wareing.
Weep you no more, sad fountains. Words anonymous. Music by Bernard Johnson.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

All the world knows that Allen-a-Dale was scarcely a desirable son-in-law, and the farmer and his good wife were quite justified when 'they lifted the latch and bade him begone' on his asking for their daughter; but 'he had laughed at the lass with his bonny black eye,' and there was an end on't, or rather a beginning for her, since 'she fled to the forest to hear a love tale' from Allen-a-Dale. Mr. McEwen's musicianship is apparent in all that comes from his pen, and he has caught most happily the robust and romantic spirit of Sir Walter Scott's poem. The result is a part-song that will interest its singers and listeners—that is if the singers are as alert as Allen-a-Dale. This part-song forms one of the extra supplements to our present issue.

'The Brownies' are an historical people, but hitherto this particular troop has been confined to the Fatherland. According to their own account they 'Came from the forest, o'er meadows of snow,' but they are nevertheless a merry folk, much given to laugh 'ha ha' and 'he he,' likewise 'hi hi,' and their special delight is to bring by night at Christmastide presents to good little boys and girls. Wherefore this part-song should always be sung at that period of the year, which the music will certainly gladden.

A good deal can happen in a garden, but only an ardent lover could affirm that the 'Opening buds and blossoms say, sure my love hath passed this way.' Yet it is a pretty conceit, and Mr. Lee Williams's music is no less pretty.

Henry King, the author of the lines 'Dry those fair, those crystal eyes,' was during his life, from 1591 to 1669, the Bishop of Chichester, and, judging by this little poem, must have been held in kindly regard by the ladies. Love-making was apparently more of an art in the 17th century than now, and although the comparisons and similes are certainly exaggerated, there is a spirit of courtly deference that must have been peculiarly grateful to the gentler sex. Mr. West's music is thoroughly in accord with this permeating qualification, for it is diatonic in character and deftly suggests the period of the lines.

It need scarcely be said that the burden of 'The shepherd's song' is about a damsel. In this instance the lady has proved so fickle that her swain is led to express himself in exaggerative language, since he says 'For all your love was past and done two days before it was begun,' which is, according to Euclid, quod erat absurdum. But there is nothing absurd in Dr. Wareing's music. On the contrary, it is charming in its clever union of all new methods; moreover the strains are dainty, particularly in the final cadence.

'Weep you no more, sad fountains,' was composed by Mr. Bernard Johnson for the recent Co-operative Festival at the Crystal Palace. The music, while not presenting special difficulties, is yet of a nature that shows confidence in the considerable musical ability of the singers for whom it was written. The style is chromatic, and the parts possess much independence; the cadences call for great delicacy of treatment, with, however, the pleasing results of richness of harmony and sustained musical interest.

The art of counterpoint and its application as a decorative principle. By C. H. Kitson, M.A., Mus.D.

[Oxford: The Clarendon Press.]

To the not inconsiderable number of treatises on counterpoint, Dr. Kitson adds yet another. He claims that one of the chief points of difference between his book and others that have preceded it is 'the derivation of the rules of Scholastic Counterpoint from the practice of Palestrina, whose works exhibit the Art of Counterpoint in its perfection, rather than from a study of text-books,' the many discrepancies between which are due to the fact that theory has been built upon theory, often mingled with personal prejudice, so that the orignal basis of the earlier treatises has been forgotten or perhaps ignored. Contrapuntally speaking, Dr. Kitson is a Palestrinaist. Under 'Combined counterpoint in three parts,' the author instances the 'Macfarren system' as 'not only inconsistent with practice, but imposes unnecessary limitations, and by so doing actually encourages a system of writing which is productive of far-reaching evil.' In giving a typical student's application of these rules he says: 'If such writing be the result of a study of Strict Counterpoint, the sooner it is given up the better.' And yet Macfarren, who was Professsor of Music at Cambridge University, used to be looked up to as a high authority on theory. The student may be led to remark, 'What does it matter if the doctors differ so long as I pass my exam.'

Leaving the controversial aspect of the question, Dr. Kitson's thoughtful and exhaustive treatise merits a warm welcome, more especially because of its value in 'the application of counterpoint as a decorative principle.' Here we leave the hard road of the 'historic species' and tread the verdant pastures of modernity. The workings of various papers set at examinations for degrees at Oxford and elsewhere will be found most useful to students, who will reap further benefit from a work which is so clearly and instructively written. The last chapter, 'Counterpoint on a chorale,' though short, adds to the value of the book.

NEW PART-SONGS FOR MALE VOICES.

Where lies the land? By Roland Rogers.
Let my voice ring out. By Charles H. Lloyd.
The traveller's farewell. By Laurent de Rillé.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The words of 'Where lies the land?' are by Arthur Hugh Clough, and may be said to be an allegory of life expressed in lines descriptive of a voyage. This is a subject which lends itself to musical treatment with peculiar grace, for the opening and closing question, 'Where lies the land to which the ship would go?' forms an admirable frame to the more realistic relation of the experiences on the ocean in calm and storm. Dr. Rogers's music, laid out for two tenors and two basses, is chiefly written in solid harmony with contrasted points of imitation. The harmonic scheme is admirable.

Dr. Lloyd's 'Let my voice ring out' is dedicated to Dr. A. H. Brewer and the Gloucester Orpheus Society, and is worthy of the distinction. The lines, by James Thomson, seem to be more suitable to the utterance of one man than many, for the sentence 'O my Life and Love, thank God for you!' suggest a honeymoon; but the music reflects the heartfelt gladness of the poem, and when well sung it would exert an exhilarating influence. The part-song, written for alto, tenor, and first and second basses, will be found easy to read.

'The traveller's farewell' is an English version by Paul England of the French soldiers' part-song 'Le depart des compagnons.' The music is designed for two tenors, baritone and bass, and comprises four sections, severally headed maestoso, in which comrades are exhorted to awake; a short allegretto that provides an effective introduction to an andante in which bouche fermée is used by all the voices except the first tenor; and a vigorous finale, allegro vivace, which brings a cleverly-written work of some importance in design to a martial conclusion.

The Rhythmic Conception of Music. By Margaret H. Glyn.
[Longmans, Green, & Co.]

Beethoven is reputed to have remarked: 'That mind alone whose every thought is rhythm can embody music, can comprehend its mysteries, its divine revelations.' This dictum is the text of the powerful essay which Miss Glyn contributes to the higher philosophy of the Art of music. She sets out to indicate the broad lines of a new theory of music based upon the principle of Rhythmic Unity, and in the course of her intricate argument she dives deep into recesses of the human soul to find the source of its musical springs. The investigation is alleged to prove that the rhythmic sense is primal, vital. The predominance of Time-outline over the other factors of music 'goes far to prove the theory of rhythmitonal [this is one of Miss Glyn's numerous new words] development, that it is rhythm that leads to tone-relations and not tone-relations that lead to rhythm.' Theorists generally have failed to give a true account of the nature of music, and they have never succeeded in reaching the point from which the composer started. Art conceptions are intuitive and spontaneously synthetic, but theorists are intellectual and analytic. It is an anomaly of musical education to train up composers in an ecclesiastical style that became a dead letter centuries ago. Readiness to accept traditional authority points to a degree of intellectual inertia which must form an obstacle to future development. Church music of the Middle Ages drifted into a wrong path, inasmuch as it was based upon intellectual calculation rather than upon inspiration. It is the outcome of the laboured conscious process of the intellect and therefore lacks grace, beauty and coherence, those outward tokens of the indwelling spirit. The jeremiad here gets shrill. In the composition of medieval music 'The eye played a far more important part than the ear. The notes were written down and afterwards there was the test of how they sounded.'

It is admitted that Palestrina created a living art out of the dry bones of pedantic formula, but this achievement and the contrapuntal system generally are but a cul de sac. The development of the Sonata form was a partial triumph of rhythm over counterpoint; but even here the form tended to a sterile restraint except where, as in the case of Beethoven and Schubert, overwhelming rhythmic genius imperiously moulded the material.

Miss Glyn has much to say about the relations of strict form to free form. The first makes for coherence and the second for variety and contrast. There must be some union of the two principles in a work of art, and the higher law is that the exact relation of the strict form shall be perceptible through the inexact relation. In a sentence not easy to understand, Miss Glyn remarks that strict form may be ousted by free form 'till at length only the irreducible minimum of strict form remains and even then the relative portion of space allotted to it will grow less and less.'

A chapter is devoted to the rhythmitonal idea which is defined as 'the sudden appearance in the mind of an auditory image, the image of a sequence of rhythmic tones. Of whatever process has led up to this sudden appearance the mind is unconscious. Nothing could be more different from the slow conscious process of thought. . . . The Idea presents a new combination in a degree that is possible to no other art. It is as though a poet should speak in words of his own creation. Words so formed could not be understood, but a new rhythmitonal combination is referred intuitively to the familiar standards of duration and pitch, and its relations are thus made directly perceptible. The most remarkable thing about the Idea is that it creates its unique impression simply by the re-arrangement of familiar material common to the whole art. Break up the Idea, and you find nothing to take the place of words in language, only rhythmic figures, intervals, and single notes which may correspond to the breaking up of a sentence into syllables and single letters. These are the mere elements of construction, no one of which by itself is capable of suggesting in the remotest degree the effect produced by the new combination. In what way these meaningless figures and intervals enter into the mind of man, and become so inextricably woven into his personality as to reappear a veritable utterance of his soul is and remains the great mystery of creation. It is a mystery entirely unelucidated by consciousness. To name a process is not to explain it, but merely to mark it off from other processes which can be explained, and can be shown to differ in results. The art of music provides the materials, a few figures, a few intervals, an absurdly limited stock compared with the resources of any language, and man creates an utterance that for beauty, individuality, and expressiveness has in proportion to its brevity no equal in any other art. Between the common stock and the individual Idea we perceive the chasm, but the bridge crossing it is a blank in the mind. On one side the intervals, on the other side the Idea.'

One of the most important chapters of the essay is that on the association of ideas. Here programme music is belittled as affording no natural outlet. We may be fascinated by perceiving an outside poetic basis in modern music, but such music is on a lower plane than absolute music with its infinite soul expression. An art ceases to have an utterance of its own if it merely responds to the utterance of another art. 'This is the danger that is threatening to overwhelm the future of the art of music.'

In the chapter on 'Emotion and Form' and 'Emotion and Idea,' and the final chapter on 'Intellect and Intuition,' there is much of absorbing interest and some dubious contentions. Thus, in the course of an argument on emotion and form it is stated that 'tone movement cannot be fast and slow or loud and soft at the same time.' This is a dictum that almost any orchestral piece or polyphonic music flouts.

Miss Glyn promises to give us an educational text-book which will weld all the various parts of musical education into one consistent whole. This is a bold task. It is much easier to be uneasy as to the drift of musical things and to dream vague dreams of what might be than to carve out an unerring channel for posterity. Lines of high art progress are created, not forged. But Miss Glyn, with her large, grave thoughts and breadth of view helps to give shape to ponderings.

Voice Culture for Children. By James Bates. A practical primer on the cultivation and preservation of young voices, with exercises for the use of schools, choirs, solo-boys, &c. Part I.—Instructions. Part II.—Exercises with pianoforte accompaniment. Part III.—Two-part studies.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The important subject of the training of children's voices has received much and skilful attention during recent years. It is being generally realized, even apart from musical execution, that the proper use and development of the vocal organs and the study of all that pertains to voice production are matters that may deeply affect both body and mind. Physically, voice is produced by a series of mysterious and delicate adjustments, and this production becomes still more mysteriously the subtle exponent of mood and feeling. The whole subject is indeed a fit one for close inquiry, and especially in relation to the education and bodily development of the young.

No one has a better claim to be heard on the questions arising out of the culture of the child's voice than Mr. James Bates, the founder and director of the London College for Choristers. He has devoted many years to the patient study of the whole subject, and he has enjoyed exceptional advantages in having under his constant care a large number of pupils. He has wisely displayed no haste in formulating his principles and tabulating his plans of training. All that he advocates is the product of ripe experience and years of success.

Mr. Bates's work is divided conveniently into three independent sections, which are issued separately. The first section appeals to teachers, and in fifty-two pages deals elaborately with vowels, consonants, breathing, singing out of tune and other cognate topics. Mr. Bates has evolved an intricate system of phonetic analysis that bears witness to the thoroughness of his investigations. It is obvious that this branch of the subject cannot adequately be dealt with in a casual way. Some teachers with little time at disposal may find the exercises described too comprehensive. In such cases a judicious selection must be made. Mr. Bates has simply furnished a complete course of study which can be used to train cathedral choristers or applied to children in elementary schools. Every school teacher or other person responsible for the vocal training of children should be familiar with the fundamental ideas enounced in this book, and should have a clear objective as to the course to pursue at every stage and on the occurrence of every difficulty.

The second section of the book provides exercises with pianoforte accompaniment. If these exercises are faithfully practised according to the directions, it is almost impossible to miss a satisfactory result. But it must be remembered that the sole efficacy of a vocal exercise is not in the mere music but in the manner of its execution. The third section consists of fourteen melodious two-part studies, most of which are the composition of Dr. Hugh Blair.

PART-MUSIC FOR FEMALE VOICES.

The splendour falls. Tears, idle tears. O swallow, swallow. Now sleeps the crimson petal. Poems from Tennyson's 'The Princess.' Music by Gustav von Holst.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The fascination of Tennyson's muse to composers shows no sign of abatement, although it would entail much calculation to say how many times every available lyric has been set. The reason is not far to seek; in fact it is supplied by the text of the above part-songs, for the lines provide all the opportunities the composer can desire for the perfect espousal of words and music. 'The splendour falls on castle walls' is a good example of how the poet would seem to have written with music in his ear, and Mr. von Holst shows keen appreciation of possibilities. Notably is this the case in the setting of the line 'Blow, bugle blow,' which, allied to a chord of D, is directly preceded by the chord of the dominant seventh on B flat with very happy effect. An echo choir—directed to be a fourth smaller in number than the first choir, and to be placed in an adjoining room—also is employed, and greatly increases the interest of the music. 'Tears, idle tears' is allied to strains appropriately tender and meditative in character and, sung with expression and soft volume of tone, would prove entrancing. The music to 'O swallow, swallow' is studiously simple, but for this very reason is extremely taking. It is written for first and second sopranos and contralto. 'Now sleeps the crimson petal' is a part-song of captivating delicacy and grace. The words are directed to be sung by 'a few solo voices in unison,' the remainder of the choir supplying what may be termed a drowsy accompaniment 'with half-closed lips' and occasional reiteration of the word 'lull.'

NEW SONGS.

Rosamond. Love's Philosophy. I sigh for night's sweet coming. Music by John Pointer.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Pointer is to be commended for his choice of text for his songs. The words of the first of the above settings are by Lord Macaulay, the second by Shelley, and the third by Dr. A. F. Crawford. The composer is also to be praised for his correctness of accentuation, a matter in which many song-writers often are careless. In all three songs the theme is the 'love that makes the world go round so,' and the music echoes its passion and its pain. The composer appears to have been most inspired by 'Love's Philosophy,' for there is more spontaneity in the music allied to these familiar lines than is observable in the other two songs. It would not be advisable for a tenor to sing this setting without a rehearsal with his accompanist, otherwise the spontaneity might be impaired. 'Rosamond' is a charming lyric, and the courtly spirit of the lines has been happily realized by the composer, the music being distinguished by tenderness and grace. 'I sigh for night's sweet coming' is much simpler in character than the foregoing, and depends for its effect upon the expressive ability of the singer.

H.R.H. the Princess Christian has graciously accepted the presidency of the South London Musical Festival for 1908, and, as showing her practical interest in the movement, she has kindly consented to distribute the prizes on April 2, if in England at that time. The festival will be held at Battersea Town Hall, and the syllabus, giving full particulars, will be issued in due course. Mr. T. Lester Jones, 49, Terrace Road, Upton Manor, E., is the secretary.

Obituary.

A pathetic interest is attached to the death, which we regret to record, of the Rev. Canon GEORGE WILLIAM TORRANCE, M.A., Mus. D., as he passed away only three days after his wife, on August 20. Born at Rathmines, Dublin, in 1835, he became a chorister of Christ Church Cathedral and was successively organist of three churches in the city of Dublin. He composed his first oratorio, 'Abraham,' when he was only nineteen years of age, and it was performed in 1855, the late Sir Robert Stewart being at the organ and the composer conducting. After studying for a time at Leipzig he returned to Dublin and produced an opera, 'William of Normandy.' In 1859 he entered the University of Dublin, where he graduated in arts and was ordained. In 1864 he composed his second oratorio, 'The captivity,' to Goldsmith's words, and afterwards held curacies in Shrewsbury and Dublin. Australia was the scene of his clerical labours from 1869 to 1898. At Melbourne, in 1882, his third oratorio, 'The Revelation,' was performed with great success, and during his incumbency of Holy Trinity Church, Balaclava, near Melbourne, a fine three-manual organ was erected and constructed specially to be played by himself during the services. On his return to Ireland in 1898 he was appointed Bishop's Vicar-Choral in the diocese of Ossory, and was successively given a canonry and the office of librarian of St. Canice's Library, Kilkenny, where he and his wife died. In 1879 Canon Torrance obtained the degrees of Bachelor and Doctor of Music from Dublin University on the recommendation of the Professor of Music, Sir Robert Stewart, and the honorary degree of Mus.Doc. ad eundem from the University of Melbourne. He is favourably known as the composer of church music, including two anthems which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES—'Who shall roll us away the stone?' (Easter) and 'I will pray the Father' (Whitsuntide).

The death took place on August 21, at 16, Horton Crescent, Rugby, of Mr. EDWIN EDWARDS, at the age of seventy-seven. A native of Street, Somersetshire, Mr. Edwards, whose death we record with regret, was formerly, for twenty-two years, the much esteemed music-master at Rugby School. He contributed several tunes to the Rugby School Hymnal, and a chant by him is in the St. Paul's Cathedral Chant Book.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The thirteenth season of Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall commenced on August 17, and, as before, under the conductorship of Mr. Henry J. Wood. The sale of season-tickets has been greater than in any previous year, and a large number of people were unable to obtain admission on the opening night. As usual the programme was of a more or less popular character, but the best of its class, and the interpretations were distinguished by unanimity, verve and finish. An impressive incident was the performance of an orchestral version of Chopin's 'Funeral March' In memoriam the late Joseph Joachim, the entire audience standing. Mrs. Henry J. Wood and Mr. Frederic Austin sang.

The first of the thirty novelties promised this season was brought forward on August 20—a Symphony in E flat by the Melbourne musician Mr. Marshall Hall. The work bears the somewhat enigmatical title 'An Elizabethan comedy,' presumably intended by the composer as a clue to his programme, but it is too vague to be of any assistance, and there is nothing Elizabethan in the design or character of the music. The Symphony has only three movements, of which the first is the most important. Spirited in style and sincere in expression, it has so many themes as to create an impression of patchiness. The second and slow movement is conceived in a graceful vein, and if the themes at times are reminiscent they are melodious and richly harmonized. The Finale is full of vigour, its two principal subjects being well contrasted and clearly and tersely treated, while a dignified central episode adds greatly to the general effect. The Symphony was admirably played and received with much applause. The vocalists were Miss Elsie Nicholl and Mr. Robert Radford.

Considerable interest attached to the first performance in England, on August 21, of two movements from Max Reger's Serenade in G for orchestra (Op. 95), owing to the conflicting opinions held in regard to this composer's works. Contrasting the Serenade with his chamber compositions heard during the recent London season, this diversity of opinion is fostered by the composer himself, for whereas they proved exceedingly difficult to understand, the Serenade is perfectly clear and rational. The only peculiarity it possesses is that the strings are divided into two orchestras, in one of which the instruments are muted. These two orchestras are used in a strongly contrasted manner in the opening movement, an Allegro moderato containing frequent suggestion of a musical dialogue. No trumpets or trombones are employed, and the ordinary wood-wind is somewhat sparingly introduced. Melodic interest almost entirely centres in the string parts which, though involved, are never obscured. The themes possess individuality, some of them indeed have great charm, and all have significance, and their treatment justifies the statement that the composer's motto is 'Back to Bach. The second movement, headed Vivace e Burlesca, is certainly vivacious even if its humour is less obvious. It possesses however a peculiar weirdness, and certain portions might illustrate the flight of innumerable ghosts. In spite of the complex part-writing the interpretation of the work was remarkable for smoothness and precision, and the music manifestly was well liked.

The novelty on August 22 was an overture entitled 'Princess Maleine,' by Mr. Cyril Scott. This is not a new work, inasmuch as it was written in 1902, but it had not previously been performed. It is necessary therefore to remember the date of composition in criticising the work, because during the last five years the composer has made great advance in clearness of expression. 'Princess Maleine' is not one of the best of Maeterlinck's plays, and its vagueness has found its way into Mr. Scott's music. This may be regarded by some as a merit, but to us the persistent avoidance of determinative expression becomes wearying in spite of the clearness shown in command of orchestral colour and the realistic suggestion of the storm. It should be added that at this concert was played Mr. Arthur Hervey's tone-poem 'In the East,' which was excellently rendered and greatly applauded.

A particularly interesting feature of the concert on August 24 was the first performance of a March in G by Sir Edward Elgar. The fourth of the proposed series of six military marches bearing the collective title 'Pomp and Circumstance,' the new march, which was preceded by a performance of No. 3, in C minor, has a strong affinity to No. 1, in D, the Trio of which has become so popular by being allied to the words 'Land of hope and glory' in Sir Edward's 'Coronation Ode.' In common with that tune, the chief theme of the Trio in the new march is a broad diatonic melody of simple and obvious expression, and, after the customary repetition of the first section of the march, it is repeated in the key of the tonic and made to form a grandiose conclusion. The principal subject of the march is of a bold and vigorous character. In its entirety the work is a notable addition to the series and will probably become popular. It was enthusiastically applauded, but Mr. Wood declined to grant an encore.

ENGLISH OPERA.

The season of Grand Opera in English given by the Moody-Manners company at the Lyric Theatre, has continued to meet with public support eminently satisfactory to those who hope to see the establishment of a National Opera. It also is encouraging to note that the popularity of Mozart's 'Marriage of Figaro' rivals that of Balfe's 'Bohemian Girl,' and that crowded houses have been attracted by performances of Puccini's 'La Bohême' and 'Madama Butterfly' respectively on August 7 and 16. In the former, Madame De Vere-Sapio gave a sympathetic embodiment of the little milliner, Miss Hilda Moody appeared as Musetta, and the characters of Rudolf, Shaunard, Marcel and Colline were vivaciously sustained respectively by Messrs. Joseph O'Mara, William Dever, Lewys James and Charles Magrath. Special interest attached to the performance of 'Madama Butterfly,' as, except in America, it had not previously been sung in English. To follow such artists in the name-part as Madame Destinn and Madame Giachetti was not an easy task, but Madame Fanny Moody achieved such a pronounced success as to give further proof of her versatility. Mr. Joseph O'Mara and Mr. Lewys James severally personated Pinkerton and Sharpless with great vocal and histrionic ability. Miss Toni Seiter was sympathetic as Butterfly's faithful attendant Suzuki. Mr. W. Bailey appeared fully to understand the duties of the marriage-broker, and the other characters were capably sustained. Both the above operas were conducted with marked ability by Mr. Romnaldo Sapio.

Amongst other performances special mention is due of Mr. John Coates's appearance as Lohengrin on July 26 and as Faust on August 13. It is not too much to say that the embodiment of both these characters was ideal, especially that of the 'Knight of the Swan.' Mr. Coates looked this part to perfection, and his reading was at once tender and dignified. His associates in Wagner's opera were Madame De Vere-Sapio (Elsa), Miss Toni Seiter (Ortrud) and Mr. Lewys James (Telramund). Mr. Eckhold conducted the German and Mr. Frewin the French opera.

Mention should also be made of an excellent interpretation on July 27 of 'Tristan and Isolde,' when the name-parts were ably sustained by Mr. Joseph O'Mara and Madame Fanny Moody. The other principal characters were effectively portrayed by Miss Toni Seiter, Mr. William Dever and Mr. Charles Magrath.

A notable event was the visit of about sixty members of the Sheffield Grand Opera Society, who lent assistance in the performance of 'Faust,' 'Aïda,' 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin' respectively on August 12, 13, 14 and 15. This Society was formed during the recent 'Festival Operatic Week' in the Yorkshire city, and it is the desire of Mr. Manners to establish in London a similar organization of amateurs to assist his company when it is performing in the metropolis, and also to increase the taste for operatic music. The presence at the Lyric Theatre of the Sheffield vocalists resulted in the choruses being delivered with magnificent volume of tone, but which, in so small a house, was at times—notably in the Soldiers' Chorus in 'Faust'—well-nigh overwhelming. The gain artistically was not so great, for the chief feature of the Moody-Manners troupe is the remarkable vocal ability and intelligence of the company's choristers, who were somewhat hampered in their movements by the crowded condition of the stage.

THE ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD.

Swansea, August 20 to 24.

This great national institution shows no sign of losing its hold upon the imagination and affections of the Welsh race. We do not know whether the attendance at Swansea constituted a record, but the audiences were very large. On the great choral day there were more than twenty thousand persons present, a number that recalls the audiences sometimes gathering at Crystal Palace concerts. The Swansea gathering was held in a huge pavilion intended to accommodate about 16,000 persons. The crush therefore at times was dangerous, and in view of the possibilities of panic—a taste of which a much-exaggerated promenade breakdown gave all concerned—it must be said the means of regulation and escape were very inadequate. No outsider can begin to know the Welsh national characteristics unless he has attended one of these great yearly functions. The tense excitement of the audience, the tremendous earnestness of performers, create an atmosphere rarely, if ever, experienced at an ordinary concert. The Eisteddfod is indeed a remarkable and unique institution that nothing else could replace in Wales. The only question is whether all this fervour and ability is being focussed by the powers-that-be on points that make for progress. Lately in our columns we have had something to say as to the drift of Eisteddfodau, and one matter discussed has been the music selected as tests at the competitions. It is just to acknowledge now that the Swansea programme was in many respects a creditable one. The selection was not immaculate, but inasmuch as in the chief choral section the whole of the choruses of the second part of 'St. Paul' had to be prepared, a distinct artistic achievement was designed.

The concerts included a performance of a Welsh operetta of 'Llyn-y-fan' by Mr. David Thomas, and Berlioz's 'Faust' by the festival choir under Mr. T. W. Thomas. Both performances were creditable features of the Eisteddfod, the one because it encouraged native art, and the other because it brought before Welsh audiences a striking example of modern music. These works were done with a full orchestra partly recruited from South Wales resources. A Welsh concert also was given, and attracted a large and sympathetic audience.

On the first day, Pontypridd (Mr. W. Morgan) gained the first prize and much commendation in the ladies' choir section, in which there were six entries, the test-pieces being 'The snow' (Elgar) and 'Newid Cywaer' (Treherne). Pembroke Dock (Mr. T. G. Hancock) was first in the small mixed-voice choir section, in which there were eleven entries, the test-pieces being 'Moonlight' (Faning) and 'He saved them' (David Jenkins). There were sixty-two competitors in the pianoforte section, and the prize was won by a small boy, John Morgan Nicholas, of Port Talbot.

The climax of interest was reached at the chief choral competition for choirs of 200 voices, which was held on the second day. The prizes were, first, £150 and second, £50. All the choruses in the second part of 'St. Paul' were scheduled as tests, but the choirs were notified on the previous day—why, it is not clear—that 'See what love' and 'The nations are now the Lord's' would have to be sung at the competition. Eleven choirs entered but only ten appeared. The following is a list of the choirs in the order in which they sang:

Cwmavon Choral Society (Mr. Evan Thomas).
Llanelly Choral Society (Mr. John Thomas).
Cardiff Harmonic Society (Mr. Roderick Williams).
Newport Choral Society (Mr. A. E. Sims).
Rhymney Gwent Choral Society (Mr. Daniel Owen).
Pontypridd Musical Society (Mr. W. M. Thompson).
St. Paul's (Swansea) United Choir (Mr. H. T. Williams).
Morriston and District Choral Society (Mr. T. D. Jones).
Brynaman Choral Society (Mr. Edward Evans).
Rhymney United Choir (Mr. J. Price).

The total number of competitors in this class was therefore over 2,000. All the choirs came from South Wales. This was unfortunate, because it deprived the event to some extent of its national character. The judges were Dr. F. H. Cowen, Dr. Walford Davies, Dr. Protheroe (U.S.A.), Mr. Harry Evans and Mr. Rhys Thomas. After Mr. Evans had made some non-committal remarks in Welsh, Dr. Cowen voiced the opinions of the Board of Adjudicators in a lucid criticism. He stated that they were unanimous in awarding the first place to Cardiff and the second to Brynaman.

The following are the chief solo results: Soprano, Miss Marion Squire, Cardiff; Mezzo-soprano, Miss Dora Davies, Pontypridd; Contralto, Miss Winifred Lewis, Senghenydd; Tenor, Mr. David Ellis, Cefnmawr, N. Wales; Baritone, Mr. Josiah Thomas, Swansea; Bass solo, Mr. David Chubb, Pontypridd; Violin, Mr. Higham Freedman, Pontycymmer, and Mr. L. Falkman, Abertillery; Violoncello, Miss Clara Davies, Skelty.

The male-voice choir contest excited as much interest as the great mixed-voice choir contest. The audience again numbered over 20,000. Ten choirs sang, and they were all Welsh. In fact, generally throughout the Eisteddfod the English element was little in evidence. The test-pieces prepared were 'The Nun of Nidaros' (D. Protheroe) and 'Lovely maiden' (D. Pughe Evans), but to save time only the first was sung. The singing was, of course, often very fine, but there was much that was faulty in the way of bad intonation. Resolven Choir (Mr. T. Glyndwr Richards) was declared to be first, and Port Talbot (Ald. John Phillips) second.

We have alluded to the alarming incident of the breaking down of a small portion of the auditorium. This was not in itself serious, but it might easily have led to an uncontrollable panic. We are glad to record that much was owing to the presence of mind on the part of Mr. Harry Evans, who leaped forward and started the audience in song.

It was announced that the testimonial proposed to be given to Mr. D. Emlyn Evans, who during his long and honourable career has done so much for Welsh musical education, has reached respectable dimensions.

It was decided to hold the 1909 Eisteddfod in London, Llangollen, in North Wales, having previously been chosen for the 1908 event.

NATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY'S CRYSTAL PALACE FESTIVAL.

Music is made a leading feature of this Society's annual gathering. The festival which took place on August 24 was one of the most successful held under the present organization. A juvenile concert brought forward a taking programme which was very successfully performed under the direction of Mr. Charles J. Jeapes. Another concert was given by a great choir of adult singers. This was conducted by Mr. Allen Gill with his usual ability. The programme included 'O praise the Lord with one consent' (Handel), a new part-song 'Weep you no more,' composed specially for the festival by Bernard Johnson, and part-songs by Cowen, Stanford, Roger Quilter and Battison Haynes.

Choral competitions attracted a great number of choirs although there were no other prizes than shields. The choirs were divided into four classes sorted upon the basis of numbers of members. The following were the winners: Coventry (Mr. John Potter), Peterborough (Mr. W. T. Roberts), Stratford (Mr. Alfred Sears) and Faversham (Mr. W. Beard). The adjudicators were Dr. E. H. Turpin and Mr. Charles Macpherson.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

The programmes of the ten concerts of the Philharmonic Society, to be given during the winter season under the direction of Arthur Nikisch, will include a symphony in G minor by Kalinnikoff, also one by Hans Bischoff; two symphonic poems, Tchaikovsky's 'Storm' and one by Alfven; a tone-picture 'Sadko,' by Rimsky-Korsakoff; Bizet's 'Roma' Suite; and Elgar's 'Orchestral Variations.'

BRUSSELS.

M. Charles Dalmorès, the excellent tenor vocalist, who during six years was a member of the company at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, recently went to Bayreuth. Herr Siegfried Wagner heard him sing and at once engaged him for 'Lohengrin' next year at Bayreuth.——The Cercle Artistique will give during the coming winter a series of concerts devoted to the works of Bach. The programmes will include cantatas 'O Ewigkeit' and 'Wer Weiss,' the 'Strife between Phœbus and Pan,' and the Brandenburg Concertos. Fritz Steinbach will be the conductor.

GENEVA.

Last month M. Jaques-Dalcroze gave a course of six lectures, with practical illustrations, on 'Rhythmical gymnastics.'

HAMBURG.

Siegfried Wagner's new opera, 'Das Sternengebot,' is to be produced here in October.

LEIPZIG.

Lampe-Vischer, who was for many years president of the Gewandhaus Concerts, has bequeathed to the members of the orchestra the sum of £400.

MEXICO.

The Brussels Quartet, together with the pianist Otto Voss, has returned to Europe after having given twenty-four chamber concerts in the above city. Voss also gave two pianoforte recitals. Hitherto no European quartet has given concerts the other side of the Atlantic.

MUNICH.

The report of the past scholastic year of the Akademie der Tonkunst has been issued, and an increase in the number of pupils is recorded. Reference is made to the severe losses sustained by the death of the honorary president, Baron Perfall, who for forty years took active interest in all matters relating to the institution, and of Ludwig Thuille, the well-known composer and excellent teacher, whose successor will be Freidrich Klose, at present professor at the Basle Conservatoire. The Minister of Public Instruction has agreed to the proposal of the directors that out of the reserve fund of 1907, twenty entrance tickets, giving admission to this year's festival performances at the Prince Regent Theatre, should be purchased and presented to deserving, needy students of both sexes at the Academy.

PARIS.

M. Albert Carré is said to have commissioned M. Xavier Leroux to write a new work for the Opéra Comique, entitled 'Pierre-le-Véridique.' Previous to that, however, will be heard the composer's 'Le Chemineau,' the name-part of which will be created by Mlle. Marié de l'Isle. Another novelty to be given during the season is 'L'Histoire de Tristan,' poem by Gabriel Mourey, music by Claude Debussy. ——M. Marcelin Duclos, the young baritone, has been engaged by M. Gailhard. He will make his début in 'Rigoletto' in the title-rôle, which recently won for him a prize at the Conservatoire.

PESARO.

Maestro Amilcare Zanella succeeds Signor Mascagni as director of the Liceo musicale.

ROME.

The carnival season at the Costanzi Theatre will open on December 26 under the direction of Signor Mugnone. The following works are announced: Massenet's 'Manon,' Wagner's 'Meistersinger,' Meyerbeer's 'Le Prophète,' Puccini's 'La Tosca' and 'Madama Butterfly,' Strauss's 'Salome,' and Cilea's 'Gloria,' in addition to 'Sperdute nel buio,' an opera by a young Neapolitan composer which has already been performed at Messina. —— On August 9, the fourth anniversary of his coronation, Pope Pius X. was present at a solemn mass at the Sistine Chapel. Maestro Perosi conducted all the music, which included excerpts from his own works, and Palestrina's Mass, 'Jesu nostra redemptio.'

ST. PETERSBURG.

Special preparations have been made for performances of 'Glinka's life for the Czar' to be given here. The work has been studied in accordance with the new edition by Rimsky-Korsakoff shortly to be published by Belaïef. The usually omitted 'Air de Ballet' in the second act and the tenor air in the fourth are to be restored.

VIENNA.

Gustav Mahler, who resumed his conductorship at the Hofoper on August 18, will remain in office until the end of the year, when he will make way for his successor, Felix von Weingartner.

In connection with the First Australian Women's Work Exhibition, to be held at Melbourne in October, a Ladies' chorus has been organized, under the honorary conductorship of Mrs. Franklin Peterson, wife of the Ormond Professor of Music. The chorus, which will number about 1,000 voices, includes most of the best known professionals in the city and district, in addition to the majority of the lady members of the various choral societies. An orchestra numbering about ninety performers, and under the direction of Miss McBurney and Mrs. Ewart, wife of the recently-appointed Professor of Botany, is also preparing for the Exhibition. Under the patronage of Her Majesty the Queen, the Exhibition promises to be an important and successful undertaking, and these large bodies of ladies, trained and conducted by ladies, will no doubt form a prominent feature of the musical attractions.

The mid-winter students' concert of the University of Melbourne Conservatorium of Music was held in the Town Hall on July 10, before a crowded and appreciative audience. An orchestra of fifty performers played movements from symphonies by Haydn and Mozart, and supplied the necessary accompaniments to the vocal solos as well as the concerted pieces. The Director of the Conservatorium, Professor Franklin Peterson, conducted an enjoyable evening's music.

The Royal University of Ireland has conferred the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causâ, on Mr. W. H. Grattan Flood, 'in recognition of his musical compositions and his contributions to Irish musical literature.'

Answers to Correspondents.

A. F. B.—It was Miss Anna Maria Tree who first sang Bishop's 'Home, sweet home' in the production of the opera 'Clari, the maid of Milan' at Covent Garden Theatre, May 8, 1823. One of her sisters (not Mrs Charles Kean) was a dancer (at Drury Lane Theatre), and the performance of the pair prompted the punning lines:

> Of all the trees that I have known,
>   Pippin, nonpareil, or warden,
> Give me the tree so sweetly blown,
>   The vocal Tree of Covent Garden.
> But would I choose a tender form
>   That dances with the elfin train,
> I'd shelter from life's angry storm,
>   And seek the Tree of Drury Lane.

There are other branches of the Tree family who have made their bows in response to popular applause.

E. B. F.—The profession of music is a precarious one, more so, perhaps, than the handicraft which you now follow, that of waggon-repairing. Still, if you have a really good voice and are not afraid of hard work, there is no reason why you should not be encouraged to press forward to the goal of your ambition—'to get into an opera company or a cathedral choir.' You have youth in your favour, and as your teacher is 'a very clever man' who has 'turned some grand singers out,' you had better make the best use of your opportunities with him in the hope of ultimate success.

A. G.—We believe that the third and last edition of Hopkins and Rimbault's treatise on the organ was published thirty years ago. The following books on the subject may be useful to you:—Elliston's 'Organs and tuning' (Weekes), Dickson's 'Practical organ building' (Crosby Lockwood & Co.), Wedgwood's 'Dictionary of organ stops' (Vincent), Hinton's 'Organ construction' (The Composers' and Authors' Press, Ltd.). For a Dictionary of Musical Terms, see Stainer and Barrett's.

W. M. A.—(1) Without knowing the technical attainments of your twelve-year-old son, it is difficult to recommend 'a series of suitable classical pieces.' His teacher should be the best judge of what is most suitable for him. (2) In order to obtain the diplomas of the Licentiateship of the Royal Academy of Music and the Associateship of the Royal College of Music, it might be desirable for you to work under a coach who has had experience in preparing candidates for these examinations.

H. A. D.—The melody of your hymn-tune is rather monotonous and the harmony is not above reproach, but we have seen worse attempts. Why do you give so many D flats to the tenor part? Out of fifty-two chords, twenty-seven have D flat in the tenor (beginning with fourteen D flats right off), and D natural occurs four times. As the key of the tune is G flat, the dominant (D flat) dominates the tenor part rather too much.

WALES.—The following speeds are suggested for the works you name. Allemande from Suite Anglaise, No. 4, Bach, crotchet = 88; Study No. 28, Gradus ad Parnassum, Clementi, dotted minim = 100; Sonata in C minor, first movement, Schubert, crotchet = 96; No. 1 of Davidsbündler, Schumann, crotchet = 160; Song without words, Mendelssohn, No. 3 (Op. 19, No. 3), dotted crotchet = 112.

HOOD.—Only Fellows, not Associates of the Royal College of Organists, are entitled to wear a hood. We regret that we are unable to throw any light on the hood the colours of which you cannot determine. Some people wear hoods which give a false colour to their qualifications.

J. S. A.—Books such as you name get out of date in course of time. Great Yarmouth church is now the largest parish church in England, St. Michael's, Coventry, comes next in size, and we believe that Holy Trinity, Hull, takes a third, or even a lower place in regard to measurements.

A. F.—Guilmant's 'March on a theme by Handel' and 'Prière' can be obtained from Messrs. Novello and so can the Huldningsmarsch by Christian Teilman, if this is the particular march by that composer you require. The other piece we cannot at present trace.

Ut Prosim.—Elliott's voluntaries for the harmonium will doubtless satisfy your requirements: they are published in six books at one shilling each.

An old Subscriber.—The Staff sight-singing reader books, Nos. 137 and 138 of Novello's School Songs, will probably meet the case.

SAMUEL MASTERS (Tenor).

"Judas Maccabæus" at the City Temple.

The critic of Musical Opinion writes: "Mr. Samuel Masters was the tenor. At the time of his first coming out I had occasion to express my opinion pretty strongly as to his great merits as a concert singer, and now he has blossomed into a Handelian tenor of marked value. I was pleased beyond measure by his delivery of the two great and difficult airs which Handel assigned to the Jewish hero."—Musical Opinion, April, 1907.

"Mr. Gaul is an experienced organist, and his series of organ works now in process of publication will doubtless have a great sale. Three numbers are to hand. No. 1, a beautiful Allegretto Pastorale; No. 2, comprising two movements, Communion and Allegretto; and No. 3, comprising six Andante movements, all written in the melodious manner to which the legion of admirers of Mr. Gaul's genius are accustomed. All organists should place these graceful works beside the slow movements of Henry Smart, another English musician whose name is honoured in the organ galleries."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

OF
WORDS OF ANTHEMS.

Crown 8vo, 822 pp., cloth, red edges, 5s. Red Basil and red edges, 7s. 6d.
Appendix only, paper cover, 1s.

This Book, which now contains the Words of about 2,000 Anthems, besides being admirably adapted for the use of Choirs and Congregations, for which purpose it was originally compiled, will be found most valuable to Organists, Choirmasters, and the Clergy as a Book of Reference for the selection of Anthems suitable for special days, seasons, or occasions, the Indexes having been considerably enlarged. It also contains a list of Anthems suitable for Men's voices, and Anthems with Latin words.

The newly-incorporated Anthems (Nos. 1590 to 1952) have been added to the former edition by means of an Appendix, which is published separately from the complete work. Consequently Choirs and Congregations which are still using the older edition are enabled to supplement their books, and make them complete, by purchasing the Appendix at the price of One Shilling.

CONTENTS.

	THE HARP THAT ONCE IN TARA'S HALLS	IRISH AIR.

The above are all very simply arranged by PERCY E. FLETCHER. The 1st Violin parts do not go beyond the third position, and they are often written divisi in order to fill out the harmony. The viola parts are ad lib., the actual notes being written as the second of the divisi parts for the second violin. The bowing and fingering are carefully marked. The arrangements are complete in themselves with or without the vocal parts, and they can also be used as accompaniments to Novello's School Song edition of the pieces.

1st Violin, 2nd Violin, Viola, 'Cello and Bass Parts, each number and part in a separate cover, price 3d.
Pianoforte Parts can be obtained of each of the above Pieces, price 1½d. or 2d.
Further numbers will shortly be issued.

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE
AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star.

"The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—STAFFORDSHIRE CORRESPONDENT, The Musical Times.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City.' . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

THE RHYTHMIC CONCEPTION OF MUSIC
By MARGARET H. GLYN.

"The philosophers profess to explain the power and charms of music, but do so each in his own way. The writer of this thoughtful essay formulates a new theory and brings forward a novel explanation. . . . The theory will recommend itself to modern musicians as justifying free forms as well as strict forms, and as explaining how Berlioz and Wagner are masters, as well as Haydn and Mozart. The essay works it out suggestively in relation both to the history and to the æsthetics of music, and is full of interest for musicians of the more studious sort."—Scotsman.

PROGRAMME MUSIC
IN
THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES

A CONTRIBUTION TO THE HISTORY OF MUSICAL EXPRESSION

BY

FREDERICK NIECKS, MUS.D.

Reid Professor of Music in the University of Edinburgh.

(Author of "Frederick Chopin as a Man and Musician"; &c.)

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A contribution to musical literature which will stand as a monument of research and as a text-book for all students of the art, in one of its most important aspects, to which the book's pages are devoted. . . . As a work of reference its completeness should certainly make it invaluable. . . . The volume now published, full as it is of the fruits of well-directed industry and research, and containing as it does vastly more information on the important subject with which it deals than any other work yet written in our language, is one for which its author deserves the lasting gratitude of everybody interested in music and its development.

STANDARD.

It is safe at the outset to say that by this thoroughly interesting and helpful book Professor Niecks has enriched our literature to an extent only equalled in recent times by the Oxford History of Music. . . . An exceedingly well written epilogue concludes this book, which cannot fail to be helpful to composers at the moment. . . . Professor Niecks brings his immense labour—one that is not likely to be superseded for a long time—to a worthy finish.

MORNING POST.

The present volume deserves to rank among the most valuable works on the history of music which have appeared for many years. The subject is one of engrossing interest, and in treating it the author has not only displayed his erudition and marshalled his facts with the greatest accuracy, but has in the expression of his ideas shown himself thoroughly impartial.

DAILY NEWS.

Professor Niecks has done valiant work in clearing away many of the errors and misunderstandings which have obscured the vexed subject of programme music. He took up his task in the impartial spirit of the historical investigator, and has carried it through with such success that his bulky volume will be an historical document. . . . The value of the historical survey and the criticism connecting it cannot be exaggerated.

MORNING ADVERTISER.

Not only is it a sound as well as an exhaustive volume on the art which he knows so well, but it has the fine merit, from the amateur's point of view, of being extremely readable. . . . If I wanted to place in the hands of a man the history of music for the last four hundred years I should give him the work under notice, for by reading it he would gain a clearer view of what had been accomplished than by wading through half the academical histories written in the formal manner of the pedantic historian.

MORNING LEADER.

Professor Niecks's book fills a lamentable gap in our musical literature, though it cannot be said to exhaust the subject, which is, in a sense, co-extensive with the whole history of music. . . . The whole book is a valuable contribution to the study of the subject. It deprives people of the excuse of not having all the facts before them in an accessible form, and many will be surprised to learn what a vast body of facts has been accumulating in the last four centuries. Finally, his lucid definition of the various kinds of programme music should put an end to much loose thinking and looser writing on the subject.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Dr. Frederick Niecks, the professor of music at Edinburgh, may be congratulated on his latest book, "Programme Music," which Messrs. Novello have just published. For years past he has been collecting material for this very interesting history of composition, and the time he has devoted to the task has resulted in a volume which will become a standard work, and will consequently have to be read by every earnest musician, amateur or professional.

ATHENÆUM.

Prof. Niecks's book is a veritable cyclopædia of information on programme music, and full of valuable comments and criticisms. In his Epilogue he sums up the matter tersely in the following words: "Programme music in its widest sense is co-extensive with expressive music; in its narrower sense it is a species of this genus."

SATURDAY REVIEW.

This immense book, "Programme Music in the Last Four Centuries" (Novello and Co.), was a book well worth writing, for it is filled with information of many curious kinds, and it tells us incidentally a great deal about music and "musical expression." . . . Too much praise cannot be given to the care with which the actual sayings and writings of composers themselves, on their own intentions and on what they consider should be done in music, have been gathered together and set in a convenient and significant order.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Professor Niecks's work will be welcome to many who, whether or not they endorse all of the author's conclusions, will find in its pages much information on the subject previously unknown or inaccessible. The data brought together in the work will indeed surprise many. . . . Enough for the present to congratulate Professor Niecks heartily on the production of the work, which must have cost infinite labour and the value of which is incontestable.

EVENING STANDARD AND ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

By its lucidity of expression, the thoroughness of the examination of material, and by sound critical judgment, Professor Niecks's book stands as a great achievement and a most valuable contribution to the history of musical expression.

OBSERVER.

From the historic house of Novello has come a book by Professor Frederick Niecks, which, it is safe to say, is one of the most important contributions to the literature of music since the Oxford History. . . . Not only will this wonderfully written and planned volume be of the greatest help to music-lovers, but it should do much to influence all our modern composers to return to the simpler paths.

REFEREE.

Dr. Niecks's book is the most advanced, comprehensive, and valuable consideration of the subject extant, and should be read by every thoughtful musician, who, it may be added, will derive no small profit and pleasure from its perusal.

BRISTOL TIMES.

It is "a contribution to the history of musical expression" which will take a foremost place among works of the kind.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.

As a contribution to historical musical literature, the book is one of the most important publications of recent years.

BIRMINGHAM POST.

It is undoubtedly the most notable contribution to the question in any literature. For the thoroughness with which he has done his work no praise can be too high.

WESTERN MORNING NEWS.

Professor Niecks has set himself a mighty task, but no less a fact is it that he has achieved generous accomplishment. The volume which he has produced will, not only on account of the incalculable importance of its subject at the present day, mark a period in musical publications, but also on account of its exhaustive, comprehensive, and fully-detailed matter, supply a concise and full history of music throughout the period dealt with. . . . Valuable as is the earlier portion of the book for its historical data, the critical manner in which the author treats the fifth and sixth periods, which comprise practically the second half of the volume, will be to the modern student the most interesting.

THE CHOIRBOY'S GUIDE
TO
THE CATHEDRAL PSALTER

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

This little book has been compiled mainly for the use of choirboys, and, therefore, nothing has been inserted but what is absolutely necessary for understanding the pointing of the Psalms as arranged in the Cathedral Psalter.

A certain amount of information has been given for the guidance of the Choirmaster, but the principal part of the book consists in the sets of exercises which have been arranged to lead the choirboys, step by step, through the various divisions of syllables that occur in the chanting of the Psalms.

After careful examination of the Cathedral Psalter, it has been found that there are exactly fifteen ways of dividing these syllables.

All the exercises have been taken from this Psalter, and the pointing of the verses also coincides with that given in the Cathedral Paragraph Psalter edited by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, D.D.

The author has thoroughly tested the advantages to be gained by the use of this methodical arrangement of the exercises, and is therefore in a position to say that by the use of them a very considerable amount of time can be saved in teaching choirboys to understand the pointing of the Psalms.

As the Recitation Notes are well within the compass of Alto, Tenor, and Bass voices, the book can be used with equal advantage by all members of a choir.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS

SET TO MUSIC IN THE KEY OF G

BY

ALAN GRAY.

"According to the Rev. Dr. Burn, the Te Deum proper (probably written by Niceta of Remesiana, about 400 A.D.), consists of three parts. The first, ending with the Ter Sanctus, is the Praise of Creation. The second, ending with a short Creed, is the Praise of the Church Universal. The third is the Praise of the Congregation, ending with a Prayer for Salvation. Here the original hymn ends, and the subsequent additions consist of a series of Versicles and Responses taken with one exception from the Psalms. The exception ("Vouchsafe, O Lord") is found in the services of Compline, and also as an Antiphon to the Gloria in Excelsis."—(BISHOP OF SALISBURY, The Te Deum, S.P.C.K., 1903.)

This setting is an attempt to illustrate this view of the construction of the hymn.

VOICE CULTURE FOR CHILDREN

A PRACTICAL PRIMER

ON THE

CULTIVATION AND PRESERVATION OF YOUNG VOICES

WITH EXERCISES FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS, CHOIRS, SOLO-BOYS, ETC.

BY

JAMES BATES.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the extreme delicacy of the child's voice, yet how often have these frail instruments been irreparably ruined for want of a little knowledge or a little care! Let the teacher sternly discourage anything like "shouty" singing, especially in class or choir, or misguided attempts to sing notes which are too high or too low. It may safely be said that soft singing (of course within the compass of the voice) will never do harm, no matter how continuous, but loud singing will inevitably lead to disaster. The teacher who successfully instils the principles of correct singing, and thereby renders possible the life-long use and enjoyment of a pleasing voice, is conferring on his young charges a boon of inestimable value. This thought should be his constant encouragement in times of difficulty and lack of immediate success.

TO

PIANOFORTE PLAYERS.

Have you mastered the difficulties of playing at sight modern music with its extreme sharp and flat keys, its incessant accidentals, sharps, flats, double-sharps, double-flats, and enharmonic changes?

If not, you should take a

COURSE OF LESSONS

(Personal, or by Correspondence)

from THE PIANOFORTE SIGHT-READING AND TRANSPOSING SCHOOL, 60, Berners St., London, W.

You will find these Lessons throw an entirely new light on the subject, and will immensely improve your reading powers. Fee for Course, £2 2s.

Interviews daily from 10.30 to 11.30 a.m.

MACDONALD SMITH SYSTEM

OF TOUCH AND TECHNIQUE.

("FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD.")

FURTHER TESTIMONY FROM PUPILS.

"My playing has improved tremendously in every way; my fingers are often a surprise to me, as they play something I am afraid of attempting. I am not the same player I was before I tried your method, and, oh! the relief of not having to play technical exercises every day. I am only sorry I did not know of your method years ago."—Miss K. B. (Hants).

"Passages which formerly I could not play with certainty I can now play without trouble. In fact I have got so fond of my piano work that my only regret now is that I have so little time to devote to it."—R. W. R. (Dublin).

"I think the improvement in my technique since I began to take lessons from you has been wonderful. Your System is splendid, and I have derived immense benefit from it, for which please accept my sincere thanks."—Miss M. B. (Newport).

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE)

Of the Royal Choral Society, Queen's Hall Symphony and Promenade Concerts, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace Concerts, Glasgow Choral Union, Belfast Philharmonic Society, &c.

"SAMSON." Coleraine, March 4, 1907.

"Mr. Montague Borwell, now a great favourite in Coleraine, as elsewhere, added to his former laurels as an oratorio baritone singer. In the music of Harapha, the Philistine braggart, he was better than we have heard him ever before in any work, and as the father of the downfallen Samson, he sang the music of Manoah with great pathos and nobility of expression. He has the deeply emotional gift, a rare and enviable one. His voice is finer, more powerful, true in intonation. AND HIS WHOLE ART FINER THAN BEFORE. A great future is before this vocalist, who will certainly do most ambitious and remarkable work some of these days. Already he stands in the front rank of contemporaries in his line. In opera, we surmise, would lie his real opportunities. There he would be free and expansive, vocally and histrionically fit. In the well-known 'Honour and Arms,' a much-abused air received a fresh and vivid rendering. His recitative style ranks with that of the finest traditions: nothing could well be finer, and he succeeded in galvanising the stereotyped phrases into renewed life and significance. He had a very eulogistic reception."—Belfast Evening Telegraph, March 6, 1907.

Telegrams—"Soloist, London." Telephone—519 (P.O.) Hampstead.

MR. JOHN BROWNING

(BARITONE),

Soloist Leeds Musical Festivals, and of the leading English and Scotch Concerts. Extensive répertoire of over 120 works.

LEEDS CHORAL UNION.

Elgar's "THE APOSTLES," with Henry J. Wood's Queen's Hall Orchestra. March 13, 1907.

"Mr. John Browning gave a thoroughly artistic reading of the part of St. Peter; warm, yet reticent in expression."—Yorkshire Post.

"Made a thoroughly satisfactory St. Peter, being dignified and impressive without exaggeration."—Musical World.

HARROGATE KURSAAL CONCERTS.

"A more pleasing baritone than Mr. John Browning, who has been appearing at the Kursaal during the week, one could not possibly wish to hear. Unmistakable was the praise accorded on Monday evening, when for each effort he was enthusiastically applauded and encored. The effective colouring which the singer is able to give to his songs, which are rendered in a style worthy of the best, has a most gratifying result. The rich, capable voice has been developed to a remarkable extent, and it is a real treat to listen to a singer of the stamp of Mr. Browning His first item was Handel's 'Ruddier than the cherry,' rendered in perfect style, and the severe test which this composition sometimes presents was passed without the slightest difficulty."—Times, June 29, 1907.

EDVARD GRIEG

Born, June 15, 1843.
Died, September 4, 1907.

Although Dr. Edvard Grieg had been for many years a delicate man, his sudden death at Bergen, his native city, came as a shock to his many friends and admirers in England. Some of us had been looking forward to seeing and hearing him either at the Leeds Festival or in London at Queen's Hall during the next few weeks, and now all our expectations have been set at naught by the call of the Reaper whose name is death. But while we deplore the loss of a master-musician, we rejoice in the wealth of sweet strains he has left us in his simple, unaffected music. If the question be asked, 'Was Grieg a great composer?' the answer must depend upon the various meanings of the adjective 'great.' This poetic-souled son of the North certainly did not compose noisy music that is void of understanding; therefore some might put him out of the category of greatness, judged from that standpoint. On the other hand, an artist who writes music which, by the charm of its melody and the excellence of its simplicity, gives untold pleasure to those who perform and those who listen, can surely be numbered among the great ones in music, and, if so, Edvard Grieg must be placed high up in the roll of fame.

Edvard Hagerup Grieg was born at Bergen, June 15, 1843. He came of a Scottish stock. As he once told a Scotch clergyman:

> Alexander Greig, my great-grandfather, who afterwards changed his name to Grieg, emigrated from Fraserburgh last century. . . . See, he said, displaying the seal at the end of his watch-chain, with the figure of a ship among stormy waves and the motto 'At spes in fracta,' here is our crest; it is the same as the Scotch Greigs.

He received his earliest instruction in music from his mother, an excellent musician who once gave a splendid performance of Beethoven's Fantasia (Op. 80) and who took great pleasure in playing the works of Weber, one of her favourite composers. During the boyhood of Edvard, the distinguished violinist, Ole Bull, himself a native of Bergen, visited the Grieg family. When Ole Bull heard that the boy had composed music, he insisted upon his going to the pianoforte and playing his juvenile pieces. One day the violinist visitor suddenly said to Edvard: 'You are to go to Leipzig, and become a musician.' Thus the boy's fate was sealed. 'Everybody looked at me affectionately,' he records, 'and I understood just one thing, that a good fairy was stroking my cheek and that I was happy.'

In 1858, aged fifteen, Grieg became a student at the Leipzig Conservatorium. He studied counterpoint under Hauptmann and Richter; composition under Rietz and Reinecke (the latter is still living); and the pianoforte under Wenzel and Moscheles. Among his fellow-students at Leipzig were Walter Bache, John Francis Barnett, Edward Dannreuther, Arthur Sullivan, and Franklin Taylor. In the biographical sketch of the late Mr. Dannreuther which appeared in The Musical Times of October, 1898, that much-esteemed musician said to the present writer:

> You ask me about Grieg? He was then a slight-built, retiring youth, of a typical Northern physiognomy, flaxen hair, and large dreamy blue eyes, very quiet, self-absorbed, and industrious. As a pianist he never laid much stress on technique, but his playing was always delicate and intelligent—you know the rare charm he imparts to his own music; and though he never came forward as a virtuoso, to this day he manages to make a very good show in his magnum opus, the Pianoforte concerto. To see Grieg, the composer, in a nutshell, examine his 'Norwegische Volksweisen' (Op. 17 and 66). Here are all the elements of his genre, Norse tunes, plaintive or crude, as the people sing and play them—the drone bass—the chromatic inner parts—the use of some quaint bit of the tune by way of introduction or coda—the studied compactness and concentration, the glaring contrasts.

Grieg remained at Leipzig until the spring of 1862. A curious light is thrown upon the methods adopted at the Conservatorium in those days by a report of a students' concert which appeared in the Musical World of January 19, 1861:

> Leipzig.—The last evening performance in the Conservatory before the holidays was very interesting. The following is the programme:—Concerto for violin, Mendelssohn (first movement), by Mr. Albert Payne, of Leipsic (an English gentleman); fugue for piano, in E minor (Op. 35), Mendelssohn, by Mr. Franklin Taylor, of Birmingham; air from Semele, 'Awake, Saturnia,' Handel, Miss Rosamund Barnett; and concerto for pianoforte, in F minor, Chopin (last two movements), Miss Clara Barnett, of Cheltenham. Mr. Arthur Sullivan, formerly holder of the Mendelssohn Scholarship, played the wind instrument parts of the concerto on a piano, and conducted the song from Semele. The pieces were one and all admirably performed.

Were there no wind-instrument players in the Conservatorium orchestra?

An interesting incident of those student days is contained in the following reference to Sullivan Grieg says:

> Sullivan at once distinguished himself by his talent for composition, and for the advanced knowledge of instrumentation which he had acquired before he came to the Conservatorium. While still a student he wrote the music to Shakespeare's 'Tempest,' a few bars of which he once wrote in my album, and which displays the practised hand of an old master. Although I did not come across him much, I once had the pleasure of passing an hour with him, which I shall not forget. It was during a performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.' We sat and followed the music with the score, and what a score! It was Mendelssohn's own manuscript, which Sullivan had succeeded in borrowing for the occasion from the Director of the Conservatorium, Conrad Schleinitz, who was, as is well known, an intimate friend of Mendelssohn's. With what reverence we turned from one page to another! We were amazed at the clear, firm notes which so well expressed the ideas of the composer.

The young Norwegian left Leipzig in the spring of 1862, but not before he had scored his 'first success,' which he thus describes:

> I hasten to give one instance of what must be called a real success. It was Easter time, 1862, before I left the Conservatorium, when I enjoyed the honour of being among the students who were selected to appear at the public > performance in the hall of the Gewandhaus. I played some pianoforte pieces of my own; they were lame productions enough; and I still blush to-day that they appeared in print and figure as Opus 1; but it is a fact that I had an immense success and was called for several times. There was no doubt about that success. Yet it meant nothing for me. The public consisted of invited friends and relations, professors and students. In these circumstances it was the easiest thing in the world for the fair-haired lad from the North to make a hit.

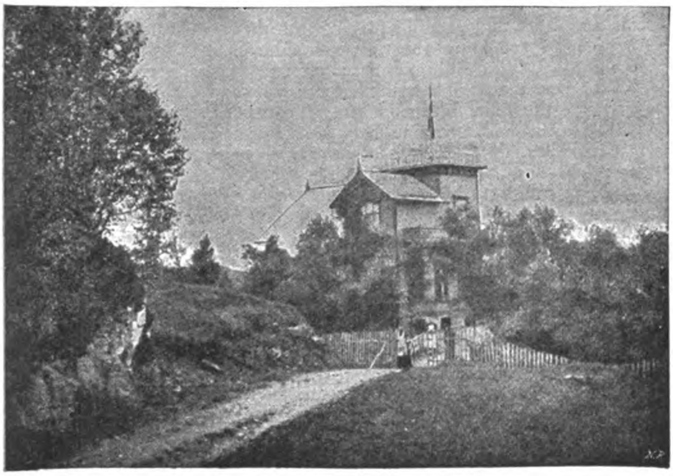
On his return to Norway, in 1862, Grieg gave his first concert at Bergen, and afterwards lived for a time at Copenhagen, where he profited to some extent by the advice of Niels W. Gade, then settled in the Danish capital. It was not, however, until after he had come into contact with Rikard Nordraak (1842-1866), a gifted Norwegian composer, that Grieg cast off the fetters of Leipzig's pedantic classicalism in order to enjoy the freedom of composing national music. He says, referring to Nordraak: 'It was as though the scales fell from my eyes: through him, for the first time, I became acquainted with the Northern folk-music and with my own bent. We abjured the Gade-Mendelssohn insipid Scandinavianism, and entered with enthusiasm on the new path which the Northern school is now following.' In the winter of 1864-65 these two enthusiasts founded at Copenhagen the Euterpe Society, its object being to bring forward the works of young Northern composers. The Society only lasted a few seasons, and Nordraak (to whom Grieg dedicated his Humoresken, Op. 6) went to Berlin. Nordraak's premature death, at the age of twenty-three, was a sore grief to Grieg, who composed a march for performance at his friend's funeral.



TROLDHAUGEN, NORWAY, SHOWING GRIEG'S HOUSE.

(From Mr. H. T. Finck's 'Edvard Grieg.' By permission of Mr. John Lane.)

One of Grieg's most popular songs is 'Jeg elsker dig' ('I love thee'), a setting of Hans Christian Andersen's words. This he composed in 1864, and in all probability for his cousin, Miss Nina Hagerup, to whom he then became engaged, though the marriage did not take place until three years later, June 11, 1867. In the meantime the fair-haired lover visited Italy. On his return to Norway he settled at Christiania, eager to do any work that, in view of his approaching marriage, would 'bring grist to the mill.' There, with the co-operation of Madame Norman Neruda (now Lady Hallé) and his fiancée, he gave a concert in the autumn of 1866, the programme including his Violin sonata (Op. 8), Humoresken for pianoforte (Op. 6), Pianoforte sonata (Op. 7), some of his songs, and other songs by Nordraak and Kjerulf. During the eight years that he lived at Christiania he did much to educate the taste of the people there. With the invaluable co-operation of his young wife—a most charming singer of her husband's delightful songs—he gave subscription concerts and conducted the Philharmonic Society. Under his inspiring direction were performed such works as Mozart's 'Requiem,' Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri,' selections from 'Lohengrin' and Liszt's 'Tasso.' About this time he composed his beautiful Pianoforte concerto, of which more anon.

Like many other young musicians he received great encouragement from Liszt. Without in the least degree seeking any testimonial, or sending him any of his compositions (Liszt was deluged with such publications), Grieg, then aged twenty-five, received the following cordial letter from the greatest of pianists:

> Sir,—I am very glad to tell you what pleasure it has given me to read your Sonata (Op. 8). It bears testimony to a talent of vigorous, reflective and inventive composition of excellent quality,—which has only to follow its natural bent in order to rise to a high rank. I am pleased to think that in your own country you are meeting with the success and encouragement you deserve: these will not be wanting elsewhere either; and if you come to Germany this winter, I cordially invite you to stay a little at Weimar, in order that we may thoroughly get to know each other.
> Pray receive, Sir, the assurance of my sentiments of esteem and very distinguished regard.
> F. Liszt.
> Rome, December 29, 1868.

It is said that this letter caused the Norwegian Government to grant Grieg a sum of money in order that he might pay a second visit to Rome in the autumn of 1869. There he met Liszt, who received him most kindly and showed the greatest interest in his compositions. His delightful intercourse with Liszt he has recorded in some letters, from which we venture to make an extract, quoting from Mr. Finck's valuable monograph on the composer:*

> I had fortunately just received the manuscript of my pianoforte concerto from Leipsic, and took it with me. Beside myself there were present Winding, Sgambati, and a German Lisztite, whose name I do not know, but who goes so far in the aping of his idol that he even wears the gown of an abbé; add to these a Chevalier de Concilium, and some young ladies of the kind that would like to eat Liszt, skin, hair, and all, their adulation is simply comical. . . . Winding and I were very anxious to see if he would really play my concerto at sight. I, for my part, considered it impossible; not so Liszt. 'Will you play?' he asked, and I made haste to reply: 'No, I cannot' (you know I have never practised it). Then Liszt took the manuscript, went to the piano, and said to the assembled guests, with his characteristic smile, 'Very well then, I will show you that I also cannot.' With that he began. I admit that he took the first part of the concerto too fast, and the beginning consequently sounded helter-skelter; but later on, when I had a chance to indicate the tempo, he played as only he can play. It is significant that he played the cadenza, the most difficult part, best of all. His demeanour is worth any price to see. Not content with playing, he at the same time converses and makes comments, addressing a bright remark now to one, now to another of the assembled guests, nodding significantly to the right or left, particularly when something pleases him. In the adagio, and still more in the finale, he reached a climax both as to his playing and the praise he had to bestow.

A really divine episode I must not forget. Toward the end of the finale the second theme is, as you may remember, repeated in a mighty fortissimo. In the concluding bars, p. 83, when in the first triplets the first tone is changed in the orchestra from G sharp to G, while the piano part, in a mighty scale passage, rushes wildly through the whole reach of the keyboard, he suddenly stopped, rose up to his full height, left the piano, and with big theatric strides and arms uplifted walked across the large cloister hall, at the same time literally roaring the theme. When he got to the G in question he stretched out his arms imperiously and exclaimed: 'G, G, not G sharp! Splendid! That is the real Swedish Banko!' to which he added very softly, as in a parenthesis: 'Smetana sent me a sample the other day.' He went back to the piano, repeated the whole strophe, and finished. In conclusion, he handed me the manuscript, and said, in a peculiarly cordial tone: 'Keep steadily on; I tell you, you have the capability, and—do not let them intimidate you!'

This final admonition was of tremendous importance to me; there was something in it that seemed to give it an air of sanctification. At times, when disappointment and bitterness are in store for me, I shall recall his words, and the remembrance of that hour will have a wonderful power to uphold me in the days of adversity.

On his return to Christiania he founded the Musical Society and had a valuable coadjutor in Johan Svendsen, who became his successor when Grieg left the city to spend the remainder of his days in his native Bergen. This was in 1874, when the Norwegian Government granted Grieg and Svendsen each an annuity valued at about £88 a year. (Fancy a Chancellor of the Exchequer proposing such a thing in our House of Commons!) Although this amount does not seem large to us, it must be remembered that twenty shillings go much farther in Norway than here; at all events, Grieg was thus enabled to give up teaching and conducting and thenceforth to devote himself to the more congenial occupation of composing and making known his works in other lands than his own dear Norway. There, amid the fjords and the magnificent scenery of that northern clime, Grieg quietly passed the remainder of his days, drawing inspiration from his lovely surroundings.

GRIEG IN ENGLAND.

As in the In Memoriam article on Dr. Joachim last month, it may not be unacceptable to English readers if something be said about the introduction of Dr. Grieg's music in England and his visits to this country. The earliest definite date we have been able to find is that of April 18, 1874, when Mr. Edward Dannreuther gave the first performance of the Pianoforte concerto (Op. 16) in England, at a Crystal Palace Saturday concert. That excellent pianist also contributed to the programme-book a lucid analysis of the work, in which he referred to his fellow-student in these words:

> During the term of his studies, whilst taking in mental stock as it were, laying up treasures for future use, he lived mostly in the romantic worlds of Schumann, Mendelssohn, and Chopin, whose works gave the tone to the entire musical life of Leipzig, and especially of the Conservatorium. It may be doubtful whether he counted Bach and Beethoven among his household gods then. It is at all events certain that Liszt, Berlioz, and Wagner have been excluded from his threshold up to this day; which, as far as concerns the production of pure chamber and concert music, is certainly not 'a calamity hard to be borne.'
> The characteristic Scandinavian features of Grieg's musical talents took a tangible shape soon after his return to the north. Danish, Swedish, and Norwegian people's songs and dances there absorbed his fancy. They strengthened his thought, and, in a word, made a man of him. Henceforth his compositions bear the stamp of a particular nationality more clearly than any man's, except perhaps Chopin's.

This leads to a slight digression about the history of this popular and characteristic Concerto. As already stated, it was composed in 1868, during the summer of that year, at the Danish village of Sölleröd. Liszt's verdict upon this creation of the twenty-five-year old composer has also been mentioned. Its first public performance appears to have taken place at Copenhagen in 1869, when the solo part was played by Edmund Neupert, to whom the work is dedicated.* On October 30, 1879, Grieg himself played it at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, with great success. The Concerto had, however, been previously performed (but from manuscript) at a Gewandhaus concert, in aid of the Orchester-Pensionsfonds, by Fräulein Erika Lie (afterwards Madame Nissen), a brilliant Scandinavian pianist, then a young girl of nineteen. It is very amusing to read a criticism of the work contained in a letter of the Leipzig correspondent of the Musical Standard at that time:

> The other two compositions upon which we were called for the first time to pronounce our verdict were nothing to be compared with the above-mentioned [Handel's 'L'Allegro' and Lachner's Suite in C]. . . . With regard to Edvard Grieg's Concerto, there is little praise to be given; and had it not been for the favour in which Mdlle. Lie—the artiste to whose hands was entrusted the interpretation of the effusion—is held by everybody here, no attention would have been bestowed upon it.

'Effusion'—forsooth!

To return to Dannreuther's performance of the Pianoforte concerto at the Crystal Palace. The Musical Times said:

> The Pianoforte Concerto of Edward Grieg, excellently played by Mr. Dannreuther, may also be mentioned as a work of great originality, the young Norwegian composer having evidently dared to think for himself, instead of imitating the style of those who have preceded him. The Concerto was received with the warmest applause.

The Athenæum was rather more cautious:

> The work is strictly orthodox in form, and it possesses individuality of a Scandinavian type, which renders it very interesting, and made a decidedly favourable impression. The pianist, for his very able exposition, was recalled.

No notice of the concert seems to have appeared in The Times!

The success which attended the introduction of Grieg's Pianoforte concerto into England doubtless prompted Mr. Charles Hallé to perform the Sonata for pianoforte and violin in G (Op. 13) at his recital at St. James's Hall, May 29, 1874, Madame Norman-Neruda playing the violin part. At the Saturday Popular Concert of February 6, 1875, Hans von Bülow and Prosper Sainton played the earlier Sonata (in F) for pianoforte and violin (Op. 8). On November 15, 1887, at one of his 'London Symphony Concerts,' Mr. Henschel conducted the Two elegiac melodies for stringed orchestra (Op. 34).

We may pass on to the first public appearance of Edvard Grieg in England, a country he had, however, previously visited in company with his parents. The Philharmonic Society had the honour of again introducing a distinguished composer to an English audience when Grieg stepped on to the platform of St. James's Hall on May 3, 1888, to conduct the Two elegiac melodies referred to above. Those who were present on that interesting occasion will not easily forget the lovely effect the conductor-composer obtained at the end of the second piece ('The last Spring'), when, with his left hand, he gently waved the long sustained final chord through a lovely diminuendo into silence. The present writer cannot recall a similar instance by any conductor of such a perfect fading away of sound. Equally memorable on that occasion was Grieg's performance of his Pianoforte concerto, which gave an added charm to a beautiful work. With what delicacy he played the lovely Adagio, and, by way of strong contrast, the verve, energy and rhythmic 'go' he infused into the last movement, with its exhilarating northern tunes! At this visit, on May 16, 1888, Grieg and his wife gave an evening concert at St. James's Hall. The programme, which consisted entirely of his compositions, was as follows:

Sonata in F major, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 8).
MADAME NORMAN-NERUDA AND THE COMPOSER.

Songs . . . Two eyes of brown.
I love thee.
Wandering in the wood.
MADAME NINA GRIEG.

Pianoforte Solos On the mountains.
Norwegian bridal procession passing by (from Op. 19).
THE COMPOSER.

Romance and Finale from the Sonata, in C minor, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 45).
MADAME NORMAN-NERUDA AND THE COMPOSER.

Songs . . . My song shall be thine, sweet springtime.
In the summer evening.
Good morning.
MADAME NINA GRIEG.

Pianoforte Solos Alla Menuetto (from Op. 7).
Humoresken (from Op. 6).
Norwegian folk-songs and dances (from Op. 17).
THE COMPOSER.

The fascinating manner in which Madame Grieg sang her husband's delightful songs to his delicate accompaniment forms a life-long memory. In the autumn of that year (1888), at the Birmingham Musical Festival, Grieg conducted his Holberg Suite for stringed orchestra, and his Overture 'In Autumn' (Op. 11), originally a pianoforte duet, and performed in its orchestral version for the first time on that occasion. Sir George Grove, who was present, has recorded his impressions of the composer and his music in a characteristic letter dated 'Birmingham, August 30, 1888,' in which he says:

> A very interesting thing was Grieg's overture last night and his conducting of it. How he managed to inspire the band as he did and get such nervous thrilling bursts and such charming sentiment out of them, I don't know. He looks very like Beethoven in the face, I thought, and though he is not so extravagant in his ways of conducting, yet it is not unlike.

The remaining visits of Grieg to England were in 1889, 1894, 1896, 1897, and 1906. On May 10, 1894, the University of Cambridge conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causa. The Musical Times, in recording the event, said:

> The degree which should have been conferred upon Grieg last summer, when the Cambridge University Musical Society celebrated its jubilee, had to be postponed till the 10th of last month, when the chosen representative of Scandinavian music was, if not in the most robust health, sufficiently recovered to journey to Cambridge for the purpose. Grieg's remarkable popularity with all sections of cultivated society—of those whose proclivities are not exceptionally musical as well as of the inner circle of musical enthusiasts—was shown by the warmth of his reception, both in the Senate House and at the Concert in the Guildhall, at which he was afterwards present. Like many great composers before him, Grieg's eminence is not to be measured by his height, and some time was spent in adapting to his stature by means of the domestic pin the doctor's gown lent him for the ceremony, while the saying that 'extremes meet' was amusingly illustrated by the presence on the floor of the Senate House of Dr. Alan Gray, Professor Stanford's successor in the Trinity College organ loft, who, in spite of his innate modesty, must perforce look down upon his professional colleagues.

It is very difficult and not without risk to give the dates of 'first performances in England,' because programmes and announcements of concerts are not always to be relied upon in this respect; therefore, in addition to the dates already given, it may suffice to say that the famous 'Peer Gynt' Suite appears to have been first heard here at Mr. Henschel's London Symphony Orchestra Concert, St. James's Hall, November 20, 1888, when it was received with that enthusiasm which the fanciful music always excites.

THE FUNERAL.

The funeral of Edvard Grieg took place at Bergen on Monday, September 9. The first part of the service was held in the Museum of Art and Industry, after which the body was cremated. Dr. Adolph Brodsky, Principal of the Royal Manchester College of Music and an old friend of the composer, was not only present but he has graphically described the ceremony in the columns of the Manchester Guardian, from which we venture to quote the following extracts:

> The most imposing and the most impressive feature of Grieg's funeral was the crowd. In my estimate there must have been between 40,000 and 50,000 people. There was no cold curiosity, no fighting for places, no stretching of necks to see better; from old man to urchin, all had the same grave expression of face which showed that they felt their loss.
> The programme of the ceremony, which was to begin at noon, was as follows: (1) 'Varen' ('In Spring'), by Grieg, played by the string orchestra; (2) Folk-song, by Grieg, sung by the male choir; (3) the laying down of the wreaths; (4) song for male voices, sung by the same choir, also composed by Grieg; and (5) 'Funeral March' for orchestra, by Grieg. The orchestra was a scratch orchestra gathered from the theatre, music-halls, and amateurs; I offered my services as a violinist, and they were accepted. Halvorsen, conductor of the National Theatre, Christiania, conducted. He is the husband of one of Grieg's nieces and a former pupil of mine from the Leipzig Conservatoire. The Funeral March was composed by Grieg about forty years ago, on the death of his friend Nordraak (who had such a great influence on Grieg as a composer), and is written for a military band only. But the only available military band in Bergen is so miserable that Halvorsen at the eleventh hour orchestrated it for an ordinary orchestra. And he did it so well, and the instrumentation was so completely in Grieg's manner, that it sounded as if it had been done by Grieg himself. It is a beautiful piece, a genuine 'Grieg,' and ought to become in its present form a standing piece on the repertory of the leading orchestras.
> There were fifty-seven wreaths, which had to be 'laid down' by nearly as many delegates; and the Kaiser's delegate, Legationsrat Sheller Steinwartz (himself a good musician and personal friend of Grieg), made the only long oration—and a beautiful one. The German Emperor's wreath came next after the wreath of the King and Queen of Norway, which was 'laid down' by General Nissen. Then came wreaths from the Storthing, from the Norwegian Government, from the municipalities of Bergen and Christiania, from the Imperial Chancellor, von Bülow; from the Royal Academy, Berlin; from the Queen's Hall Orchestra, London; from the Concert Gebouw Orchestra, Amsterdam; and from the Brodsky Quartet, Manchester. As I brought a wreath from the Brodsky Quartet, the committee asked me to take charge of the wreath of the Concert Gebouw Orchestra, which I did.
> In German, I bade our dear friend farewell, and said that his works would remain to give him immortality so long as true and noble art endured. I and the other bearers then lifted the coffin and carried it outside to the hearse—a beautifully decorated car drawn by four black horses. So it stood visible to everybody. As we passed through the streets, the houses draped with flags, all the people uncovered their heads. The procession consisted of hundreds of deputations with standards inscribed with the names of the societies to which the deputations belonged. There were about 10,000 people in the procession. We who followed directly after the hearse were quite out of town when the end of the procession was still passing through the streets of Bergen. All the schools, all the shops, and all the mills were closed. Outside the town we passed through an alley of trees surrounded by the fjords and mountains; the view was overpowering. At a certain spot the hearse stopped, and the procession, with their standards, passed before the hearse, and every deputation lowered their standard before the coffin and passed on. It was nearly an hour before the last standard was lowered. Afterwards we drove to the cemetery, on a hill a few miles outside the town. Kaiser, King, government, towns, professional musicians, students, workmen, peasants—they all were united and led by one idea—to do homage to the remains of Grieg.

Madame Grieg has asked that the following message may be published: 'My most heartfelt thanks to all who honoured the memory of my husband and bestowed their sympathy upon me.—NINA GRIEG.'

For the portrait of Dr. Grieg which forms one of the special supplements of the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES, we are indebted to the courtesy of Mr. Robert Newman.

NOTES ON AN OLD MUSICAL JOURNAL

THE QUARTERLY MUSICAL REGISTER.

Among the books on music yet unwritten is one on the history of English musical periodicals. The lists that hitherto have been drawn up of these journals—many of them meteoric in their brilliance and rapid extinction—are inadequate and inaccurate. It needs some patient investigator with the necessary leisure and knowledge to compile such a history, one that would cover a period of about 130 years—a period full of interest in the development of the art in this country. In the meantime the following notes are offered on a little-known and short-lived periodical entitled The Quarterly Musical Register, which appeared nearly one hundred years ago.

Like other English musical journals, The Quarterly Musical Register owed its initiation to a professional musician. August Friedrich Christoph Kollmann, its editor and proprietor, was a German musician (born about 1756), who in 1784 became chapel-keeper and schoolmaster at the German Chapel Royal, St. James's, a building which stands close to Marlborough House. When, in 1792, George III. presented a chamber organ to the chapel, the instrument was played upon by Kollmann, in his capacity of 'clerk,' till his death on Easter Day, 1829. He was a man of much energy, so much so indeed that, on January 21, 1809, during a large fire at St. James's Palace, he is said to have saved the chapel by standing in the doorway and preventing the firemen from entering to destroy it! Kollmann found further outlet for his energies in writing several theoretical works and in composition. His theoretical output was considerable in that it included the following treatises:

- An essay on musical [!] harmony, according to the nature of that science, and the principles of the greatest musical authors. Folio, 1796.
- An essay on practical musical composition, according to the nature of that science, and the principles of the greatest musical authorities. Folio, 1799; 2nd edn., 1812.
- A practical guide to thorough bass. Folio, 1801.
- A vindication of a passage in the practical guide to thorough-bass against an advertisement of Mr. M. P. King. Folio, 1802.
- A new theory of musical harmony, according to a complete and natural system of that science. Folio, 1806; 2nd edn., 1823.
- A second practical guide to thorough bass. Folio, 1807.
- An introduction to extemporary modulation in six general lessons for the pianoforte or harp, with directions how they may be rendered useful for the violin and violoncello (Op. 11).

Some of Kollmann's compositions bear curious titles, e.g., Op. 8, 'An analysed symphony for the pianoforte, violin, and bass.' His Op. 9 is 'The melody of the hundredth psalm, with examples and directions for a hundred different harmonies, in four parts' (1809). Op. 10, of which a second edition was issued, consists of 'Twelve analysed figures, with double counterpoints in all intervals and introductory explanations,' for two performers on the pianoforte or organ (1823). There also can be placed to his credit 'A Rondo on the chord of the diminished seventh,' a one-sheet publication issued in 1820. He composed a remarkable symphony entitled 'The Shipwreck, or the loss of the East Indiaman Halsewell,' 'a piece of programme-music quite in the taste of the time.' Reference is made to this work on p. 656. It must not be forgotten that Kollmann, who became a naturalized Englishman, was one of the earliest pioneers of Bach's music in this country, as we shall presently see.

The Quarterly Musical Register, in size octavo, made its first appearance in January, 1812; its second and last number is dated April, 1812; therefore as only two numbers (totalling 160 pages) were issued, this early English musical publication met the fate of many of its successors in not surviving its infancy.

A copy of the publication, preserved at the Royal Library, Brussels, contains an interesting autograph letter from Kollmann to Dr. Burney, for a transcript of which we are indebted to the kindness of Mr. J. S. Shedlock. The letter reads:

> DEAR SIR,
> I am much obliged to you for the favour of lending me your Tour through France and Italy which I return: and beg you will oblige me by accepting No. 1 of my Musical Register published Jan. 1, the idea of which you will recollect my having suggested to you many years ago. I hope that the mild winter has been rather advantageous to your weak state of health, and wish that the approaching spring will be still more beneficial to you.
>
> I remain, with greatest regard,
> Dear sir,
> Your > most obedient > humble Serv^{t}.
> A. F. KOLLMANN.
> Priory S^{t}. James's
> Feb. 3^{d} 1812.

Thus it will be seen that Kollmann had long thought of issuing an English journal devoted to music. His foreword in The Quarterly Musical Register—which, with the other extracts, is taken from the copy in Mr. James E. Matthew's extensive library—must be quoted in full:

I. INTRODUCTION.

The present periodical work is intended to promote a more general, and more certain acquaintance, with all that is useful, and interesting, in the study and practice of music, than can be obtained from the treatises, magazines, and other sources of public information hitherto known; and the Editor flatters himself, that the pains which he has taken in musical studies, and researches, during a great part of his life, and an extensive correspondence, will enable him to conduct it to the satisfaction of the public.

The importance of publications of this kind has long been universally acknowledged; for they are one of the best means of supporting the cultivation of an art or science, viz.: by rendering the best masters and productions of it known, and encouraged; by creating a useful emulation among those who excel in it; and by preventing many errors, and false pretences, from gaining upon the public, as fast as otherwise they might have done. And even the degree of success, which such works meet with, seems to indicate the more or less flourishing state of their respective art or science.

The latter may be concluded from the list of former similar publications, which we give in the next article. For the greatest part of them have been carried on, with little intermission, in Germany, as the former principal seat of musical learning, and musical art. But during the last twenty years they have also continued, and increased in number, in England; and this in proportion to the increasing more general study, and cultivation of music in this country than before.

The reason why this work appears under its editor's name, like most of those former works just mentioned; and not, like the modern magazines and reviews in general, with the name of the publisher only, is; because it will be allowed that there is a great difference between a work only collected by an editor, who himself is not involved in its contents, like the parties whose merits or productions are examined in it; and one written as well as collected, by an author, whose own works ought to come under a similar investigation as those of other authors, with which they often must be compared. For in the former case, nothing more is necessary, than the name of a publisher, who can be made responsible for anything illegal in the work. But in the latter case, being that of the present work, it is proper to let the editor himself be known, in order to convince the public, and every party called in question, that he is willing to be answerable even for every impropriety, which may be found or imagined in the work.

The public therefore may be certain, that by this work, nothing can be imposed on them, through false commendation; nor any thing be prejudiced in their opinion, by misrepresentation: and that mistakes will not only be carefully avoided, but also rectified, as soon as discovered.

And on the same grounds every individual stands assured, that his merit, publication, or invention, will be noticed in a fair and liberal manner. To which we may be permitted to add: that though in regard to doctrines, and to cases of a general importance, it will be our duty to the public to be very particular; we shall, in regard to all harmless productions, endeavour to render our criticisms rather instructive, and encouraging, than humiliating to those whom they concern.

No fault can be found with this editorial creed and the doctrines therein promulgated. Alas! that 'the satisfaction of the public' failed to recompense Kollmann for 'the pains which he has taken in musical studies, and researches, during a great part of his life.' It is an old, old story, true to-day even with our boasted advancement in music—the apathy of musicians, especially professional musicians, towards the literature of their art.

Following the 'Introduction' is 'A chronological list of the periodical musical works, of the Historic-critical kind, which have existed before the present Musical Register.' This list, though not complete, is a most useful one, especially in regard to English musical periodicals.

No. iii. is an interesting article entitled 'A retrospect of the State of Music in Great Britain, since the year 1789.' Under the heading 'Treatises' we learn that to Kollmann's 'two new systems of harmony' there was 'shortly to be added a new work by Dr. Crotch' entitled 'Elements of musical composition.' Among the lectures delivered (presumably in 1812) are those by Dr. Crotch, Dr. Callcott, and Samuel Wesley at the Royal Institution; by Wesley and Crotch at the Surry Institution; Dr. Kemp at the Russell Institution and the Pantheon; and Mr. Stevens at Gresham College. The subject of 'Temperament' is referred to in 'the mechanical tempering apparatus proposed by Mr. Hawkes, Mr. Loeshman, and the Rev. Mr. Liston.' The following protest against the harmonic modernization of old songs is not without its application in the present day:

> One thing we have observed, which we can not approve of, viz.: the modernizing of ancient national airs, so as to take away their original characteristics. For the only improvements that can be allowed in them are: the filling up of their harmonies with such chords as the ancients may be supposed to have used at the time those pieces were composed; and the removing of striking incorrections that may be found in them. Whenever a composer is inclined to do more to such pieces, he ought rather to set new ones in imitation of their style, then to destroy those monuments of antiquity, by altering them.

Most excellent advice!

The references to 'organ music' and 'organ playing' in England nearly a century ago, in addition to being historically valuable, will be read with interest by organists. Kollmann says (we quote him literally, including his italicised words and punctuation):

> Though very fine compositions for the organ have been published by Mr. S. Wesley, and by other able masters, they are still for manual keys only, and the use of obligato pedals is not yet promoted by them. But a true idea of the latter begins now to become pretty general, by the increasing circulation of Sebastian Bach's Organ Trios, and of his other works for the Organ, published by Messrs. S. Wesley and Horn.
> . . . .
>
> The art of Organ Playing in England, still labours under two very great disadvantages, viz., the want of Organs as they ought to be, and as they are in other countries; and such salaries for organists, as make great organ playing an object of study and speculation.
> In regard to Organs, it is remarkable, that throughout the whole British empire, and in the most opulent city on the face of the globe, London, there is, according to the best of our enquiries, not one organ equal to those which are frequent in the principal cities of Germany, Holland, and the Netherlands; and also, that the churches of many populous parishes in England, even some of the richest, not far from the metropolis, are without any organ; though a good organ, well played, is allowed as one of the most proper and most noble additions to the solemnity of divine worship, as well as the best means of supporting, and improving general Congregational Psalmody.
> And in regard to the Salaries of Organists also, it is strange that in general they are so much less than those abroad; where, for the mere playing on Sundays, and for a short attendance on Saturdays, the organist has a genteel competency; and all that he can earn besides, by teaching during the whole week, is for his particular encouragement.
> There is consequently not the same enticement, for making organ playing a particular study in this country, as abroad. And yet numerous able performers on that instrument are found in England, among whom Messrs. Charles and Samuel Wesley deserve particular notice; the latter gentleman as one of the finest extempore Fugue players on any given subject, of the present age.

Military Bands are included in the survey. We learn that

> The Military Bands of Music have been much enlarged, and the serpent, trombono, and the German flute, as well as the different kinds of smaller flutes, have been introduced in them, which formerly were not generally used. England therefore has at present a great number of excellent performers on the different wind instruments, and it might be wished that their music were not so often drowned, by the drumming, and other noise, with which it is too frequently accompanied.

Some of the 'odds and ends' gleaned from this interesting Retrospect are summarized as follows:

> That it is 'highly unjust' for musicians to perform at benefit concerts without remuneration for their services.
>
> That additional keys have been added to the pianoforte, 'above the former high F, three lines and space over the treble stave; and below the former low F, four lines under the bass stave.'
> That Mr. Percival's new invention for the French horn, trumpet, and bugle horn, provides 'six holes for the fingers, by the use of which each of those instruments gives all the tones and semitones.'

'Of John Sebastian Bach, and his Works' is the title of the fourth article. This recalls the interesting fact that Kollmann intended in 1799 to issue Bach's 'Das wohltemperirte Klavier' in England before the work had made its appearance in print in the composer's own country! 'So great an emulation,' as he proudly and justly calls his project, at once roused the foreign publishers to action in that they seem to have hurriedly issued the work, the earliest editions coming from the houses of Nägeli (Zurich) and Simrock (Bonn) both in the year 1800, fifty years after Bach's death! Kollmann thereupon relinquished his intention to publish this great classic here on account of the importation of the foreign copies; but he was the first to print one of the '48'—the Prelude and Fugue in C (No. 1 of Part II.)—and in an English publication. Moreover, in 1806, he issued an English edition of the 'Chromatic Fantasia' bearing the title:

> John Sebastian Bach's celebrated Fantasia Chromatica for the Piano Forte, with some additions by A. F. C. Kollmann, organist of His Majesty's German Chapel, St. James's. London: Preston.

Unlike many modern editors, Kollmann was conscientious enough to indicate his 'additions' by small notes. It is interesting to find that Kollmann (as early as 1806) was probably the first to write out the arpeggios in the manner indicated by Mendelssohn in later years (see his letter to his sister, Fanny Hensel, November 14, 1840), and subsequently carried out to a still greater extent by Hans von Bülow.*

* For further information on this interesting and important subject see a series of articles on 'Bach's Music in England' which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES from September to December, 1896; also 'A Bach Myth' in the same journal for March, 1885, p. 131.

The remaining articles in this initial number of The Quarterly Musical Register need not detain us. It may suffice to give their titles:

v. An Account of the Theoretical works of A. F. C. Kollmann, Organist of His Majesty's German Chapel at St. James's.
vi. Review of Dr. Callcott's 'A Musical Grammar.'
vii. Remarks on the artificial temperaments of Organs, and Piano Fortes, invented by Mr. Hawkes, Mr. Loeshman, and the Rev. Mr. Liston.
viii. Explanation of the musical pieces given in this number (4 plates of examples in music-type).

The contents of No. II. (the last issued) of The Quarterly Musical Register (April, 1812) are, on the whole, of less interest than those of No. I. The articles are as follows:

ix. A retrospect of the State of Music in Germany since the beginning of the last century.
x. A parallel between Raphael and Mozart.
xi. An account of the theoretical works of A. F. C. Kollmann (concluded).
xii. Review of Dr. Callcott's 'Musical Grammar' (concluded).
xiii. On the origin, progress, and present state of music in Bath, 1812. By favour of a correspondent.
xiv. Abstract from a letter to the Editor, dated Edinburgh, Jan. 21, 1812.
xv. Abstract from a letter to the Editor, dated Bristol, Feb. 14, 1812.
xvi. Remarks on the artificial temperaments, &c., invented by Mr. Hawkes, Mr. Loeshman, and the Rev. Mr. Liston. (concluded).
xvii. On the Abbé Vogler's system of simplification in the construction of organs.
xviii. A quarterly catalogue of musical publications, inventions, &c.

The letter from Edinburgh, No. xiv. in the above list, may be quoted as showing how Scotland stood musically in A.D. 1812:

> Sir,
> I should be very willing to give you, from time to time, an account of the state of music, and of musical occurrences in this part of the Island, if music, either in theory or practice were on a respectable footing amongst us. But alas! it is far from being so. Scotland, however renowned for her poets, historians, philosophers, and warriors, has yet made very little progress in the fine arts. Except our beautiful national melodies, which of late years have been rendered doubly interesting by the exquisite accompaniments of Haydn, and the charming verses of Burns, we have nothing to boast of, that can be called musical composition: for though our dance tunes are lively and full of spirit, and much prized by the natives, who, like most other nations, are passionately fond of dancing, yet those tunes cannot be dignified with the name of composition.
> With respect to the practice of music, it is confined almost entirely to the fair sex. The very few gentlemen who play the flute, violin, or violoncello, take to it too late in life to attain any proficiency. Fathers in general have an absurd prejudice against their sons' learning music, thinking it would lead them to idleness and dissipation: though to men of fortune, and all those who have much leisure, instrumental music always appeared to me the best possible resource against ennui, and an antidote to dissipation.
> Every man, however, who can afford to buy a piano forte, has his daughters taught to play a little; and, among the higher ranks, the French harp, as well as the piano forte is beginning to be pretty common. We have a few young ladies who can play and relish Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven; but in general, they are contented with superficial music, and perform it but poorly: while in vocal music, with some very few exceptions, they are still much more in the infancy of the art.
> We had, for above half a century, a weekly concert, upon a most liberal and agreeable footing. It was supported by a subscription of the nobility and gentry, no tickets were sold, but were given to every genteel stranger that applied for admission. In the outset of the establishment, such of the subscribers as could play a little, made part of the orchestra, but those fell off as the music became more intricate; and, during a good many of the latter years of the institution, the performance was entirely professional. From various causes it was given up twelve years ago; and since that time we have had six or eight concerts annually, chiefly from Mr. Corri, who generally engages a singer or two, and a concerto player from England; and in this way we have opportunities of hearing most of the great performers by turns.
> You will perceive, from the foregoing short account, that good music is yet quite an exotic in Scotland; and that it is impossible from this quarter to make any communications at all interesting to the musical cognoscenti. In the Highlands, there is nothing like music, they are prodigiously fond of the great, noisy, and utterly inharmonious bagpipe!
> We have in Edinburgh two good public organs and a good chamber one by Snetzler; the rest are but so so. You know, I presume, that in the established Church of Scotland, there are no organs, nor instruments of any description! You will not be at all surprised, therefore, when I tell you, that our psalmody is wretchedly bad: indeed worse cannot easily be conceived.

From No. II. of Kollmann's periodical we learn that 'Erard has produced his patent Harp, with pedals for sharps and flats to all the seven notes of the diatonic scale'; that Mr. W. Bundy, of Camden Town, produced a patent pianoforte, all the strings being covered with platina wire; that the patent of the transposing pianoforte invented by Mr. Riley of Hull is sold to Broadwood; also that Crotch continued to deliver his Lectures on music at the Surry Institution, and that Dr. Kemp discoursed on the art at the Great Assembly Room, Cateaton Street.

The foregoing outline may serve as a specimen of what the author of 'The history of English musical periodicals' will find in the course of his researches when he comes to write that book, one that should contribute in no small degree to the history of the art in this country. Will it ever be written?

HOW DO WE PLAY WITH EXPRESSION?

Artist.—So you will not learn the pianoforte any more?

Scientist.—No; the methods of teaching are too empirical for me.

Artist.—Empirical! The methods that have been perfected by the brains of Plaidy, Tausig and Leschetitzky during half-a-century, empirical?

Scientist.—At least they are quite indefinite and unscientific. I cannot find one of them that amounts to more than 'Try to play and keep on trying till you can do it.'

Artist.—Well, what else would you suggest?

Scientist.—I have had to use my own brains to learn to avoid a dozen muscular faults which none of these great teachers have said a word about, and I have learnt in fifteen years what I now see I might have learnt in five—how to produce tone of infinite shades and how to move my fingers with extreme velocity.

Artist.—And isn't that good enough—even in fifteen years?

Scientist.—No: it does not make me an artist.

Artist.—Artistic feeling, my friend, is not to be taught.

Scientist.—Well, I don't know! I look at the stage, and I see hundreds of young men and women beginning as utter sticks and eventually learning by the practice of their art to impersonate and to portray every species of emotion in the most convincing manner. Now I will not argue the question as to whether they feel the sentiments they illustrate. The point is that they have learnt what to do to make their performance appeal to the hearts of the audience. It is a matter of technique. You remember the story—a perfectly true one—of Modjeszka reciting the Polish alphabet so as to dissolve a drawing-room full of people into tears? If this can be learnt on the stage it can be taught, and not only there but in all the arts. Here, for instance, is a piece in which occur the indications con dolore, appassionato, con anima, espressivo, and a great many more. Why has no one laid down in words just what one is to do in order to play appassionato, for instance?

Artist.—Do? Why this, to be sure (plays passage).

Scientist.—If I could record that with a phonograph it might be of some use; but will you kindly explain to me what you did and how you did it?

Artist.—What I did? Surely you heard? How I did it? I felt the intensity of the phrase and—

Scientist.—I didn't ask what you felt, but I want to know the mechanical means whereby you made it apparent.

Artist.—Mechanical means! There are none: it is feeling, you—icicle!

Scientist.—Pardon me, our feelings may or may not have a physical origin, but all outward expression of them can only be mechanical. Now, let me teach you something. I noticed the mechanical means by which you gave an intense expression of passion to that mild epithet 'icicle.' Can you tell me how you did that?

Artist.—It was an explosion of feeling, I suppose.

Scientist.—There you go with your 'feeling.' I see you are no teacher. It was just a pause of a quaver's duration between the pronoun and the noun, together with a strong sforzando on the first of the bar. Now I have found out what to do to produce the effect of a sudden expression of scorn or anger in music. But why the dickens couldn't you have taught me that?

Artist.—You ought not to want teaching such things: you ought to feel them.

Scientist.—A very nice excuse to save the teacher trouble, but a very poor consolation for the inquiring pupil who can get nothing but explosions of temper out of his master. How would 'feeling' teach you tone-production, for instance?

Artist.—Surely, by listening for results.

Scientist.—And if these were never good? Shall I tell you how I learned the secret? I was watching a lot of burly farmers at a fair trying their strength at one of those things that you hit with a hammer, and an indicator runs up a slot in a vertical marking-board. One actually broke the machine, but none sent the marker more than half-way up. Presently up came a fine lad of sixteen—a blacksmith's 'prentice. He whirled the hammer like a flash of lightning and up shot the marker to the top, ringing the bell with a clear sound. He did it thrice without the least difficulty, while all the people marvelled at his strength.

Artist.—That was knack, of course.

Scientist.—Are you any the nearer to doing it when you have given it a name? Why don't you call it feeling at once? Anyhow, I saw how success depended on the increasing velocity of the hammer, and consequently learnt how to do it myself. And by applying the same principle in miniature to the swing of the finger to the key, I learnt how to produce a fortissimo with the minimum of effort. Now, if you will show me in a similarly definite way what to do in order to play con dolore and all the rest—there must be something—I will return to my pianoforte, otherwise I shall seek some more profitable study.

Artist.—You will find no art profitable without feeling.

Scientist.—Ugh! F. C.

IN A MUSICAL LIBRARY.—II.

Although not a musician of the first rank, Grétry, with his pleasant melody and dramatic instinct, exactly hit the taste of the French nation. To the musical world in general the interest of his fifty operas is now purely historical. If anyone remembers the air 'O! Richard, O mon Roi!' or the quintet from 'Lucile,' 'Où peut on être mieux qu'au sein de la famille,' it is rather for its political than its musical associations.

The main events of his life are pleasantly recounted in his self-complacent 'Essais.' For present purposes it is only necessary to say that Grétry was born at Liége in 1741, and that in his latter days he retired to a house called 'l'Ermitage,' at Enghien, Montmorency, about fourteen miles from Paris, which formerly had been occupied by Jean Jacques Rousseau. There Grétry proposed to end his days, when unfortunately his peace of mind was destroyed by the murder of his nearest neighbour, a miller. So completely was he unnerved that he returned to Paris, but his health was shattered, and feeling his end at hand he was removed to the Hermitage, where he breathed his last on September 24, 1813. His death was the occasion of a series of events of much interest which are recounted at length—indeed at too great length—and with a great want of arrangement, in a curious work entitled 'Cause célèbre relative à la Consécration du Cœur de Grétry.' Paris, 1825, 8vo.

In the year 1764 there was born at La Fère en Tardenois, in the department Aisne, a certain Louis Victor Flamand. He was educated for a religious life, but having tried two different orders decided that he had no call for that life, which he abandoned for commerce, in which he made a good fortune as a furniture dealer and upholsterer. In 1787 he married; having been blessed with seven children, he divorced his wife in 1794, and shortly after re-married, was again divorced, took back his first wife, from whom he again separated, to marry a niece of the composer Grétry. There is no record that this union was otherwise than happy; he was inordinately vain of his alliance with the composer, whose name he added to his own, and really seems to have been convinced that much of the celebrity of his uncle by marriage centred in himself.

Grétry appears to have been a man of great good sense. Before his death he discussed with Flamand the place of his burial, deciding on Paris on the ground that none of his heirs would be in a position to live at the Hermitage, and that it would therefore pass out of the family, and thus involve the removal of his body. No question of the heart seems to have arisen, nor does the very businesslike holograph will (of which a facsimile is given) contain any formal directions. His property was left in equal shares to his seven nephews and nieces, children of his brother Jean Joseph, all of whom he had educated.

M. Flamand at once took the direction of matters on his own shoulders. The day after the death of Grétry he visited the Cimetière de l'Est, accompanied by his brother-in-law, M. Rénié, to choose a grave, and was fortunate enough to find a site next to that of Delille, 'the French Virgil.' 'I cried out, "Mon ami! it is there—it is close to Delille that our illustrious relative should rest." We ran at once to the keeper to secure the spot.'

He had already invited the rest of the family to consent to the extraction of the composer's heart, with a view of depositing it at the Hermitage if either of them acquired the house, or failing that, of offering it to the town of Liége. To his great surprise this suggestion was rejected by nearly all the relatives. 'This gave me great trouble,' says M. Flamand, 'but I maintained the hope of preserving it from corruption,' and in spite of opposition he carried out his design.

When the body was placed in a coffin Flamand took the precaution of securing the attendance of M. Damien, a local doctor, hoping to induce him to remove the heart 'à l'insu des opposans.' This Damien declared to be impossible, being no doubt aware of the family feeling. Returning to Paris to complete arrangements, he journeyed back in a mourning coach accompanied by a hearse to convey the body to Grétry's rooms in Paris, but before starting he made another unsuccessful attempt to induce Damien to carry out his wishes. It is a point of interest that 'M. Neukomm, jeune compositeur,' afterwards the well-known Chevalier Neukomm, was also present and made an unsuccessful attempt to take a cast of the head.

'Persevering always in my design of saving the heart of Grétry,' says M. Flamand, 'the idea occurred to me of persuading the family to give my uncle a lead coffin. Opinions were divided; but the majority carried it; then I determined to make a last attempt. A surgeon assisted in transferring the body; I begged him to operate; it would have been very easy. I cannot conceive what stood in his way. I was compelled to yield, but my love for Grétry suggested to me several other more favourable methods.'

It was, however, imperative to carry out the funeral, and as the tomb by the side of the 'French Virgil' was not ready, the coffin was placed in a temporary grave. Discussions arose in the family about the monument. 'I overcame them all,' says M. Flamand, 'with triumph, and succeeded in erecting the one now to be seen.' For two months the body remained in its temporary resting place, then came M. Flamand's opportunity and he rose with the occasion. 'Anxious to avail myself of this sad moment to carry out my design, I addressed with the greatest secrecy a request to M. le Baron Pasquier, prefect of police. The whole family was in ignorance of this application, in such dread was I of interruption.' This request definitely asked for authorisation to remove the heart for the purpose of offering to the town of Liége, and professed to have the concurrence of several members of the family. This obtained, the services were engaged of M. Souberbielle, surgeon-major of the Guards, and in the presence of witnesses this heart, 'which was endowed with such eminent qualities, this heart which I had had so much trouble in rescuing from the corruption to which the majority of his ungrateful nephews would have consigned it, this heart which had caused so much tribulation in securing to France,' was handed to M. Souberbielle for embalmment and for enclosure in a 'coffret d'étain,' which I am afraid means pewter; one could have supposed silver none too precious! A procès-verbal of the transaction was drawn up, which asserts that the whole family concurred!

M. Flamand had carried his point, and was in possession of the treasure, and now his troubles began. Being at that time unable to agree with his co-heirs on a price for the Hermitage, he wrote, of course without consulting the family, to the Prefect of the Department, and to the Maire of Liége, making the offer of the heart to the town which had given him birth, in both cases asking for a prompt reply. It was not till January 3, 1814, that the Maire wrote requesting Flamand to send off the box containing the precious remains by return of post (par le premier courier), and that he would acknowledge receipt when to hand. The idea of sending so invaluable an object by ordinary conveyance was too much for his loving nephew; he therefore treated the communication with silent contempt. Moreover, in the interval Liége had ceased to be in French territory, and another circumstance had arisen which altered the conditions; M. Flamand had succeeded in acquiring the Hermitage, and he therefore determined (he asserts with the consent of the family) to deposit the heart in a monument to be erected in the grounds for the purpose. This was carried out with proper pomp, and the blessing of the Bishop of Versailles, on July 15, 1816. The monument consisted of a marble pillar surmounted by a bust of Grétry, of which a lithograph is given in the book.

On June 15, 1821—five years after the inauguration of the monument—there appears on the scene a demoiselle Keppenn. Who she was and how she was interested in the matter does not appear. In a letter to Flamand she declared herself charged with instructions from the authorities of Liége to claim the carrying out of his original offer; she also made it her business to induce several members of the Grétry family to join in this demand. Her letter was followed up by a personal visit accompanied by certain legal functionaries. This demand was of course rejected with scorn. Then began a long legal contest fought out with the greatest bitterness on both sides. Details would be tedious. Much of the trouble was caused from the fact that in his original letter Flamand stated that in offering the heart he was only carrying out the wish of Grétry. This statement Flamand asserts was only a rhetorical flourish, inserted at the suggestion of a friend, and actually contrary to fact. The will is silent on this point. In the course of litigation a seal was placed on the monument on behalf of the Liége authorities. M. and Madame Flamand Grétry, dissolved in tears at this outrage, were at the moment revived by the announcement of a proposed visit from the Duchesse de Berri. On June 19, 1823, 'a day to be for ever remembered,' she arrived with a large suite, all as well as the august princess, mounted on 'le rustique animal des habitans de la campagne,' presumably the donkey. The Duchess was no doubt staying at Enghien for the benefit of the waters, the famous heart was an excuse for a morning's ride. It pleased Grétry to consider the visit a recognition of his rights, and he celebrated it by erecting a bust of the Duchess with proper solemnities.

A few weeks later the representatives of the law appeared with a determination to carry off the heart. Warned in time, Flamand secured the presence of the Maire and a body of his neighbours, whose opposition was so vigorous that the legal authorities retired, re infectâ, nor was a similar attempt on November 14 any more successful. Full of resource, Flamand then determined to erect a chapel to contain the heart, at the edge of his grounds, and to hand it over to the civil and clerical authorities. He gives a plan and an elevation of the building, but whether it was carried out does not appear, but this is certain, that in 1828 the Liégois carried off the heart in triumph, and that M. Flamand Grétry found that the bulk of his fortune had disappeared.

In celebration of this final result a M. Frémolle published 'Hommage aux Mânes de Grétry,' dedicated to the Friends of Art. It begins:

De Grétry mon ame est éprise;
Je veux, en voulant ses accord,
Honorer par mon entreprise
Cet habitant des sombres bords—

a lilt which in sixteen stanzas of ten lines each becomes a little tedious.

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

'The One Hundred and Eighty-fourth Meeting of the Three Choirs of Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford, for the benefit of the widows and orphans of clergymen of the three dioceses'—to adopt the official title of this venerable music-making—was successfully held at Gloucester on September 8, 10, 11, 12 and 13. Perfect summer weather prevailed throughout the entire week, and the picturesque cathedral—one of the loveliest of all our mother-churches—looked serenely beautiful bathed in the brilliant sunshine and canopied by a sky that was cloudless, blue, and fair.

Of the trinity of cities where this ancient music-meeting is in rotation held, Gloucester has more than one claim to distinction. There, in 1757 and during the lifetime of the composer, Handel's 'Messiah' was first performed at a Three Choirs Festival, though not in the cathedral, but in the Boothall! At Gloucester (in 1847), a few weeks before the composer's premature death, Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' in its present form, obtained its earliest festival performance; and (in 1841) the 'Hymn of Praise,' as revised by Mendelssohn, was first heard in this country. Sixty years have come and gone since Father Willis, in rebuilding the Gloucester organ, obtained his first 'Cathedral job,' as he called it. In the roomy and comfortable official residence of the organist in Palace Yard, Samuel Sebastian Wesley abode for the last eleven years of his life; there the composer of 'The Wilderness'—that great classic of English church music—drew his last breath under the shadow of the cathedral of which he was its most distinguished 'chief musician.' And was it not at the Gloucester Festival of 1868 that one Hubert Parry, then a young man just out of his teens, made his début as a festival composer?

As in previous years the Festival of 1907 was fittingly preluded by a 'Great Opening Service'—in which the full orchestra and festival choir took part—held in the Cathedral on Sunday afternoon, September 8, at 3 p.m. For the opening voluntary, Dr. Joseph W. G. Hathaway, a native of Gloucestershire, had specially written an appropriate Prelude entitled 'In Te, Domine speravi.' This concise and effective composition is scored for strings, organ, brass and drums. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Sir Charles Stanford's setting in the key of G, and the two anthems were from the pens of two former and much-esteemed organists of the cathedral, Dr. C. Harford Lloyd and Mr. C. Lee Williams, these well-written and singable compositions being respectively entitled 'O give thanks' and 'O Lord, Thou art my God.'

The sermon was preached by the Bishop of Gloucester (Dr. Gibson). In expounding his text—'That they may enter in through the gates into the city' (Revelation xxii., 14)—the preacher uttered some wise words on the highest use of Art. He said:

> What is the place and function of Art generally, and music in particular, in relation to the Celestial City? You may, of course, make any art an end in itself, and, proclaiming your belief in Art for Art's sake, rest satisfied with sensations of delight and wonder, asking and seeking nothing more from it, as you abandon yourself to the emotional luxury of pleasure or excitement which it promotes. You may do this, if you will. But you may also do something with it that is far nobler and worthier. You may make it an avenue along which you draw ever nearer to God—a road which brings you straight to the Gate Beautiful, through which, if you pass, you shall find yourself inside the Celestial City itself. It was the perception of this truth that led to the complete and entire change that passed over the attitude of the Christian Church towards Art in the early centuries. In the infancy of the Church Christians would have none of it. It appeared to them to be so steeped in an impure heathenism that it could only draw them away from God. They looked askance at it, as if it was wrong and sensuous in itself—an evil thing. But by degrees a change came, and truer views prevailed. Men saw deeper into the heart of things, and made the discovery that Art might be rescued from the degradation into which it had fallen. They learnt that the impure associations were accidental, and no part of Art itself. They found that Art might become a way along which men might be drawn nearer to God, and therefore they took it and baptised it into the Church of Christ and made it to minister to His glory; and long since Art in its varied branches—architecture and painting, and music and sculpture—has learnt, like the Eastern magi, to pour out its richest treasures at the feet of the Redeemer as an oblation to Him of the best that it has to offer.

Were not the Bishop's words fully exemplified in the various works that were performed at the Festival?

The whole of Monday was devoted to rehearsals in the cathedral and Shire Hall, to the renewing of old friendships and to the making of new. In regard to the choral and orchestral forces engaged, it is again satisfactory to record that the choir was entirely supplied by the Gloucester, Worcester and Hereford Festival Societies. According to the official list the choir numbered 274 voices, distributed thus: Sopranos (including 13 boys), 83; contraltos (including 12 altos), 60; Tenors, 64; Basses, 67. The excellent orchestra (led by Mr. W. Frye Parker) comprised some of the best players from London, while Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, organist of Gloucester Cathedral, conducted the Festival, this being his fourth appearance in that capacity.

The Festival proper opened on Tuesday morning with Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' preceded by the National Anthem as arranged by Sir Edward Elgar. So familiar a work as 'Elijah' is favourable for obtaining a true estimate of the capabilities of the choir. I have little hesitation in awarding them full marks for the blending of voices, quality of tone, and artistic refinement. Not so, however, in the important matters of accent and attack, perfect enunciation of words, and dramatic perception. 'Elijah' furnished instances of these shortcomings in 'Thanks be to God'—in which the initial word failed to emphasise all the gratitude that should be expressed by a water-famined community—the Baal choruses, and 'Be not afraid.' With regard to 'Thanks be to God' let me refer to the importance which Mendelssohn attached to dramatic perception—making his music a real, living thing, and getting behind the mere crotchets and quavers, or illuminating them with the electric-light of reality. I happen to possess the original autograph of the English libretto of 'Elijah' in the handwriting of William Bartholomew, with pencilled annotations by Mendelssohn himself. In that chain of incidents which culminates, or which should culminate, in the whole-souled outpouring 'Thanks be to God,' Bartholomew has headed the various sections thus: 'Elijah,' 'The Youth' and 'Chorus.' Now, what has Mendelssohn done? He has run his pencil through the word 'Chorus' and has substituted—'The People'! Here it is, in a very slightly reduced facsimile, for every chorus-singer and choral conductor to read, mark, learn and inwardly digest.

This subtle touch, and yet one of supreme importance, is the window through which we can see the working of Mendelssohn's mind. We may fancy the composer's saying: 'No Greek chorus methods here: I want my music to be sung as if by people dying of thirst, and greeting the long-sought-for and anxiously awaited rain in overwhelming tones of grateful praise as the waters rush along.' The lack of dramatic perception—using the word dramatic in its highest and best sense—and the other blemishes to which I have referred are common faults in English choral technique which must be eradicated. Curative measures should be constant in their application and thoroughness at every rehearsal of a choir or of a choral society, conductor and singers using every endeavour to poetise the music entrusted to their care, and not resting content at the half-way house of time and tune along the road which leads to perfection in choral singing.

The principal soloists in 'Elijah' at Gloucester were Miss Gleeson-White, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies—the last-named again distinguishing himself in his vivid impersonation of the Prophet—the minor parts being sustained by Miss Nora Newport, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Spencer Thomas and Mr. Paul Edmonds, while the music assigned to the youth was sung by Master Collins.

The performances on Tuesday evening and Wednesday morning were devoted to Sir Edward Elgar's twin oratorios 'The Apostles' and 'The Kingdom,' those musical mosaics which so reverently illustrate important incidents in the life of our Lord. Broken only by the interval of 'nature's sweet restorer,' the juxtaposition of the two works afforded a good opportunity of judging them from the standpoints of continuity and complement, at all events until the third part of the trilogy appears. The result more than confirms previous impressions that both oratorios are steeped in high ideals and reverence for their exalted themes. Their manifold beauties have all along been admitted, and repeated hearings go to prove that the composer has infused his music with an earnestness of purpose that excites admiration and kindles the spirit of devotion in the sympathetic listener. The soloists in 'The Apostles' were Madame Emily Squire, Miss Marie Brema, Mr. Gervase Elwes, Mr. Dalton Baker, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies and Mr. Plunket Greene; in 'The Kingdom,' Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies. That the composer, who conducted both performances, was well satisfied with the rendering his works received is evidenced in a letter he addressed to Dr. Brewer, which reads: 'Can you somehow convey to the ladies and gentlemen of the choir and orchestra my sincere thanks for the splendid performances of my works? I shall be very grateful if you will do so.'

The second part of the programme on Wednesday morning (the 11th) opened with Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Christ in the wilderness,' conducted by the composer. Although this work was stated to have been 'composed for this festival,' it is really a selection from an oratorio—or to be more exact, a symphony, with solo and choruses—entitled 'Christus,' published about seven years ago. In its present form the work consists of a Prelude (for orchestra), a recitative for baritone (the words from Mark i., 9 and Luke v., 16), a Symphony, entitled 'The wilderness,' the course of which is interrupted by a second baritone recitative (Luke iv. 18), sung by Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies in the distance, as if in the wilderness apart. To the symphony succeeds a mystic chorus for two choirs (unaccompanied), 'He was oppressed and he was afflicted' (Isaiah liii., 7-10); then follows a brilliant soprano solo, well sung by Miss Agnes Nicholls, 'The wilderness and the solitary place' (Isaiah xxxv.), the whole concluding with an Epilogue, for chorus and orchestra, 'Arise, shine, for thy light is come,' &c. It cannot be denied that Mr. Bantock has written picturesque music in this work. The two themes of the Prelude, labelled 'Resolution' and 'Faith,' are well contrasted and dignified. If the Symphony is intended to convey the desolation associated with a wilderness, its highly-coloured orchestration is not quite obvious. The solemnity of the mystic chorus (a capella) and the exultant nature of the Epilogue afforded welcome contrasts. But what shall be said of the soprano solo? It certainly fell upon one's ears in a most startling manner. Daintily scored for wood-wind, harp and tambourine, it is cast in a secular mould, so much so that the mind's eye almost pictures the vocalist dancing as she sings words made familiar by S. S. Wesley's music. The oriental proclivities of Mr. Bantock are well known, and therefore they may have prompted him to set this remarkable Isaiah chapter in an unconventional manner. If so, there is little more to be said, except that he has succeeded in composing an attractive song of which the orchestral accompaniment is cleverly coloured after the Eastern manner; but while this setting of the prophet's words forms a striking contrast to the solemn nature of the work, its appropriateness is certainly open to question.

Glazounov's Symphony in C minor (No. 6) concluded the morning's music.

In the evening of Wednesday the usual 'Grand Concert' was given in the Shire Hall before a crowded audience. Subjoined is the complete programme:

PART I.

Overture .. The cricket on the hearth A. C. Mackenzie.
Song .. .. ..Too late.. .. Ivor A. Atkins.
Mr. John Coates.
Violin solo .. Concerto in D .. .. Beethoven.
Mischa Elman.
Song .. La Fiancée du Timbalier Saint-Saëns.
Miss Marie Brema.
Orchestral Poem A phantasy of life and love F. H. Cowen.
(Conducted by the Composer.)

PART II.

Scherzo Fantastique ..Caliban.. .. ..W. H. Reed.
(First performance, and conducted by the Composer.)
Three Elizabethan Pastorals .. A. Herbert Brewer.
a. An Idyll.
b. Amongst the willows.
c. The Morris Dance.
Mr. John Coates.
Violin Solos {Aria for the G string / Preludium in E major} .. ..Bach.
Mischa Elman.
Five Songs of the Sea, with Chorus (Op. 91) C. V. Stanford.
1. Drake's drum. | 3. Devon, O Devon.
2. Outward bound. | 4. Homeward bound.
5. The Old Superb.
Soloist, Mr. Plunket Greene.
Overture .. .. Di Ballo .. .. Sullivan.

The above selection speaks for itself. A word must, however, be said about the novelty of the evening, a Scherzo Fantastique, having for its subject 'Caliban,' composed by Mr. W. H. Reed, a member of the orchestra and an artist who does good work in and around Gloucester. Why Mr. Reed should have selected so repulsive a subject as Caliban for the exercise of his muse is a mystery. If a subject is necessary, surely there are many that would furnish a composer like Mr. Reed with thoughts more worthy of his creative gifts than monsters like Caliban. That the work is cleverly conceived and brilliantly orchestrated must be admitted, and it was well played by the composer's colleagues.

As so many excellent performances are now given in each of the cities constituting this annual meeting of the Three Choirs, it is a question whether the evening concert—a relic of the time when evening performances were not given in the cathedral—should not follow the example of the Ball by being given up. Its elimination from the festival scheme would afford a welcome break in the week's music and give a much-needed rest to both performers and listeners.

Thursday morning brought with it a varied programme. America was represented by an organ concerto composed by Dr. Horatio Parker, the solo part of which was admirably played by Dr. G. R. Sinclair, organist of Hereford Cathedral, to whom the work is dedicated. Laid out on classical lines the concerto breathes a modern spirit in the prominence it gives to the orchestra, the introduction of passages for a solo violin, and so on, and unlike Handel's concertos, for instance, the organ is more or less subordinated as a solo instrument. The result is variegated work, so to speak, of which the most attractive feature is an Allegretto movement of great charm.

To the organ concerto succeeded Sir Hubert Parry's Sinfonia Sacra, 'The Love that casteth out fear,' written for the last Gloucester Festival. What was said in these columns on its production in 1904 will bear repetition now: 'The lofty idealism of the libretto (compiled and partly written by the composer himself) is suited to the spirit of the most idealistic of the arts; its simple, logical argument, leading to a momentous conclusion, suggests a fine series of crises, along which one proceeds to a strong and forcible culmination.' And in regard to the music: 'it is well thought out, absolutely appropriate in its expression, and as earnest, dignified, and, at the same time, tender, as the subject demands.' The performance, under Sir Hubert's baton, was excellent, especially the singing of the invisible choir, their strains falling upon the ear with peculiar charm. The soloists were Miss Marie Brema and Mr. Plunket Greene. A word of praise is the just due of Miss Jessie King, the second soprano soloist of the invisible choir, for her pure vocalization and especially her clear enunciation of the words and their poetic interpretation, qualities all too rare even in singers of the highest reputation. Bach was inadequately represented in the festival scheme by a single chorus, 'Now shall the grace,' which seems to have gone astray from some unknown cantata. On future occasions the great Cantor should be allowed to deliver his message through one of his splendid Church Cantatas.

After the luncheon hour Verdi's 'Requiem' was most beautifully rendered—indeed, it was the finest achievement of the choir and orchestra throughout the whole festival. I retain vivid recollections of those masterly performances of the work, under Verdi's own direction, in the year 1875, and I have no hesitation in saying that, chorally and orchestrally, the Gloucester performance fully reached the level of excellence, if it did not exceed that, associated in my mind with those memorable evenings at the Royal Albert Hall thirty-two years ago. Dr. Brewer and his colleagues in the interpretation of the work are to be very warmly congratulated on their meritorious achievement. The soloists were Madame De Vere-Sapio, Miss Marie Brema, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Dalton Baker.

At the evening performance on Thursday, the place of honour was given to the orchestra, who played Brahms's Variations on the Chorale 'St. Antoni' (Haydn), with that finish which characterized their interpretation throughout the week. 'Emmaus: a Biblical Scene,' composed and conducted by Dr. Herbert Brewer, then followed. Written for the Gloucester Festival of 1901, this meditative and sincere work received a very impressive rendering by the soloists, Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. John Coates, orchestra and choir. The gem of the work is the chorus, 'O love most wonderful!' by reason of its melodic charm and true expressiveness. Dr. Brewer's 'Biblical Scene' ought to find general acceptance as a church cantata. In the absence of an orchestra it could very well be given with organ accompaniment. The addition of a concluding chorale, as setting its seal on all that goes before, might be supplied by a well-known hymn, sung by choir and congregation to a familiar tune.

Special interest was excited in an 'extra' in the evening's music, the said 'extra' being Beethoven's Romance in F, for violin, played by Mischa Elman. As in the same composer's Concerto at the Shire Hall, the youthful violinist again gave abundant proof of his marvellous gifts. The performance of the Romance in the crowded cathedral was a rare and memorable event in the long history of the Three Choirs Festival, and as from the organ loft I gazed at those magnificent Norman pillars in the nave, this thought crossed my mind: What would the earliest worshippers in Gloucester's stately fane have said to such a wonderful exhibition of a boy's skill on an instrument of music? With Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Nora Newport, and Mr. John Coates as soloists, the 'Hymn of Praise' ended the music of the third day of the Festival.

Friday morning brought with it the time-honoured performance of the 'Messiah,' with Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Dalton Baker as soloists, and Mr. John Solomon as the capable player of the trumpet obbligato in 'The trumpet shall sound.'

If the Gloucester Festival of 1907 cannot be called epoch-making from a creative point of view, it was not without many interesting features. Great credit is due to Dr. Brewer, the conductor-in-chief, for the artistic skill and insight he brought to bear on his arduous duties. His efforts were loyally supported by the excellent choir and efficient orchestra who worked so well under his able leadership. A word of praise is also due to Dr. Brewer for the comprehensiveness of the Festival scheme, which included works worthy of being repeated instead of their places being taken by new compositions because they are new. The organ was in the competent hands of Dr. Sinclair (Hereford) and Mr. Ivor Atkins (Worcester) at the morning and evening performances respectively. While in this keyboard region, it seems extraordinary that the Gloucester organ should be tuned to the absurdly high pitch formerly used by the Philharmonic Society. I am given to understand that it was so tuned for the Festival performances, which only take place every three years at Gloucester; therefore the voices of the cathedral choir are subjected to an undue strain daily throughout the year for a reason which no longer exists. Surely some steps should be taken to lower the pitch of the instrument, as at Hereford Cathedral.

Mention must be made of four special Evensong services held in the Choir at 5.0 p.m., when the following music (services and anthems) was sung by the Three Choirs:

S. S. Wesley in E.
Hosanna to the Son of David - - Gibbons
Walmisley in D minor.
How lovely is Thy dwelling-place - - Brahms
Noble in B minor.
O clap your hands - - - - Greene
Brewer in C.
The Wilderness - - - - S. S. Wesley

I had the privilege of attending the third of the above services, when I heard Dr. Greene's fine anthem, sung by the full-voiced choir of cathedral men and boys. Sung without accompaniment, the 'good stuff' (as Mr. Atkins called the anthem), in its contrapuntal attractiveness, was by no means the least pleasant recollection of the week's music. Mr. A. P. Porter, Dr. Brewer's able assistant, presided at the organ on this occasion and also at the grand opening service on the previous Sunday.

The following table, taken from the Gloucester Journal, shows the attendances at the 1904 Festival for the purpose of comparison with those of this year:

	1904.	1907.
TUESDAY.
Morning (Cathedral) - -	2,287	2,392
Evening (Cathedral) - -	1,318	1,862
WEDNESDAY.
Morning (Cathedral) - -	1,259	2,288
Evening (Shire Hall) - -	454	594

The whole choral art is in our view the whole of education; and of this art, rhythms and harmonies, having to do with the voice, form a part.

PLATO. B.C. 429.

From THE MUSICAL TIMES of fifty years ago:

CAMBRIDGE.—On Thursday, September 8th, a private performance of some of the finest works of the great John Sebastian Bach was given by the Amateur Bach Society in this University. (THE MUSICAL TIMES, October, 1857.)

There is something wrong in the above date, as in 1857, September 8 was a Tuesday: anyhow, the notice draws attention to an early Bach Society in England, concerning which practically nothing is known. Can any of our readers furnish some information concerning the Society and its operations? Perhaps that enthusiastic Bachist, Mr. Sedley Taylor, who took his B.A. degree in 1859, could enlighten us on this interesting point.

The Edinburgh Choral Union will celebrate its jubilee on March 9, 1908. On that occasion is to be given a special concert, at which the Hallé Orchestra will co-operate, the programme including Weber's 'Jubel' Overture, Schubert's 'Song of Miriam,' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' performed under the experienced direction of Mr. Thomas H. Collinson. The concert and the social function connected with the jubilee celebration will also commemorate the semi-jubilee of Mr. Collinson's conductorship of the Society, and of Mr. Bradley as its accompanist. On December 16 the Edinburgh Choral Union will perform Bach's Mass in B minor, when the work will be given for the first time in Scotland, at one of Messrs. Paterson & Sons' series of excellent concerts.

The annual Blue Book—or 'Return,' to adopt the official designation—of the British Museum for the year ending March 31 has now been issued. According to our usual custom we cull from its pages the references to music and musicians. Some idea of the work involved in the matter of cataloguing—a most treacherous business, by the way—is obtained from the following extract under the heading 'Department of Printed Books':

Music Catalogue.—9,409 titles have been written for the Music Catalogue, and 10,070 title-slips have been incorporated into each of the two copies of it. This incorporation has rendered it necessary to remove and re-insert 18,860 title-slips in each copy of it, and to add to each copy 407 new leaves.

As to the Accessions we are told that:

7,483 Musical Publications have been added to the collection. Of these, 6,999 were received under the provisions of the Copyright Act; 452 by Colonial Copyright; and 32 were acquired by purchase.

To think that 7,000 (less one) new compositions should have found their way to the national library within twelve months. What becomes of all these products of the creative muse? Without attempting to answer this question, it should be stated that the number of musical publications received during the last official year is less by 1,223 than that added to the collection in the previous year. Is this a matter of congratulation or lamentation?

The 'Acquisitions of special interest' in the Department of Printed Books include the following:

A Psalter, printed by Georg Rayser, Würzburg, 1485. An unusually fine piece of printing.

A Psalter, printed by Louis Cruse, Geneva, about 1494.... Believed to be unique; the work, moreover, of a very interesting printer.

A Missal of the use of Breslau, printed by Peter Schoeffer, Mainz, 1499.

The most interesting accessions to the Musical Library have been:

Wilfflingseder, A.: 'Musica teutsch,' Nuremberg, 1572, interleaved with a partial translation into English in the handwriting of R. L. Pearsall.

'Offertoria totius anni,' by J. P. A. Palestrina, Venice, 1594.

Pallavicino, Benedetto: 'Sacrae Dei Laudes,' Venice, 1605.

'The Banquet of Musick; or a Collection of the newest and best Songs.' Printed by E. Jones, for Henry Playford, in the Savoy, 1689-1691.

'A Collection of the best Scots Tunes, by A. Munro.' Paris, 1723.

In the Department of MSS. the musical accessions are thus stated:

Compositions in four, five, and six parts for viols by English and Italian composers; early 17th cent. 'Samson,' oratorio in full score by G. F. Handel, with 'cuts' indicated in the composer's autograph; circ. 1750.

Vocal duets and canons by Giuseppe Aprile, 1776.

Symphony in D, by Charles Edward Horsley: autograph full score, 1844.

Drum and organ parts to 'Palestine,' an oratorio by Dr. W. Crotch: autograph additions for a revival about 1830.

'May Day,' cantata by Sir G. A. Macfarren: the conductor's score for the first performance; 1856.

Music, with words of the Russian National Anthem (composed in 1833), the autograph of the composer Alexis de Lwoff; 1858.

'Cantica,' in the autograph of Giuseppe Verdi, composed for the opening of the Exhibition in London in 1862.

'The Sleeping Queen,' opera in the autograph of Michael William Balfe, 1865.

'Prinz Methusalem,' operetta in full score in the autograph of Johann Strauss, junr.; circ. 1876.

The revival, or to be strictly accurate, the revivals of Crotch's 'Palestine' referred to above, were doubtless those of March 29, 1827, and April 17, 1828 (both performances at the Hanover Square Rooms), and the Oxford Musical Festival, June 26, 1827.

An interesting Accession in the Department of Prints and Drawings is thus described under 'Foreign artists working in England':

> Lehmann, Henri, and Rudolf. One hundred and two portraits, chiefly executed in pencil, of eminent persons of the nineteenth century.

The names of these 102 eminent persons, headed by that of the King (as Prince of Wales), include the following musicians: F. Chopin, P. von Cornelius, H. W. Ernst, C. Gounod, F. Hiller, J. Joachim, F. Liszt, G. Meyerbeer, I. Moscheles, Clara Schumann, and G. Verdi. Last, but not least from a musical point of view, is a portrait of Mozart, when a boy, in an etching by C. Schütz.

The subjects covered by Programme Music are as comprehensive as they are quaint and ofttimes amusing. Does not Professor Niecks's interesting book testify to this fact? From Kuhnau's Bible Sonatas to Richard Strauss's 'baby's bath' is a wide gap which can be filled in with many curious programmatic specimens, good, bad, and indifferent. One of these, exceedingly catastrophic in its intensity, is just mentioned by Professor Niecks, but it is so descriptive that a detailed account of the piece may not be without interest. It is entitled:

> The Shipwreck. or Loss of the Halsewell East-Indiaman. Being a Grand Instrumental Piece. Adapted to the Piano-Forte, with an Accompaniment for a Violin and Violoncello. Composed, Arranged, and Humbly Dedicated To His Excellency Baron Lenthe, His Majesty's Minister from the Electorate of Hanover, &c., &c., by A. F. C. Kollmann, Organist of His Majesty's German Chapel, at St. James's.
> Opera VI. Price, 4*s*.
> London, Printed for the Author and Sold at Messrs. Corri, Dussek, & Co., No. 67, Dean Street, Soho.

The terrible calamity which inspired this sea-piece of programme music occurred in a storm off Portland on January 6, 1786, when 386 persons perished. Mr. Kollmann labels his themes in simple non-nautical language. In so doing he deprives the programme annotator of exercising his imagination, and thus steers clear of the rocks of ambiguity. The scene on that snow-stormy day in mid-winter is thus described by our composer verbally and musically:

CONTENTS OF THE SHIPWRECK

or Things expressed in the following Piece.

Overture (Marcia maestoso).
The setting sail, with good hopes and spirits.
The select company's forming themselves into an agreeable Family.

The Minore.

Reflections on the possibility of an unfortunate Voyage; after which, Da Capo, the first good hopes and spirits.

Part I. (Moderato).

The Calm, or prosperous Voyage of the first three days.
The gentle progress of the Ship.
Music on the deck, with flutes and horns.
The Company grows merry.
They are heard singing a favourite Glee; (Drink to me only with thine eyes).
Their mirth still continued.

Part II.

The Storm (Allegro).
The Sea rises gradually and the Storm begins.
Commands issued with the speaking trumpet, intermixed with the shifting of sails.
The Storm increases.
The first signs of consternation.
The height of the storm.
A mast is cut away, it falls.
The working of the pumps (in the Violoncello part).
Another mast is cut away, it falls.
The Storm continues, but abates a little.
The Ship comes to anchor.

Part III. (Poco lento).

The Crisis.
The anchor's giving way, and the Ship's driving towards the rock; intermixed with the lamentations of the people.
The Ship strikes violently against a Rock, a shriek immediately follows; terrified people come in confusion upon the deck.
The Ship receives three more shocks.
The drooping spirits of the desponding company and crew lamenting and comforting each other by turns. (Poco adagio.)
Some endeavour to save themselves by swimming, but meet with the same distress under the rock. (Allegro.)
The Ship in her last melancholy situation.
Two high waves break over her, in which she sinks.
The remaining but decreasing noise of the Elements.

Finale. (Poco adagio.)

The feelings of the survivors for their lost friends.
They come safe on shore, and serene weather returns. (Andante.)

The composer's directions 'to the performer' cannot be regarded as being altogether clear of the rocks of ambiguity. He says:

To the Performer.

> Where the Violin takes the melody, it is expressed with small notes in the Pianoforte part, which you must play when the accompaniment is omitted, and may leave out those chords underneath them which you cannot conveniently reach; but when the accompaniment is played, you must omit the said small notes, and only take the chords underneath.

The following extract, from a letter addressed to Messrs. Novello, is one of those pleasant appreciations of The Musical Times which frequently find their way to the editorial office. The writer, who resides in New Zealand, says:

> For over seventeen years I have been a subscriber to The Musical Times, and every copy has reached me month by month without a break. In addition to this, during the same time I have received from your firm over 200 anthems, 91 services, besides numbers of hymns, &c.
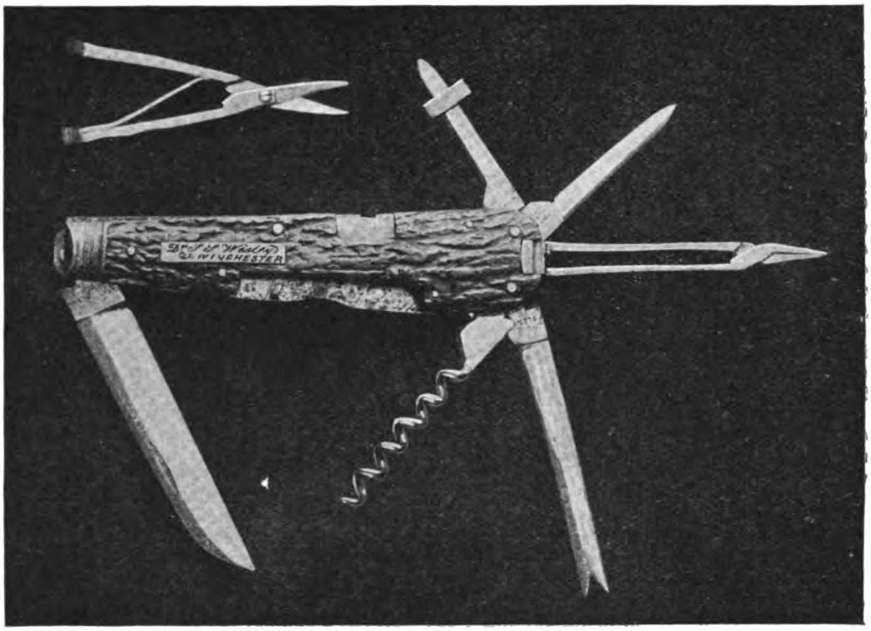
> I am not a musician, but simply a public-school teacher and lay-reader in a country district. Thanks, however, to The Musical Times, I think I could converse upon matters musical in England without fear of showing much ignorance.
>
> I think I have said enough to show that I have a very grateful regard for Novello & Co., who have enabled me to acquire for a comparatively trifling amount such gems of sacred music which have given me many hours of the greatest enjoyment.



DR. S. S. WESLEY'S FISHING-KNIFE.

(Photographed specially for The Musical Times by Mr. Gus. Edwards.)

Dr. G. R. Sinclair, organist of Hereford Cathedral, has become the possessor of Dr. S. S. Wesley's fishing knife, of which we are enabled to give a photograph, kindly taken specially for The Musical Times by Mr. Gus. Edwards. This interesting relic of a distinguished musician recalls two piscatorial stories concerning him, as related to the present writer by two articled pupils of Wesley's during his Winchester organistship. Wesley used to teach music at a school some distance out of Winchester, which necessitated a journey in a dog-cart, or some other conveyance. On some of these occasions the composer of 'The Wilderness' took with him his fishing tackle, which he placed at the bottom of the vehicle. A river had to be crossed, when Wesley, looking over the parapet of the bridge, would say to his pupil (who assisted him in teaching at the school): 'I think they'll bite to-day, A——. You go on and tell them that I am unavoidably detained'!

The other story is equally characteristic of Wesley. One day Mrs. Wesley came to another articled pupil—we will call him X—who often discharged the cathedral duties in the organist's absence, and said to him: 'Do you know where the Doctor has gone? A letter has come reminding him of the opening of an organ at —— on ——, at which he promised to play. If he does not come back in time, you must go.' As no word came from the great man, who had so suddenly disappeared on a fishing expedition, X. did go and opened that organ. Some days after Wesley's return he said to his pupil: 'X, did you go to open that organ at ——?' 'Yes, sir.' 'How much did they give you for it?' 'Three guineas.' 'That's mine,' said Wesley. 'But I've spent some of it, sir,' replied X. Who would blame him?

Here is an examination story which is as interesting as it is amusing, and at the same time perfectly true. Twenty-six years ago the Royal Academy of Music instituted their Local Examinations in Music which, in 1889, were merged into those of the Associated Board. At the earliest of these testing occasions (in 1881), the local representative of the Academy at Worcester (Mr. A. J. Caldicott) came to a young teacher of the violin in the Faithful City and, in anxious tones, said to him at the last minute: 'I am one candidate short in order to make a centre [that is, to ensure the visit of an examiner from London] for the Academy examination. Won't you go in for it?' 'What are the pieces?' asked the Worcester fiddler. 'Raff's Cavatina and Kreutzer's Concerto in D minor,' replied Mr. Caldicott. 'I think I can play those, and will oblige you,' said the young man, and his name was duly entered as a candidate for a Local Examination in Music. When the eminent musician from the Academy came to Worcester in his examining capacity, he asked the stop-gap candidate this question: 'How many quavers are there in a double-dotted-minim?' 'If it's a joke,' replied the examinee, 'I don't quite see it.' 'There is no such thing as a double-dotted-minim,' gravely remarked the examiner. In spite of this apparently unsatisfactory result of the vivâ voce part of the business, the young man passed and with honours! Can anyone guess his name? It is Edward Elgar! Through the courtesy of the secretary of the Royal Academy of Music, we have been enabled to see the official record of this examination at Worcester in the year 1881. Here it is:

Worcester.

Passed with honours:

Elgar, Edward	Violin
Wolstenholme, William	Pianoforte
Wolstenholme, William	Organ

The second honours man in the above list (by-the-way, only two Worcesterians obtained that distinction) is that of a musician who, like his fellow-candidate, is not unknown to fame. We can imagine some reader saying: 'You have not told us the name of the eminent musician who examined Edward Elgar.' True, good reader; but you shall not be kept in suspense any longer—Brinley Richards!

The prospectus for the forthcoming season of the Brixton Oratorio Choir—to which reference is made on p. 661—contains an interesting account of the special musical service the Choir gave in the Chapel of Brixton Prison last Good Friday. We give the account in full in the hope that it may encourage other choirs in places where prisons are located to go and do likewise, provided the permission of the authorities can be obtained.

In addition to the public edification and enjoyment resulting from the Oratorio Services during the past season, the members of the Brixton Oratorio Choir have the privilege to claim to be the pioneers of valuable and permanent help in the great cause of criminal reform. By invitation of the authorities and permission of the Home Secretary, a contingent of the choir visited H.M. Prison at Brixton on Good Friday afternoon, and gave a musical service in the Chapel to 600 prisoners, a large majority of whom undoubtedly for the first time experienced the wonderful power of the finest sacred music to attune the mind to the reception and comprehension of the glorious thoughts to which it is wedded. The works chosen were Mendelssohn's 'As the hart pants' (42nd Psalm)—'Hear my prayer,' and Gounod's 'Gallia,' the soloist being Miss Irene Marriott. The music was listened to by the prisoners with keen and manifest appreciation, many being profoundly and visibly affected as the music progressed. The success of the experiment was so instantaneous, and the after effects, as evidenced by the subsequent behaviour of the prisoners, so marked for good, that the Choir was asked to repeat the visit; a larger contingent therefore went on the afternoon of Sunday, 26th May, and sang an appropriate selection from Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' and 'Elijah,' including the two contralto solos 'But the Lord is mindful' and 'O rest in the Lord,' sung by Miss Evelyn Wynne. The results were equally impressive and gratifying, and we have since been assured by the Chaplain (the Rev. J. B. S. Watson, M.A.), 'that the prisoners were deeply moved, their hearts touched to Divine and human tenderness in a way never before experienced, and nobler thoughts of life and living enkindled in their minds which would influence for good the whole course of the remainder of their lives. It was truly a notable and wonderful revival, the good effects of which are incalculable.' This is striking evidence of the truth of the words of St. Augustine—'Sacred song softens the heart, and makes pious emotions rise in it; words when sung, speech when kindled by music, lay hold of the mind more powerfully than oratory.' Doubtless the Choir will have the privilege of continuing this beneficent work in the forthcoming season, and it is hoped that the example set may find many imitators in the different centres of the country.

Middlesbrough is to hold its second Musical Festival on April 28, 29, and 30, 1908. The works, or portions of works, to be performed include the following vocal and instrumental compositions:

Jephthah (Carissimi); A scene from Phœbus and Pan (Bach); The Baal scene and Invocation of rain from Elijah (Mendelssohn); The Kingdom (Elgar); Edgar Allan Poe's The Raven, a new setting in cantata form (Bertram Shapleigh); The buried Song, a cantata (T. Krug-Waldsee); The lotos eaters and Blest pair of sirens (Parry); Violin concerto (Beethoven); Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor Tchaikovsky); Symphony (Dvorák).

Eminent soloists have been engaged, and the Hallé Orchestra will render valuable aid. Mr. N. Kilburn is the conductor of the Festival, but Sir Hubert Parry will conduct his own compositions.

Canon Gorton, so favourably known in connection with the Morecambe Musical Competition Festival and its wonderful results, has addressed a letter to the Daily Telegraph in answer to some objections that have been raised to the holding of Musical Festivals in English cathedrals. He says:

Music in its highest form has its claim on the cathedral, has its part to play in the work of adoration. Into the Temple 'the kings of the earth bring their treasure,' and first among these kings are the heaven-given artists. Architect and painter bring form and curve and colour. They engage workmen, they use scaffolding, the sound of the hammer is heard. Their particular form of art involving, as in the case of a screen or window, permanency, permits of permanency. Music permits of no such permanence; it is a temple of sound, which dissolves, but on this account is it not to be offered in the house of the Lord?

Again this, the youngest of the arts, is ever growing. The choir for a festival assumes proportions unimagined by the builders of our noblest minsters. The choir and orchestra can find no seating in the chancel. Our greatest interpreters of music have a ministry in the Kingdom of Heaven as real as our bishops; they do not cease to fulfil this ministry because they are paid. Truer still is this for the composer. With him religion is no excuse for music, but music is the expression in natural form of the faith. Who that has heard the 'Apostles' and 'The Kingdom' has not felt that he has heard a more potent argument for the faith than in any sermon? Here the Incarnation is set forth as a living power; here are arguments which reach men where words fail. They are listened to by thousands with bowed head, and not seldom with tears in their eyes. And yet we are to be told that these and such works are to be given under the conditions of a magnified evensong, or are to be banished to the concert-halls, where applause and not the bowed head is to follow those movements which open for us the gates of Heaven.

At last a new day is dawning for English music. Hitherto there was only one region in which that music could claim any eminence—namely, in the school of English madrigalists. Who were these but our cathedral organists? When Puritanism had sway, one spot remained free from its baneful influence on music. Our cathedral choirs kept alive the art. Now that the sacred oratorio or cantata has found a congenial soil in the land, where more fitly should it find its home than in the cathedral, and what more fitting nucleus could there be than the cathedral choir? We hold these cathedrals as a national trust, and it will prove a perilous day when we so far fail in this trust as to refuse that they should admit the thousands that throng the doors and the tribute of adoration which such a festival affords in the realm of sound.

Dr. Frederick Niecks, Reid Professor of Music in the University of Edinburgh, was married, at Edinburgh, on August 9, to Miss Christina Struthers, Mus.B., third daughter of the late Professor Sir John Struthers, M.D. Heartiest congratulations to Professor Niecks!

Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' is to receive its first performance in a German version ('Die Geisterbraut') at Vienna on December 12. On that occasion Dvorák's picturesque and dramatic cantata will be sung by the Wiener Singakademie under the able direction of Herr R. Wickenhausser, who has made a practical translation of the text.

Two performances of Elgar's 'The Kingdom' ('Das Reich') in the German language are announced. Its first interpretation in Germany will be given at Mainz on December 4 by the Mainzer Liedertafel und Damengesangverein, under the conductorship of Dr. Fritz Volbach. At Aachen, on December 12, the work is to be given by the Städtischer Gesangverein, of which Prof. Eberhard Schwickerath is the conductor.

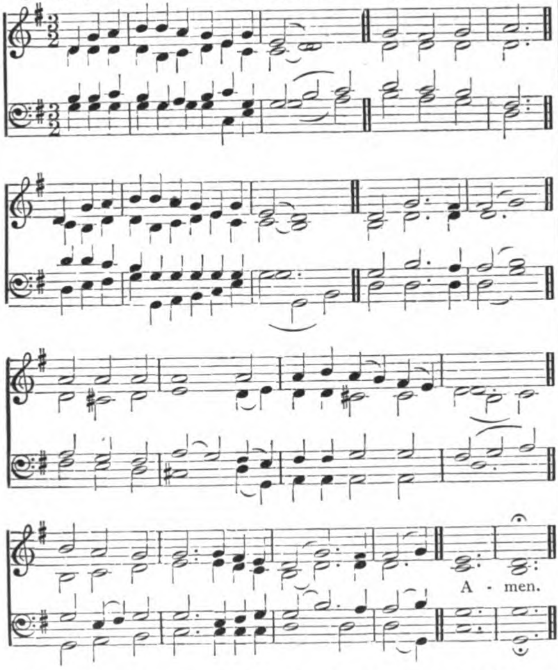
LUX BENIGNA.

The earliest appearances of hymn-tunes are often interesting, especially if their sources are obscure or if the tunes have undergone alterations at the hands of their composers or even the editors of hymnals. Dykes's familiar setting of ‘Lead, kindly Light’ is a case in point. The tune made its first appearance in what is now an unknown collection entitled:

> Psalms and Hymns | for the | Church, School, and Home. | Edited by the | Rev. D. T. Barry, B.A., | Incumbent of St. Anne's, Birkenhead. | with accompanying tunes | from | The Parish Tune Book, | compiled by G. F. Chambers, F.R.A.S., | and revised, chiefly, by | R. Redhead.
> London: | Frederick Warne and Co. | Bedford Street, Covent Garden. | 1867.

Here is the original form of the tune:

St. Oswald. 10.4.10.4.10.10. Rev. J. B. Dykes.



It will be observed that the fourth crotchet in the melody is not dotted, and that the harmonies are slightly different from the current version. The name, ‘St. Oswald’ is obviously taken from the church at Durham of which the composer was vicar from 1862 to 1876, the year of his death. Re-named ‘Lux Benigna,’ the tune in its present key (A flat) and form first appeared in the Appendix to ‘Hymns Ancient and Modern’ (1868). Canon Fowler's ‘Life and letters of John Bacchus Dykes’ contains two references to the origin of the tune. On August 29, 1865—that is, two years before Barry's ‘Psalms and Hymns’ appeared—Dykes wrote in his diary: ‘Began writing out a tune for “Lead, kindly Light.”’ In his ‘Random Recollections’ the composer's cousin, the Rev. George Huntingdon, says:

> I have been paying Cardinal Newman a visit. . . . . I happened to mention his well-known hymn ‘Lead, kindly Light,’ which he said he wrote when a very young man, as he was becalmed on the Mediterranean, for a week, in 1832. I ventured to say, ‘It must be a great pleasure to you to know that you have written a hymn treasured wherever English-speaking Christians are to be found; and where are they not to be found?’
> He was silent for some moments, and then said, with emotion, ‘Yes, deeply thankful, and more than thankful’; then, after another pause, ‘But you see it is not the hymn, but the tune, that has gained the popularity! The tune is Dykes's, and Dr. Dykes was a great master.’

THE CHORISTERS' SCHOOL, SALISBURY.

An interesting White Paper has recently been issued by the Charity Commissioners concerning the Choristers' School at Salisbury Cathedral, an ancient foundation which dates back to the year 1319. In regard to its early history this official document states:

> So far as has been ascertained the first time any mention is made in the statutes of the Cathedral Church of Sarum of the instruction of choristers is in a code of statutes drawn up in 1319 by Roger de Mortival, Bishop of Sarum, embodying certain former statutes which were to remain in force unless abrogated by the new code.
> The new statutes were received by the Chapter on July 1, 1324, and inserted amongst their existing statutes.

The principal provisions of the statute relating to the choristers were to the following effect:

> That the choristers are to live in houses in the Close set apart for that purpose under the charge of one of the residentiary Canons, who is to be appointed as ‘custos’ by the Chapter.
>
> That the ‘custos’ is to account every year to the Chapter within a month of the Feast of St. Michael for all receipts and expenses touching his charge.
>
> That the boys are to be maintained according to the discretion of the Chapter out of their common possessions together with the rents aforetime set apart for that purpose until provision shall be made for their maintenance from another source.
>
> That choristers are to be admitted by the precentor, or, in his absence, by the succentor in the presence of the Dean and Chapter.
> That in the admission of choristers, boys born in the Diocese, provided they be found suitable, be preferred to others, unless others (outside), their morals being equally good, shall greatly surpass them in excellence of singing.

In 1320-21 King Edward II. granted to Bishop Roger a licence in mortmain ‘to assign the advowson of the Church of Preshute, in the County of Wilts, for the support of the said chorister boys.’ The White Paper goes on to state that:

> The Act of Appropriation of the Church of Preshute, dated 7th September, 1322, is also recorded among the archives of the Chapter. The Act recites the reasons which influenced the bishops in making the endowment, viz., that the choristers, who, by old and laudable custom had to minister at all hours to God and his exalted Mother, were insufficiently provided for and had often to beg their bread, seeking it among the houses of the canons, who themselves had a miserably poor pittance for their own support. This state of things being a grave scandal to the Church, Bishop Simon had endeavoured to remedy this evil, but had been unable fully to effect his pious intentions, and Bishop Roger, therefore, had decreed and ordained to the effect set out in the statue of 1319 relating to the choristers.

The archives of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury contain some interesting references to the cathedral choristers, e.g.:

> In 1448, John Lane, Master of Arts, who had been teacher of grammar at Winchester, was appointed master. He was to conduct the grammar school of Sarum with efficiency and teach the choristers and altarists therein. A payment of 1^{d} a day was assigned to him out of the common fund of the Chapter.

In 1553 the Dean and Chapter agreed to pay Christopher Benett, as 'ludi magister,' 10*l*. per annum by their communar.

In 1564, Brabroke House, a house in the Close belonging to the Chapter, was assigned to the schoolmaster as a residence so long as he held the office.

In 1595, Richard Fuller was appointed 'instructor informer and teacher of the choristers in music, their number to be eight.'

Coming to the present day, the White Paper furnishes the following information, which speaks for itself:

The Cathedral organist is paid 88*l*. 10*s*. 0*d*. per annum for teaching music to the choristers.

The professions of the parents of the choristers included those of clergyman, solicitor, architect, bank manager, civil servant, musician, national schoolmaster, tailor, plumber, grocer's manager.

Choristers are usually admitted between the ages of 8 and 10, but exceptions are occasionally made in the case of boys with very good voices or possessed of exceptional musical attainments.

The choristers attend choir practice daily for one hour, and have also to take part in the Cathedral services. Four choristers are also learning the piano, and two out of the four have organ lessons in addition.

The senior chorister, who is known as the Bishop's chorister, receives £5 a year from the Bishop, and the next boy in seniority, who is known as the Vestry Monitor, is paid £2 a year from the Chapter Funds for keeping the vestry in order. The chorister who is regarded as most proficient in music receives £5 a year from the Chapter Funds for playing the harmonium in the Lady Chapel at the non-choral services.

Boys who have left the school frequently keep in touch with it in after life, and a record of the names of all boys who had been at the school between 1810 and 1897 was prepared in the latter year by the Rev. E. E. Dorling, the late master of the school. The record was incomplete owing to there being gaps in the earlier years. Since 1897 the record has been regularly kept.

The White Paper further states that music and singing are taught by Mr. Charles F. South, the cathedral organist, and that the master of the Choristers' School is the Rev. Arthur Gordon Robertson. For further information on this interesting subject, the reader is referred to the illustrated article on Salisbury Cathedral, which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of February, 1903.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL ORGAN.

Lichfield is the latest cathedral to have its organ rebuilt. Until Sir Gilbert Scott's restoration of the cathedral in 1856, Green's organ stood on the screen. Scott proposed to place the new organ—a large instrument by Holdich and the gift of Mr. J. Spode, of Hawkesyard Park, Staffordshire—in the triforium. Unfortunately his advice was not accepted, and the organ was stowed away in a vacant and unused chapel on the ground floor. The late Mr. J. L. Pearson, R.A., the eminent architect, advocated the triforium as the best position, as does Mr. Oldrid Scott, architect to Ely, Lichfield and other cathedrals. It is therefore satisfactory to learn that in the proposed rebuilding of the instrument the elevated position will be adopted.

In a statement regarding the reconstruction of the organ, the Dean (Dr. Luckock) says:

WHAT IT IS PROPOSED TO DO.

1.—To have the present organ entirely reconstructed.

2.—To move it from the ground floor to an elevated position in the triforium, and thus bring it near to, or above, the singers.

3.—To enlarge it by the addition of a considerable number of new stops, some of them very important and costly.

4.—To have new mechanism throughout, new pedals, blowing apparatus, console, and 'such other accessories as are found in the best modern instruments.'

5.—To adapt the construction of two bays of the triforium and clerestory behind the chapter house for its reception. No tracery will be removed from the windows in the chancel, only the glass from two, and the lower part of the mullions of one, for the exit of the sound.

We understand that the chief organists of England have been consulted by the Dean and Chapter as to the above proposals, and that there is absolutely unanimous and overwhelming evidence in favour of their being carried out. Messrs. Hill & Son, who rebuilt the organ in 1884, have been entrusted with the work of removal, reconstruction, additions to the instrument, &c.

CHURCH MUSIC DURING THE LEEDS FESTIVAL.

The following is a list of the services and anthems to be sung at Leeds Parish Church in the Octave of the Festival (October 6 to 13), under the direction of Dr. Edward C. Bairstow, organist and choirmaster.

O give thanks unto the Lord - - - Purcell.

THE LONG-MANUAL ORGAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—I observe that it is stated in your number of this month that the downward manual compass of the organ at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, was shortened to CC after Wesley's death. It was not done, however, until after the death of Best, a fact of no small importance, for the organ had undergone much reconstruction under him, and he retained the long manuals.

Now, no man would at this time advocate any other principle than that of the short manual, with pedal running an octave lower, provided that the pedal be complete. Unless it be complete, however, the old long manual, though extravagantly and unnecessarily costly, was the better. 'The advocates for long and short manuals appear to be agreed upon one very important point, viz., that the 16-ft. range is the correct one for as many of the organ stops as possible; the point of difference being as to where the large pipes should be planted, whether on the manuals or on the pedals' (Hopkins and Rimbault, 1877, para. 933). It is obvious that the advocates of neither system contemplated the abolition of a sufficient number of true basses.

Now, if (as held by Best and Hopkins) the pedal is to act as a convenient and economical substitute for a prolongation of the manuals—I do not say that it has not other duties—it is clear that it must be furnished with suitable basses for at least the chief stops in the organ. It necessarily follows that stops in continuation of the swell must be provided in the swell box, either by prolonging the swell manual, or its manual organ, down to CCC, or else, in the orthodox modern method, by putting its basses on the pedals, but still in the swell box. It is no more possible to avoid this conclusion in regard to CCC than it is to avoid it in regard to CC on the manual.

Best gave his unhesitating approval to this, as advocated in my 'Modern Organ,' 1883, as did Dr. Hopkins, Mr. Abdy Williams and many other competent experts. There is no escape from it; for if an unenclosed stop be suitable for a swell combination when the shutters are closed it must be too soft when they are open. If suitable when they are open it must be too loud when they are closed. Unfortunately it is the latter effect that so grossly and so constantly offends the ear.

Now, at St. George's Hall there was a bass for the swell. Best showed it to me with pride, while admitting the form to be defective and costly; 'but there it is, and it is very fine.'

No one would put it in the same form now; but what justification is there for omitting a bass for the swell from any organ of importance, still less for abolishing it when existent even in defective form?

Putney, September 12. THOMAS CASSON.

THE MOTO PROPRIO.

Nearly four years have passed since the Pope issued his historic pronouncement on catholic church music. This document dealt in the first place with the abuses that were all too rife in the churches; secondly, it reiterated the laws of the church of Rome on the subject; thirdly, it laid down certain commands. In a paper on church music and the Moto Proprio read at a session of the Catholic Truth Society, recently held at Preston, Mr. R. R. Terry, director of the music at Westminster Cathedral, said that no one could deny that the Moto Proprio was necessary. By those who had laboured long and patiently for higher ideals and larger aims, it was hailed with joy as the beginning of a new era. But what of the results? Things went on pretty much the same as usual, and it was not too much to say that there were few, very few, of those responsible for the music in churches to whom the Moto Proprio was anything more than a name. Over and over again it was to their own people—to their shame, be it said—that its injunctions needed explanation and defence.

What is the Moto Proprio? It does not banish or restrict the use of modern music so long as that music conformed to liturgical laws, and was not reminiscent of playhouse or ball-room. It does not say that Gregorian music must be used to the exclusion of other styles. It does not say that polyphony was the only music for church use. Solos are not forbidden and banned. Solos might be sung as freely as ever, provided they were an integral part of the whole composition, and not a separate movement in themselves. It does not say that orchestras are forbidden; it merely says that the consent of the bishop of the diocese is required, and to those of them who had suffered from the wild rioting of scratch orchestras on festive occasions what a blessed restriction that is. It does not restrain the individuality of modern composers in any way. They are as free now as ever they were to bring to bear on their Church music all the resources with which modern idiom and modern technique could provide them.

The death of Mr. John Smith, the sightless organist of Luton Parish Church from 1857 to 1887, is recorded with regret. Mr. Smith, who presided at the old organ by Lincoln in the west-end gallery until its removal to the Wenlock Chapel in 1864, died at Tottenham on August 15, in the seventy-third year of his age.

The Brixton Oratorio Choir has issued an interesting prospectus for its eighth season. The following works are announced to be performed in Brixton Church on the first Sunday afternoons of the months of November to May inclusive (at 3.30), and on the evenings of Ash-Wednesday and Good Friday: Calvary and the Last Judgment (Spohr), Zion (Gade), Song of Victory (Hiller), Light of Life (Elgar), Requiem (Verdi), Messiah and Hymn of Praise, all these, with the exception of The Last Judgment, with full professional orchestra. Mr. Douglas Redman, organist of Brixton Church, will as heretofore conduct, and Mr. Welton Hickin will continue to discharge the important duties of organist. The honorary secretary of the Brixton Oratorio Choir is Mr. John H. Butterworth, Ivy Bank, Thetford Road, New Malden. Reference to the sacred music sung by the choir at their visit to Brixton prison is made on p. 658.

The Rev. W. Garrett Horder's excellent hymnal 'Worship-Song' (with tunes) has just been published in an American edition, primarily for use in the Fifth Avenue Church, New York, of which Dr. H. R. Shelley, the well-known composer, is the organist and choirmaster and the Rev. Dr. C. F. Aked, late of Liverpool, is the minister. In order that the book may be suited to American use, the British National Hymns have given place to those of American sentiment, and six hymns have been added for Baptismal Services. Dr. Aked intends to hold special week-evening meetings of his congregation in order that they may practise the tunes. On those occasions the eminent divine will discourse upon the writers of the hymns.

In anticipation of the opening of the new organ in Bristol Cathedral by Sir Walter Parratt on October 8, Mr. Hubert W. Hunt, the organist, has prepared an attractive and interesting pamphlet giving a short history and description of 'Bristol Cathedral organ: 1685-1907.' The brochure, which is admirably compiled and well illustrated, also contains annotated programmes of the series of five opening recitals to be given—in addition to that by the organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor—by Dr. Varley Roberts, Mr. T. Tertius Noble, Mr. Hubert W. Hunt and Dr. A. Herbert Brewer. Mr. Hunt's booklet is published, at one shilling net, by Mr. H. A. Jones, Long Row, Victoria Street, Bristol.

Mr. J. C. B. Tirbutt has resigned the organistship of All Saints' Church, Reading, which he has held for the past twenty-eight years. In the parish magazine, the vicar, the Rev. W. Neville, has paid a warm tribute to Mr. Tirbutt's long and efficient services to church music whereby the musical services of All Saints' have attained a high state of efficiency. Mr. Tirbutt will continue to reside in Reading and devote himself chiefly to his teaching engagements and his important duties as director of studies at University College in that town.

RECOLLECTIONS OF Dr. JOACHIM

BY LADY MACFARREN.

I first saw Joachim at a visit Professor Macfarren and I paid to his uncle, Mr. Figdor, residing at Tulse Hill. It was a grey, warm afternoon, and I saw a tall, genial youth, who I was told was a great violin player. I had a long game of ball with him, several times resumed, on the lawn, whilst Professor Macfarren and his uncle walked up and down on the paths at the sides of the garden. There was no music, and I remember no other people.

The song 'Kleine Blumen, kleine Blätter,' mentioned in your article, recalls to me that Joachim said he would like to write a song for me, and I looked out several sets of words. I must have told him of my regret that I could not sing Beethoven's song to the above words, which I was very fond of, as it was too high for me and does not lend itself favourably to transposition. I have a dim remembrance of my surprise and pleasure to see these words set by Joachim for me. The copy was inserted into Professor Macfarren's album.

We had returned from America in 1850, and in the first days of the Crystal Palace concerts I remember our hearing Joachim play the Beethoven Concerto and his joining us afterwards. We had our (then) little girl with us, and Joachim swung her on his shoulder to take her to look at the bears, pronouncing the word as rhyming with tears, which amused us all.

In 1854 or '55 we took a small house in a large piece of ground in Alpha Road, St. John's Wood, and there we saw the most we ever did of Joachim, of whom I treasure a store of delightful recollections. He was fond of the place, its shrubs and trees. He loved every spring to see the lovely blossom on an old medlar tree; took the liveliest interest in all our doings, down to some pigeons in an old shed, where he would go up a ladder to see all about them. He always brought his violin, took our early dinner with us, and if Professor Macfarren was writing anything new he wished to hear it, often playing a voice or solo part from my transcription. In successive years he brought many works to us that were appearing in Germany of Bach and others, his own fine Hungarian Concerto and other things. He played them over and over again with the earnest enthusiasm we all had noted so long. Those were happy, memorable occasions. Many a book I heard of only from him, and he often noted what we were reading in English.

In my memory he stands as one of the dearest of friends, who gave me much invaluable musical advice, for which I shall remain indebted whilst I live.

WESLEY IN E.

On February 5, 1845, Samuel Sebastian Wesley sold the copyright of his masterly 'Service in E' for the sum of fifty guineas, to Martin Cawood, an ironmaster of Leeds, who had requested Wesley to compose the Service. The work was published, in instalments, in 1844 and (possibly) early in 1845, with the following title:

> A Morning & Evening | Cathedral Service, | consisting of | Te Deum, Jubilate, Sanctus, Kyrie Eleeson, Credo, | Magnificat, & Nunc Dimittis, | with an accompaniment for the | Organ, | by | Samuel Sebastian Wesley.
> Ent. Sta. Hall. Price 15*s*.
> London, | Chappell, Music Seller to Her Majesty, 50 New Bond Street.

For the original edition of his Service Wesley wrote an exhaustive Preface which does not find a place in modern editions of the work. This remarkable contribution to the subject of English Church Music is too important to remain in oblivion. We therefore reprint Wesley's trenchant Preface—his church-music creed, in fact—in the hope that it may interest our readers.—[Ed. M.T.]

Preface.

The present, is an attempt to give musical expression to the Te Deum, Jubilate, Sanctus, Kyrie Eleeson, Credo, Magnificat, and Nunc Dimittis of the Church Service.

In submitting it to public notice, more especially to that of the higher order of musical critics, the composer is not sorry to avail himself of the opportunity which it affords, to offer a few remarks relative to the present state of Church music, and to invite attention to a species of composition so peculiar as that of the Cathedral Service; which, undoubtedly, may be said to place great difficulties in the way of any composer whose object it is to invest such a work with a character of practical utility, as well as with that degree of merit in respect to composition, which may satisfy the higher claims of art.

To these, then, he would suggest, how essentially unlike every other species of musical composition such a work must be; designed as it is for performance during the very brief space of time allotted to our daily Cathedral worship; a period so brief,—while the subjects to be treated are so various, of such grand and universal application,—as necessarily to divest composition of its ordinary features; rendering almost every species of amplification of a particular subject either difficult or impossible; and this, too, in connection with words which seem, in the musician's judgment, to demand of him the most exalted efforts of which his art is capable.

It is not, at the present day, too much to assert, that however meritorious were the efforts of those who first gave the Canticles their contrapuntal form, they have fallen short of what ought to be, and may be accomplished. Whatever may have been their merit in their day—and in some instances it was, and still continues to be, rated, deservedly very highly,—the advanced, and still rapidly advancing, state of the art affords resources, both in harmony and melody, unknown to, and consequently, unemployed by, the composers in question. This, if it was, in one sense, a disadvantage to the artist, had, at least, a corresponding compensation; in that, where all that was known was exhausted, and known to be so, the critic and composer would at least be on a level: the one could not exact more than the other could supply. This alone, as contrasted with the present state of things, would seem to sustain the position thus laid down. To it, however, are to be added the claims and requirements of a now more refined and cultivated taste. Taken together, they render it impossible to recognize, in the unvarying syllabic accentuation, the monotonous undescriptive expression, of those artists who flourished at a period immediately subsequent to the Reformation, any satisfactory fulfilment of the demands of this exalted subject; in saying which, the writer protests against being met on the one hand by the imputation of mere emulous detraction, or inflated self-esteem, or, on the other, by the opposition of mere antiquated prejudice.

In support of what is here advanced, the following extracts may be adduced from the Services of Tallis, Aldrich, and Rogers;* they are characteristic of that style of Service which is regarded as among the best of those in general use. Such works may very well be presumed to have escaped the attention of connoisseurs; but as their demerits, however great, will not be found without advocates, or even professed admirers, the writer does not venture to say all that might be said concerning a musical taste so defective as that which can sanction the almost general use of such music in the daily performance of the Cathedral Service. If constrained to declare his own opinion of their comparative inferiority, it is not without support from the highest authority of the time. He claims in aid the evidence of Spohr, and of Mendelssohn, when he ventures to assert that such works as those from which the present quotations are made, are as unworthy of the words to which they are set, as they are ill calculated to excite interest in any congregation acquainted with music at the present day.

what d'ye lack? what d'ye buy? for here it is to be sold.

In the two specimens marked No. 1 and No. 2, it will be seen that the passage which Dr. Wilson considered sufficiently expressive of a ridiculous allusion to avarice, Dr. Rogers applies to the most solemn and awful declaration of belief which it can enter into the heart of man to conceive! Nor is the quotation, 'We believe that Thou shalt come to be our Judge,' any better.

It is impossible to hear these compositions performed, and not feel that their composers have been fettered in the development of their ideas, no less by the necessary attention to what they believed to be prescribed limits in point of time for performance, than by the deficiencies of imperfect art. The impression left on the mind by such music, naturally suggests the enquiry of, to what are we to ascribe the evidently conventional form in which such specimens appear to have been framed. If it be not altogether to the felt necessity of their being 'got through' in a given time,* the true reason may probably be found in the prescription or suggestion given by Archbishop Cranmer; who, when adapting an English Version of the Litany to a Chant, which he was the first to do,† in a letter to King Henry VIII. in the year 1545, according to Collyer, is found to write thus, 'according to your Highness's commandment I have translated into the English tongue certain portions of the Public Service.—The judgment whereof I refer wholly to your Majesty, and after your Highness has corrected it, if your Grace commands some devout and solemn note to be made thereunto (as is to the procession which your Majesty has already set forth in English)* I trust it will much excitate and stir the hearts of all men to devotion and godliness. But in my opinion, the song that shall be made thereunto would not be full of notes, but as near as may be, for every syllable a note, so that it may be sung distinctly and devoutly, as be in the Mattins and Evensong, Venite, the Hymns Te Deum, &c. Wherefore I have travel'd to make the verses in English, and have put the Latin note unto the same. Nevertheless, those that be cunning in singing, can make a much more solemn note thereto; I made them only for a proof to see how English would do in a song.'

* [The extracts which Wesley gives are as follows:

1. Tallis: Gloria in Excelsis (Boyce's 'Cathedral Music,' vol. i, p. 36). From 'Thou that sittest at the right hand of God the Father' to the end of the movement.
2. Aldrich: Te Deum in A. From 'When Thou hadst overcome' to 'We believe that Thou shalt come to be our Judge.'
3. Aldrich: Creed in G. From 'Is worshipped and glorified' to 'And the life of the world to come.']

* The object of saving time could have been more readily attained, and a far better effect produced, by reserving certain portions of the work to be sung in harmony; and chanting, either in unison or harmony, the rest. Such a course would have been an agreeable relief to the monotonous clockwork accentuation adopted by these masters; more in accordance with the primitive model; and would also afford great opportunity for the development of modern genius. For short services, this idea may not be without value to future composers for the Church, should any such arise. It had often occurred to the writer, before he was made aware that some such idea had been acted upon by the late Precentor Creighton, of Wells; the admired author of the well known and ingenious piece of counterpoint, 'I will arise and go to my Father,' who had composed a Te Deum of this nature, but which, it will be regretted, from its mutilated condition is not likely to become of any future use.

'Several eminent musicians of old time, and of the unreformed Churches,' observes the Rev. Mr. Jebb, in his work on the Choral Service, p. 349, 'have adapted the Canticles to the descant, as it is called, upon the plain song, or Gregorian chant' (meaning a unisonous unmetrical chant, it is presumed) 'making variations somewhat after the manner of our Services, though less free in their departures from the original structure of the melody.'

† Burney's History of Music, vol. ii., p. 577. [Wesley has not given the quotation strictly literatim et verbatim.—Ed. M. T.]

The style of these expressions is sufficient evidence of the primitive condition of our art in its connection with public worship at the date mentioned. That it was, in respect to the union of counterpoint, or four part harmony, with the English language, for church purposes, in its infancy. But, if we assume that the suggestion of Cranmer 'for every syllable a note' was binding on the composers of the time, this did not limit them to the use of a single species of note, a practice they so extensively adopted. Although notation was but imperfect, Marbeck, who published the Prayer Book noted about this time (1550), uses four kinds of notes, and the luxury of the dot (·) appears in his work; but in the Te Deum, published by Marbeck, we find a considerable improvement, as regards accentuation, on the harmonized work of Tallis.

He and his contemporaries, however, did their best. That they were in all respects fettered by precedent can hardly be shown, for the melody, or cantus, of Tallis was a thorough departure from Marbeck's unisonous service; the Te Deum of which, had been handed down, as is supposed, with but few alterations, from the time of St. Ambrose, its alleged author: and then, the fact of its appearing in four part harmony, what an innovation was this!

Gibbons in his Service deviated from the manner of Tallis by the more frequent introduction of imitative points. In his work appears a beautifully subdued tone of pathos and solemnity; but however applicable to certain passages in the Canticles, it cannot be so to all. To modern ears, his expression appears destitute of variety, but in the then state of Art, Gibbons may have viewed his work differently, and imagined the little fugued points constantly introduced, and the frequent alternation of minor and major harmonies, to have been sufficiently descriptive of the sentiment even of such words. This author, like Tallis, and all composers of Services, who flourished intermediately, employs an unvaried expression throughout his setting of the Canticles, from the first note of the Te Deum, to the last of the Nunc Dimittis. It is far from pleasant to blame so charming a writer as Gibbons, who, in various secular productions, seems to have attained absolute perfection: † but how can the modern artist who considers the claims which these exalted subjects bring upon his art, approve? The real, but limited, merit of such compositions may be apparent to the initiated; but their effect on the mass of hearers is invariably that of a vast fatiguing monotony. It cannot be right to adapt the same musical phrases to sentiments the most opposite: the same sounds should not accompany 'We praise thee, O God'—'Heaven and earth are full of the majesty of thy glory'—and, 'Vouchsafe, O Lord, to keep us this day without sin'—'Have mercy upon us,' &c. Yet, into such an error have the early masters fallen in their adaptations of music to the Canticles for the uses of the Church: the same jog-trot emphasis appears from the first word to the last, let the sentiment be what it may.

The writers subsequent to Gibbons have each taken their own course; so that the modern composer will not want precedent for a very considerable latitude; but it would appear to be the duty of a church musician to be guided in great measure by the forms of our early writers, in cases where, by such a course, he was not compelled to sacrifice the still higher claims of an improved taste. To imitate their faulty accentuation, their monotonous expression, would be unreasonable; but the forms of melody and harmony should ever be church-like, and the general effect not unsuited to modern ears. In suggesting that the services of Tallis, Farrant, Bevin, Aldrich, and others, must fall if judged by the taste of our present highly advanced standard, the writer would not be thought insensible to, or incapable of appreciating, the general merits of those authors. Far be it from him to impugn the truly devotional spirit, the diatonic purity, which is occasionally found in their works. The present remarks apply more particularly to their services: and the question, for the church musician of the present time, is—are these compositions the best which the art can afford?—will they be viewed with interest by the thousands, the tens of thousands, now learning the rudiments of singing, and whose love for all things appertaining to the church, it is a duty to encourage by every fair means? Will such persons acquire the antiquarian spirit necessary to lead them to make use of, by choice, such works at the service hour? Is it desirable that they should? It would seem to be a taste of but inferior grade that could educe such a result. Those, who either possess a great deal of true taste, or, who have none, decidedly will not approve of these services.

The church musician who really understands his Art, must perceive, and perceiving should have the courage to maintain, that our present knowledge of the early school is far in advance of that of the early masters themselves: he must see, that our appreciation of diatonic dissonance (exemplified to such perfection in the modern works of Germany) and our acquaintance with the true features of Gregorian melody, is such as might be expected of us; and that it is quite possible to entertain, and avow, a dislike for the species of composition in remark, without incurring the suspicion of inability to perceive the real merits of the early Church school. No one can be insensible to the sublime qualities of certain portions of Tallis' Service (omitting the Canticles), which we find in Boyce's First Vol. of Cathedral Music. No one can fail to esteem the little diatonic pieces of Tye, in his 'Acts of the Apostles'; or of Farrant's 'Call to remembrance,' 'Lord, for thy tender mercies' sake,' or, of the madrigal of Gibbons, 'The silver swan,' and several other specimens, for instance. These are absolutely perfect, and perhaps were never exceeded by any foreign authors whatever: but, how 'few and far between' are such examples! A few sheets of paper, less than twelve, perhaps, might contain all the really unexceptionable specimens in this school available for common use, which have descended to present times in connection with the musical worship of the Church of England.

* In allusion to certain other translations which had been made the preceding year, and sent by the King to the Archbishop of Canterbury for the use of his Province, with an order for their being said or sung in all churches.

† Dr. Burney declared, that in musical art, the secular, in all ages, had been in advance of the sacred. If this could be said in his time, which was before the great dawn of modern Germany, when English art, in its secular departments, was comparatively worthless, and when the same Church writers, whom we deem great now, were all fully known; what must we think now, with the works of Mozart, Beethoven, and Spohr, in our concert rooms and theatres; and those of a host of inferior organists and choir-men, too numerous, and really too contemptible to particularise, in our Cathedrals? To what, may we ascribe the improvement, the perfection, in the one; the stagnation, the deterioration in the other? Is it to the fact of its having been nurtured in the great light of public notice, with its genial warmth to cherish and improve what was good, its searching, blighting influence to check and wither that which was not good, that the former has ever been subject to a comparatively just system of reward and punishment, while the music of cathedrals has been as little criticised, as little known by the great bulk of the musical profession, and the musical public, as that of the Kolpecs or the Druses; people, it is true, do not go to Church especially to criticise music: what they find there, the generality are content to 'take as they find it'; the few who feel, forbear to analyse; but from the absence of all healthy criticism, and from the fact of such music being subject to the irresponsible control of those who are not only quite ignorant of the subject, but who openly, and with consistency it may be added, profess to regard it as a matter of secondary importance, the Church musician is made to feel, if the writer may judge from what he witnessed during several years' service at the Cathedral of Exeter, that in the connection of his art with Church worship, principle, and the results of a lengthy, a laborious and expensive course of education, go, absolutely, for nothing,—that knowledge is not power—and, that from the extreme inferiority of the musical arrangements in which he will have to take part, entailing as they must, on the well-educated musician, an almost daily violation of conscience, he is reduced to the level of a mere machine, and made to know that the real position of his art is scarcely in advance of that of astronomy in the time of Galileo.

Painful as the tone of such remarks must be, the writer feels that they are loudly called for by circumstances; and he believes it to be a matter of duty, in those who have experience, to endeavour to impress, on the public mind, the abject state of our Cathedral music, in too many instances; and the necessity which exists for public interference on its behalf; and on that also of the more conscientious and able members of the musical profession therein engaged, who ought to be protected and encouraged in their work, and enabled, conscientiously, to 'do their duty in that state of life in the which it has pleased God to call them.'

Original Compositions for the Organ. By various composers.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

This well-known series of organ pieces is rapidly approaching its 400th number. Variety has all along been one of its characteristics, and this feature is not lacking in some of the most recently issued numbers. Mr. William Faulkes leads the way with a quartet of pieces—a Wedding March, a Funeral March, a Theme (varied) in E and a Ballade in C. In the first of these, the Wedding March (in B flat), the triplets invest the music with just the right jubilation. In appropriate contrast is the Funeral March—inscribed to the memory of the composer's master, Henry Ditton-Newman—which, although set in the minor key, is not without its hopeful note, as testified in the major strain which enters so largely into the work. The Theme (varied) in E consists of a short Introduction, to which succeeds the air and its four variations, the whole concluding with a brilliant allegro movement, with eight bars of the Theme, in its unadorned simplicity, by way of a coda. This effective piece is to be commended for its conciseness no less than for its unaffectedness. The Ballade, if somewhat rhapsodical in style, would make a good impression in the hands of a capable exponent.

Mr. Alfred Hollins has so eminently made his mark as a composer of attractive organ music, that any fresh contributions from his pen are always sure of a welcome. His Allegretto grazioso (in A) is a most fascinating little piece that haunts the ear by its piquant tunefulness. The popularity of this little gem is a foregone conclusion. Mr. Hollins has hit upon a very happy idea in his Bridal March by introducing Barnby's popular tune to the wedding-hymn, 'O perfect Love,' first in the Trio section, and towards the end, as a canto fermo given out in octaves —with all the force of which 'tubas 8 and 4 feet' are capable — in a manner very ingenious and distinctly Hollinsesque.

Dr. F. E. Gladstone is such a thorough educationist that he may always be relied upon to provide the right thing when he puts pen to paper. His 'Three Studies' furnish further ample proof of his ability to help students on their way to become efficient organists. No. 1 is 'A study for the left hand,' consisting of a quaver counterpoint (in the left hand) against a minim canto fermo (in the right hand), the latter being J. H. Schein's tune to his hymn 'Machs mit mir, Gott, nach deiner Güt,' and named in our hymnals as 'Eisenach,' though this information is not given in the piece itself. No. 2 is a short and practical 'Study in part playing,' while No. 3 deals with the all-important and too often neglected matter of 'phrasing' on the organ. Of two Capriccios by Girolamo Frescobaldi—who has been described as the most distinguished organist of the 17th century—the first is 'sopra la, sol, fa, mi, re, ut,' and the second is 'upon the notes of the cuckoo.' Both these old-time compositions have been edited by Mr. John E. West with his usual conscientiousness.

L'Esthétique de Jean-Sebastien Bach, par André Pirro.

[Paris: Librairie Fischbacher.]

The author of this remarkable book observes very truly that the emotional appeal which the music of a great composer makes upon us, is not sufficient; that we ought to find out what he intended to express in it. And this is of essential importance with the works of old masters; they are listened to with a certain curiosity but 'few know how to enjoy them.' The forms of Art have varied, but the feelings which inspired it have always been the same. The object then of the writer of the present volume has been to study the figures, rhythms, harmonies employed by Bach, his style of orchestration and even the forms of his movements, and thus learn to understand his language. M. Pirro indeed describes his book as a kind of dictionary. And he reminds us at the outset that Bach spoke the musical language of his day, while again and again, when pointing to certain means adopted by Bach to illustrate and intensify the meaning of the texts of his cantatas, he shows how similar means are to be found in predecessors. Bach, he says, 'made himself the disciple of all the great musicians who flourished before him.'

Already in Masses of the 16th century the words ascendit and descendit were literally expressed by ascending and descending tones; also for many words indicating movement, direction, states of feeling, &c., there were certain conventional musical symbols, and these, common in the 17th and early 18th centuries, were used by Bach, but with greater power.

M. Pirro gives or refers to many examples from the cantatas in order to prove that such pictorial means were not occasional, but deliberate and constant. And then Bach's musical symbols served in a figurative as well as in a literal sense. Ascending notes, for example, might depict the going up of Christ to heaven, or such state of mind as courage, vigour; descending ones for the veil of the temple 'rent in twain from the top to the bottom,' or to express weakness, fatigue, dejection. M. Pirro gives a number of symbols of this kind, and in each case examples. He shows in like manner how Bach used certain rhythms for special purposes; how by harmonization of his chorale melodies he brought out the meaning of special words; how at times he even altered the notes of the melodies themselves for a similar purpose; and how in his orchestration he selected certain instruments which in tone-colour seemed to suit the particular text. In fact he declares that Bach's one and sole aim in the music of his Masses and cantatas was to express and intensify the meaning of the sacred words.

We can well imagine that some readers of this book will come to the conclusion that Bach worked by rule, rather than by inspiration. But that would be a great mistake. M. Pirro has certainly called attention to some few passages in which Bach has, apparently, consciously displayed excess of realism in word-painting, but for the most part he worked unconsciously.

One of the most interesting chapters in the volume is that in which the author explains how, by studying Bach's vocal music, one can get to understand the various mood-meanings of his instrumental music. He not only gives some interesting examples from the 'Well-tempered clavier' and the 'Capriccio sopra la lontananza del suo fratello dilettissimo,' but he shows that when Bach introduced certain movements from his instrumental works into his cantatas they were selected because of their mood fitness.

M. Pirro may here and there be somewhat fanciful in his explanations of the meaning of Bach's music, but whoever reads his book through cannot for a moment doubt that his 'dictionary' is trustworthy. He has studied the letter of Bach's music; the spirit of it must be felt, for it cannot be described. As in reading analyses of Bach's '48' one gets absorbed merely in the intellectual side, and forgets the higher emotional message of the music, so in studying the volume under notice it must be ever kept in mind that it is a study only of the objective side of the master's genius. A brief notice of the book is all that can here be attempted, but sufficient has been said, it is hoped, to induce musicians to study this anything but dry Bach 'dictionary.'

Obituary.

MRS. J. L. ROECKEL.

Much sympathy has been and will be felt for Mr. Joseph L. Roeckel in the sad loss of his gifted wife, who, we much regret to record, died at 1, Worcester Lawn, Clifton, on August 26, aged seventy-three. Mrs. Roeckel (née Miss Jane Jackson) was the daughter of the late Mr. S. Jackson, of the Old Water Colour Society and a cultured amateur musician. She received her first lessons in music from her father, and after studying under Pauer, Charles Hallé, Madame Schumann, Blumenthal, and Molique, she became an excellent pianist and teacher. In 1864 she married Mr. J. L. Roeckel and shared with him his artistic aspirations and interests. Under the pen-name of 'Jules de Sivrai' Mrs. Roeckel composed many pianoforte pieces which attained great popularity, some of them having been played by Madame Arabella Goddard. She was the inventor of 'Pamphonia,' an appliance for learning the stave and clefs. A staunch supporter of the musical activities of Bristol — she was a native of Clifton — Mrs. Roeckel took an active part in establishing the Bristol Scholarship at the Royal College of Music, and in many ways spent her life in promoting the cause of the art in the city of her birth. An interesting sidelight on her character, from the pen of Mr. E. J. Shellard, appeared in the Bristol Times and Mirror of August 31, from which we venture to quote:

> 'Her goodness of heart and the generosity of her nature were shown in multifarious ways, and although some of her acts of devotion and benevolence were known, hundreds were secretly done. It is quite impossible even to remember the very numerous concerts she organized to assist those of her kindred and others in distress. The writer can call to memory many instances where her thoughtful kindness and generosity brought relief to sorrowful hearts. She founded the Teachers' Provident Association in 1885. Perhaps one of the most notable instances of her goodness is Miss Marie Hall. Everyone is acquainted with the early life of the brilliant little artist. It was one of poverty and of drudgery, and of gaining a pittance by playing in the streets. Mainly through the instrumentality of Mrs. Roeckel the child was rescued and brought to the notice of Mr. P. Napier Miles, who placed her under accomplished masters. How she has profited by the tuition she received everyone knows. Surely of Mrs. Roeckel it may fittingly be said she rests from her labours and her works follow her. Her mortal remains were on Thursday placed in the new Garden of Sleep at Shirehampton in the presence of numerous sorrowing relatives and friends.'

MR. E. G. WOODWARD.

At Gloucester, on August 27, at the age of seventy-two, a well-known musician in the West of England passed away in the person of Edwin George Woodward. He was born at Bath on December 10, 1835, and became a chorister of Gloucester Cathedral. During his many years' residence in that city he held the organistship of St. Mary's, St. John's, and All Saints' churches. But Mr. Woodward was best known as an orchestral conductor and violinist. He was formerly conductor of the Herefordshire Orchestral Society and the Gloucester Orchestral Society, and led various orchestras in the West of England. Mr. Woodward was a prominent Freemason.

MR. ALFRED BACHE.

We regret to record the death, at Penzance, on September 6, of Alfred Bache, M.I.M.E., M.I.C.E., a brother of the late Edward, Walter and Constance Bache. Born at Birmingham, August 5, 1835, Mr. Bache became a pupil of the late James Stimpson, organist of the Town Hall, for whom he occasionally deputised. Although his profession as an engineer was his life-work, he retained his passion for music to the last. Upon his retirement, in 1898, from the secretaryship of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, which he had faithfully served for forty-four years, Mr. Bache settled at Penzance. He threw himself into the musical and literary doings of the Cornish town, being a vice-president of the Choral Society—for which he wrote historical notes on the works performed—and took a great interest in the Penzance Military Band, as well as being a great supporter of the Penzance Library. Mr. Alfred Bache's accomplishments were many, for in addition to Greek and Latin, he knew French, German, Italian, Norse, Swedish and Danish, and he was a good draughtsman. Thus he fully maintained the intellectuality of the Bache family.

MR. GEORGE HADDOCK.

By the passing away of Mr. George Haddock, who died at Leeds on September 12, in his eighty-fourth year, Yorkshire has lost almost its last link between the old and the new order of things from a musical point of view. Born at Killingbeck, near Leeds, his reputation as a violinist was hardly less than that of a successful organizer of concerts, or as the founder of a college for teaching music. His father was an amateur oboe player, his elder brother, Thomas Haddock, became a talented violoncellist. George Haddock, however, took up the violin, studying the instrument under Joseph Bywater, of Leeds. Local tradition asserts that Bywater, although only an innkeeper, was a rival to the best violinists of the day. Mr. Haddock, as a boy-player, made his début at the Leeds Music Hall—an historic place in the musical life of Leeds—having successfully broken the fetters which bound him to a lawyer's desk. In 1846 he met (at Leeds) Henri Vieuxtemps, and arranged to take lessons from him in London. Some years later he also studied under Bernard Molique. In 1847 Mr. Haddock took up his residence in Bradford and, in association with Mr. S. Clayton, speculated in concerts. They engaged the great Jullien and his orchestra in 1848, and here Sims Reeves first sang to a Yorkshire audience. Mr. Haddock removed to Leeds in 1849, and became leader of the Leeds Choral Society, having connection also with the Leeds Madrigal Society. In the early fifties he was much engaged in the West Riding towns as an organizer of concerts and in teaching. It is said that 'he was able to boast of having turned out some 4,000 players, many of whom now occupy prominent positions in orchestras both at home and on the continent.' He played at the first Leeds musical festival, held in 1858.

Mr. Haddock is credited with the discovery of the late J. T. Carrodus, the violinist. In his 'Musical Recollections' he (Haddock) tells us, that when buying some violin strings at a barber's shop in Keighley he heard young Carrodus—then a boy of fourteen and son of the proprietor—playing the violin in a remarkable manner. After having made friends with the boy, he gave him many hints on the management of the instrument.

The deceased musician's sons, Mr. Edgar A. Haddock and Mr. George Percy Haddock, are well known as the founders and directors of the Leeds College of Music. A short time before his death Mr. George Haddock wrote the above book containing his interesting memoirs; he was also author of the 'Practical School for the Violin' and other technical works. He has left behind him a notable collection of old violins, which, besides other valuable instruments, includes the 'Emperor' Stradivarius. Whether they will come into the market or not, it is as yet too early to say.

LIEUT. JOHN WRIGHT.

The Chatham Division of the Royal Marines has lost its bandmaster, Lieut. John Wright, who died, we regret to record, at Herne Hill, Chatham, on September 13. Born on August 1, 1851, he began his musical career as a chorister of Christ Church, Oxford, under Dr. Corfe, and in later life he was the possessor of a good tenor voice. At the age of fourteen he enlisted in the 39th Dorset Regiment, and as a young sergeant entered Kneller Hall in order to qualify for a bandmastership. He was appointed bandmaster of the First South Lancashire Regiment in 1877, and on April 1, 1892, he succeeded Herr Kappey as bandmaster of the Royal Marines at Chatham. The death of Lieut. Wright—who received the rank of Second Lieutenant in November, 1901—is a great loss to the Division, especially to the band, the members of which respected and admired him for his urbanity and kindness of manner no less than for his high musical attainments. Lieut. Wright accompanied and conducted the band on board the Ophir during the memorable voyage of the Prince and Princess of Wales to Australia, when he received many marks of royal favour. He was an excellent arranger of music for a military band.

Mr. Henry Nicholson, the celebrated flautist, died at Leicester, his native town, on September 14, aged eighty-two. As a member, for thirty years, of the Birmingham Festival Orchestra, he took part in the production of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' in 1846. More than half-a-century ago he started, in Leicester, popular concerts for the people and has done much for music in that town. In May, 1886, three testimonial concerts were given in his honour, at which the sum of £800 was realized. Mr. Nicholson was the author of 'Instructions for the flute,' and he arranged some music for the instrument.

Herr Ignatz Brüll, the well-known composer and distinguished pianist, died at Vienna, on September 17, in his sixty-first year. He is best known by his opera, 'Das goldene Kreuz,' successfully produced at Berlin, December 22, 1875. The work was performed, in an English version, at the Adelphi Theatre by the Carl Rosa Opera Company, on March 2, 1878, during the visit of the composer to this country, when he played at the Monday Popular and other concerts.

Madame Szarvady (née Wilhelmine Claus), the famous pianist, has recently died. Born at Prague in 1834, she received her entire musical education from Joseph Prosch, a blind teacher. As a player of Scarlatti, Bach, and Beethoven Madame Szarvady had a great reputation. Her appearances in England covered a period of thirty-four years, 1852 to 1886. In 1857 she married Friedrich Szarvady, the author, who died in 1882.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

It is constantly affirmed that novelties do not attract the musical public, but this may be doubted with reference to the audiences at Queen's Hall promenade concerts, for new music is invariably listened to with close attention and received with discriminating applause. On August 28 was produced for the first time a Serenade for small orchestra by Mr. Roger Quilter, which proved him to be a composer capable of more serious work than the songs whereby he is chiefly known. The Serenade is in three movements severally headed Allegro moderato (C minor); Andante moderato (F major); and Molto allegro (C major), the last named a Vivace in modified Rondo form. The music is unpretentious and tasteful, and a pleasing poetical atmosphere pervades the slow movement. The work should find favour with amateur orchestral societies.

On the following evening the two remaining movements of Max Reger's 'Serenade in G' (Op. 95)—Nos. 1 and 2 of which had been produced on August 21—were played for the first time in England. The concluding portions severally consist of an Andante semplice and an Allegro con spirito. The former is not difficult to follow, but the thematic material is not sufficiently distinctive to justify treatment of such lengthy and complex character. The Finale starts vigorously and contains some very effective passages, but also suffers from over-development. When the Serenade is heard in its entirety at a single performance, a better sense of coherence would perhaps result.

'Holiday tunes,' by Dr. Walford Davies, produced on August 29, form practically a suite in seven movements, inspired by a desire, according to the composer, to 'express the joyous feelings often associated with holidays, but not necessarily restricted to them—in short, the holiday spirit.' The opening Allegro energico (in D) starts with a violin solo announcing the principal theme which, since it is headed Estatico, may be intended to express pleasurable anticipations. This at least accords with the spirit of the movement, which is developed at some length. The second number is delightfully humorous and dainty, and has for its chief subject a quaint little tune of ingratiating character. A deeper note is struck with the third section, an Andante con moto of poetic expression, and having a finale of great beauty. The remaining movements, which are of less importance, consist of a Presto (in G) of gay character; a short and peaceful Andante tranquillo; 'a rocking tune' which might be described as a lullaby, since it is based upon the composer's setting of George Wither's poem 'Sweet baby, sleep,' and a bustling Finale in march rhythm.

On September 3 was performed a new Violin concerto by Mr. F. C. Barker, hitherto a little-known composer, born in 1871, who has studied at the Royal College of Music. One expects a good deal from a man who brings forth a work of this character. If Mr. Barker's thematic material is deficient in significance and force of statement, his melodies are pleasing and expressive up to a certain point, and they are treated with a resource, perception of form, and moderation of style that attest to refinement and musical culture. The solo part was undertaken by Mr. Isidor Schwiller, who interpreted the music with sympathy and brilliancy.

The next evening there was given for the first time in England an 'Introduction and allegro' for harp and orchestra by Mr. Ravel, one of the most advanced French writers of what has been called the 'atmospheric school.' It would be rather easier to describe a cloud than the character of this work, which meanders on with apparently aimless design. The most memorable portions are the recurring cadenza-like passages for the harp, which were brilliantly played by Mr. Alfred Kastner.

Three short orchestral pieces—respectively named 'Sunrise,' 'Shepherd's song' and 'Dance of youths and maidens'—composed by Mr. Arthur Hinton, were played for the first time on September 5, and proved very pleasing illustrations of passages in Keats's 'Endymion.' It is significant of the difficulty experienced by native composers in getting their works performed that these compositions date from 1896. 'Better late than never,' however, was obviously the opinion of the listeners at their tardy production. Mention should also be made of a graceful 'Idyl' by Mr. R. H. Walthew, introduced at this concert by Mr. Albert Fransella.

A pathetic atmosphere may be said to have surrounded 'The mysterious rose garden,' heard for the first time on September 10, for the composer was the late Garnet Wolseley Cox, who died while his genius was just beginning to be recognised. The Suite, stated to have been inspired by one of Aubrey Beardsley's pictures, comprises four movements, the first of which is a poetically conceived nocturne entitled 'Nightfall.' The second movement is headed 'Entrance of elves, fauns, and satyrs,' who are suggested by a vivacious march. This is succeeded by the 'Dance of rose fairies,' who apparently trip a dainty minuet which gives place to a 'Dance of Bacchantes' that forms a spirited finale to a charming work.

Previous to September 12 few Londoners had heard of Mr. Havergal Brian. He is a well nigh self-taught composer, born in North Staffordshire in 1877, and in the north, notably at Hanley, his compositions have won much esteem. They include three Psalm settings for orchestra and soli, 'burlesque variations' for orchestra, a symphonic poem, inspired by Lord Leighton's picture 'Hero,' an 'English suite,' and an overture 'For valour.' The suite, originally produced at one of the Leeds Town Hall Municipal concerts in January last, was performed for the first time in London on September 12. The poetic basis of the suite is an old English country fair. Rustics assemble to a spirited march, whereunto a humorous element is imparted by the prominence given to that most rural of all instruments, 'the loud bassoon.' The next number is a waltz, not of modern sentimentality but a rhythmic measure that stirs the pulse; its influence, however, upon the dancers appears to be much the same, since without break the music passes into an amorous episode entitled 'Love under the beech tree.' Presumably the village has only one such trysting-place, a state of affairs which must have caused occasional inconvenience. That the beech tree is not far from the dancers is evident from the strains of the waltz that occasionally mingle with tête-à-tête sentences. The fourth movement, entitled 'Interlude,' takes one away from the fair, for the composer says it is 'an attempt to convey in sound the emotion which arose while gazing from the Hanchurch hills, in Staffordshire, in the direction of the Wrekin, in Shropshire, the whole country suffused in brilliant sunlight.' Still farther from the spirit of the fair is the next section, in which a hymn-like melody plays a prominent part; but with the concluding movement a return is made to rustic revelry, and a series of episodes introduce us to such sundry 'side-shows' as 'Punch and Judy,' 'a sleeping beauty,' and 'The breathless lady,' the latter represented by a version of the 'dancers' theme played 'with mock solemnity' by trombones and tuba, shortly after which the work ends in a spirit of carnivalism. One is conscious that the composer is somewhat weak in the art of thematic development, but there is a freshness and significance in his music which indicates creative power. On the same night was given what was claimed to be the first performance in England of Mozart's Concerto in F for three pianofortes and orchestra, composed in 1776. It cannot be said that much is gained by the third solo instrument, in fact it will be remembered that Mozart afterwards arranged the work for two pianofortes. The soloists were Messrs. York Bowen, Frederick Kiddle and Henry J. Wood. The orchestra, consisting only of oboes, horns and strings, was conducted by Mr. Verbrugghen.

A curious piece of musical antiquity was revived on September 18, when a suite for two trumpets and three trombones, dating from 1685 and composed by Johann Pezel, was included in the programme. Of greater musical value was Bach's cantata for bass voice 'Amore traditore,' the solo part of which was sung by Mr. Witherspoon.

Mr. Granville Bantock's orchestral poem illustrating the familiar story of 'Lalla Rookh' was successfully performed on September 19 and should be heard again. It was written some nine years ago, but is in its composer's most characteristic style. The poem opens quasi languido, and soon an expressive melody of broad character which is the motif of the beauteous princess is given out on the G string by the violins. After brief treatment the music glides into march rhythm and is headed 'Bridal procession.' This in turn gives place to the third section illustrating how Feramorz, disguised as a minstrel, relates stories to beguile the journey. Prominent features of this division are very effective solo passages of cadenza-like character for flute, oboe, clarinet and bassoon. We then hear an 'Oriental dance,' some new themes, and repetition of those previously heard, leading to an imposing climax which prepares the way for the finale depicting how Feramorz reveals himself as the affianced of Lalla Rookh. The music here becomes very insistent and grandiose, but the close is more tranquil, being based on the 'Lalla Rookh' theme. The scoring scintillates with picturesque effects and the instrumentation is perhaps the most remembered attribute of the work. Mention should be made of the revival on this evening of Rachmaninoff's Pianoforte concerto in C minor, No. 2 (Op. 18), a significant and brilliant work first played in England by Mr. Sapellnikoff at a Philharmonic concert on May 29, 1902. At the Promenade concert the soloist was Miss Elsie Horne, who rendered the difficult music with great verve and brilliancy.

ENGLISH OPERA.

'Sarenna' and 'Greysteel.'

The Moody-Manners Company concluded its autumn season of grand opera at the Lyric Theatre on September 7. On the preceding evening was produced a one-act opera entitled 'Sarenna' by Mr. Hermann Löhr. The libretto by Mr. Avon Marsh follows the familiar model of Mascagni's 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' but the scene and characters are English, and the plot is very simple. The music is obvious and direct in expression, subtleties and complexities being studiously avoided. The most notable numbers are a chorus of Harvesters, Sarenna's song 'O love unkind,' which possesses considerable melodic charm, and Hendon's ditty 'Soldier, my soldier.' Miss Kate Anderson and Miss Penrose Hardinge respectively impersonated Sarenna and the Squire's sister, and Messrs. Joseph O'Mara, Lewys James and Charles Magrath severally embodied Hendon, Michael Heard and the landlord of the village inn. Mr. Richard Eckhold conducted, and the choristers showed lively interest in the success of the work.

On the same evening was performed Mr. Nicholas Gatty's 'Greysteel' to which detailed reference was made in The Musical Times of April, 1906, on the production of the opera at Sheffield. On this (London) occasion the heroine was excellently impersonated by Miss Enriqueta Crichton. Mr. Charles Carter sang expressively as Gisli, and the parts of the Baresark and Kol were admirably sustained by Mr. R. Brooks and Mr. Frederick Erle. Mr. Harrison Frewin conducted, and secured an effective rendering of the orchestral portion.

SIR CHARLES STANFORD'S MUSIC TO 'ATTILA.

It is highly probable that the incidental music composed by Sir Charles V. Stanford for Mr. Laurence Binyon's play 'Attila,' produced by Mr. Oscar Asche at His Majesty's Theatre on September 4, will result in the concert-room being enriched by an attractive orchestral Suite, for the themes possess strong individuality and their treatment is interesting and effective. The composer has invented four motive severally representative of Attila, his wife Kerka, the heroine Ildico, and the Soothsayer. The most important number is the overture, which opens with the delivery by the brass of Attila's bold theme, and has for its second subject the Ildico motif, the rough and virile vigour of the former being most effectively contrasted by the grace and lyrical charm of the latter. Other themes are deftly introduced, and the terse and rational development leaves a satisfactory impression on the listener.

The principal motive severally provide the basis of the entr'actes according as their respective characters are prominent in the subsequent scenes, the music admirably fulfilling its mission of suggesting to the spectator the particular sentiment of that which follows. There is no music during the action excepting in the final scene, when at the marriage reception a choral song of greeting is sung by the guests, and a dance executed by Ildico's attendants.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In forecasting the season's operations the place of honour must be given to the Birmingham Festival Choral Society, which will give four concerts under Dr. Sinclair's conductorship. The works to be performed are Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyam,' Berlioz's 'Faust,' Mozart's Mass in C minor and a Mozart selection, Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' and Wesley's 'In Exitu Israel.' The Birmingham City Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Beecham) will give Haydn's 'Seasons,' Berlioz's Te Deum, Liszt's 13th Psalm, and Verdi's 'Requiem.' Under Mr. A. J. Cotton's conductorship the Midland Musical Society has again arranged to give four concerts, Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' Beethoven's Mass in C, Elgar's 'King Olaf,' and Gounod's 'Redemption' forming the programmes. The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association, conducted by Mr. Joseph H. Adams, will also give four concerts, the selection including 'Elijah,' Gade's 'Spring's Message,' Barnett's 'Paradise and the Peri,' and a concert recital of Benedict's 'Lily of Killarney.' The Birmingham Choral Union will perform 'The Creation,' a concert recital of Wallace's 'Maritana,' 'The Messiah,' and Sullivan's 'Light of the World.' With Sir Edward Elgar, Mr. Granville Bantock, and Mr. Max Mossel at their head, an influential committee has been formed to give a series of eight orchestral concerts, with a band of one hundred performers. Three concerts will be given by the Hallé Orchestra (Dr. Richter), three by the Queen's Hall Orchestra (Mr. Henry J. Wood), and one each conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald and Herr Max Fiedler, of Hamburg. The newly-formed 'Birmingham Concerts Society' will give eight concerts, the conductors being Mr. George Halford (four concerts), Sir Villiers Stanford, Mr. Thomas Beecham, Mr. Moritz Moszkowski, and Mr. Alexander Siloti. Other forthcoming events include four Harrison concerts—the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Herr Nikisch, appearing at one of the series—Max Mossel drawing-room concerts, Royal Society of Artists' Musical Matinées organized by Mr. Oscar Pollack, Mr. Willy Lehmann's Chamber Concerts, &c.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The musical societies here have already begun their rehearsals. The Bristol Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. George Riseley, have taken in hand Gounod's 'Romeo and Juliet,' and Max Bruch's 'Lay of the bell.' Later on they will rehearse Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin' and 'Elijah.'

Under its new conductor (Mr. C. W. Stear) the Bristol North Choral Society is rehearsing Gade's 'Crusaders' and Stanford's 'Revenge.' The season's work will include Mendelssohn's 'Loreley,' 'When Israel out of Egypt came,' and 'Hear my prayer.'

The St. John's Choral Society has changed its name to the Clifton Choral Society, Mr. A. E. Hill again conducting. The members are practising Spohr's 'Last Judgment,' Maunder's 'Olivet to Calvary,' and Benedict's 'Lily of Killarney.'

The Young Men's Christian Association Choral Society, under Mr. Arnold Barter, has selected Mendelssohn's 'Loreley' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin.'

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Most of the leading musical societies have now resumed their rehearsals, and I am able to give a fairly complete forecast of the coming concert season. The operations of the Choral and Orchestral Union's season will be restricted to a period of thirteen weeks, during which four choral and ten orchestral concerts are to be given, and in addition Popular Orchestral Concerts will take place every Saturday evening. The Scottish Orchestra will again be under Dr. Cowen's direction, with Mr. Henri Verbrugghen as deputy-conductor. The choral works to be performed include 'The Messiah,' Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' Elgar's 'King Olaf,' the second act of 'Tannhäuser' and the last scene from 'The Meistersinger.' The choral concerts will as usual be conducted by Mr. Joseph Bradley.

Langside Choral Society has taken up Berlioz's 'Faust,' and probably 'St. Paul' or 'Elijah' will be performed during the second half of the season. This Society, which made such a promising first appearance last year, is under the direction of Dr. A. Davidson Arnott, who, by-the-way, succeeds Mr. Learmonth Drysdale in the conductorship of the Glasgow Select Choir. Pollokshields Philharmonic Society, under Mr. John Cullen, has in hand Weber's 'Der Freischütz' and Grieg's 'Olaf Trygvason.'

The Bach Choir (Glasgow), which is conducted by Mr. J. Michael Diack, begins its second session with the 'St. Matthew' Passion and Parts 1 and 2 of the 'Christmas Oratorio'; it is also intended to put into rehearsal one or two of Bach's smaller choral works. The Young Men's Christian Association Choir, under Mr. R. L. Reid, will again study 'The Messiah' and 'Elijah,' and the Sunday School Union Choir (Mr. Alec. Steven, conductor) Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives.' The Athenæum Choral Society, under Mr. Alfred Heap, will take up Bach's 'God's time is the best' and Gounod's 'Gallia.' The University Choral Society will prepare a miscellaneous programme which will include Bach's 'I wrestle and pray,' Elgar's 'Songs from the Bavarian Highlands,' Stanford's 'Songs of the sea' and two pieces by Grieg. Mr. A. M. Henderson, organist to the University, will again conduct the Society.

Of the amateur operatic societies, the College of Music will give Cellier's 'The Mountebanks'; the Orpheus Club, 'Haddon Hall'; the Amateur Operatic Society, 'Iolanthe'; the Athenæum, Bizet's 'Carmen'; while the Grand Opera Society will co-operate with the Moody-Manners Company in 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin.'

The following arrangements have been made in some of the district choral societies: Clydebank, Gounod's 'Gallia' and 'Elijah'; Coatbridge, 'Messiah,' Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast'; Vale of Leven, Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and 'The Creation' (these societies are under Mr. W. J. Clapperton's direction); Motherwell (Mr. T. Burness, conductor), Macfarren's 'Lady of the lake'; Greenock (Mr. W. T. Hoeck, conductor), Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' and 'Elijah.'

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In forecasting the arrangements of the approaching season the place of honour must be given to the performances, eight in number, of the venerable Gentlemen's Concerts. As heretofore, the band will be furnished from the Hallé Orchestra, with Dr. Richter as conductor. At the fifth concert, on January 15, Mr. Moszkowski will be present, and will conduct his Pianoforte concerto in E, the solo part to be played by Madame Dora Bright.

This is the jubilee year of the Hallé Concerts, and the directors have not been unmindful of the circumstance. Their programmes will honour the flourishing enterprise, honour the memory of Sir Charles Hallé, and honour music itself in the person and work of Beethoven, whose nine Symphonies will be performed in sequence during the twenty concerts under Dr. Richter's masterly guidance. The younger school of British composers will have its claims recognized in Mr. Granville Bantock, to whose 'Omar Khayyam' an evening is to be devoted. 'The Messiah' and 'Elijah' will both be given; and it may safely be predicted that no concerts will be more fully attended than those at which the music of Handel and Mendelssohn furnishes the programme.

The Brodsky Quartet—Dr. Brodsky, Mr. Rawdon Briggs, Mr. Simon Speelman, and Mr. Carl Fuchs—resume their remarkably successful concerts on November 12. Prominent at each of the eight performances of Mr. Brand Lane's twenty-seventh season of subscription concerts, will be the concert-giver's Philharmonic Choral Society, whose singing has always conferred considerable musical value upon the concerts, and last year brought the choir special renown. The Promenade Smoking Concerts will commence the season under very promising auspices. These concerts have grown from six to twelve in their third year of existence. The band of fifty performers—to be in future known as the Manchester Orchestra, Limited—consists, as before, of members of the Hallé Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. Simon Speelman. The important concerts at the Schiller Anstalt, directed by Mr. Carl Fuchs; the organ recitals of Dr. Pyne; the Chamber Concerts of Mr. Max Mayer; and the performances of the Beethoven Society—the largest of our amateur orchestral organizations—will, it is hoped, assist in the progress of music during our year of jubilee, while towards the end of the season the London Symphony Orchestra is announced to give performances under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Nikisch, in connection with the Harrison concerts.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union, in addition to its annual performance of the 'Messiah,' will repeat Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' at its first concert, and introduce a new cantata, 'The blessed Damozel,' composed by a clever young ex-student of the Royal College of Music, now resident in Newcastle, Mr. Edgar L. Bainton. The April concert will be devoted to the first performance here of Bach's B Minor Mass. The Postal Telegraph Choral Society will give Handel's 'Samson' at its first concert, and later on some unaccompanied music by Bach, Cornelius, Rutland Boughton and others. The Newcastle and District Teachers' Musical Society intends to confine itself to unaccompanied music this season.

Mr. Percy Harrison announces four concerts, at one of which the London Symphony Orchestra, under Nikisch, is to be the great attraction. The old-established Chamber Music Society has arranged its customary concerts. The first will be a recital by Mischa Elman, but the remainder are a succession of string quartet evenings, at which will appear the Sevcik, Rebner (with Herr Weingartner as pianist), Vienna, Bohemian, and Brussels Quartets. The young Classical Concert Society is giving four concerts, at the first of which Mr. Leonard Borwick and Mr. Borsdorf will appear, one of the items being Brahms's Horn trio. The second concert will be devoted to modern French music by Debussy, Fauré, Chausson, &c., performed by a quintet of instrumentalists and a vocalist, who have identified themselves particularly with these later manifestations of their country's musical development.

The South Shields Orchestral Society is showing its customary vigour by attacking two symphonies, Beethoven's 'Eroica' and Mendelssohn's 'Scotch.'

Jarrow Philharmonic Society is undertaking 'Samson'; and the Sunderland Harmonic Society, Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander.' The Annfield Plain Glee Society promises an excellent selection of old English compositions at its first concert. The Middlesbrough festival is referred to on p. 658.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The prospect for the coming season is very encouraging, and there is a likelihood of much new music being performed. The programme of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society includes 'Elijah,' 'Hiawatha,' and 'The Kingdom,' the two latter works being quite new to local music-lovers. At its orchestral concerts this Society intends to present as fresh material 'Finlandia' (Sibelius) and Glazounov's C minor Symphony. Mr. Allen Gill will as heretofore conduct, and an excellent list of soloists is provided.

Chamber music will be provided by Miss Cantelo's Subscription Concerts; three concerts will be given, two by the Brodsky Quartet, and at the third will be heard Signor Simonetti, Mr. Whitehouse and Miss Cantelo. At this concert Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte trio 'To the memory of a great artist' will be included in the programme.

A new series of music-makings to be known as the Nottingham Subscription Concerts has been arranged. At the first Richter and the Hallé Orchestra are to provide the programme.

The Long Eaton Choral Society has arranged for two concerts—for the first 'The Messiah,' for the second 'The Creation' (Parts 1 and 2) and the 'Hymn of Praise.' At Melbourne the Glee and Madrigal Society is preparing 'Elijah' and 'The Holy City.'

There is a prospect of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion music being performed at St. Mary's Church.

The Nottingham Evening School Choral Union is preparing 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' and the orchestral section of the Society intends to perform a Haydn symphony and overtures by Cherubini and Nicolai.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Rehearsals have re-commenced with all the musical societies—choral and instrumental—in view of a season which, offering nothing important in the way of new works, promises some interesting revivals. Mr. Henry J. Wood will conduct the Amateur Musical Society's winter concert, when Bach's 'Magnificat' and Handel's 'Acis and Galatea'—which have been strangely neglected in Sheffield for many years—will be performed. Parry's 'King Saul,' which has not been heard here since the Festival of 1899, will be revived by the Musical Union in November under the composer's baton. For the spring concert an a capella programme—to include Bach's 'Sing ye to the Lord'—will be given, conducted by Dr. Coward.

Several interesting concerts are promised by the zealous organizations in the suburbs. The Burngreave Choral Society announces 'Elijah,' 'Messiah,' and Spohr's 'Last Judgment,' under the direction of Mr. H. C. Jackson. The Hillsbro' Choral Society, a young body conducted by Mr. F. Shimeld, is busy preparing Handel's 'Samson,' Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind,' and Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George.' The Heeley Wesley Choral Society promises Gade's 'Psyche' and Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander,' conducted by Mr. E. G. Laycock, and the Heeley Church Philharmonic Society has taken in hand 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' under Mr. N. Whittaker.

From the neighbouring towns of Doncaster and Rotherham a novel experiment is promised. Each possesses an excellent Choral Society, flourishing under the same conductor, Mr. T. Brameld. The two Societies are therefore joining forces for a performance on a large scale of 'The Apostles,' to be given in each town. Doncaster will further busy itself with preparing Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin,' and Rotherham will perform Coleridge-Taylor's 'Meg Blane,' and Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm.

The Sheffield Philharmonic Orchestra (conductor, Mr. J. H. Parkes) announces a Joseph Holbrooke night with the composer in command, the programme to be varied with Elgar's 'In the South' overture. This prosperous amateur orchestra has started a probationary section which is ultimately to number a hundred members.

The Sheffield Chamber Music Society has issued an attractive list of concerts. Among the visiting parties will be the London String Quartet, the Brodsky Quartet, the Fransella Trio, and the Queen's Hall Octet (Schubert's Octet). A new series of subscription concerts promoted by Messrs. Wilson, Peck & Co. will bring to Sheffield the Hallé and Queen's Hall Orchestras, while at one of Mr. Harrison's concerts the London Symphony Orchestra will appear, conducted by Mr. Arthur Nikisch.

Foreign Notes.

ANTWERP.

Heinrich Zöllner, the well-known composer of the opera 'Die versunkene Glocke,' who had been appointed professor of composition at the Stern Conservatorium, Berlin, has obtained release from his engagement, in order to undertake the duties of principal capellmeister at the Flemish opera house of this city. The inauguration of the new building will take place in October.

BERLIN.

Herr Gregor announces the following works for performance during the forthcoming season of the Komische Oper:—d'Albert's 'Tiefland,' Samara's 'Mademoiselle de Belle-Isle,' E. Fizzi's 'Rosalba,' Mascagni's 'Iris,' Rubinstein's 'Dämon,' Carl Weiss's 'Die Zwillinge,' and Alfano's 'Auferstehung.' Two operas by Weiss, 'Der polnische Jude' and 'Die Dorfmusikanten,' were produced in 1902 and 1904.——Frau Sophie Heymann-Engel intends to give three most interesting performances of old operas which are unknown, or which have fallen into oblivion, in the theatre of the Hochschule für Musik. At the first performance, on October 5, will be given Gluck's 'Der betrogene Kadi' and Pergolesi's 'La Serva padrona,' both one-act works. The second evening will be devoted to German opera, the composers Dittersdorf and Süssmayer. Excellent artists have been engaged.

EISENACH.

The Bach Museum has recently acquired several valuable gifts: a copy of the rare 'Handbuch bey dem Generalbasse' by Fr. Wilhelm Marpurg, a harpsichord of 1750, a genuine Kielflügel from Paul de Witt's collection of instruments, and the autograph of the continuo part of Bach's Church cantata, 'Christ, unser Herr, zum Jordan kam,' consisting of three well-preserved sheets bound in leather.

HAMBURG.

The following works are to be given at the forthcoming season of Philharmonic Concerts under the direction of Max Fiedler: 'Elegie et Musette,' 'Finlandia' and third symphony by Sibelius; Bruckner's eighth symphony; Pfitzner's 'Christelflein' overture; Elgar's orchestral Variations; Debussy's 'Nuages et Fêtes'; Reger's Variations on a merry theme (under the composer's direction), and Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung.' The choral works include Bach's 'Magnificat,' Beethoven's 'Missa solemnis,' Brahms's 'Nänie' and 'Parzenlied,' and Schumann's 'Manfred.' An excellent scheme, for the carrying out of which distinguished artists have been engaged.

LEIPZIG.

Eugen d'Albert's opera 'Tiefland,' which the composer has revised, will be performed at the Stadttheater next month, also, and for the first time here, Isidore de Lara's 'Messalina' will be given. Albert Conrad, having had experience at various theatres, has been appointed third conductor.——The Gewandhaus Concerts commence on October 10. The following new works are announced: Variations and fugue by Max Reger, a serenade by Leo Weiner, and an organ concerto by Enrico Bossi, with the composer as soloist.

ST. PETERSBURG.

A number of vocalists have combined to build an opera house for the people in this city, and financial assistance from Russian capitalists has been secured. The theatre will seat four thousand persons and the prices of admission are to be most moderate. The répertoire will include among other works, Goldmark's 'Queen of Sheba' and Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman.'

SCHEVENINGEN.

A concert in memory of Dr. Joachim was recently given by the Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Ernst Kunwald. The first part of the programme included Joachim's 'Hamlet' Overture and the first movement of the 'Hungarian' concerto, the solo part of which was performed by Herr Gesterkamp, a pupil of the composer-violinist. In the second part the 'Eroica' symphony was appropriately performed.

THE COMING SEASON.

The arrangements made by the various London and Suburban musical Societies for next season are as follows:

Royal Choral Society (conductor Sir Frederick Bridge)—Elijah, Hiawatha (complete), Israel in Egypt (selections), and Stanford's new Stabat Mater (written for the forthcoming Leeds Festival), the Dream of Gerontius, Bach's Mass in B minor and two performances of the Messiah.

London Choral Society (conductor Mr. Arthur Fagge)—Berlioz's Faust, Hiawatha's Wedding-feast and Death of Minnehaha, Elgar's Dream of Gerontius, Pompeii by B. Holländer (first performance), The Beatitudes by Edward Maryon (written specially for the Society), a selection from Fra Francesco by Henry Waller (first time in England), Joseph Holbrooke's The Bells, and possibly Liszt's St. Elizabeth.

Central London Choral Society (conductor Mr. David J. Thomas)—Elgar's King Olaf, MacCunn's Wreck of the Hesperus, and Leoni's Gate of Life.

Alexandra Palace Choral Society (conductor Mr. Allen Gill)—Elgar's The Kingdom and Caractacus, Bach's Mass in B minor, Gounod's Faust, the Messiah, Israel in Egypt, Judas Maccabæus, and Elijah.

South London Choral Association (conductor Mr. Leonard C. Venables)—Hiawatha's Wedding-feast and Death of Minnehaha, Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, Goring Thomas's The swan and the skylark, and Parry's Pied Piper of Hamelin.

Southwark Choral Society (conductor Dr. Madeley Richardson)—Coleridge-Taylor's Hiawatha.

Dulwich Philharmonic Society (conductor Mr. Arthur Fagge)—Elgar's Caractacus, Mendelssohn's Athalie, the Messiah, Gounod's Faust, and Bizet's Carmen.

Hither Green Choral and Orchestral Society (conductor Dr. John E. Borland)—Spohr's Last Judgment, Israel in Egypt, and the Messiah.

Bromley Choral Society (conductor Mr. F. Lewis Thomas)—Hofmann's Cinderella, Lee Williams's choral ode Music, and Stanford's Revenge.

Bermondsey Settlement Choral and Orchestral Union (conductor Dr. John E. Borland)—Elijah, Israel in Egypt, and Everyman (Walford Davies).

Streatham Hill Choral Society (conductor Mr. E. J. Quance)—Elgar's King Olaf and Berlioz's Faust.

The London Symphony Orchestra will give ten concerts (seven evening and three afternoon), including a performance, on December 16, of Bach's Mass in B minor, under the direction of Dr. Richter.

The directors of the Queen's Hall Orchestra announce that the two Grieg concerts which had been arranged for the afternoons of October 16 and 23 at Queen's Hall will be given as In Memoriam concerts. The programmes will consist of the works which Dr. Grieg had himself selected for performance on those dates, together with the artists chosen by him.

'English folk-song, some conclusions' is the title of a book by Mr. Cecil J. Sharp, shortly to be published by Messrs. Simpkin. Judged by the 'table of contents' the volume appears to exhaust a subject to which its author has given so much attention and personal investigation.

Herr Adolf Beyschlag, formerly of Belfast, Manchester and Leeds, has had the title of Professor conferred upon him in Germany.

Answers to Correspondents.

C. R. H.—M. Charles Marie Widor is, happily, still living. He was born on February 22, 1845, at Lyons, where his father—a native of Alsace but of Hungarian descent—was organist of St. François church there. His first teacher was his father; he afterwards studied at Brussels, under Lemmens for organ and Fétis for harmony. On his return to Lyons he became organist of St. François church at the age of fifteen in succession to his father. In January, 1870, he obtained the appointment of organist at St. Sulpice, Paris, a post he still worthily holds. In 1890 he succeeded César Franck as professor of organ-playing at the Paris Conservatoire, and in 1896 he replaced Theodore Dubois as professor of counterpoint, fugue and composition at the same institution. In addition to his fame as a composer of much meritorious instrumental and vocal music of sterling worth, M. Widor obtained distinction as a musical critic, and his versatile attainments mark him out as a man of intellectual activity and great musicianship. He visited England in 1888—the same year that Grieg came here—and conducted his 'Walpurgis Night' music at a Philharmonic Concert of that year. In regard to his Organ Symphonies—from No. 1 of which the 'Marche Pontificale' you mention is taken—we venture to quote from the 'Programme Notes' (Novello) of Dr. A. L Peace, who says: 'In the Eight Organ Symphonies by Mons. Widor, an endeavour is made to give the organ a symphonic treatment, as distinguished from the contrapuntal phase of organ-playing which may be said to have held universal sway up to the period of about 1840, when Mons. Cavaillé-Coll, of Paris, effected a complete revolution in the construction of the organ, which consequently gave rise to a demand for a class of compositions calculated to develop its resources in a more diversified manner. Many of the movements in these symphonies are highly original, and what is more to the point, many of them are of real artistic worth.'

L. M. G.—Although you have 'heard it stated recently that in future all head organists' appointments in cathedrals, as they fall vacant, would be given to clergymen,' such a statement should not be accepted without a certain amount of reserve. The 'proof,' such as it is, you give is not altogether convincing—'a young man desiring to become a cathedral organist, who for that reason alone was preparing for orders.' Although you say that the matter makes no difference to you personally, 'as ladies do not usually obtain cathedral appointments,' we may remind you that the organistships of ten cathedrals in Ireland are held by ladies. While there are now two clerical organists of English cathedrals, at present no lady holds that office.

SPENCER.—(1) The examination pieces (pianoforte) may be played at about the following rates of speed: Czerny's Study (Op. 335, No. 2), minim = 88 to 96; Bach's Bourée, No. 6 (Suite Française), the same rate; Hummel's Rondo (Op. 11), crotchet = 88; Reinecke's Tanzlied (Op. 88, No. 4), dotted crotchet = 76. (2) In Hummel's Rondo the quaver notes (D) under the trilled note F are to be struck. (3) Yes, the pedal is to be used in the soft passages, but with discretion.

A. G. G.—The Royal College of Organists has no authoritative measurements for organs. The recommendations drawn up at the conference on organ construction in 1881 were withdrawn by the Royal College of Organists in 1902. More than one attempt has been made to adopt a definite standardization in regard to organs, but they have proved abortive. If you are in the hands of a good builder you may safely leave the pedal measurements to him.

HENRICUS.—We are unable to pass any opinion upon your stylographed hymn-tune, as the harmonies appear to have 'gone wrong.' As you are unable to play the piano yourself, perhaps you could get some friend to perform the tune exactly as it is printed. The result will be that some amendment of the harmony, and perhaps the melody—G and two F sharps being rather high—may commend itself to you.

J. B.—If the authorities of the Royal College of Organists are unable to give you any information about the 'hood composed of black and mauve (it might possibly be heliotrope colour) silk, trimmed with white fur,' we cannot furnish it. Why not ask the hood-clad gentleman who, in your opinion, appears to sail under the false colours of black and mauve, or heliotrope?

CONFIDENCE.—It is a little difficult to say, even 'in confidence,' which is 'the easiest pianoforte concerto to study.' You might look at Dussek's Concerto in F (Op. 17), of which the allegro vivace is issued in Westlake's Lyra studentium series of pieces published by Edwin Ashdown, Ltd.

K. B.—Madame Adelina Patti has travelled so far and wide that in all probability she has sung at Portland, Oregon. In order, however, to obtain 'a decision that will be taken as final in an argument,' your best plan will be to ask the distinguished singer herself.

H. M.—Dietrich and Widman's 'Recollections of Johannes Brahms' (English translation) and Hadow's 'Studies in modern music' were both published by Messrs. Seeley & Co. 'Masters of German music,' by J. A. Fuller Maitland, was published by Messrs. Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.

WALKLEY.—A biographical sketch of Dr. Hans Richter appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of July, 1899, the subject of which was kind enough to tell a Vienna journalist that it was 'the best.' Dr. Richter is not a composer.

R. G. F.—You are much more likely to meet with your requirements by advertising in a musical journal than in a daily provincial paper.

MUSIK.—For children's musical and fancy drills apply to Messrs. George Philip & Son, Ltd., 32, Fleet Street; or Messrs. Charles & Dible, 10, Paternoster Square; and see 'Calisthenic Cane Drill' by E. Sully (Weekes).

E. F. D.—The song 'Come unto Me' by Miss Lindsay (Mrs. J. Worthington Bliss) is now published by Messrs. Leadbeater & Son, Manchester.

R. T. H. B.—We regret that we cannot trace the air known forty years ago as 'Pastol.'

A correspondent says that Dr. Hinton's book on 'Organ Construction' is now published by Messrs. Weekes & Co.

EXERCISES FOR THE TENOR VOICE
WITH INTRODUCTORY REMARKS ON ITS TRAINING AND DEVELOPMENT
BY
E. DAVIDSON PALMER,
Mus. Bac. Oxon.

A unique feature of this work is the use which is made of the Head Voice. The downward training of this kind of voice is all-important to the Tenor, and Special Exercises are here provided for this purpose. The Introduction contains information and guidance on the following subjects: Chest Voice and Falsetto—Different Meanings attached to the word Head Voice—The Best Mode of Breathing—Beauty of Tone—Cause and Cure of Nasal and Throaty Tone—Ease of Production in the Upper Notes—Control of Tongue and Soft Palate—Voices without Registers—Wrong Training and the Dictates of Nature, &c.

The above work may be obtained from the Publishers, Messrs. NOVELLO & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.; or from the AUTHOR, 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.

THE RHYTHMIC CONCEPTION OF MUSIC

By MARGARET H. GLYN.

"The philosophers profess to explain the power and charms of music, but do so each in his own way. The writer of this thoughtful essay formulates a new theory and brings forward a novel explanation. . . . The theory will recommend itself to modern musicians as justifying free forms as well as strict forms, and as explaining how Berlioz and Wagner are masters, as well as Haydn and Mozart. The essay works it out suggestively in relation both to the history and to the æsthetics of music, and is full of interest for musicians of the more studious sort."—Scotsman.

EXTREMELY SUITABLE FOR PERFORMANCE AT THE SEASON OF CHRISTMAS.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA
FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE
AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY
ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star.

"The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Staffordshire Correspondent, The Musical Times.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City.' . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"Mr. Gaul is an experienced organist, and his series of organ works now in process of publication will doubtless have a great sale. Three numbers are to hand. No. 1, a beautiful Allegretto Pastorale; No. 2, comprising two movements, Communion and Allegretto; and No. 3, comprising six Andante movements, all written in the melodious manner to which the legion of admirers of Mr. Gaul's genius are accustomed. All organists should place these graceful works beside the slow movements of Henry Smart, another English musician whose name is honoured in the organ galleries."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

PROGRAMME MUSIC
IN
THE LAST FOUR CENTURIES
A CONTRIBUTION TO THE HISTORY OF MUSICAL EXPRESSION

BY

FREDERICK NIECKS, Mus.D.
Reid Professor of Music in the University of Edinburgh.
(Author of "Frederick Chopin as a Man and Musician"; &c.)

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A contribution to musical literature which will stand as a monument of research and as a text-book for all students of the art, in one of its most important aspects, to which the book's pages are devoted. . . . As a work of reference its completeness should certainly make it invaluable. . . . The volume now published, full as it is of the fruits of well-directed industry and research, and containing as it does vastly more information on the important subject with which it deals than any other work yet written in our language, is one for which its author deserves the lasting gratitude of everybody interested in music and its development.

STANDARD.

It is safe at the outset to say that by this thoroughly interesting and helpful book Professor Niecks has enriched our literature to an extent only equalled in recent times by the Oxford History of Music. . . . An exceedingly well written epilogue concludes this book, which cannot fail to be helpful to composers at the moment. . . . Professor Niecks brings his immense labour—one that is not likely to be superseded for a long time—to a worthy finish.

MORNING POST.

The present volume deserves to rank among the most valuable works on the history of music which have appeared for many years. The subject is one of engrossing interest, and in treating it the author has not only displayed his erudition and marshalled his facts with the greatest accuracy, but has in the expression of his ideas shown himself thoroughly impartial.

DAILY NEWS.

Professor Niecks has done valiant work in clearing away many of the errors and misunderstandings which have obscured the vexed subject of programme music. He took up his task in the impartial spirit of the historical investigator, and has carried it through with such success that his bulky volume will be an historical document. . . . The value of the historical survey and the criticism connecting it cannot be exaggerated.

MORNING ADVERTISER.

Not only is it a sound as well as an exhaustive volume on the art which he knows so well, but it has the fine merit, from the amateur's point of view, of being extremely readable. . . . If I wanted to place in the hands of a man the history of music for the last four hundred years I should give him the work under notice, for by reading it he would gain a clearer view of what had been accomplished than by wading through half the academical histories written in the formal manner of the pedantic historian.

MORNING LEADER.

Professor Niecks's book fills a lamentable gap in our musical literature, though it cannot be said to exhaust the subject, which is, in a sense, co-extensive with the whole history of music. . . . The whole book is a valuable contribution to the study of the subject. It deprives people of the excuse of not having all the facts before them in an accessible form, and many will be surprised to learn what a vast body of facts has been accumulating in the last four centuries. Finally, his lucid definition of the various kinds of programme music should put an end to much loose thinking and looser writing on the subject.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Dr. Frederick Niecks, the professor of music at Edinburgh, may be congratulated on his latest book, "Programme Music," which Messrs. Novello have just published. For years past he has been collecting material for this very interesting history of composition, and the time he has devoted to the task has resulted in a volume which will become a standard work, and will consequently have to be read by every earnest musician, amateur or professional.

ATHENÆUM.

Prof. Niecks's book is a veritable cyclopædia of information on programme music, and full of valuable comments and criticisms. In his Epilogue he sums up the matter tersely in the following words: "Programme music in its widest sense is co-extensive with expressive music; in its narrower sense it is a species of this genus."

SATURDAY REVIEW.

This immense book, "Programme Music in the Last Four Centuries" (Novello and Co.), was a book well worth writing, for it is filled with information of many curious kinds, and it tells us incidentally a great deal about music and "musical expression." . . . Too much praise cannot be given to the care with which the actual sayings and writings of composers themselves, on their own intentions and on what they consider should be done in music, have been gathered together and set in a convenient and significant order.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Professor Niecks's work will be welcome to many who, whether or not they endorse all of the author's conclusions, will find in its pages much information on the subject previously unknown or inaccessible. The data brought together in the work will indeed surprise many. . . . Enough for the present to congratulate Professor Niecks heartily on the production of the work, which must have cost infinite labour and the value of which is incontestable.

EVENING STANDARD AND ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

By its lucidity of expression, the thoroughness of the examination of material, and by sound critical judgment, Professor Niecks's book stands as a great achievement and a most valuable contribution to the history of musical expression.

OBSERVER.

From the historic house of Novello has come a book by Professor Frederick Niecks, which, it is safe to say, is one of the most important contributions to the literature of music since the Oxford History. . . . Not only will this wonderfully written and planned volume be of the greatest help to music-lovers, but it should do much to influence all our modern composers to return to the simpler paths.

REFEREE.

Dr. Niecks's book is the most advanced, comprehensive, and valuable consideration of the subject extant, and should be read by every thoughtful musician, who, it may be added, will derive no small profit and pleasure from its perusal.

BRISTOL TIMES.

It is "a contribution to the history of musical expression" which will take a foremost place among works of the kind.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.

As a contribution to historical musical literature, the book is one of the most important publications of recent years.

BIRMINGHAM POST.

It is undoubtedly the most notable contribution to the question in any literature. For the thoroughness with which he has done his work no praise can be too high.

WESTERN MORNING NEWS.

Professor Niecks has set himself a mighty task, but no less a fact is it that he has achieved generous accomplishment. The volume which he has produced will, not only on account of the incalculable importance of its subject at the present day, mark a period in musical publications, but also on account of its exhaustive, comprehensive, and fully-detailed matter, supply a concise and full history of music throughout the period dealt with. . . . Valuable as is the earlier portion of the book for its historical data, the critical manner in which the author treats the fifth and sixth periods, which comprise practically the second half of the volume, will be to the modern student the most interesting.

THE CHOIRBOY'S GUIDE TO THE CATHEDRAL PSALTER

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

This little book has been compiled mainly for the use of choirboys, and, therefore, nothing has been inserted but what is absolutely necessary for understanding the pointing of the Psalms as arranged in the Cathedral Psalter.

A certain amount of information has been given for the guidance of the Choirmaster, but the principal part of the book consists in the sets of exercises which have been arranged to lead the choirboys, step by step, through the various divisions of syllables that occur in the chanting of the Psalms.

After careful examination of the Cathedral Psalter, it has been found that there are exactly fifteen ways of dividing these syllables.

All the exercises have been taken from this Psalter, and the pointing of the verses also coincides with that given in the Cathedral Paragraph Psalter edited by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, D.D.

The author has thoroughly tested the advantages to be gained by the use of this methodical arrangement of the exercises, and is therefore in a position to say that by the use of them a very considerable amount of time can be saved in teaching choirboys to understand the pointing of the Psalms.

As the Recitation Notes are well within the compass of Alto, Tenor, and Bass voices, the book can be used with equal advantage by all members of a choir.

VOICE CULTURE FOR CHILDREN

A PRACTICAL PRIMER

ON THE

CULTIVATION AND PRESERVATION OF YOUNG VOICES

WITH EXERCISES FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS, CHOIRS, SOLO-BOYS, ETC.

BY

JAMES BATES.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the extreme delicacy of the child's voice, yet how often have these frail instruments been irreparably ruined for want of a little knowledge or a little care! Let the teacher sternly discourage anything like "shouty" singing, especially in class or choir, or misguided attempts to sing notes which are too high or too low. It may safely be said that soft singing (of course within the compass of the voice) will never do harm, no matter how continuous, but loud singing will inevitably lead to disaster. The teacher who successfully instils the principles of correct singing, and thereby renders possible the life-long use and enjoyment of a pleasing voice, is conferring on his young charges a boon of inestimable value. This thought should be his constant encouragement in times of difficulty and lack of immediate success.

THE

MACDONALD SMITH SYSTEM

OF TOUCH AND TECHNIQUE.

(“FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD.”)

VON BÜLOW, says:

> “For a pianist, three things are necessary—the first is Technique, the second is Technique, and the third is Technique.”

The MACDONALD SMITH System is indispensable for all who wish to attain the highest degree of proficiency in Touch and Technique with a minimum of work.

WHAT PUPILS SAY.

“At first I was very sceptical of the proposed methods, but they are found to be rational enough. I have gained more in the twelve months under trial than by all previous teaching, which was from a L.R.A.M. and involved two hours' daily practice for six years.”

THE BECKER SYSTEM

OF

MODERN PIANOFORTE TECHNIQUE BY CORRESPONDENCE

The “Becker” System discards constant five finger exercise and scale playing, and reduces practice to a minimum. It utilizes the power of concentration possessed by every individual to give full control of the fingers, hands and wrists, and thus ensures perfect touch, tone, execution and expression in infinitely less time than is otherwise possible. If your playing is characterized by hardness of touch, harshness of tone, uncertainty of execution or lack of expression, you should certainly adopt a system that rapidly and permanently removes all such deficiencies. Booklet A will be sent free upon application.

PUPILS WRITE:

“Your exercises and apparatus (Gauge) are splendid, and their use is greatly improving my technique. The control exercises are of remarkable value.”—L.R.A.M. (Devon).

“The first exercise is certainly the finest loosener for the fingers I have ever used. The old chronic muscle-bound feeling in my hands is fast disappearing, and a flexibility and power daily becoming more a permanency. The use of the Gauge soon gives fine results.”—A Professor of Music (S. Wales).

THE BECKER OCTAVE AND SIXTH GAUGE.

(PROTECTED.)

An apparatus—about 4½ inches long—of polished mahogany, that rapidly trains the hand to strike the correct keys in octave and sixth passages and ensures thorough looseness of the wrist. Invaluable to all students and teachers.

Post-free, 1s. 6d., with full Instructions and Special Exercise.
Professional and trade terms upon application.

The following is a copy of an unsolicited press notice which appeared in the Buxton Advertiser, of Saturday, September 28th, 1907.

BUXTON GARDENS & OPERA HOUSE.
The Week-End Concerts.

"On Sunday evening, two artists new to Buxton were engaged; Miss Marie D'Alcourt, a dramatic soprano with a voice of exceptional range and clearness, and Mr. John Wheelan, a tenor possessed of the real tenor quality and rare artistic instinct, which was admirably displayed in 'Deeper and deeper still,' and 'Waft her, Angels,' from Handel's 'Jephtha.' In response to the most hearty applause, Mr. Wheelan sang Blumenthal's 'An Evening Song' with great feeling. Miss D'Alcourt sang Robandi's 'Alla Stella Confidente,' and, as an encore, the beautiful 'Angels, ever bright and fair'; as an exhibition of thoroughly trained vocalization it left little to be desired. It was, however, in the Aria 'Breeze of the Night' and the 'Miserere' duet from 'Il Trovatore' that the greatest effect was made, the blending of the voices and thorough mutual understanding between the singers leading to a perfect furore of applause at its conclusion. We trust the first visit of these talented singers will not be the last."

MISS ESTELLA LINDEN
(SOPRANO)
Principal Tonic Sol-fa Festival, Crystal Palace, 1906. Sang 80 different Works—at Bristol (Mr. Riseley's), Sheffield (Dr. Coward's), &c.
Singing in N.W. England early December. Dates free, 5th to 10th.
En route terms. 18, Stanley Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

MISS MARY LUND
(THE YORKSHIRE SOPRANO)

"Possesses a soprano voice of remarkable range, sweetness, and power, clear in the upper notes and rich in the lower. . . . Miss Lund, who is richly equipped with natural gifts, should become a singer of distinction."—Standard.

"Her voice is a soprano of great range, and her high notes are produced with a fulness and ease which are very satisfactory to the ear. . . . Miss Lund's bent is essentially oratorio, and such a capable and tuneful, as well as powerful singer, should have no difficulty in making her way."—Musical Standard.

The King says: "His voice is wonderfully reminiscent of Sims Reeves: there is the same timbre, the same expression."

The Buxton Advertiser says: "His voice reminds one very forcibly of the late Mr. Sims Reeves."

The Derbyshire Advertiser and Journal says: "To say that Mr. Henry Beaumont is a tenor recalling with credit to himself Mr. Sims Reeves is a high compliment, but it is not undeserved."

The Tatler says: "Mr. Henry Beaumont is an ideal oratorio tenor."

MR. C. W. FREDERICKS
(TENOR)

Vicar Choral, Lichfield Cathedral.

Of the Trocadero, Paris; Crystal Palace, London; and Principal Provincial Concerts. Up-to-date Press Notices, &c., forwarded on application. Address, Cathedral, Lichfield.

Telegrams, "Fredericks, Lichfield."

EAST ANGLIAN DAILY TIMES. April 6, 1907.

"HIAWATHA," &c.—"The lovely tenor solo, 'Onaway! awake, beloved,' was splendidly interpreted by Mr. C. W. Fredericks, Vicar Choral of Lichfield Cathedral, who proved himself an experienced and able executant. The sentiment of the air was finely expressed, and the top notes towards the end were emitted in ringing fashion. So artistic and striking a version could not fail to create a highly favourable impression, and the soloist was induced by persistent applause to give a repetition. . . . Mr. Fredericks heightened the good impression already created when he gave a magnificent interpretation of Gounod's 'Lend me your aid' ('La Reine de Saba'). There was imported all the requisite fire and brilliancy, and a further contribution was inevitable. Acceding to the request, he gave 'Tom Bowling' with rare feeling. Towards the end of the evening he submitted Dawson's 'Ever and alway' in equally praiseworthy style."

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS
(TENOR).

"JUDAS MACCABÆUS" AT THE CITY TEMPLE.

The critic of Musical Opinion writes: "Mr. Samuel Masters was the tenor. At the time of his first coming out I had occasion to express my opinion pretty strongly as to his great merits as a concert singer, and now he has blossomed into a Handelian tenor of marked value. I was pleased beyond measure by his delivery of the two great and difficult airs which Handel assigned to the Jewish hero."—Musical Opinion, April, 1907.

MELODIOUS TECHNIQUE
FOR THE PIANOFORTE

COMPOSED BY

J. A. O'NEILL.

In Two Books:
Price Two Shillings each, net.

These Pianoforte Studies have been highly praised by M. Vladimir de Pachmann, who has expressed his intention of playing some of them during his Recital Tour in the United States. His testimonial is published with the Work, which consists of Twelve Numbers, specially designed to develop power and skill in the fourth and fifth fingers. The importance of trying to equalize these weaker fingers with the stronger ones is unquestionable, as defective execution is more often traceable to this inequality of the fingers than to any other cause.

THE CHOIRBOY'S GUIDE TO THE CATHEDRAL PSALTER

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

This little book has been compiled mainly for the use of choirboys, and, therefore, nothing has been inserted but what is absolutely necessary for understanding the pointing of the Psalms as arranged in the Cathedral Psalter.

A certain amount of information has been given for the guidance of the Choirmaster, but the principal part of the book consists in the sets of exercises which have been arranged to lead the choirboys, step by step, through the various divisions of syllables that occur in the chanting of the Psalms.

After careful examination of the Cathedral Psalter, it has been found that there are exactly fifteen ways of dividing these syllables.

As the Recitation Notes are well within the compass of Alto, Tenor, and Bass voices, the book can be used with equal advantage by all members of a choir.

Price Ninepence.

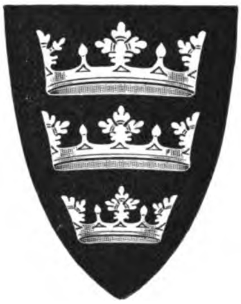
BRISTOL CATHEDRAL.

What is the long cathedral glade,
But faith, that in the structured shade
Herself embodies to the sense,
Leaning upon Omnipotence;
And Holiness, ennobling thought,
Into a living temple wrought?

Ancient and modern: these characteristics cause Bristol to be unique among English cathedrals. Seven centuries cover the period of building: from the Chapter House, erected in the reign of Henry II., to the Nave, built in the reign of Queen Victoria. The cathedral owes its origin to Robert Fitzharding, afterwards Lord Berkeley, who died in 1170 and was buried under the choir of the Norman church. In 1142 Fitzharding founded a monastery of Augustinian canons, six of whom afterwards came into residence. Built between 1148 and 1155, the Chapter House is late Norman, almost transitional in fact, having 'just a touch of the point.' Here we meet with the most elaborate Norman work in England. The photograph on p. 707 will help to convey some idea of the rich diaper work of the beautiful roof, which, with Gloucester, is one of the finest specimens of Norman stone-vaulting remaining in England. No less fascinating is the arcading—indeed, this Chapter House and its vestibule are veritable gems of ancient architecture. The eastern wall is modern, as it replaces that destroyed by the rioters in 1831.



ARMS OF THE CATHEDRAL.

With the exception of the walls of the north and south transepts, which are Norman, the next most ancient part of the building is the Elder Lady Chapel, situated on the north side of the cathedral and entered from the north transept. It is called Elder because it preceded the second Lady Chapel at the east end of the church. Originally detached from the main building, the Elder Chapel dates from 1216 to 1234, and by reason of its decorative work is one of the most beautiful features of the cathedral. In the spandrels of the arcade are some grotesque carvings, not unlike those at Wells.* One of these humoresques—an ape playing, on Pan's pipes, a duet with a violinist ram, is reproduced below. Early in the 14th century, during the regime of Abbot Knowle, the Norman choir was replaced by the existing building in the Decorated or Middle pointed style. Every English cathedral has its special points of architectural interest, and the choir of Bristol can hold its own in this respect. It has no triforium, clerestory, or flying buttresses; the same height (52 feet) prevails throughout the entire building, including the aisles and the modern nave. The absence of the clerestory is, however, amply atoned for by the large transomed windows of the aisles, which cause the whole of the eastern half of the interior to be wonderfully open and spacious: beneath these Decorated windows is a string-course with ball-flower ornament, the whole design being most pleasing in its light and cheerful aspect. The skeleton vaulting of the aisles (as shown in the view on p. 712) is very uncommon and forms a feature of special interest.

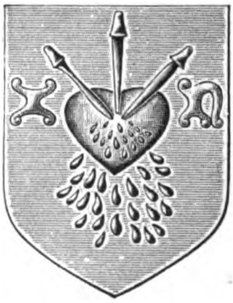
STONE CARVING IN THE ELDER LADY CHAPEL.
(Photograph by Mr. Charles H. Horton, Bristol.)

In common with other churches under the feudal domination of the Berkeley family the monumental recesses in the walls at once attract attention. The central tower—which is not quite square—contains an unusual number of windows, five on each side. The east window, singularly beautiful in tracery, with other windows contains some of the best old glass in England. A relic of mediæval times is the little watching-window in the south choir aisle above the Newton Chapel, whence a view could always be obtained of the choir. The Berkeley Chapel, now used as a practice room for the choir, contained two altars; the chapel is entered through a vestibule, formerly the monastic sacristy, rich in its splendid vaulting. The moulding of the doorway to the Berkeley Chapel contains a representation of ammonite, in all probability due to a happy thought of Abbot Knowle, who, 'having noticed an ammonite partially uncovered in a piece of stone, may have, in his love for natural forms, made a note of it for use' in the church he was instrumental in building. The misericordes furnish instances of those grotesque carvings in which old-world artists took fond delight. One of these (reproduced on p. 708) represents two foxes, dressed as monks, preaching to a flock of geese, before the latter were decapitated. Among other subtleties in the building is the rebus, in stone, of the 'good Abbot' (1481-1515), John de Newland, or Nailheart, as shown above. The monuments include several to the Berkeley family; to Robert Southey, a native of Bristol; Catherine Winkworth, translator of many German hymns into English; Samuel Morley, formerly M.P. for the city; Emma Marshall and Frederick John Fargus ('Hugh Conway'), both novelists; and to the eminent divine, Joseph Butler, Bishop of Bristol for twelve years—holding at the same time the Deanery of St. Paul's—author of 'The analogy of religion.' A window commemorates Edward Colston, the great philanthropist of Bristol, and the south-west tower is dedicated to his memory. The north-west tower bears the name of Bishop Butler, who is buried at the entrance to the eastern Lady Chapel.



THE REBUS OF JOHN DE NEWLAND, OR NAILHEART.

In the year 1542, when the Augustinian monastery became a cathedral, the Norman nave being ruinous, for upwards of three hundred years the church consisted of a choir, with its chapels, two transepts, and central tower, the western arch of the latter being walled up and forming a west front. Houses came to be built on the site of the nave, but these habitations were very properly demolished about seventy years ago. In order to increase the existing accommodation, the choir was so altered, in 1860-61, that it practically took the form of a parish church; the organ and the screen upon which it stood (of which more anon) were removed, and the altar in the Lady Chapel served for the whole church. At that time there seemed little likelihood that a new nave would be built, but the lowering of the road in front of the cathedral in 1865 disclosed the actual foundations of the old nave. This discovery so fired the zeal of Archdeacon Norris that he at once set to work to raise the necessary funds for building a complete nave. Mr. G. E. Street was the architect called in, and his mandate was practically to build a nave such as Abbot Knowle would have erected had he lived. The foundation-stone was laid in 1868, and the work was virtually completed in 1877, the western towers receiving their final touches in 1888. The north porch was erected at the expense of the late Mr. W. K. Wait, M.P. (died 1902), a former Mayor of Bristol, who called himself 'the child of the cathedral,' inasmuch as his parents became acquainted through their mutual love of the cathedral services: he forms one of the group on the southernmost pillar of the choir screen.

Although the cathedral was restored to its former dignity by the erection of the nave thirty years ago, nothing was done to remodel the choir and make it worthy of its surroundings until after the death, in 1881, of Mr. Street. In succession to him the late Mr. J. L. Pearson, R.A., was appointed architect to the Dean and Chapter, and under his skilful direction great improvements were carried out. The choir, after many vicissitudes, may now be said to have returned as nearly to its original plan as possible. A new reredos, designed by Mr. Pearson, was erected in 1899 as a memorial to Dr. Ellicott, for thirty-five years Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. This important addition to the cathedral enabled the Lady Chapel to revert to its former use. The present stone screen at the entrance to the choir was erected, in 1905, as a memorial to Mr. W. K. Wait by his children, from designs by Mr. Pearson, who also restored the Elder Lady Chapel, the central tower, the north transept, and the Abbey gateway and tower. Much of this restorative work has been carried out during the beneficent regime of Dean Pigou (appointed in 1891) and his colleagues of the Chapter.

It is now time to consider the musical associations of the cathedral—starting with the organs. In this connection the illustrated and interesting brochure recently prepared by Mr. Hubert W. Hunt, organist of the cathedral, is of special value for its reliable information obtained from original sources. The cathedral certainly possessed 'organs'—of a kind—early in the 16th century, as in 1515 John de Newland, or Nailheart, known as the 'Good Abbot,' was 'beried in the south side of our Lady Chapell in the arch there by the dore going into the loft going to the organs.' This minute description of the position of the good Abbot's grave could scarcely be improved upon. Perchance those 'organs' stood on a screen at the entrance to the Lady Chapel. The church of St. Stephen, in the city, purchased in 1629 an organ from the cathedral for the sum of £30. In that year 'a new west window was made, an organ was built, and other works were executed in the cathedral, by means of voluntary subscriptions.' This instrument was doubtless one of those referred to by the three peripatetic warriors from Norwich—'a Captaine, a Lieutenant, and an Ancient (ensign)'—who during their sojourn at 'Bristow,' in 1634, visited 'that fayre and strong fabricke of the Cathedrall,' and noted in their entertaining diary: 'In her are rich organs, lately beautify'd and indifferent good quiristers.'

A MISERICORDE.

(Photograph by Mr. Charles H. Horton, Bristol.)

The more definite history of the Bristol organ is thus recorded by Barrett, in his 'History of Bristol:

> In the years 1681 and 1685, in the deaneries of Towgood and Levett, £300 or more was laid out in mending the floor and beautifying the Church, painting the east end of the Choir and other works, and making a fine timber case for the new organ, erected by the contribution of the Dean and Chapter and many other well disposed persons, at the expense of £550 in the whole, to Mr. Renatus Harris, organ-builder.

From 'Latimer's Annals' we learn that in 1682 the Dean and Chapter gave orders for the erection of 'a fair great organ.' As Mr. Hunt felicitously observes:

> It is worthy of note that the year which saw the completion of this instrument saw also the birth of the two master-musicians, Bach and Handel, whose names are so inseparably connected with organ music.

The following is the specification of Renatus Harris's organ, which had three manuals, and, of course, no pedal pipes:

GREAT ORGAN (12 stops).

	Feet.		Feet.
Open diapason (nave front) ..	8	Fifteenth	2
Open diapason (choir front) ..	8	Tierce	$1\frac{3}{5}$
Stopped diapason	8	Sesquialtera (3 ranks) ..	—
Principal (large scale) ..	4	Mounted cornet (5 ranks) ..	—
Principal (small scale) ..	4	Trumpet	8
Twelfth	$2\frac{2}{3}$	Clarion	4

ECHO ORGAN (7 stops).

Open diapason	8	Fifteenth	2
Stopped diapason	8	Hautboy	8
Principal	4	Cremona	8
Twelfth	$2\frac{2}{3}$

CHOIR ORGAN.

This manual had no pipes of its own, but certain of the great organ stops were borrowed by communication.

COMPASS.

Great and Choir, GG to D in alt (but without the lowest G sharp and A sharp) = 54 notes.

Echo, Fiddle G to D in alt = 32 notes.

THE NAVE, LOOKING EAST.

(Photograph by Mr. Charles H. Horton, Bristol.)

About a hundred years later a separate choir organ of four stops was added in a case placed behind the organist's seat over the principal entrance to the choir. According to the manuscript book of organ specifications made by the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins and now in the possession of the present writer, these four stops were:

	Feet.
Stopped diapason treble Stopped diapason bass	8
Principal	4
Flute	4
Fifteenth	2

Compass: GG, long octaves, without GG sharp = 55 notes.

It was not until 1821 that an octave and a half of pedals were added to pull down the great organ keys, but there were no pedal pipes! Seventeen years later (in 1838) ten pedal open diapason pipes found their way to the instrument in company with two couplers, 'swell to great' and 'swell to choir.' Harris's organ, with its subsequent additions, stood on the screen as shown in Browne Willis's view reproduced on p. 713. This screen was originally in the Whitefriars (Carmelite) Church, which stood on the site now occupied by Colston Hall. On the demolition of that church the screen was presented to the cathedral by Thomas White, a mayor of Bristol in the 16th century, and erected between 1542 and 1547. On the destruction of the rood-loft in 1548 it served as the organ-loft until the year 1860, when this fine piece of Tudor work was ruthlessly turned out of the cathedral and thrown into the graveyard! Portions of it were, however, fortunately rescued and stored in the cloisters, and in 1903 were built up at the back of the sedilia in the last bay of the choir. A brass plate affixed to the portion in the south choir aisle bears the following inscription:

> Here, and in the corresponding work in the north choir aisle, are incorporated the remaining portions of the ancient rood screen. The Arms of King Henry VIII. and of Prince Edward, his son, fix the date of the original structure between 1542, the foundation of the see, and 1547, the Accession of King Edward VI.

The new Sedilia, erected by public subscription, are enriched by figures of saints to whom the churches of the city of Bristol are dedicated. A.D. May, 1903.*

When, in 1860-61, the choir was transformed into a glorified parish church, the Dean and Chapter, having cast out the fine old screen, placed the organ in the north choir aisle. The double-fronted case was much mutilated, the crown and mitres (shown in the illustration on p. 713) were removed and have since disappeared, the choir organ-case was made into a book-case, and other vandalisms, including the cutting away of a great part of the fine mouldings on the cornices, were permitted. A new choir organ-case, of Gothic design (!) was added, which ill accorded with the main case of 1685; this excrescence has been very properly removed.

The old and inadequate G organ—which was not tuned to equal temperament until 1867—has only just given place to a fine new four-manual instrument, built by Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons to the following specification:

Great Organ (15 stops).

	Feet.		Feet.
Double open diapason ..	16	Flute	4
Open diapason (large) ..	8	Twelfth	2⅔
Open diapason (medium) ..	8	Fifteenth	2
Open diapason (small) ..	8	Mixture (3 ranks)	—
Stopped diapason	8	Double trumpet	16
Wald flute	8	Trumpet	8
Principal (large)	4	Clarion	4
Principal (small)	4

Swell Organ (16 stops).

Bourdon	16	Twelfth	2⅔
Horn diapason	8	Fifteenth	2
Open diapason	8	Mixture (3 ranks)	—
Stopped diapason	8	Contra fagotto	16
Dulciana	8	Horn	8
Vox angelica (tenor C) ..	8	Oboe	8
Principal	4	Clarion	4
Harmonic flute	4	Vox humana	8

Tremulant to the light pressure stops.

Choir Organ (9 stops).

Double dulciana	16	Flute	4
Open diapason	8	Gemshorn	4
Stopped diapason	8	Piccolo	2
Viol di gamba	8	Clarinet	8
Dulciana	8

Solo Organ (8 stops).

Harmonic flute	8	Clarinet	8
Gamba	8	Cor anglais	8
Voix celeste (tenor C) ..	8	Orchestral oboe	8
Harmonic flute	4	Tromba	8

Tremulant to all the stops, except the tromba.

Except the harmonic flute, 8 feet, and tromba, the above stops are enclosed in a swell box.

Pedal Organ (13 stops).

Double open diapason ..	32	Quint	10⅔
Open diapason (wood) ..	16	Principal	8
Open diapason (metal) ..	16	Stopped diapason	8
Violone	16	Dulciana (derived from the double dulciana on the choir organ)	8
Contra gamba	16	Trombone	16
Bourdon	16	Trumpet	8
Dulciana (derived from the double dulciana on the choir organ)	16

Couplers.

Great to pedals.	Swell octave.
Swell to pedals.	Swell sub-octave.
Choir to pedals.	Swell unison off.
Solo to pedals.	Great pistons to pedal combinations.
Swell to great.	Pedal basses to swell pistons.
Choir to great.
Solo to great.
Swell to choir.

Accessories.

Five pneumatic combination pistons to great organ stops.
Five ,, ,, ,, ,, swell ,, ,,
Three ,, ,, ,, ,, choir ,, ,,
Five ,, ,, ,, ,, solo ,, ,,
Five pneumatic combination pedals duplicating swell pistons.
One double-acting pedal, controlling great to pedal coupler.
One ,, ,, ,, swell to great coupler.
One pedal which reduces the pedal organ to one stop (the violone) and takes in all the pedal couplers.

Tubular pneumatic action to manuals, pedals and drawstops.

The wind is supplied by three electric motors operating upon three sets of bellows, which deliver wind at different pressures.

The blowing machinery is by Messrs. Bergtheil & Young and Messrs. Watkins & Watson conjointly.

The north choir aisle position has been retained and so has the original case, though shorn of part of its ornamentation, and Renatus Harris's front pipes. As will be seen from the photograph opposite, the two fronts—formerly facing east and west when the organ stood on the screen—have been incorporated in the present design: in other words, the original case of 1685 has been cut in two, as at St. Paul's Cathedral, and made into two cases. The new organ, which contains those excellent characteristics so long associated with the work of Messrs. Walker—especially the dignified diapason tone—was opened by Sir Walter Parratt on October 8; of this a detailed account will be found on p. 722. It should be stated here that towards the cost (£3,400) of the new instrument Mr. H. O. Wills, a prominent citizen of Bristol, contributed the munificent sum of £1,800.

* See an interesting and erudite paper, 'Bristol Cathedral: the Choir Screen,' by Mr. Robert Hall Warren, F.S.A., an excellent authority on the cathedral, printed in the 'Transactions of the Bristol and Gloucestershire Archæological Society,' vol. xxvii., pp. 127-130.

Bristol is so intimately associated with the Wesley family that brief reference may be made thereto. Charles Wesley, the hymn writer, had his home, or rather his headquarters, in Bristol for about thirty years, taking his bride there in 1749. His distinguished musical son, Samuel, was born in the city on February 24, 1766, and Samuel's brother Charles played a concerto on the organ at the Musical Festival held in the cathedral in March, 1774,* when the sum of £100 was realised for the benefit of the Infirmary. John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, was doubtless on a visit to his brother Charles at Bristol when he heard a performance of the 'Messiah' in the cathedral during the lifetime of the composer. He records in his journal, under date of August 17, 1758:

> I went to the Cathedral to hear Mr. Handel's 'Messiah.' I doubt if that congregation was ever so serious at a sermon as they were during this performance. In many parts, especially several of the choruses, it exceeded my expectation.

* For further particulars see an article, 'Samuel Wesley as a poet,' in The Musical Times, February 1907, p. 91.

This 'Messiah' performance is recorded in Felix Farley's Bristol Journal of August 19, 1758, as follows, the extract having been kindly transcribed by Mr. J. J. Simpson specially for this article:

> On Thursday last was held the annual meetings of the Clergy and Sons of the Clergy, when a numerous company of gentlemen, viz., The Right Worshipful the Mayor, Sir Samuel Duckinfield, Bart., Norborne Berkely, Charles Bragge, John Macey, William Phelps, Isaac Piguenet, and John Pearse, Esquires—with several other persons of distinction, attended Divine Service in the Cathedral, where an excellent sermon was preached by the Revd. The Dean, and afterwards went in procession with the Stewards, the Revd. Dr. Casberd and Jarrit Smith, Esqre., to the Coopers' Hall to dinner. The several collections amounted to £203 16*s*., a much larger sum than hath been collected in any previous year. This extraordinary advance of the Charity was greatly owing to the admirable performances of the compleatest Band of musick that ever was in Bristol; as the best judges allow it to be, and the splendid appearance of company at the Oratorio on Thursday evening unanimously testify.

THE VAULTING OF THE CHOIR AISLES: THE WINDOW ON THE RIGHT IS TO THE MEMORY OF MR. J. D. CORFE, ORGANIST FROM 1825 TO 1876.

Dr. William Hayes, then Professor of Music at Oxford and organist of Magdalen College, conducted, and the solo vocalists included Signor Pinto and Mr. Vincent, from London; Mr. Wass, Master Soper, and 'another Boy from the King's Chapel,' together with other singers (chorus) from Wells, Gloucester, Worcester, and Salisbury. So early as 1727 (November 22) a musical festival, probably the first in Bristol, was held in the cathedral. On that occasion the programme consisted 'of a fine Te Deum, Jubilate [probably the 'Utrecht'], and anthem composed by the great Mr. Handell, in which about 30 voices and instruments were concerned.'

According to the Statutes of Henry the Eighth's Foundation, dated June 4, 1542, the first recorded organist of Bristol was John Senny, at a salary of £10 per annum. A more distinguished man held the office of chief musician between the years 1589 and 1637, in the person of Elway Bevin, a pupil of Tallis and a gentleman of the Chapel Royal in 1605. Bevin, who was the master of Dr. William Child (born at Bristol in 1606), is the author of 'A Brief and Short Introduction to the Art of Musicke' (1631). His Morning and Evening Service in the Dorian Mode is regularly sung in the cathedral. A song in twenty parts 'Hark! jolly shepherds,' and other compositions by him, are preserved in the MS. department of the British Museum, and the autographs of some of his canons are contained in the Royal Music Library at Buckingham Palace. It would seem as if there were two organists at Bristol during the regime of Bevin, as Edward Gibbons, elder brother of the famous Orlando Gibbons, held the office from 1599 to 1609, or thereabouts; anyhow, in Archbishop Laud's Visitation (1634) the Bristol organist is described as a 'uerie olde man,' past work. The actual words of this Visitation by Laud must be quoted by reason of their interest:

> There are but foure petty cañons who have the stipend of the other two vacant places by the direccōn of the late bishop in his visitacōn, only vntill provision can bee made to fill vp the number. And these foure pettie cannons (one of them being only deacon, and the other three preistes) vndertaking to discharge the office of the gospeller, by the direccōn aforesaid, the stipend of that place is conferred vppon the singingmen and organist for their incouragement vntill thinges may be better setled. The place of the epistoler hath beene for many yeares executed by one of the vicars chorall, who receiveth the stipend for the same. And for the organist, hee is a uerie olde man, who, having done good service in the church is not now able to discharge the place, but that hee is holpen by some other of the quier. As for the singing men their number is full, and for the moste pte uerie able men (onlie one excepted); by all which the dailye service is ordinarilly well peformed according to the foundacōn of this church.

The choristers are thus referred to in the Visitation:

> Insteed of six appointed by the foundacōn with the allowance of five marckes a peece, they found only foure with an allowance of foure poundes a peece, the other foure powndes being taken (as they conceive) towardes the increase of the master's stipend, from ten pounds to twenty marckes, and of the singing men from twenty nobles to eight poundes a peece p' annū. But they have of late yeares made full againe the number of six boyes by giving that foure poundes to two more, who serve in their surplisses as the other foure in the quier, expecting to bee preferred when the others remoove. But the weakenes, through age of their M^{r} causeth that they bee not soe well ordered or instructed as they otherwise should, but for helpe hereof are cōmitted to the care of some others of the quier, and some of them alsoe goe to the grammar schoole.

Arthur Phillips—born 1605 and graduated Mus.B. at Oxford in 1640—held the organistship for a year, 1638-39. He was organist of Magdalen College, Oxford, and University Choragus, and is said to have set to music Thomas Stanley's 'Requiem, or Liberty of an imprisoned Royalist,' and Dr. Thomas Pierce's 'Resurrection.' A set of Variations on a ground bass by him may be seen at the British Museum (Add. MS. 29,996).

Although the early records of the cathedral are very imperfect, owing to their having been burned during the riots of 1831, yet in regard to the organists it is to some extent possible to fill the hiatus thus unfortunately created. In 1663 a Mr. Deane was organist, and he bought of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester an organ for the sum of £65; in 1665 he and Mr. King, organist of New College, Oxford, went to Gloucester, at the request of the Dean and Chapter there, as 'approbators' to test the quality of the new organ (see The Musical Times, July, 1905, p. 442). In 1682 one Paul Heath held office, from which he was expelled, according to a Chapter minute of December 10, 1682, which reads:

> It appearing to the Dean and Chapter that Paul Heath organist and master of the choristers hath had several admonitions for keeping a disorderly alehouse, debauching the choir men and neglecting the service of the church: and being now credibly informed that he doth still keep ill order in his house, and hath suffered one Rouch, a barber, to trim in his house on the Lord's Day, it is ordered that Heath be removed, expelled and dismissed.

It is not necessary to give the names of all the known organists of the Cathedral; for further information the reader is referred to Mr. John E. West's 'Cathedral Organists.' One or two of the long line of these chief musicians may, however, be specially mentioned. Nathaniel Priest, organist in 1724 and also organist of the churches of All Saints' and Christ Church, is the composer of a Service in F. George Coombes, who reigned from 1756 to 1759 and was re-appointed in 1765, is referred to in the burial register of 1769 as 'the worthy organist of this church.' Edward Higgins (organist from 1759 to 1765 and buried in the north transept in 1769) composed a chant in F which is found in several collections, while another chant composer, Richard Langdon, was organist from 1778 to 1781. The Wasboroughs, father and son, maintained the reputation of the music in the cathedral. During the organistship of the former we read in Shiercliff's 'Bristol and Hotwell Guide' (1789 and 1793):

> It is generally said that there is not any church in England where the music of the organ, and the voices of the choir united, produce so grand and melodious an effect, by which the soul being rapt in extasies of holy delight, is raised in idea from Earth to Heaven, exulting in the purest adoration of praise and thanksgiving to the divine Creator.

Dr. Joseph Kemp, organist from 1802 to 1807, composed an oratorio 'The Crucifixion'; in 1803

the Dean and Chapter presented 'a very handsome gold medal to Mr. Kemp, their organist, for his unremitted attention to the improvement of the choir of the church.' John Davis Corfe was organist for fifty-one years, 1825 to 1876: a large stained-glass window in the south aisle of the choir worthily perpetuates his memory and his long and faithful service. Mr. Corfe was succeeded in the organistship by Mr. George Riseley, a former chorister of the cathedral, who held the office for twenty-two years, 1876 to 1898.* Dr. Percy C. Buck, organist of Wells Cathedral, then became organist, a post which he resigned in 1901 on his appointment of Music Master at Harrow School.

BENCH-END OF A CHOIR STALL.

Mr. Hubert Walter Hunt, the present organist of Bristol Cathedral, comes from a cathedral stock. He was born at Windsor, July 12, 1865. His father, Mr. Thomas Hunt, has been a lay-clerk of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, since 1864. Mr. Thomas Hunt was born at Gloucester, where his brother John was a lay-clerk and for many years conductor of the Gloucester Choral Society. During the lay-clerkship he held at Carlisle Cathedral he met and married Miss H. Naylor, a sister of the late organist of York Minster. From Carlisle he removed to Worcester Cathedral, and then to the royal borough. 'My relations on my father's side,' Mr. Hubert Hunt says, 'include several tenor lay-clerks; on my mother's side they are mostly organists. In 1865 Messrs. Novello published two anthems composed by an Eton boy who was often with Sir George (then Dr.) Elvey in the organ-loft at the Chapel. His name took my father's fancy, and that is how I came to be baptized Hubert. That Eton boy was Hubert Parry!'

For six years, from 1874 to 1880, Mr. Hunt was a chorister of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. On the breaking of his voice he became articled to Sir George Elvey, and when Sir Walter Parratt succeeded Elvey (in 1882), the youth was transferred to him, completing his apprenticeship in 1886. His first organist appointment was at Clewer Parish Church, afterwards (in 1886) Christ Church, Clapham, and (in 1887) St. Jude's Church, South Kensington. In August, 1901, he was appointed organist and master of the choristers of Bristol Cathedral. Unlike cathedral organists generally, Mr. Hunt is an excellent solo violinist. Chamber music is one of his great delights, and as a member (1st or 2nd violin) of the Clifton Chamber Quartet, he takes part in many public performances. Since 1883 he has played every year at the annual choir concert at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, that of October 23 last being his twenty-fifth appearance.

This brief sketch c steemed organist c athedral ncluded by an anecdote he relates of his chorister days at Windsor. 'On one occasion Goss and Turle were both present at the afternoon service, when were sung "Turle in D" and Goss's "Wilderness." After the service, Sir George brought his two friends into the schoolroom, when Turle said: "That was a remarkably fine anthem you had this afternoon, Elvey. Who was it by?" Then Goss chimed in, and said: "By the way, I have never heard that service before, will you tell me who composed it?"' No wonder that Elvey chuckled!

IN A MUSICAL LIBRARY.—III.

In the good old days of yore the members of every trade and profession co-operated for mutual support and protection. Each calling was regulated by its own guild (gild, Miss Toulmin Smith and other authorities tell us it ought to be spelled!), which looked after the interests of its members, prevented too large an increase in its numbers, and probably, by insisting on apprenticeship, ensured a certain standard of excellence. It was in furtherance of such aims that the great Livery Companies of the City of London were established, although in modern times their original objects have been lost sight of. We still, however, find the Goldsmiths' Company justifying its title by carrying out the important duty of the Trial of the Pyx, and the Stationers' Company, which down to modern times had the exclusive privilege of printing almanacs, continues to give to the world the well-known 'Old Moore's Almanack.' Coming to the art of music we find the Musicians' Company, the lineal descendant of the Fraternity of Minstrels, doing much in the present day to foster the Art which it represents.

But it is of a French institution that I am proposing to speak in the present paper. In the city of Paris the Confraternité des Ménestriers possessed and exercised far-reaching powers in the control of musicians. The society dated its origin as far back as the year 1321, and its organization became so prosperous that in 1330 it acquired a site in Paris on which it proceeded to build the Hospital of St. Julien des Ménestriers, a building which combined the purposes of a religious chapel and a hall for the transaction of its affairs. The principal officer of the body rejoiced in the title of 'Roi des Ménestriers,' and his powers were so autocratic that no one was allowed to practise or teach the art of music without satisfying him as to competence. In process of time the authority of the body was extended over the whole of France, and was also made to include the teachers of dancing. An apprenticeship of four years was required before the aspirant became qualified. The fees exacted were sixty livres for the roi and ten livres each to the masters of the company; but the masters themselves had to contribute thirty livres to the general fund and a fee to the roi, whose emoluments it will be seen must have been considerable. Having thus been admitted a member, the aspirant was entitled to accept public engagements, but any infringement of the laws of the Confraternity rendered the offender liable to pains and penalties which even extended to imprisonment. Without conformity no musician was allowed to exercise his profession, and even the famous four-and-twenty violins of the King of France formed no exception. It is not surprising that this stringency created much discontent and some litigation, one result of which was that in 1662 a body of dissatisfied dancing-masters succeeded in getting the better of the very high-handed proceedings of the king of that time, Dumanoir I., while his son, Dumanoir II., like many other persons who stood in his way, was worsted by the great Lully. The dancing-masters again became assertive, and overcome by the troubles of his throne his majesty Dumanoir II. abdicated in 1693 and sought for consolation in private life. As a result the profession was practically thrown open, although no enactment was passed dissolving the Confraternity, which legally still existed.

All this will be found recounted at length, and in great detail, in a thin quarto of sixty pages which is lying before me. It is entitled:

Mémoire, Lettres patentes et Arrêts pour Les Organistes Compositeurs de Musique, faisans Profession d'Enseigner à toucher le Clavecin, les Instrumens d'harmonie et servans à l'accompagnement des Voix, Contre Le Roi et Maître der Menestriers, et la Communauté des Maîtres à Danser, Joueurs d'Instrumens tant haut que bas et Hautbois. Paris. MDCCLI.

This work, with its quaint title, was called forth by circumstances which I will proceed to state.

A young man, Giovanni Pietro Ghignone, born at Turin in 1702, found his way to Paris, where he proceeded to study the violoncello and to gallicize his name into Jean Pierre Guignon. He soon abandoned the violoncello for the violin, on which he became so proficient that he was looked upon as a formidable rival to the great Leclair. Having entered the service of King Louis XV. as a member of his chamber music, Guignon was employed to give lessons to the Dauphin. So completely did he ingratiate himself with the King that the latter was induced to revive in his favour the title and privileges of 'Roi des Violons.' This took place in the year 1741.

The new monarch was no sooner enthroned than he began to assert the rights of his position, and in consequence shortly found himself landed in the meshes of a law-suit, of which the volume just cited is a report. It opens with a circumstantial statement of the case, carefully drawn up on behalf of the 'Organistes compositeurs' by their advocate, Maître Marchand: 'The King of the Minstrels,' says he, 'would have been better advised to have concealed from the public the weakness of his position, and to have applied himself to the cultivation of that perfect harmony and sweetness which should be his characteristic; but this "Potentat sonore," urged by ambitious views and too selfish intentions, attempts to extend the boundaries of his dominion. He maintains that all harmonious sounds of whatever nature must do homage to his sceptre or his bow, and become vassals of his kingdom. He attempts to bring under his rule fresh subjects, who, under an authority more powerful than his own, have from all time preserved the liberty of their Art. It has been the glory of the greatest monarchs to confine their powers within the limits of justice. The King of the Ménestriers shows himself but little touched by these able examples; it becomes therefore necessary for the arm of Justice to put a stop to the raids which he attempts to make into foreign countries.'

After this eloquent opening, our counsel settles himself to a business-like and prosaic statement of his case, which he opens with a fact of some interest—that the title of 'Roi' was not confined to the Ménestriers, but was the usual title for the official whom in our own country we call the 'Master' of the Company. It must be remembered that on the abdication of Dumanoir II. no actual dissolution of the Confraternity was carried out, and the result of this was that the Dancing Masters were left in the position of representatives of the original body. Their administration does not appear to have been successful from a business point of view, and the society found itself in pecuniary difficulties. It was partly with a view of restoring order that Louis XV. was induced to revive the office of Kingship and to place Guignon in the position.

Guignon's first action was to call together the existing members of the body—in which no 'Organiste, Compositeur de Musique' appears to have been at that time included—and to draw up a new code of laws, which empowered the king to appoint deputies, as he could not be present in person in all the towns of the kingdom. It was also enacted that professors, whether of dancing or of performing on any instrument—'violons, basses de violons, hautbois, flutes, musettes, bassoons, violas, basses de violes, orgues, clavecins, et généralement de tous les instrumens de musique tant haut que bas, de quelques natures qu'ils puissent être, tout à Paris que dans toutes les Villes du Royaume, sont et continueront d'être réunis à la Communauté de Saint Julien des Ménestriers.' It will be seen that this enactment left no loophole for escape. The organists and harpsichord players, who for many years had enjoyed freedom of action, and were actually protected by letters patent granted in 1707, were at once up in arms. A long list of their names is given, many of them now lost to fame, but among the better known are Daquin, Armand Louis Couperin, nephew of the 'grand' Couperin, two Clérambaults, and Louis Marchand of Versailles, best remembered by his escape from Dresden to avoid a trial of skill with the great John Sebastian Bach. The name of Rameau does not appear, but he was at that time occupied in the production of operas and in his theoretical writings. The indignation of the organists is not wonderful. As a body they have generally been the best theorists, and it is not surprising that they declined to submit their qualifications to the judgment of a committee of dancing masters, whose knowledge of music was in most cases confined to the power of scraping out a few dance tunes on the kit (diminutif). Law proceedings of course followed. The details have no more interest than such matters usually have; they were long and wordy, and dragged on through several years. But in the end the organists were triumphant, and final judgment in their favour was given by the Parlement of Paris on May 30, 1750.

The Confraternity continued to exist, and Guignon to be addressed as 'Roi des Violons,' but it was little more than an empty title, which was finally abolished by an edict of the King in March, 1773. Guignon became a 'monarch retired from business,' and might have joined the six other deposed sovereigns whom Candide, in Voltaire's famous tale, found assembled in Venice to enjoy the relaxations of the Carnival—one of whom, by-the-bye, Theodore, King of Corsica, lies buried in the churchyard of St. Anne's, Soho, a few hundred yards only from the spot where these lines are printed.

Thus passed away an office which Fétis justly calls 'un titre vain et ridicule.' The last owner survived the loss of his dignity but a short time, as he died on January 30, 1775. Sic transit gloria mundi!

Autograph collectors will have some splendid opportunities of adding to their treasures at an auction sale to be held by Mr. Leo Liepmannsohn on November 4 and 5, at Berlin. The Beethoven 'Lots' include the pianoforte arrangement of the 'Musik zu einem Ritterballet,' the Pianoforte sonata in E (Op. 109,) complete, the autograph parts of the posthumous String quartet in F (Op. 135), and a Konversationsheft of the month of September, 1825. As a writer in the Athenæum points out, the last named is a rare relic, as nearly all the Beethoven Conversation Books are in the Royal Library at Berlin. Berlioz is represented in the catalogue by the MS. of the Marseillaise, 'arrangé à grand orchestre et grands chœurs par Hector Berlioz'; Brahms by 'Variationen über ein ungarisches Lied' (Op. 21, No. 2), signed at the end 'Brhms.,' without the vowel; Chopin by his favourite waltz in E flat (Op. 18) and four Mazourkas (Op. 33); Schubert by a 'Canon à trè'; Meyerbeer by the First Act of 'Robert le Diable'; Schumann by 'Symphonischen Etuden' (Op. 9), in addition to other MSS., including letters, by the above-named composers. The following are also represented in this interesting catalogue: Cherubini, Dvorák, Haydn, Liszt, Mendelssohn, Mozart, Rossini, Wagner, and Weber, in addition to many others—in all 288 'Lots.'

SHAKESPEARE.

Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor so often finds a place in concert programmes that any information concerning this important composition is interesting. The concerto was introduced into England at the Crystal Palace Saturday concert of March 11, 1876, when it was played by the late Mr. Edward Dannreuther. In studying the work he found that some of the passages were ineffectively written for the instrument, the composer himself not being a pianist. Mr. Dannreuther therefore ventured to make some changes in the pianoforte part in order to make it more effective without destroying the composer's intentions. With that conscientiousness so characteristic of him, Mr. Dannreuther wrote to Tchaikovsky telling him of the changes. Instead of showing any resentment at these improvements, Tchaikovsky cordially welcomed Mr. Dannreuther's suggestions in the following letter, hitherto unpublished, for which we are indebted to Mrs. Dannreuther:

Moscow, le $\frac{18}{30}$ Mars, 1876.

Monsieur,

J'ai reçu votre bonne lettre ainsi que le programme du concert où vous avez bien voulu honorer de votre magnifique exécution mon œuvre difficile et fatiguante. Vous ne sauriez croire, monsieur, combien de joie et de plaisir m'a causé le succès de cette pièce, et vraiment je ne trouve pas les expressions nécessaires pour vous signifier ma vive reconnaissance. Je vous remercie aussi pour les conseils très sages et très pratiques que vous me donnez et soyez sûr que je les suivrai dès qu'il sera question d'une deuxième édition de mon concerto.

Je vous serre cordialement la main et me dis votre dévoué et reconnaissant.

P. TSCHAÏKOWSKI.

The second and revised edition of the Concerto contains practically all the changes suggested by Mr. Dannreuther.

The Worshipful Company of Musicians will attend Evensong at St. Paul's Cathedral in state on November 25, on which occasion the stained glass window in the north transept, the gift of Mr. C. T. D. Crews, a past-master of the Company, will be dedicated. In the evening the Livery Club of the Company will hold its annual banquet at Stationers' Hall, postponed from St. Cecilia's Day. The music at the banquet will include the following selection: Spohr's 'Hymn to St. Cecilia,' first performed at Cassel in 1823; extracts from Boyce's setting of Lockman's 'Ode to St. Cecilia,' written in 1744, from the manuscript in the Bodleian Library; and extracts from Samuel Wesley's 'Ode to St. Cecilia,' composed about the year 1794. The autograph of this work is in the British Museum, having been presented to the national library by Vincent Novello. So far as is known, Wesley's Ode has not hitherto been performed; the occasion therefore promises to be an exceptionally interesting one.

'The Bristol Musical Club' is one of those art-loving organizations which help to brighten the life of a great city. The Club owes its origin to a few informal chats between Mr. A. H. Peppin, music-master at Clifton College, Mr. B. J. Beilby, and Mr. C. T. Budgett, the two last-named gentlemen being amateurs. As an outcome of these little talks the formation of the Club took place in November, 1903, the first meeting being held on the 10th of that month. Originally the membership was limited to 100, but this number has since been extended, and at the present time there are 129 members, professional and amateur. The entrance fee is one guinea, and the annual subscription two guineas. Except during two months in the summer the meetings are held every Tuesday evening in the Club rooms at Clifton, where high-class music is performed by the members. Smoking is allowed, and refreshments are obtainable, thus social and artistic enjoyment are united at these informal gatherings.

According to the Rules:

> The Club is formed for the performance and study of music and the social enjoyment of its Members, the meetings being held in a Common Room and at fixed intervals.

Each member is allowed to introduce one guest at any weekly meeting, 'but the same guest shall not be admitted more than twice during the Club year.' In regard to the pleasant music-makings, the Rules state that:

> The programme of music to be performed at the weekly meetings shall be circulated amongst the members, or posted at the Club previously; but (with a view to preventing invidious distinction in attendance) it shall not be obligatory to name the members who have consented to perform.

The long list of music—drawn up by Mr. H. W. Hunt, one of the active members—shows remarkable enterprise and artistic appreciation on the part of those who, as performers and listeners, meet together from week to week at the Club rooms. The composers range from Bach to Debussy, Haydn to Richard Strauss, the programmes being made up of concerted music, instrumental solos, and songs. On the occasion of our visit to the Club, on October 8, the following selection was performed at the 147th meeting:

Sonata in D minor (Op. 108) .. .. (For pianoforte and violin.)	Brahms.
Pianoforte Solos, Impromptus in C, and B flat	R. O. Beachcroft.
Violin Solos { Lament Danse Caprice } ..	T. F. Dunhill.
String Quartet in G minor (Op. 10) ..	Debussy.

These were admirably interpreted by Mr. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Mr. Hubert W. Hunt (violin), and the Clifton String Quartet (Messrs. Maurice Alexander, H. W. Hunt, Ernest Lane and Percy Lewis), all local musicians of repute. Moreover, the pianoforte solos are the composition of a member of the Club, Mr. R. O. Beachcroft, an assistant music-master at Clifton College. The only president the Club has had was Dr. Joachim, he and his colleagues of the Joachim Quartet having been elected honorary members after the concert they gave at Clifton on St. Cecilia's Day last year. After the concert the Joachim Quartet honoured the Club by taking supper with the committee and the principal performing members, about thirty-six in number, when the eminent violinist made a happy speech, probably his last semi-public utterance in England, which will long be remembered by those who were present. May increased success and prosperity attend this excellent organization of whole-hearted lovers of music in the city of Bristol.

A Violin Concerto by Mozart, and in the composer's handwriting, has recently been discovered by Dr. Kopfermann, chief of the music department in the Royal Library, Berlin. According to Köchel (new edition) the manuscript is inscribed:

> Concerto per il Violino di Wolfango Amadeo Mozart.
> Salisburgo, li 16 di Luglio, 1777.

The Concerto, which in 1837 was in the possession of Habeneck, at Paris, but was supposed to have been lost, is scored for two oboes, two horns and the usual strings. Composed when Mozart was twenty-one, the work is said to bear in a very marked degree the stamp of youthful genius. We look forward to an early hearing of the Concerto in London. It is quite probable that this recently-discovered MS. may be that to which Leopold Mozart referred in a letter to his son dated October 5, 1777 (Jahn's 'Mozart,' Eng. edn., vol. i., p. 316): 'He [Brunetti] played your concerto very well, but was twice out of tune in the allegro, and once stuck fast in a cadenza'!

Those who have the modest sum of £1,100 (22,000 marks) to invest in a Beethoven autograph will find an opportunity in the purchase of the well-known Bagatelles for pianoforte (Op. 33), which Mr. Karl W. Hiersemann offers for sale. The MS. is described as 'Quarto, nineteen pages, each of eight staves, the last page blank.' It is 'bound in elegant plush with gold clasps that are set in enamel and imitation rubies.'

Dr. Henry Coward having justly earned the title of master chorus-master is more active than ever. He conducts no fewer than five societies—the Sheffield Musical Union, Huddersfield Choral Society, Leeds Choral Union, Barnsley St. Cecilia Society, and the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union. The railway travelling involved week by week to cover the ground specified above must be considerable. And then in regard to the works that he has to prepare at these different places, they range from Bach's B minor Mass to Berlioz's 'Faust,' and include Parry's 'King Saul' and Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' and 'The Kingdom.' Moreover, he has engaged to take some of his choirs to sing in London on three occasions in various works and in 'Elijah' at Birmingham, the city of its production. In addition to all these demands on his time and energies, he is hard at work rehearsing the choir for the Sheffield Musical Festival. And then, seeking other worlds to conquer, Dr. Coward proposes next year to take a Yorkshire chorus to Canada!

The Philharmonic Society has made a great change in the conductorship. Of the seven concerts to be given during the coming season, two will be conducted by Dr. Cowen, two by Dr. Richter, two by Mr. Henry J. Wood and one by Herr Arthur Nikisch. This constellation of conductors should be the means of attracting many subscribers to the concerts and of re-awakening the interest of the general public in the welfare of this venerable Society.

Two important bandmasterships have recently been filled up: Mr. George Miller, bandmaster of the Royal Artillery at Portsmouth, a son of Lieutenant George Miller, bandmaster of the Portsmouth Division of the Royal Marines, has been appointed to the 1st Life Guards, and Mr. C. F. Hoby, organist and choirmaster of St. Luke's Church, Kensington, to the Royal Marines, Chatham Division.

Dr. Harry Crane Perrin, organist of Canterbury Cathedral since 1898, has been appointed Professor of Music at the McGill University, Montreal, and Director of the affiliated Conservatorium of Music.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie paid a visit to Eastbourne on September 22, when he conducted his sprightly overture 'The cricket on the hearth,' the Prelude and Ballet music from 'Colomba,' the second Scottish Rhapsody, and the Benedictus (violin solo, M. Dupont). These works, in addition to the 'Harold in Italy' symphony of Berlioz, were admirably played by the Duke of Devonshire's private orchestra, an excellent body of forty-nine performers, ably conducted by Herr P. Tas. The concert was most successful, and the pieces performed were enthusiastically received.

Mr. C. Egerton Lowe writes:

> In your article on dear old Grieg you ask 'Were there no wind instruments in the Conservatorium (Leipzig) orchestra in 1861?' As a matter of fact no wind or brass instruments were allowed to be taught in the Conservatorium until after the death of Conrad Schleinitz (May 13, 1881). As Director of the Conservatorium, Schleinitz was supreme, and as successor of Mendelssohn he would not allow any change to take place in the curriculum. 'Mendelssohn had no wind instruments, so I will not allow them' was his dictum. Immediately after Schleinitz's death professors of wind instruments, &c., were appointed.
> I was a student there from 1878—1882, and we used to practise Schumann's Symphonies, &c., only with strings (and even then no double-basses!) and pianoforte. This curious method, however, provided good practice for reading from score. I remember Carl Muck, Felix Weingartner, Max Fiedler (a very clever fellow) and Battison Haynes were among the best readers. They had to play from the full score the wind parts, &c., on a pianoforte. There was not even an organ in the Conservatoire; organ lessons had to be given in one of the churches.

Punch, in some recent 'Musical notes,' says:

> The tribute of Mr. Bantock, the eminent musical Orientalist, to the redoubtable Colonials [the 'All Blacks'] is, like all his work, highly original and unconventional. He proposes to treat symphonically, in a triple cantata, the life-history of a Canterbury lamb from its first appearance to the cold storage stage. Those who have been fortunate enough to see the rough scenario of this momentous composition confidently declared that it will surpass in monumental grandeur and mellifluous opulence of local colour even the most sublime achievements that have yet emanated from the teeming brain of its phenomenally gifted creator. Mr. Bantock, who is his own librettist, conceives the hero in the light of a modern Canterbury pilgrim, unconscious of its doom, gambolling playfully on the enamelled pastures until the very hour of execution. The soprano solo, 'Maori had a little lamb,' is of bewitching beauty, while the concluding or cold-storage section, which is set in the form of a moto perpetuo lasting fifty minutes, is marked by a coruscating charm unique in the annals of the meat-market.

A London newspaper records the following Schubertian information under the heading 'Brixton':

> At the parish church yesterday, the Brixton Oratorio Choir, conducted by Mr. Douglas Redman, gave its first concert of the present season. The programme included Schubert's Unlimited Symphony.

What would Sir George Grove have said to Schubert's 'Unlimited Symphony'? It would have afforded him unlimited amusement.

The following extracts are culled from reports in London newspapers of the Cardiff Musical Festival:

> We had Frederick Cowen's poem for contralto solo, chorus, and orchestra, 'He giveth His beloved sleep,' sandwiched in between Cæsar and Arauck's 150th Psalm and Schubert's Mass in E flat.
>
> Signor Busoni gave his well-known performance of the 'Empeicor' concerto; and Mme. Kirkby Lunn sang the 'Fiancee du Timbalier' of St. Galas, much to the satisfaction of the public.

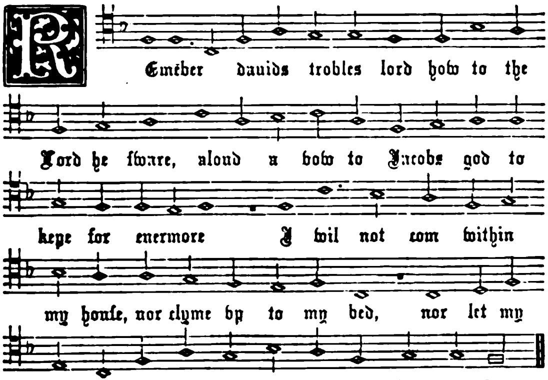
THE MUSICAL TIMES for December will contain an article on the Music Library in the British Museum.

THE 1562 PSALTER.

The edition of 'Sternhold & Hopkins,' or the 'Old Version'—to adopt colloquial designations—issued in 1562, forms an important landmark in the history of English Metrical Psalters. The book is very scarce, and it was long thought that a unique copy alone existed. At the present time only three copies of it are known in this country—at the British Museum, at the John Rylands Library, Manchester, and in the library of Mr. A. H. Littleton, formerly in the collection of Bishop Gott, of Truro. It is from the last-named copy that the facsimile title-page has been taken for the pictorial supplement to the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. The immediate previous issue of the Psalter is dated 1560 (colophon dated 1561), of which the only known copy is in the library of the Society of Antiquaries, to whom acknowledgment is due for kind permission to examine this precious volume. This, however, contains only a selection of the Psalms—eighty-three in all (of which eighty are in the body of the book), and forty tunes, including fourteen to canticles, hymns, &c.—whereas the 1562 edition contains the whole Psalter, 150 psalms; being the first complete collection of the Psalms in a metrical version. This greatly enhances the value and interest of the volume.

Although this 1562 Psalter contains 150 Psalms, its tunes number only sixty-three; and, as Mr. William Cowan has pointed out,* two of them bear such close affinity that the number may be stated as sixty-two. An instance of the method employed in mating the tuneless versifications may be adduced in the 100th Psalm, which, being without music, has this marginal direction: 'Sing this as the lxvii.' (a misprint for lxviii.). On turning to Psalm lxviii. we find that the tune there set begins like the 'Old Hundredth' melody (one line only), and then goes off in another direction. As the late Major Crawford remarked, 'It was a not uncommon practice of the old writers to construct new tunes by adding different terminations to the same fragment of older melody. The strain with which the "Old Hundredth" commences seems to have been very popular from this point of view.' It should be stated here that this 1562 Psalter does not contain Kethe's familiar lines of Psalm c. ('All people that on earth do dwell'), but a versification by an anonymous author beginning 'In God the Lorde be glad and lyght.'

All the tunes are given in their melody form only; it was not until the Psalter of 1563 that a four-part arrangement appeared. Of the melodies which have come into present-day use, the common-metre tune 'St. Flavian' may be cited, as, so far as is known, this tune, or rather a portion of it, first appeared in the Psalter of 1562. Here it is, as set to Psalm cxxxii.:



R
Emēber dauids trobles lord how to the Lord he ſware, aloud a vow to Iacobs god to kepe for euermore I wil not com within my houſe, nor clyme vp to my bed, nor let my temples take their reſt, or the eyes in my hed.

The interest of this old Psalter is enhanced by its prefatory matter. Immediately after the title-page are the words 'To the Reader,' followed by

A SHORTE INTRODUCTION INTO THE SCIENCE OF MUSICKE, MADE FOR SUCH AS ARE DESIROUS TO HAUE THE KNOWLEDGE THEREOF, FOR THE SINGING OF THESE PSALMES.

This 'Shorte introduction,' from the pen ot an anonymous author, first appeared in the 1560-61 Psalter: its initial paragraph reads:

> For that the rude and ignorant in Song, may with more delight desire, and good wyl: be moued and drawen to the godly exercise of singing of Psalmes, aswell in common place of prayer, where altogether with one voyce render thankes & prayses to God, as priuatly by themselues, or at home in their houses: I haue set here in the beginning of this boke of psalmes, an easie and moste playne way and rule, of the order of the Notes and Kayes of singing, whiche commonly is called the scale of Musicke, or the Gamma vt. Whereby (any diligēce geuen therunto) euery man may in a fewe dayes: yea, in a few houres, easely without all payne, & that also without ayde or helpe of any other teacher, attayne to a sufficient, knowledg, to singe any Psalme contayned in thys Booke, or any suche other playne and easy Songes as these are.

A further extract from this quaint 'Introduction' must be quoted:

> Firste ye muste diligently searche out, in what kaie euery note of your song stōdeth: Which ye may easely do, in beholding your signed kaie (cōmōly called the cleaue) which is set in the beginning of euery song: & that lyne or, space wherein the signed kaie is set, beareth the name of the same kaie: and all Notes standinge in ye line or space, are saide to stand in that kaie: and so ascending or descēding from that kaie, ye shall straight way see wherein, or in what kaie euery Note of your song standeth.

As Sir John Stainer has said,† this anonymous author uses the word clef, key (Kaie), and note rather indiscriminately, but he evidently meant well.

Immediately following the 'Short Introduction' is 'A treatise made by Athanasius the great, wherein is set forth, how, and in what manner ye may use the Psalmes, according to the effect of the minde' (seven pages), supplemented by a further guide to the use of the Psalms (two pages). To this succeeds the Veni Creator, Te Deum, Benedicite, Benedictus, Magnificat, Nunc dimittis, 'The Crede of Athanasius,' 'The Lamentations of a Sinner,' 'The humble sute of the Sinner,' The Lordes Prayer, or Pater Noster, and The Ten Commaundements—all versified and each with music. The 'Psalmes of David' follow, occupying 365 pages. After Psalm cl. occur the following versifications:

The. x. Commaundements of almightie God
The Lordes Prayer
The. xii. Articles of the christian faythe
A Prayer unto the holy ghost, to be song before the Sermon Da pacem domine
The complaint of a Sinner who craueth of Christ, to be kept under hys mercye
A thankes geuing after the receyuyng of the Lordes Supper.

The remainder of the book consists of prose prayers and graces (before and after 'meales'), and 'The Table' (Index). One of the graces may be quoted as a specimen of a 16th century supplication. It is headed 'Another thankes geuing before meate,' and is here transcribed literatim et verbatim:

* THE MUSICAL TIMES, July, 1907, p. 455.

† 'On the musical introductions found in certain metrical Psalters.' A paper read by Sir John Stainer, on November 13, 1900, before the Musical Association, and printed in the 'Proceedings' of 1900-1, vol. xxvii., p. 1.

> Eternall and euer liuing God, Father of oure Lord Jesus Christ, who, of thy most singular loue whiche thou bearest to mankinde, haste appointed to his sustenance, not only the frutes of thearth: but also the foules of the ayre, the beastes of thearth, and fishes of the sea, and hast commaũded thy benefites to be receyued, as from thy hãds with thanks geuing, assuring thy children, by the mouth of thy Apostle, that to the cleane, all things are cleane, as the creatures, which be sanctified by thy word and by prayer, graunt unto us so moderately to use these thy giftes present, that the bodies beyng refreshed, the soules may be more hable to procede in all good works, to the prayse of thy holy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord. So be it.

In these prayers and graces the final words, 'So be it,' of the above grace occur eleven times against twice only of the more familiar Amen.

This precious tome, which measures 7¼ × 5 inches, is printed throughout in black letter, the music being set in diamond-shaped notes.

Our researches in connection with this 1562 Psalter have led to the discovery of a very rare and probably unique book dated the same year. A copy, part of 'the Library of a gentleman,' was sold by Messrs. Puttick & Simpson on December 3, 1872. Bound up with other liturgical books, it is thus described in the catalogue:

> Lot 508 . . . . The Residue of all David's Psalmes in Metre, made by John Hopkins and others, with apt Notes to sing them withal, Nowe fyrst imprinted and sette forthe in this fourme for such as have bookes already that thei that be disposed maye joyne these wyth them: and so have the whole Psalmes. Imprinted at London by John Daye, 1562.

An interesting note in the catalogue to this 'Lot' reads as follows:

> An important volume, containing Liturgical Pieces of extreme rarity, all in the finest possible condition, if not unique, some with rough leaves. The last piece mentioned, viz.: 'The Residue of all David's Psalmes in Metre' [containing Psalme xxxv. to cl.] is of the highest interest and importance to every Biblical collection, its very existence having been doubted. Herbert informs us that towards the latter end of the year 1561, Day had license to print 'the resydewe of the Psalmes not heretofore prynted, so that this maketh up the hole.' But he evidently had never seen a copy of the printed volume. It is not mentioned by Cotton or Lowndes, and no copy appeared in the Grenville, Lathbury, Bliss, or Offor Collections, nor have we been able to trace the sale of any one.

The volume was sold for £101.

This 'residue' Psalter is not mentioned either in Dr. Julian's 'Dictionary of Hymnology,' Mr. Robert Steele's 'The earliest English music printing,' nor in the article 'Psalter' in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians.' Dr. Arber, in his 'Transcript of the Registers of the Company of Stationers of London,' gives the terms of the 'lycense' to John Day to print the book, under date July, 1561, to July, 1562:

> Recevyd of John Daye for his lycense > for pryntinge of the Resydewe of the psalmes > not here to fore printed. So that this > maketh vp the hole - - - - - - iiij^{d}

As the selection of Psalms in the 1560-61 Psalter—referred to above and belonging to the Society of Antiquaries—run consecutively from 1 to 34, it would appear that this 'residue' volume, 'containing Psalme xxxv. to cl.,' was issued concurrently with the 1562 Psalter, for the benefit of those who already possessed the earlier book.

Can some of our readers throw any light upon 'The Residue of all David's Psalmes,' especially its present whereabouts?

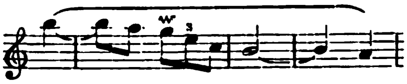
PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF GRIEG.

By Percy Grainger.

Grieg was hugely proud over and happy at Norway's newly-got flag—formerly it was combined with the Swedish. When we had been out walking he was always keen to see it flying from the Troldhaugen flagstaff amongst the trees as we neared home. He was quite depressed one day, when for some reason or other it had had to be taken down, not to see it as usual.

It was a joy to see how uplifted he became high up in the hills. He told me he never felt that his harmonic flight was so daring and free as when he composed up on high, and how some of his very loveliest things—such as 'Jeg gaar i tusind tanker'—'I walk with a thousand thoughts,' 'I Ola Dalom' (Op. 66)—came to paper in little Saeter-huts up in the Jotunheim mountains. The well-known 'Norwegian Bridalmarch' was a sudden, quick inspiration that came to him one morning on the sides of Ulricken mountain, just outside Bergen.

I pointed out to him that one of the most characteristic of his phrases:



(similar downward sweeps also occurring in the song 'To the Fatherland,' in his fourth 'Symphonic Dance,' in the pianoforte concerto, &c.) is akin to melodic lines found in our Scotch (and Celtic generally) folk-songs (such as in 'Bonny St. Johnstone stands upon Tay'), whereas such phrases were quite unknown to me in Scandinavian folk-music. He could think of none, either, in the tunes of his own land, and much liked the idea of its being, maybe, a throwing-back in him to his originally Scotch blood, of which he was proud and fond of dwelling upon.

No words could adequately enough tell the extent of his broadmindedness and generosity on artistic matters. It was grand to see how he had never let himself be led into any of the musical party-strifes that must have been raging in his younger days. How, for instance, he appreciated both Wagner and Brahms to the full, and Tchaikovsky also; he was, in short, wondrously little concerned with 'periods' and 'schools.' He had the very deepest love and admiration for Chopin, and was never tired of hearing him played.

The heartiest public reception he ever got, he told me, was the occasion of his very first London appearance. The wild extent of the applause moved him so dangerously, that he had to make a quick dash for the pianoforte in order not to break down at delight of it.

To have the privilege of knowing Grieg personally was to discover in his habits, traits, looks, speeches, the same sweetness, lovableness and tenderness that all the world loves in his work. Nor were the abrupt twists and contrasts and elvish sparkle of his music absent from his most every-hourly doings and personality. Above all, he was benevolence and loving kindness itself.

Church and Organ Music.

THE WESLEY MEMORIAL AT LEEDS PARISH CHURCH.

IN MEMORY OF SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY
ORGANIST OF THIS CHURCH FROM 1842 TO 1849 DURING WHICH TIME HE COMPOSED HIS MORNING & EVENING SERVICE IN THE KEY OF E MAJOR

THE MEMORIAL TO DR. S. S WESLEY IN LEEDS PARISH CHURCH.

A memorial to Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley has been placed in Leeds Parish Church, of which he became organist sixty-five years ago. It has taken the form of a tablet in copper, artistically designed by Mr. Nelson Dawson and affixed to a pillar on the east side of the organ, just above the Precentor's stall on the south side of the church. The memorial, which owes its inception to the Precentor, the Rev. Morris O. Hodson, was unveiled by the Right Hon. Gerald Balfour at Evensong on October 10. On that interesting occasion the service music included Wesley's noble service in E and his anthem 'Wash me throughly from my wickedness,' sung under the able direction of Dr. E. C. Bairstow, organist and choirmaster of the church.

In the course of his remarks at the unveiling ceremony Mr. Gerald Balfour said:

> I think we shall be agreed that the moment has been fittingly chosen. We are in the midst of one of those triennial festivals which draw musical people from all parts of the country to Leeds. Our ears are filled with noble strains, and our hearts and minds with the emotions and ideas which those strains inspire. Could there be a more fitting occasion for rendering a tribute to one who will always bear an honoured name on the roll of English musicians, and whose name is a household word to those who love and study church music?
> The great debt which the Church owes to Dr. Wesley is a double one. The Church owes a debt to Dr. Wesley not merely for a number of beautiful anthems and services, but also for the influence which he brought to bear upon the revival of church music generally. In the earlier part of his lifetime the old forms of church music had lost some of their original vitality; he brought to the task of composition not only the power of poetic imagination, but also a profound knowledge of the resources of modern harmonies and modulations. He was able to accord life to that music without sacrificing what I hope will always remain the peculiar character of church music in this country—dignity and restraint. I do not think there can be a better test of merit in a composer o sacred music than that he should be able to set the words of our English Bible to music in such a way that those words shall not lose but permanently gain. Wesley possessed in a remarkable degree the art of wedding perfect music to perfect words.

Through the courtesy of Messrs. Whitehead & Miller, of Leeds, we are enabled to give a view of this memorial to Dr. Wesley. Mention must be made of the comprehensive 'List of music' sung at the Parish Church during the week of the Leeds Musical Festival. This pamphlet—an outline of which we gave last month—contained interesting annotations, from the pen of the Precentor, of all the services and anthems sung from October 6 to 13 inclusive.

CHOIR SERMONS.

Under the above designation a special service was held at Albion Congregational Church, Ashton-under-Lyne, on Sunday evening, September 29—a service which, while it was purely devotional, had in it an element of novelty. On that occasion Elgar's 'The Apostles' was sung, the music making a great impression on the large congregation, which numbered over 1,000 persons. The oratorio was preceded and followed by hymns and prayer, and before the singing of each section of the work the officiating minister read the words and gave brief explanations of the same. The efficient choir of the church, numbering sixty voices, accompanied by an excellent organ, rendered the oratorio with reverent expressiveness under the able direction of the organist, Dr. T. Keighley, who accompanied throughout, and who is to be sincerely congratulated on a successful musical service. From the October issue of the Albion Congregational Church Messenger, under the heading 'Church and School Notes,' we extract the following interesting reference to music as an aid to religion:

> Much—very much has been done in recent years to improve the Song Service in our Congregational Churches, and although much still remains to be done in this direction, we must feel profoundly grateful that as a body we have been brought to recognize that baldness in our worship does not necessarily make it more acceptable to the Almighty, and that the Service of Prayer and Praise is not, as we have heard it stated, in the nature of an introduction to the sermon, but is in itself the service, and is the purpose for which Christians should meet together on the Lord's Day.
> Although Albion Church has always laid great stress upon the preaching of the Word, it has never neglected the other part of the service. In fact, for the past forty years, it has always been in the forefront of the movement for its improvement, and has during that time been well served by competent, painstaking and conscientious men and women, and under Dr. Keighley and his choir, we are proud to say, still maintains its position.

In its aims and reverent rendering such a service as that above referred to is a very different thing from a mere Sunday concert in a place of worship, to which objection is sometimes made. Dr. Keighley has been carrying out this idea of an oratorio service as an act of worship for the past four years, the works previously performed having been Mendelssohn's 'Come, let us sing' (Psalm 95), Bach's 'God's time is the best,' and Sterndale Bennett's 'Woman of Samaria.' Other similarly-minded organists might well follow so good an example.

THE NEW ORGAN IN BRISTOL CATHEDRAL.

Sir Walter Parratt opened the new organ, built by Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons, in Bristol Cathedral, on October 8, in the presence of an immense congregation. Evensong, fully choral, was sung by the united choirs of Bristol and Wells Cathedrals, under the direction of Mr. Hubert W. Hunt, organist of Bristol Cathedral, Sir Walter presiding at the organ throughout. The service commenced with the processional hymn, 'Rejoice to-day with one accord,' sung unaccompanied to the tune 'Ein' feste Burg.' After the Dean (Dr. Pigou) had offered the prayer of dedication, Psalm cl. was chanted. Garrett in E flat (Cantate Domino and Deus Misereatur) was sung, and the anthem was Ouseley's 'It came even to pass,' composed for the re-opening of Lichfield Cathedral in 1861.

Sir Walter Parratt played the following selection of music, in addition to Bach's 'Toccata in F' at the end of the service:

Fantasia in F minor	Mozart.
Canon in B minor	Schumann.
Pastorale in E major	Franck.
Choralvorspiel, 'Ein' feste Burg'	Bach.
Fantasia in G major	Hubert Parry.
Coronation March	Saint-Saëns.

The specification of the fine Walker instrument is given in the article on Bristol Cathedral, p. 710.

Four recitals were subsequently given, on October 9 and following days, by Dr. Varley Roberts, organist of Magdalen College, Oxford; Mr. T. Tertius Noble, organist of York Minster; Mr. Hubert W. Hunt, organist of Bristol Cathedral; and Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, organist of Gloucester Cathedral. Their respective programmes are appended:

Dr. Varley Roberts.

Concerto in G minor	Handel.
Minuetto and trio in B flat	Sterndale Bennett.
Choralvorspiel, 'Christ lag in Todesbanden'	Bach.
Fugue in A minor
Adagio in B flat (from the String quartet, Op. 27)	Spohr.
Overture, 'Otho'	Handel.
Prelude and fugue in G	Mendelssohn.

Mr. T. Tertius Noble.

Sonata (No. 7) in F minor	Rheinberger.
Evening Song	Bairstow.
Dithyramb	Harwood.
Choralvorspiel, 'Wachet auf!'	Bach.
Sinfonia Pastorale ('Christmas Oratorio')
Marche Funèbre	Tchaikovsky.
Romanza	Wolstenholme.
Allegretto
Toccata and fugue in F minor	T. T. Noble.

Mr. Hubert W. Hunt.

(Interspersed with Anthems, sung by the Cathedral Choir.)

Toccata in D minor	Bach.
Anthem, 'Ascribe unto the Lord'	Travers.
Prelude in F	H. W. Hunt.
Andantino in D flat (from the String quartet, Op. 10)	Debussy.
Anthem, 'The Wilderness'	S. S. Wesley.
Grand pièce symphonique	Franck.

Dr. A. Herbert Brewer.

Toccata in C	Bach.
Vorspiel	Wagner.
Variations on a theme of Beethoven	Merkel.
Prière et berceuse	Guilmant.
Fantasie in E flat	Saint-Saëns.
Rêverie	A. Herbert Brewer.
Canzonetta
Ave Maria	Henselt.
Finale from the Sixth organ symphony	Widor.

It was a happy thought of Mr. Hunt to invite all the organists of the churches and chapels in Bristol to an 'At home' in the cathedral on Monday evening, October 21, 'to inspect' the organ. Upwards of 100 'chief musicians' accepted the invitation, when the various sections of the church were represented by organists of Church of England, Baptist, Congregational, Roman Catholic, Unitarian, and Wesleyan Churches.

EDMUND HART TURPIN.

The death of Dr. Turpin took place, we much regret to record, on October 25, at 107, Southampton Row, London. Born at Nottingham, May 4, 1835, he studied music under Charles Noble, John Hullah and Ernst Pauer. At the age of fifteen he was appointed organist of St. Barnabas Church, Nottingham, and in 1851 gave an organ recital at the Great Exhibition. In 1857 he settled in London, but still retained some connection with Nottingham. He became organist of St. George's Church, Bloomsbury, in 1869, and since 1890 held the organistship of St. Bride's Church, Fleet Street.

As honorary secretary of the Royal College of Organists for the long period of thirty-two years, Dr. Turpin rendered splendid service to that institution as an administrator and examiner. In 1892 he was appointed Warden of Trinity College of Music, London, an office he held with distinction and unwearying regard for its interests. When in 1889 the Archbishop of Canterbury conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Music, it was felt that this honour had been worthily bestowed.

As a lecturer on music Dr. Turpin had a wide reputation. He formerly edited the Musical Standard, and in 1891 was one of the joint editors of the Musical News. Dr. Turpin was widely known as an organist, having opened many instruments; he was also a skilful pianist, and could play nearly every instrument in the orchestra.

His compositions include two masses, a Stabat Mater, two oratorios ('St. John the Baptist' and 'Hezekiah'), two cantatas ('A song of faith' and 'Jerusalem'), a symphony, various concert overtures, a pianoforte quartet, a string quartet, a pianoforte trio, church and organ music, &c. Dr. Turpin will be much missed by a large circle of friends for his urbanity of manner and kindness of heart.

The fourth annual meeting of the Huddersfield and District Organists' Association was held at Huddersfield on October 12, when Mr. J. F. Sykes read an interesting paper on the important subject of 'Organists' voluntaries.' He referred to the thoughtless and unkind inattention and want of respect displayed by some congregations to the efforts of their organist. He recommended a systematic choice of voluntaries, and interweaving of variety of styles, composers and periods of writings, and endeavoured to show that by this means the interest and attention of listeners might be improved. Mr. Sykes also warmly advocated the inclusion of good arrangements of excerpts from orchestral and choral works.

Mr. Arthur B. Coomb, secretary of education in the Truro and Falmouth district of Cornwall, died on September 29 while playing the organ at the morning service at St. Mary's Wesleyan Church, Truro. By a most remarkable coincidence the choir were at that moment singing Stainer's anthem 'What are these that are arrayed in white robes,' when Mr. Coomb fell across the organ stool. Some members of the choir carried him out while the rest finished the anthem unaccompanied. A doctor who examined Mr. Coomb found that life was extinct, and the minister dismissed the congregation after offering prayer for the bereaved family.

A new three-manual organ built by Messrs. Conacher & Co., of Huddersfield, in St. Mary's Church, Donnybrook, Dublin, was dedicated by the Archbishop of Dublin on October 10. After the dedication service, Mr. C. W. Wilson, organist of the church, gave a short organ recital, of which the following is the programme :

Prelude in D minor	Mendelssohn.
Andante molto	Grieg.
Rhapsody, No. 2	Saint-Saëns.
Largo (Aus der neuen Welt)	Dvorák.
Prelude and Fugue in G minor	Bach.

The following is the specification of the instrument drawn up by Mr. Charles G. Marchant, organist of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin :

Mr. H. M. Lamerton, who has resigned the office of organist and choirmaster of Bodmin Wesleyan Church, which he has held for upwards of sixteen years, has been presented by the Mayoress of Bodmin (Mrs. T. Hare), on behalf of the congregation, with a handsome marble clock and an illuminated address, also from the choir of the church Mr. Lamerton has been the gratified recipient of a walnut stationery cabinet and an illuminated address.

Dr. Louis Hamand was recently presented with a handsome silver tea-tray on the occasion of his leaving the post of organist and choirmaster of Hillingdon Church, after twelve years' service, for that of St. Anne's Church, Eastbourne. The presentation was made by the vicar on behalf of the churchwardens and members of the congregation. Dr. Hamand was also presented with a silver vase from the gentlemen of the choir, and a calendar in a silver frame from the choir-boys.

Messrs. R. C. Davies & Co., of Liverpool, have published a little booklet entitled 'Choir regulations and rules,' which should find acceptance. The compiler, Mr. Robert C. Davies, states that 'they have been formulated to cover the various contingencies which arise in the control of a choir.' He also says: 'Any member of a choir who possesses a proper regard for such an office is not likely to resent the practical application of regulations and rules which benefit the whole choir ; while a member who is less energetic should have revealed to him thereby the necessity for a thorough discharge of the duty which he has promised to perform.' Perfectly true.

'A Kalendar of Hymns Ancient and Modern for the year of grace, 1908,' has been prepared by the Rev. Robert Sealy Genge, vicar of Christ Church, Wolverhampton, and published at the Oxford University Press. As in previous years this useful tract contains a table of lessons, proper psalms, &c.

SPECIAL SERVICES.

A large and appreciative congregation were present at the oratorio service held in Chichester Cathedral on the afternoon of October 10, when the music consisted of Spohr's 'God, Thou art great,' Schubert's B minor Symphony and Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm ('Come, let us sing'). Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, organist of the cathedral, conducted a most successful service, and Mr. E. Stephenson, organist of Birmingham Cathedral, rendered efficient service at the organ. The band (led by Mr. W. E. Baker, of Brighton) and chorus consisted of 180 performers ; Mr. Clifford Hunnybun sang the tenor solos, while the soprano solos were sung by all the cathedral choristers.

At Tewkesbury Abbey on September 26 the annual dedication festival was held under the direction of the organist and choirmaster, Mr. Arthur W. V. Vine, Mr. S. W. Underwood and Mr. A. C. G. Jellicoe presiding simultaneously at the two organs wherewith the Abbey is favoured. The choir was reinforced by singers from All Saints' Church, Gloucester, St. Mary's, Charlton Kings, Cheltenham, and Stroud Parish Church. The service music included the Rev. J. Baden Powell's 'Hail! festal day,' Stainer's setting, in B flat, of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, and two anthems—'How lovely is Thy dwelling place' (Brahms) and 'Hallelujah' (Handel), the former being preceded by Brahms's 'Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels' (Op. 121, No. 4), sung by Miss Jessie King.

The dedication festival at Romford Parish Church was held on Sunday, October 13, when 'Hail! festal day' was sung as processional, and Stanford in B flat and Gadsby in C furnished the settings of the canticles in the morning and evening respectively. The anthems were 'How lovely are Thy dwellings fair' (Spohr) and 'Hallelujah' (Beethoven). The festival was continued on the following Wednesday, when choirs from the local churches joined in a festal service at which Tours in F and 'The Lord is loving unto every man' (Garrett) were sung, the service concluding with Barnby's Te Deum in B flat. Mr. Matthew Kingston conducted, and Mr. H. Disney, organist of St. Andrew's Church, officiated at the organ.

A 'musical service' is held on the first Sunday afternoon of each month at the church of St. Thomas à Becket, Portsmouth, of which Mr. R. H. Turner is the organist and choirmaster. Anthems and solos are sung and organ pieces played, and two hymns are sung by the large congregations who attend these attractive services.

At the harvest festival services held at Leyton Wesleyan Church on September 29 the anthems included Barnby's 'Sing to the Lord of harvest' and Wesley's 'The Wilderness.' Mr. F. M. Taylor presided at the organ.

Dr. Hugh Blair's harvest-tide cantata was successfully given at St. Andrew's Parish Church, Halstead, on October 2 and 6. The solos were sung by members of the choir, and Mr. W. H. Bullock presided at the organ.

The 'Report' presented to the Dean and Chapter of the musical services in St. Paul's Cathedral, covering the period Easter, 1890 to Easter, 1907, by the Succentor, the Rev. S. Childs Clarke, has just been issued and may be obtained, price 2*s.* 6*d.*, of Messrs. R. E. Thomas & Co., 24, White Street, E.C. We hope to refer to this interesting publication next month.

Messrs. Burns & Oates have issued a 'List of approved church music for the archdiocese of Westminster' (pp. 104, 2*s.* 6*d.*). This comprehensive compilation, which is in accord with the Moto Proprio, has been drawn up by the Westminster Diocesan Commission on Roman Catholic Church music.

A VILLAGE THREE-CHOIR FESTIVAL.

> 'Where through the long-drawn aisle and fretted vault,
> The pealing anthem swells the note of praise.'

When he incorporated these words into his immortal Elegy, Gray may have been thinking of St. Paul's Cathedral or of Westminster Abbey. But the anthem is not now, as then, the prerogative of cathedrals; it has found a place, and rightly so, in the services of the far-famed village church beside which the poet lies. On St. Matthew's Day the choirs of Farnham Royal and Taplow visited St. Giles' Church, Stoke Poges, to assist at what was, though on a modest scale, a real 'Three-choir festival.' The service, fully choral, opened with a processional hymn from the cloisters, and included Tallis's festal responses, special psalms, Gadsby's festival evening service in F, and Sullivan's anthem 'Sing, O heavens.' Mr. A. G. Millard, organist of Farnham Royal, accompanied, and Mr. W. A. Douthwaite, organist of Stoke Church, conducted the choir of sixty voices. So successful was this modest 'Three-choir festival' as to call forth a widely-expressed wish that the choirs might again combine in the near future. Such meetings undoubtedly stimulate interest in the musical portions of the church services, and tend to the individual improvement of the choirs concerned.

Reviews.

Studies in musical graces. By Ernest Fowles.

[The Vincent Music Company, Ltd.]

Mr. Dannreuther, in his 'Musical Ornamentation' primers, has so exhaustively treated the subject of musical graces and has placed such unerring guide-posts pointing the way to the accurate interpretation thereof, that other cicerones have a comparatively easy task in giving their directions. Mr. Fowles modestly says: 'The author can present no claim to the merit of originality, either in the sectional arrangement of the ornaments, or in the enunciation of the rules which regulate their performance. Such merit must inevitably accrue to the writers of the excellent works upon the subject already in existence.' He goes on to say, 'nevertheless, a new feature—as far as the author is aware—may be discerned in the following pages.' This 'new feature,' evidently compiled to meet the examination requirements so rife in the present day, consists of a series of questions and exercises which follow each section of the book. Some of these questions and exercises strike one as being somewhat appalling. For instance (p. 85) Exercise 34 reads: 'Give, in exact notation, the rendering of the following shakes from Bach.' As no fewer than thirty-one examples are given to be elaborated, the poor unfortunate student has a sorry task to fulfil. But this is not all. Exercise 35 has five examples from Handel; Haydn (Exercise 37), twelve; Mozart (Exercise 38), eleven; and Beethoven (Exercise 38), eleven—a total of seventy shakes, some of them occupying several bars in their abbreviated notation, which may be written out in full. Happily a key to the exercises can be purchased.

The book is divided into seven sections—the Appoggiatura and the Acciaccatura, the Turn, the Shake, the Upper and Lower Mordent, &c., the Nachschlag, &c., Combined graces, Graces in vocal music—the last-named, though short, being a useful adjunct. A Glossary is added, but the book lacks an index. Mr. Fowles appears to have taken infinite pains in compiling this treatise, which forms a fit companion to his 'Studies in part-playing.'

In Springtime. Four English pastorals, for tenor (or soprano) solo and male-voice chorus (ad lib.), with orchestral or pianoforte accompaniment. Composed by A. Herbert Brewer.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

This group of songs was composed for and produced at the recent Leeds musical festival, of which they form one of the most pleasant recollections. Milton's poem commencing 'Now the bright morning star, day's harbinger,' has been selected for the first of the group, and appears under the name of 'Song of May morning.' The music is delightfully gay and the accompaniment seems to dance with delight and exuberance. The composer has gone to an anonymous writer for the text of his second song, 'Welcome sweet pleasure,' which is so melodious and charming that, interpreted by a capable vocalist, it would certainly give 'sweet pleasure.' The third of the series, 'The power of music,' is a setting of Shakespeare's familiar lines 'Orpheus and his lute.' The effectiveness of this song is much increased by a recurring phrase in the accompaniment, which may be associated with that wonderful instrument on which Orpheus was so wonderful a performer. The words of the fourth song, entitled 'A shepherds' dance,' are also anonymous, but in rhythmic phrases they tell of pastoral festivity which is echoed in the music until one feels inclined to sing with the unknown poet 'Why sit we here delaying?' The attractiveness of the compositions is, of course, much enhanced by the chorus parts, but the music is so arranged that these accessories can be dispensed with without detracting from the interest of the songs.

L' Oratorio Musicale in Italia. By Guido Pasquetti.

[Firenze : Successori le Monnier.]

The true story of the oratorio, as we understand it to-day—a definite type of religious art—only dates from about the middle of the 17th century. Our author divides this period into the critico-humanist and the artistic. But there is an earlier and important period which he discusses, namely the periodo di formazione. Before referring briefly to this work, we must point out that Dr. Pasquetti has paid serious attention to his subject, and what he has written is indeed well worth reading.

The old liturgy was of epic character : the sermon of the disciples was a recited narrative of the life of Jesus Christ. And when that life was recorded in writing, portions were read or intoned, preceded and followed by Laudi Spirituali. Then gradually the narrative assumed a semi-dramatic form. In the 16th century arose the humanists, when literature and art exerted their influence, and the author's account of this transition period is most interesting.

In the year 1558 St. Phillipo Neri appointed Giovanni Animuccia director of music at his Oratory of St. Maria in Vallicella, and then not only in that church, but generally throughout Italy, the musical part of the services grew in importance. We must now confine ourselves to the artistic period. Francesco Balducci, who died in 1642, was the first to 'present the Biblical text in poetical form : before him there had only been dry paraphrases.' And, adds our author, 'as he transformed the Laude into a genuine libretto, so Carissimi raised the motett to the dignity of a grand musical picture.'

Although the oratorio had its dramatic side, the narrative element is its main feature. To render oratorio fit for the stage, justly argues the author, it would be necessary to eliminate all traces of that element.

What Signor Pasquetti has to say about Handel is extremely interesting. When the composer arrived in Italy in 1708 he was admitted into Cardinal Ottoboni's famous 'Accademia poetico musicale,' and wrote his oratorios 'Il Trionfo del Tempo,' and 'La Resurrezione,' both written, says Signor Pasquetti, in the Italian opera style. Handel wrote operas at Hamburg. Why did he change the field of his productivity to oratorio? An explanation is given in this book which we do not remember to have seen elsewhere : it is that owing to a terrible earthquake the theatres had been closed by order of Clement XI. For the 'Messiah' our author entertains the highest admiration. 'Let us reflect that in this colossal work are included the prophecies of the Old Testament, the Birth, the Passion, the Resurrection, the Ascension, the Universal Judgment, and the splendour of the New Jerusalem, and then we shall be able to form an idea of the grand design of the "Messiah."'

There is much in this thoughtful volume about the oratorios of the 19th century, ending with Perosi and some of his imitators. If these few general remarks attract any readers to the book itself, they will not have been written in vain. To render proper justice to the volume many columns would be requisite.

Obituary.

The death of Dr. JAMES C. CULWICK, which took place at Dublin on October 5, is recorded with regret. Born at West Bromwich on April 28, 1845, he began his musical career as a chorister of Lichfield Cathedral, of which his father was a vicar-choral, and a tenor singer of repute in the Midlands. At the age of fourteen he was articled to Thomas Bedsmore, organist of Lichfield Cathedral, subsequently becoming assistant organist. Dr. Culwick held successively the following organist appointments : St. Chad's, Lichfield ; Parsonstown, Ireland (1866) ; and St. Ann's, Dublin (1870). In 1881 he was appointed organist of the Chapel Royal, Dublin, a post he held with distinction until his death. He was professor of music at Alexandra College, Dublin, and from 1872 to 1892 he conducted the Dublin Harmonic Society. Dr. Culwick's compositions cover a wide range—from the orchestral overture and the string quartet to the simple part-song. He was a prolific writer on music, one of his most interesting contributions to the literature of the Art being the pamphlet on the discovery of the original word-book of Handel's 'Messiah,' privately printed in 1891. A copy of the original word-book—sold in Dublin in 1742, when the 'Messiah' was first performed, at the price of a British 'sixpence'—was picked up at an old book-stall by Professor Dowden, who presented it to Dr. Culwick : this unique treasure is now preserved in the British Museum. As a lecturer on music this much lamented musician had a great reputation, the paper on 'Artistic landmarks,' which he read before the Musical Association on April 11, 1893, furnishing proofs of his gifts in this direction. When, in 1893, the University of Dublin conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of music, honoris causa, it was felt that this was a distinction worthily bestowed on a musician who was cultured in a very high degree, as an interpretative artist and as one who took a warm and practical interest in the literature of the Art he served so well.

HERR ALFRED REISENAUER, the well-known pianist, died suddenly of heart apoplexy at Libau, Silesia, on October 3. He was one of Liszt's most talented and favourite pupils. Herr Reisenauer was under forty-four years of age, having been born at Königsberg on November 1, 1863.

Miss Margaret F. Fowles died, we regret to record, on August 6, while on a visit to her sister at Detroit, U.S.A. This remarkably gifted lady excelled as a pianist, organist and conductor. The daughter of an artist, she was born at Ryde, Isle of Wight, in 1846. At the age of fifteen she succeeded her father as organist of St. James's Church, in her native town, and in 1878 she followed her brother, Mr. Claude Fowles, in the organistship of St. Michael and All Angels, Swanmore. At the latter church she, as might be expected of a pupil of Dr. E. J. Hopkins, showed great ability in accompanying the services and in training the choir. In 1874 Miss Fowles founded the Ryde Choral Union, which she conducted with marked efficiency for twenty years. As a successful teacher she was held in the highest esteem, and her frank and genial personality endeared her to all her friends, who greatly deplore her loss. During the last two years of her life Miss Fowles founded and conducted, at Letchworth, Hertfordshire, an excellent choral society known as the First Garden City Choral Society. Associated with this was a select string band, which she also founded and conducted. This she delighted to call her 'Briarside Orchestra,' since the rehearsals were always held at her own home ('Briarside') and were the occasion of much delightful social enjoyment. The cremated remains of Miss Fowles were interred in Letchworth churchyard on October 21, amid many manifestations of regret at the loss of so estimable a lady.

HOME MUSIC STUDY UNION.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

Sir,—Will you allow me to call attention to a newly established Association designed to increase the intelligent appreciation of music?

The Home Music Study Union is avowedly modelled on the lines of the National Home Reading Union, and aims at doing for music what the latter has done for various branches of literature. For a trifling subscription, barely sufficient to cover incidental expenses, it provides skilled guidance in music study both for reading and practice. The course for the coming winter session is founded on Sir Hubert Parry's 'Studies of great composers,' and comprises a survey of the whole field of classic and modern music.

The Editorial Committee, consisting at present of Mr. H. A. Fricker, city organist, Leeds, Dr. E. C. Bairstow, organist of Leeds Parish Church, Mr. T. J. Hoggett, lecturer on music, Leeds University, with Mr. Percy Scholes as editorial secretary, has studiously designed the winter course that it may be profitably undertaken by any persons who are intelligently interested in music, whatever their standard of ability.

It will be noticed that at present the committee and officers are all located in this city, but it is not intended to make the Union in any sense a Leeds organization; we have already members in every part of the country, and desire that our work should assume a national character. Circles may with advantage be worked either in connection with existing choirs, guilds, societies, &c., or simply by groups of personal friends meeting at each others' houses.

I shall be pleased to send complete information to any of your readers on receipt of stamped addressed envelope.

I remain, yours faithfully,
John E. Lawrence,
63, Graneg Avenue, Leeds. Hon. Sec. (pro tem.).

CARDIFF MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Business enterprise and artistic zeal joined hands with memorable results at the fifth music-meeting held at Caer-Taff, to give Cardiff its Welsh name. No fewer than eight novelties were produced. These, with strains more familiar, furnished a programme that was as eclectic as it was enjoyable. Soloists of high rank had been engaged, the invaluable services of the London Symphony Orchestra (ably led by Mr. W. Frye Parker) secured, and, for the third time, the duties of conductor were placed in the experienced and capable hands of Dr. Frederic H. Cowen. Coming to local folk, who no less efficiently co-operated towards a successful issue, the festival chorus deserves high praise for their intelligence and vocal excellence, and their efforts throughout the week reflected credit upon those responsible for their training—Mr. T. E. Aylward (organist of the festival), Mr. J. E. Deacon and Madame Clara Novello Davies, three Cardiff musicians of repute. The chorus, numbering 257 voices, were thus distributed: sopranos, eighty-nine; contraltos, sixty-three; tenors, fifty; basses, fifty-five. Last, but by no means least, Mr. W. A. Morgan, as at all the previous meetings (1892, 1895, 1902 and 1904), again discharged the onerous duties of festival secretary with boundless energy and genial courtesy; there can be no question that this hard-working enthusiast was the right man in the right place. The concerts, eight in number, were held on September 25, 26, 27, and 28, in the Park Hall, a building not altogether adequate for performances on a festival scale.

The festival opened (on Wednesday morning, September 25) with the National Anthem followed by the chorus 'Hail! bright Cecilia,' from Purcell's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.' Thereupon succeeded Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' which at the initial festival of 1892 the composer himself conducted. In this familiar work the chorus at once gave evidence of their efficiency, though they wonderfully improved as the days went on. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. David Hughes and Mr. Charles Tree (Lucifer).

Two of the octet of novelties were presented in the second part of the programme. The first of these was a Tone-poem for orchestra entitled 'Summer,' composed expressly for the occasion and conducted by Mr. Arthur Hervey. Mainly constructed on two themes, 'Summer' and 'Nature,' Mr. Hervey's latest work gives further proof of his poetic temperament and creative gifts. Eminently refined in his orchestration, he never over-colours his picture, though—as in the storm episode in this work—he well knows how to paint on a large canvas, yet always with artistic restraint. Admirably played by the orchestra, the Tone-poem and its composer received a cordial reception. Then came novelty number two, a setting by Mr. Hamilton Harty, for soprano solo and orchestra, of Keats's 'Ode to a nightingale.' Keats wrote the poem when living at Hampstead, one morning in the spring of 1819, 'after breakfast,' the result of two or three hours' work. He recited the Ode to Haydon in a chanting tone in Kilburn meadows, now covered by bricks and mortar. More than one critic, while admitting, as all must do, the excellence of the poem, has questioned the relevancy of the mythological references in an 'Ode to a nightingale'; be this as it may, such moods of the poet furnish the composer with elements of contrast for the exercise of his muse. It was a bold attempt on the part of Mr. Harty to set so great a poem, but in so doing he has added to his reputation in a composition which reflects the poetic spirit of the text. The work, conducted by Mr. Harty, was admirably sung by the composer's wife, Miss Agnes Nicholls, to whom it is appropriately dedicated, and the gifted pair received every mark of approval in the unstinted applause bestowed upon their combined efforts. Beethoven's 'Hallelujah' chorus set its great seal on the morning's music.

Expectation ran high at the evening concert, at which was produced Part II. of 'Omar Khayyam' for soli, chorus and orchestra, composed for the festival by Mr. Granville Bantock, who conducted the performance. As befits the philosophisings of the Persian astronomer-poet, the music is cast in the mould of that Oriental luxuriance of which the composer is so great an admirer. Picturesque orchestration, rich colouring, rhythmic fervour and infinite variety combine to produce a work of great power. Most effective use is made of such contrasts as 'The two-and-seventy jarring sects confute' (a phrase frequently repeated, though not to the full number of seventy-two), and the tenderness of the music to 'The flower that once has blown.' Of special significance is the section beginning:

We are no other than a moving row
Of magic shadow-shapes that come and go
Round with the sun-illumined lantern held
In midnight by the Master of the Show.

To quote from Mr. Ernest Newman's able analysis of the work: 'The bassoons and lower strings begin, sotto voce, with an alla marcia theme that forecasts the coming chorus; the basses tramp about pizzicati, while the rhythm is marked by the kettle-drum (struck with wooden side-drum sticks). The second tenors have the chief theme of the chorus, the first and second basses constantly reiterating E flat and C respectively; all sing sotto voce and staccato.' Thereby is created a most graphic and weird setting of the text as clever as it is effective. The full import of the work cannot be judged after a single hearing; in the meantime there can be no question of its cleverness, and the warm reception which it and Mr. Bantock (who conducted) received testified to the effect of the music on those who listened to it. The soloists were Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, the last-named, in his impersonation of the Philosopher, giving further proof of his versatility. The chorus, who seemed to enter thoroughly into the spirit of the work, crowned themselves with glory. The remainder of the programme speaks for itself—Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte concerto and Chopin's Ballade in G minor (Op. 23), splendidly played by Signor Busoni; Saint-Saëns's 'La Fiancée du Timbalier,' admirably sung by Madame Kirkby Lunn, and Beethoven's ever-welcome Leonora Overture No. 3, brilliantly performed by the London Symphony Orchestra.

SECRETARY OF THE CARDIFF MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(Photograph by Mr. H. J. B. Wills, Cardiff.)

The programme of the third performance (on Thursday morning) being of a more or less familiar nature does not call for detailed notice. Sir Edward Elgar's oratorio 'The Kingdom,' conducted by the composer, was its chief feature, with Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies as a capable quartet of soloists. The chorus again distinguished themselves in giving a most commendable interpretation of the sacred strains allotted to them; they seemed to have got into the heart of the music, to which their beautiful voices gave all due expression, and the rendering of the work appeared to make a deep impression on the audience. In Tchaikovsky's E minor Symphony (No. 5) the orchestra displayed their superb qualities under Dr. Cowen's enthusiastic leadership.

Bach, in a humorous frame of mind, opened the evening concert with his cantata 'Phœbus and Pan,' as arranged by Herr Felix Mottl. The burden of the work is borne by a sextet of solo voices, the chorus having assigned to them only the opening and closing numbers. Miss Gleeson-White, who was to have sung the part of Momus, was unfortunately invalided, but an excellent substitute was found at short notice in Miss Amy Evans. This young artist (a product of the Eisteddfod) was brought before the notice of our readers in THE MUSICAL TIMES of September, 1899, when her portrait and some biographical notes appeared, and the hope was expressed that 'all the expectations raised as to the artistic future of Miss Evans may be fulfilled.' The other soloists were Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. John Harrison, Mr. Ivor Foster and Mr. Charles Tree.

Not the least important novelty of this festival was Sir Hubert Parry's Symphonic poem for soprano, bass, chorus, and orchestra, 'A vision of life.' In an outline of the work given in the September issue of this journal it was stated: 'In writing the words of this symphonic poem the composer has had in his mind the ceaseless march of humanity from the earliest traces of life in conditions of awful helplessness, through various great issues up to our own time, and passing onward to the dimmest and most distant future'; and that he 'strongly believes that humanity is always keeping a firm hold on the undying aspirations after good, and progressing slowly, very slowly perhaps, towards the attainment of general well-being'—a noble theme to which the poet-composer has wedded noble music. The work is all aglow with human feeling, and the interest of its vast subject is sustained and intensified as one strain after another reaches the ear in tones of deep sincerity. To mention this or that feature would not do justice to the continuity of the poem and its appropriate music. The brief hour that it occupied passed all too soon, and one longs for an opportunity of re-hearing a composition which is sure to find acceptance, as it is inspired with lofty motives and set forth in music that is artistic, attractive and easy of understanding. The rendering of the work was excellent; the choir evidently took to their part with great delight, and the two soloists, Miss Agnes Nicholls (who at very short notice took the place of Miss Gleeson-White) and Mr. Ivor Foster, were no less satisfactory. Sir Hubert, who conducted, received quite an ovation both at the beginning and the end of the performance. Act III. of Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' (soloists: Miss Amy Evans, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Messrs. Ben Davies, Ivor Foster and Charles Tree) concluded an interesting concert.

The programme on Friday morning (September 27) opened with César Franck's 150th Psalm, for chorus, orchestra and organ. This was immediately followed by the fifth novelty of the festival, a setting by Dr. Cowen of Mrs. Browning's poem, 'He giveth His beloved sleep,' for contralto solo (tastefully sung by Madame Kirkby Lunn), chorus and orchestra. It may suffice to say that Dr. Cowen has enriched choral music by a tenderly beautiful composition of great merit. It is not given to every composer to write music that shall be simple and not commonplace, yet the conductor of the Cardiff Festival has achieved that distinction in a work that is singularly expressive in its poetic delicacy and melodic charm. The fine qualities of the choir were displayed to full advantage in the choral portion of this little gem, no less than in Schubert's Mass in E flat which followed. One so seldom has an opportunity of hearing Schubert's choral compositions, that the performance of one of the best of them is most welcome. A thoroughly satisfactory interpretation of the Mass was secured by Dr. Cowen; the chorus-singing reached a very high level of excellence, and the performance of the work was most enjoyable. The soloists were Miss Amy Evans, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Messrs. John Coates, John Harrison and Ffrangcon-Davies. The finale from Act I. of 'Parsifal' concluded the concert, the soloists being Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, Mr. Ivor Foster and Mr. David Hughes, the first-named artist being most impressive in singing the Amfortas music.

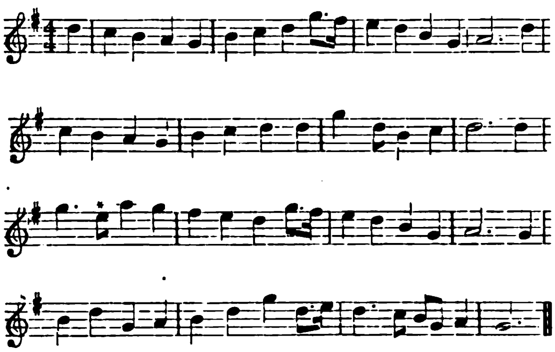
Cheerful music—how welcome it is—reigned supreme at the evening concert on Friday. Haydn's 'Spring' put everybody in a good humour, as the strains of that genial genius generally do, in season or out of season. Miss Gleeson-White (received with a warm-hearted cheer upon her recovery from illness) took the part of Jane, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, as a Farmer, sang 'With joy the impatient husbandman,' Mr. John Harrison impersonated Lucas, a young countryman, and the 'Chorus of country people and hunters' were well represented by the songsters and songstresses of the city of Cardiff. Thus was the way fittingly prepared for the sixth novelty, 'Two Norfolk Rhapsodies' (Nos. 2 and 3), composed and conducted by Dr. R. Vaughan Williams. Of this pair of effective orchestral pieces, the second proved the most attractive. The composer had splendid material to work upon in the folk-tunes he picked up in Norfolk in January, 1905, and he has made full use of his opportunities. Here is one—'Ward the Pirate.' May all his piracy be forgiven for such a tune!

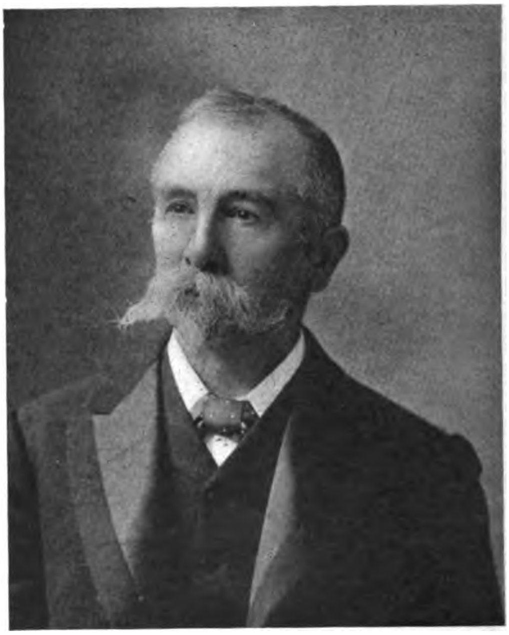


It will be observed that, with one exception (the note marked *), the melody is either entirely stepwise, or the intervals are those of the common chord. This tune, which formed a prominent feature in the second Rhapsody, is splendidly treated by Dr. Vaughan Williams in a brilliantly orchestrated composition which called forth, as well it might, vociferous applause.

Dr. A. Herbert Brewer then mounted the platform to conduct the seventh novelty—his Ballad for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra, 'Sir Patrick Spens,' of which a brief analysis appeared in The Musical Times of August last. That the Gloucester organist's setting of the famous ballad 'came off' admits of no doubt. It is the best thing he has done, the music being very dramatic and richly orchestrated. Here and there, perhaps, the scoring seemed a trifle overdone, in that the voices could not get through the orchestration, for after all the words are of some importance, even though the modern orchestra—or rather the composers who run the risk of being ensnared thereby—so strenuously asserts its supremacy. The baritone solo was safe in the hands (or rather the voice) of Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, and Dr. Brewer was heartily cheered at the close of a successful launching of his 'Sir Patrick Spens.' May it have a successful voyage upon the sea of success! Dr. Cowen's dainty overture 'The butterfly's ball,' the Finale to Mendelssohn's 'Loreley' (the soprano solo brilliantly sung by Miss Gleeson-White), and Strauss's 'Don Juan' formed Part II. of a successful, enjoyable and cheerful concert.

The last day of the festival began with the 'Romeo and Juliet' symphonie-romantique of Berlioz, in which the lion's share of an imaginative if unequal work falls to the instrumentalists. How the London Symphony Orchestra performed their arduous task may easily be imagined, especially in the 'Queen Mab' Scherzo. The choir did what little they had to do well, and the soloists were Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Ivor Foster. Miss Marie Novello Williams, a gifted local pianist, then gave an effective and pleasing rendering of Mendelssohn's G minor Pianoforte concerto, a work now seldom heard. Miss Amy Evans sang 'O peaceful night' from Dr. Cowen's 'St. John's Eve,' to which succeeded the eighth and last novelty, composed by a Cardiff musician, Mr. David Evans. The work, a cantata entitled 'The coming of Arthur,' is one rather more of promise than fulfilment. It contains features, however, that should encourage Mr. Evans to develop his creative gifts, and to prove to the world that Wales is rightly taking her place in the higher plane of music. Mr. Ivor Foster was the soloist, and the composer, who conducted, received round upon round of applause from his fellow-citizens. An inordinately long programme—which seriously jeopardized Mr. Evans's work—concluded with Mozart's Motet 'Glory, honour, praise, and power.'

The festival was brought to a successful conclusion on Saturday evening by a performance of Handel's 'Messiah,' with Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. David Hughes as efficient principals.



MR. T. E. AYLWARD.

ORGANIST OF THE CARDIFF MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(Photograph by Mr. and Mrs. S. Bowen Bravery, Cardiff.)

Mr. T. E. Aylward (of whom a portrait is given above) ably presided at the organ, and Dr. F. H. Cowen, as the hardworking and capable conductor of the festival, is to be sincerely congratulated upon the success which attended his painstaking efforts in connection with the Cardiff Musical Festival of 1907.

It only remains to acknowledge the never-failing courtesy of the officials, with which the names of Mr. E. W. M. Corbett, J.P., chairman of the executive committee, Mr. D. W. Evans, chairman of the music committee, and Mr. W. A. Morgan, the indefatigable secretary, must be specially associated.

The conclusion of the Preface to 'Wesley in E' is unavoidably held over till the December issue by reason of space.

NOVELLO'S COLLECTION OF
WORDS OF ANTHEMS

Crown 8vo, 822 pp., cloth, red edges, 5s. Red Basil and red edges, 7s. 6d. Appendix only, paper cover, 1s.

This Book, which now contains the words of about 2000 Anthems, besides being admirably adapted for the use of Choirs and Congregations, for which purpose it was originally compiled, will be found most valuable to Organists, Choirmasters, and the Clergy as a Book of Reference for the Selection of Anthems suitable for special days, seasons, or occasions, the Indexes having been considerably enlarged. It also contains a list of Anthems suitable for Men's Voices, and Anthems with Latin words.

The newly incorporated Anthems (Nos. 1590 to 1952) have been added to the former edition by means of an Appendix, which is published separately from the complete work. Consequently Choirs and Congregations which are still using the older edition are enabled to supplement their books, and make them complete, by purchasing the Appendix at the price of One Shilling.

THE PARISH CHURCH
ANTHEM BOOK

Crown 8vo., 250 pp., and 80 pp. of Indexes, cloth, red edges.

This Anthem Book is the outcome of a desire on the part of many parish churches for a Collection of Words of convenient size, permanent in character, representative as to selection, and moderate in price. It contains the Words of printed in extenso; and many more are incorporated by means of reference letters. The Selection is prepared alphabetically, according to the names of the chief composers, and is so arranged that various settings by other composers of the same words, or of portions of them, may be used.

FIVE HUNDRED ANTHEMS

Messrs. Novello's collection of "Words of Anthems" has been used as a basis in the compilation of this work, but many anthems have been added, both ancient and modern, which have not been previously published in a Standard Form.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

OCTOBER 9, 10, 11 and 12.

The thirteenth musical festival organized in this musical centre was held on the above dates with considerable artistic success, whatever the result may turn out to be from a pecuniary point of view. It is by no means easy, and it may be impossible, to frame a programme for such a spacious event that will satisfy all tastes. Therefore it is greatly to the credit of the Leeds Committee that they presented to their supporters a selection that blended the old and the new, the native product and the foreign, in fair proportion. The following is the full programme of the eight concerts given:

OCTOBER 9. MORNING.

Selection, 'Israel in Egypt'	Handel.
Choral Symphony	Beethoven.

EVENING.

'Sinfonia Sacra'	Parry.
Pastorals (New)	A. Herbert Brewer.
Symphony No. 2	Brahms.

OCTOBER 10. MORNING.

Symphonic cantata, 'Stabat Mater' (first performance)	Stanford.
Scenes from 'Olav Trygvason'	Grieg.

EVENING.

Elegiac Overture	Joachim.
Folk-songs (New)	Rutland Boughton.
Ode (New), 'Intimations of Immortality'	Arthur Somervell.
Overture, 'Die Meistersinger'	Wagner.
Song for chorus and orchestra (New)	R. Vaughan Williams.
Walkürenritt and Finale of 'Siegfried'	Wagner.

OCTOBER 11. MORNING.

Oratorio, 'The Kingdom'	Elgar.
Symphony in C	Schubert.

EVENING.

'Requiem'	Mozart.
Poem for chorus and orchestra, 'Sea Wanderers'	Granville Bantock.
Symphony No. 8	Glazounow.

OCTOBER 12. MORNING.

Mass in B minor	Bach.

EVENING.

Overture, 'Hebrides'	Mendelssohn.
Eight-part motet, 'The Spirit also helpeth us'	Bach.
Dramatic song, 'Vätergruft'	Cornelius.
Songs	Grieg.
Concerto for pianoforte	Grieg.
Overture, 'Leonora' No. 3	Beethoven.
Five Songs of the Sea	Stanford.
Ode, 'Blest Pair of Sirens'	Parry.

The conductor-in-chief was, as at the two previous festivals, Sir Charles Stanford, and all the English composers conducted their own works. The orchestra of 123 performers consisted chiefly of members of the London Symphony Orchestra, led by Mr. W. Frye Parker, and Dr. E. C. Bairstow was the organist. The choir included 105 sopranos, 86 contraltos (ladies), 8 altos (male), 83 tenors and 86 basses. Mr. H. A. Fricker was chorus-master, and Mr. H. Pickard had acted as chorus-pianist. Mr. Fred. R. Spark was again the honorary secretary, and to say that he fulfilled his duties as usual is the best compliment he can be paid. Regret is general that he now retires from the post. The solo singers were all of the first rank. It was a sad disappointment to all concerned that on the first day of the festival Madame Agnes Nicholls was compelled, owing to a bad throat, to resign her important leading parts. It is a testimony to the readiness of Miss Perceval Allen and of Miss Gladys Honey, a young student from the Royal College of Music, that her place was filled so efficiently.

The 'Israel' selection with which the festival opened displayed the rich sonority of the chorus to great advantage. The basses were particularly fine, the tenors were resonant if not obviously sweet, and the sopranos and contraltos revealed some brilliant qualities. The performance presented no special features of interpretation. Miss Brema, Mr. Spencer Thomas (tenor), Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies and Mr. Herbert Brown (basses) were the soloists. The last-named singer—a newcomer at a festival of this importance—sang with conspicuous refinement and made a very favourable impression. The performance of the Choral Symphony, which followed the oratorio selection, was an all-round good one without special distinction, except that the band played very finely.

At the evening concert Sir Hubert Parry's Sinfonia Sacra 'The Love that casteth out fear,' was given. Although much of the performance created a deep impression, it cannot be said that on the whole the grave beauty of the work was realised. The semi-chorus, instead of coming from afar, was placed on the platform, and generally there was not enough effort at interpretation on the part of the chorus to arrest attention. The solos were expressively sung by Madame Ada Crossley and Mr. Plunket Greene.

The four new Pastorals by Dr. A. Herbert Brewer were very attractive items. Mr. Gervase Elwes was the soloist, and he sang with fine taste and due fervour. The accompaniments showed that the composer has gained skill to write daintily and with charm for the orchestra. The chorus parts (for male choir) were also effective, and induced a wish that they were more developed. The Brahms Symphony in D was a worthy conclusion to the concert.

On the morning of the second day Sir Charles Stanford's 'Stabat Mater' for soli, chorus and orchestra (Op. 90) was produced. By general consent this work was the most striking and indubitably successful of all the new works brought forward. An austere critic, steeped in ecclesiastical scholasticism, might desire a less unrestrained musical expression of the world-famous hymn. But the allurement of the unfettered employment of the colouring resources of the modern musical palette by a ripe master of the art overwhelmed such considerations. The naturalness of the flow of the music and the sincerity of the expression, in turn passionate, tender and lachrymose, throughout enslaved attention. These are general impressions after the glow of a first hearing. No doubt there will be many opportunities for a more critical estimation of the work. The performance was on the whole an adequate one. The chorus sang con amore, and the orchestra was splendid. Miss Gladys Honey, a young student of the Royal College of Music, bravely took the soprano part that was to have been 'created' by Madame Agnes Nicholls. She displayed a sweet voice without much power, and she sang with a refinement and simplicity that earned the admiration of her formidable but sympathetic audience. It is enough to say that the other soloists were Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Plunket Greene. The second half of the morning concert was devoted to the compositions of Grieg, who was to have conducted. We believe that the inclusion of the scenes from 'Olav Trygvason' (Op. 50) was the suggestion of the late composer. It must be confessed that the music gave little impression of power. It may be that it was not conceived with a view to the massiveness of the Leeds chorus and orchestra, and that in the theatre a juster sense of proportion would be felt. But we are afraid that the music itself is inadequate to its subject. A good performance of the popular 'Peer Gynt' (No. 1) Suite helped the audience to more enthusiasm for the memory of the composer.

The evening concert began appropriately with the Elegiac Overture (Op. 16) of the late Joseph Joachim. This was followed by the first performance of a song for chorus and orchestra by R. Vaughan Williams, set to Whitman's inspiring poem 'Toward the unknown region.' This work establishes a high reputation for its young composer. It exhibits power to maintain due perspective on a large canvas, and to invest musical ideas with deep and impressive significance. The great climax of the fifth verse is skilfully wrought up, although on a first hearing the note of rapturous exultation seemed not to be fully realized. The performance was a fine one, and was duly appreciated by the audience.

Another new work brought out at this concert was Dr. Somervell's setting for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra of passages selected from Wordsworth's ode on 'Intimations of Immortality.' It was a bold undertaking to endeavour to wed music to so great a poem. Dr. Somervell's idioms and conventional forms of expression do not, at least as yet, seem to lend themselves to breadth, deep significance or intensity. There are it is true many charming passages in the setting, especially for the chorus, but the almost constant synchronous movement of the choral parts tends to a monotony which the orchestration does little to relieve. A climax to the words 'Then sing ye birds a joyous song' is one of the most effective passages of the work. The solo was sung by Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies with rather less than his usual success, but otherwise the performance was blameless if not stirring. The 'Meistersinger' overture was magnificently played, and was followed by Mr. Rutland Boughton's unaccompanied choral variations upon two English folk-songs, namely 'The Barkshire Tragedy' and 'King Arthur had three sons.' The arrangements show that Mr. Broughton can import humour without horseplay into his music. The choir sang the variations remarkably well, and the audience, which until now had been surfeited with serious art, lent a willing ear to lighter strains. A fair performance of the 'Walkürenritt' was followed by the great duet from 'Siegfried,' in which Miss Susan Strong and Mr. Ben Davies took part. It says much for the power of these two eminent vocalists that their voices were often distinguishable through the storm and stress of the orchestral welter.

'The Kingdom' was performed on the third morning. It is only necessary to say that on the whole this presentation was one of the finest yet given of this noble work. One sometimes yearned for more delicacy of tone-force and of rhythm, and it must be recorded that there was a fearful moment of failing intonation that threatened disaster, which fortunately was averted by a keen entry of the wood-wind, and by Mr. Ben Davies singing dead on the correct pitch. The great climax, 'O ye priests,' provided scope for the majestic tone of the chorus, and produced a deep impression. Miss Perceval Allen took what was to have been Madame Nicholls's part, and it is enough to say that the other artists were Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies and, as stated above, Mr. Ben Davies. The composer conducted with unusual energy and alertness, and to this fact much of the success of the performance must be ascribed.

The great Symphony in C by Schubert concluded the morning concert.

At the evening concert the first item was Mozart's Requiem Mass. As execution the performance was splendid and sometimes thrilling. But the mould of the music seemed at times to call for smaller resources of chorus and band. A well-known critic described the performance as 'exhilarating.' This with regard to a Requiem was a doubtful compliment. The soloists were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. Spencer Thomas and Mr. Herbert Brown.

The Requiem was followed by Mr. Granville Bantock's new, or at least newly produced, work, 'Sea wanderers,' a setting for chorus and orchestra of a poem by the composer's wife. The subject of the poem is the uncertainty of the drift of human fate:

> We are as ships upon the sea,
> Sailing into Eternity.
>
> . . . .
>
> Whether we're bound for the ice and snow,
> Or the land of the sun, who can know?

The idea resembles that of the Whitman poem 'Towards the unknown,' set by Dr. Vaughan Williams and performed on the previous day.

The calculated vagueness of the poetic idea afforded full scope for the peculiar genius of Mr. Bantock. In some respects the work is the most remarkable that has come from his active and fertile brain. The orchestra pours out a stream of novel and boldly conceived effects, for the least agreeable of which a 'fog-horn' is responsible. As a sea journey is depicted there was no demand for a motor hoot. A solo quintet of strings in addition to the ordinary orchestra is almost constantly employed. The harmonic texture also displays much originality. Dr. Ernest Walker, the official analyst, points out in the programme a passage that employs 'forty-eight consecutive first inversions of augmented triads'; but surely these chords are inversions to the eye rather than to the ear. Then the choral parts fully live up to their environment and present a series of baffling-looking problems to choralists decorously trained on approved methods. In thus drawing attention to some of Mr. Bantock's unconventionalisms, there is no desire to belittle the æsthetic value of his work. On the contrary, we wish to say that the originality of the ideas and of the means employed to express them were, even on a first hearing, deeply interesting, even though the performance failed to do more than half realise the composer's conception. It would be unjust to blame the chorus for any shortcomings, for after all they could not be expected to give more than a certain proportion of time to the work. Composers who demand highly special choral technique from festival choruses must take their chance. Whether choralists elsewhere, in less stress, will devote their skill and time to a real mastery of this work remains to be experienced. It may be hoped that we shall not have to wait very long.

Glazounow's Symphony in E flat (Op. 83), one of this active composer's latest productions, was performed for the first time in England. It was admirably played under the baton of Sir Charles Stanford. There is much to admire in the work. The rich orchestration is a conspicuous feature, especially of the first movement. There are no startling effects—in fact, for a modern symphony there is unusual restraint. The slow movement is interesting at first, but it seems over-developed, a criticism that may be applied also to the Scherzo. The last movement is a brilliant example of the composer's fertility and skill.

The concert on the last morning was devoted to Bach's Mass in B minor. Needless to say the chorus here displayed some of their finest qualities so far as regards brilliancy of tone. Unity of attack was not so obvious a speciality, and it was possible to find some fault with the execution of the slurred runs. The Sanctus found the chorus at its best, and created a deep impression. For once in a while the soloists, Miss Perceval Allen, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Herbert Brown had a fair chance of due prominence. The accompaniments to the solos were played by a very small orchestra with some filling-in from a 'desk' pianoforte played by the conductor. Thus a certain intimacy and unity were secured. The solos were sometimes exquisitely sung, and the duets were unusully successful. It was good that this immortal Mass was the last large choral work to be performed. Coming after a torrent of music of many schools and periods it seemed to declare imperiously its splendid unapproachableness and grandeur.

The programme of the concluding evening concert was miscellaneous, and did not introduce any new music. The most striking performances were that of the Bach motet by the choir, and that of the Grieg Pianoforte concerto by Mr. Percy Grainger, in which he made manifest hitherto unrevealed beauties.

An account of the unveiling in Leeds Parish Church of the memorial to Samuel Sebastian Wesley is given on p. 721.

THE OPERA.

The autumn season of opera in Italian at Covent Garden opened on October 3 with Puccini's 'Madama Butterfly' and since that night have been played the same composer's 'La Bohème,' and 'La Tosca'; Verdi's 'Aïda' and 'Rigoletto,' Bizet's 'Carmen,' Gounod's 'Faust,' Mascagni's 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' and Leoncavallo's 'I Pagliacci.'

The principal prima donna has been Madame Giachetti, who has been supported by Madame Lejeune and Messrs. Bossi, Scandiani and Sammarco. Miss Maria Gay, who made her reappearance in 'Carmen' on October 5, and several newcomers have made favourable impressions. The most successful 'first appearance' was Miss Bryhn, a Norwegian lady who made her début as Santuzza on October 4. The same night Miss Dereyne won good opinions as Nedda, and increased them by her vivacious impersonation of Musetta in 'La Bohème' on October 8. Miss Lindsay, a soprano born in Paris of a Scotch father and an American mother, made her first appearance at Covent Garden on October 7, as the heroine in 'Faust'; Miss Edith de Lis, an American lady, made an exceptionally promising début on October 22 as Tosca; and Miss Lalla Miranda made a successful reappearance as Gilda in 'Rigoletto,' after seven years' absence, on October 19. The performance of 'Aïda' was distinguished by the fine singing of Madame Paquot as Amneris and Madame Litvinne as the slave-girl, the former showing great progress since her last appearance here in 1903. The Spanish tenor, Mr. Vignas, has rendered valuable assistance, particularly as Radames in 'Aïda,' and Mr. Carpi, who made his rentrée on October 19 as the Duke in 'Rigoletto,' sang very pleasingly. The most notable of the new male singers however was Mr. De Luca, who appeared on the opening night as Sharpless, and subsequently personated Marcello in ‘La Bohème’ on October 8, and Scarpia in ‘La Tosca’ on October 10. Mr. Luppi has shown himself a good artist in several important parts. An interesting event was the début on the operatic stage on October 15 of the young Irish tenor Mr. John McCormack, as Turiddu. Other artists who should be mentioned are Mr. Zoffoli, Miss Ada Davies, and Madame Edna Thornton.

The conductors have been Mr. Panizza and Mr. Serafin, the latter a newcomer who has amply justified his engagement. The ensembles and stage mounting have been excellent.

MR. DELIUS'S PIANOFORTE CONCERTO.

Mr. Fritz Delius is a Yorkshireman—he was born at Bradford in 1863—and a composer whose creations are widely esteemed on the Continent, but who is well-nigh unknown in the land of his birth. His compositions include an opera, ‘Koanga,’ produced at Elberfeld in 1904; a symphonic poem, ‘The dance of life,’ played for the first time at Düsseldorf in the same year; ‘Paris, Impressions de Nuit,’ ‘Sea-drift,’ for baritone, solo, chorus and orchestra, Essen, 1906; symphonic poem ‘Appalachia,’ 1905, opera ‘The village Romeo and Juliet,’ 1907; and ‘The Mass of Life,’ for soli, chorus and orchestra, after Nietzsche.

Particular interest therefore attached to the first performance in this country, on October 22, at the Promenade Concerts, Queen's Hall, of Mr. Delius's Pianoforte concerto in C sharp minor. This work dates from 1897, but it has been revised recently. Constructed on the Liszt model, it is essentially modern in conception and expression. Its three separated movements are closely connected thematically, and no break is made between them in performance. On a first hearing the work conveys the impression that intimate acquaintance would be required fully to appreciate the significance of the music, albeit the style is sufficiently direct to at once stir the imagination of the listener and excite his admiration. The chief characteristics of the concerto are virility and strenuousness. Passionate passages deepen into poignancy, but a tranquil spirit ultimately prevails, and in the last movement the glorified treatment of the principal theme of the work seems to suggest triumph over adverse influences. The solo part was most brilliantly played by Mr. Theodor Szánto, a newcomer of whom we should hear more. The concerto received an enthusiastic reception.

London Concerts.

Several interesting orchestral concerts have recently taken place at Queen's Hall. Amongst them was that given by the New Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Thomas Beecham, on October 14, at which the soloist was the clever young violinist Jóska Szigeti. The most important of the orchestral works performed was Edouard Lalo's practically unknown Symphony in G minor, which, although not a great composition, is so clear in form, melodious in character, and musicianly, as to give much pleasure to the listener. At the same concert was heard Vincent d'Indy's symphonic legend ‘The enchanted forest.’ The music is imaginative and picturesque, but the thematic material is not very strong and is over developed. The concluding section, however, has poetic charm, and the finish is impressive and beautiful. Both these works, as well as Smetana's symphonic poem ‘Sarka,’ were admirably interpreted.

The most memorable concerts of the last month were those In Memoriam Edvard Grieg, which were conducted by Mr. Wood at Queen's Hall respectively on October 16 and 23. The former was opened by the first performance in England of the late composer's funeral march, written in 1866 in memory of his greatly esteemed friend Rikard Nordraak. This solemn music, played at the composer's own funeral, is a most dignified and characteristic composition, the opening section being particularly impressive and the Trio having a melody thoroughly Griegian in style. Subsequently there was brought to a first hearing in England an orchestral arrangement of Grieg's ‘Old Norwegian Romance,’ originally written for two pianofortes. This is not so attractive as other works by the deceased musician, but it contains some pleasing passages and the scoring is picturesque. The other instrumental works were the early overture ‘In Autumn,’ the first ‘Peer Gynt’ suite, and the Pianoforte concerto, the solo part of the last-named being superbly rendered by Miss Johanne Stockmarr. A number of Grieg's songs were sympathetically sung by Mr. Anton Sistermans. The concert on October 23 was devoted to chamber music, the concerted works being the String Quartet in G minor and the Sonata (No. 2) in G for violin and pianoforte. The first-named was played by the Brodsky Quartet, and the latter by Dr. Adolph Brodsky and Mr. Percy Grainger. Pianoforte solos were contributed by Mr. Percy Grainger, while Miss Ellen Beck, chamber singer to the King of Denmark, sang an excellent selection of Grieg's songs.

Previous to his departure on an American tour, Mr. Richard Buhlig, with the co-operation of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, gave a concert on October 17, at which he had the courage to play in practically four concertos, including those by Liszt in A major and by Schumann in A minor. The other two works were less known, being César Franck's ‘Variations symphonique’ and Liszt's ‘Spanish Rhapsody’ as ‘improved’ by Busoni. Mr. Buhlig's fine technique enabled him to make light of the difficulties of these compositions, his playing throughout the afternoon being characterized by dignity and artistic restraint.

Considerable interest was evinced in a concert given by Mischa Elman at Queen's Hall on October 19, when he was supported by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Emil Mlynarski, a Polish musician born in Warsaw in 1870. Mr. Mlynarski is not unknown in England, for here as a youth he was heard as a violinist, but of late years he has acquired great celebrity as director of the Philharmonic Societies at Warsaw and Moscow. His interpretations of Beethoven's ‘Egmont’ overture and Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, and the support he gave Mischa Elman in Spohr's ‘Scena Cantata’ No. 8, proved that his reputation has been well-earned. His readings were distinguished by remarkable clearness of phrasing, almost microscopic attention to detail, and keen perception of effect. He brought with him a new symphonic poem entitled ‘Die Steppe,’ by a Mr. Sigismund Noskowski. This work, inspired by the scenery of the Russian steppes, contains several impressive passages, and is very cleverly scored, but it is over-long. Mention should also be made of an Adagio from a Violin concerto in D minor by Mr. Mlynarski, and also of a piquant ‘Musette’ for violin and pianoforte, both works attesting to a lively fancy, refined taste, and musicianly skill.

Another enjoyable concert was that given by Mr. Fritz Kreisler, prior to his departure for America. He was content with two concertos, that by Mozart in D, No. 4, and Brahms in the same key, in both of which he played very finely. A less known work was a ‘Rhapsodie Piemontese’ by Mr. Sinigaglia, a Professor at the Milan Conservatoire. This proved a very bright and characteristic work with themes partaking of a folk-song character. Mr. Kreisler was also supported by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The interest evinced at the Queen's Hall promenade concerts, and the excellence of the performances, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, have been fully maintained. On September 26 was given the first performance of a new overture entitled ‘Shylock,’ by Mr. Felix H. White, which is dedicated to Mr. Henry J. Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra. Mr. White's overture was written two years ago; it is his first orchestral work and the first he has had performed in public. This being so he must be credited with very special talent, for his overture is a significant and cleverly-scored production that so appealed to the audience that he was recalled to the platform three times. The composer's aim has been ‘To depict the soul-state of Shylock the man, and to contrast the ideas embodied in the well-known “Mercy” speech.’ Although the design is entirely modern in conception the development is rational, the scoring is clear, and exaggerations are carefully avoided. Mr. White certainly merits encouragement.

Much interest attached to the first performance in England on October 1 of Sibelius's new Violin concerto (Op. 42). This work consists of three movements, the first of which holds the attention more by the brilliant writing for the solo violin than by the significance of the music. This is reversed in the second movement, an Adagio de molto which possesses dignity, and a theme of characteristic qualities which receives effective treatment. The finale is extremely vivacious, and the music flows on with spontaneity and vigour until a brilliant close is reached. The solo part was admirably played by Mr. Henri Verbruggen.

On the following evening was heard for the first time in London a Pianoforte concerto in C sharp minor by Mr. Edward Isaacs, a native of Manchester. Composed about a year ago, the concerto is brilliantly laid out for the solo instrument. This in particular applies to the first movement, brilliancy being its distinguishing feature. The second number, Quasi fantasia, is of more musical interest and contains several poetic passages. It leads without break into the finale, the most attractive portion of the work, the themes having greater strength and being treated with vigour and exuberance.

A symphonic poem entitled 'Isabella,' by Mr. Frank E. Bridge, performed for the first time on October 3, proved a very clever and significant composition. The composer has chosen to illustrate Keats's poem 'Isabella' and the basil pot. This story, which, it will be remembered, turns upon the heroine digging up the dead body of her lover and taking home his head in a basil pot, does not lend itself to cheerful strains, but Mr. Bridge shows better taste in his music than in his choice of subject, and the four principal themes are expressive, well contrasted and effectively developed. The orchestration in particular is ingenious and picturesque, and shows excellent appreciation of tone-colour.

A new overture, entitled 'For Valour,' by Mr. Havergal Brian, was performed for the first time on October 8, in which the composer was inspired by a passage from Walt Whitman's 'Drum taps,' commencing 'Adieu, dear comrade,' and ending 'To fiercer, weightier battles give expression.' Mr. Brian certainly has given weighty expression to the martial character of his subject, and when the brass at the Queen's Hall find on their music the direction ffff brazen results are inevitable. Apart from this over-generosity in dealing with the brass, Mr. Brian's overture is a convincing and brilliant production. He has invented some capital themes, treated them interestingly, and shown musicianly resource.

The first performance in England of Liszt's 'Concerto pathétique' in E minor for pianoforte and orchestra, as arranged by Herr Burmeister, was given on October 15, with Mr. Arthur Cooke as the pianist. This concerto dates from 1850, when it appeared under the title of 'Grosses Konzert Solo.' Subsequently it was arranged for two pianofortes under its present title, paraphrased by Hans von Bülow, and finally edited by Burmeister. As will be surmised from the above history, the solo part is of the most brilliant description, and the themes are ornately treated. Musically, the most estimable portion of the concerto is its slow movement, which is poetic and expressive, while the finale is most energetic, and the work ends in the gorgeous fashion beloved of Liszt.

The following evening Mr. Frederic Austin, the esteemed young baritone, came forward as a composer with a Rhapsody for orchestra, entitled 'Spring.' Mr. Austin's Rhapsody possesses sufficient originality to justify encouragement, and it bears evidence of musicianly craftsmanship that excites respect. If the work is somewhat heavily scored for its subject, the instrumentation is well balanced and shows perception of what is appropriate. The slow portion is exceedingly graceful, and the finale is melodious and strenuous.

On October 17 the first performance was given of a new Concertstück in D minor for violin and orchestra (Op. 20), by Madame Ethel Barns, who played the solo part in her usual finished and neat style. Though not strong, the work is graceful, and may aptly be termed feminine in the best sense of the word.

Mr. Delius's Pianoforte concerto is noticed on p. 739.

Musical Competition Festivals.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE (LANCASHIRE).

September 28.

A very successful competition was held here under the auspices of the Co-operative Union, N.W. Section. Thirteen choirs came to sing 'The song of the flax-spinner' (Leslie) and 'The bells of St. Michael's tower' (Knyvett and Sir R. Stewart). Huddersfield (Mr. D. W. Evans) were the victors, and Runcorn (Mr. H. Berrey) were only one mark behind them. At the evening meeting four of the choirs combined to sing the test-piece under the baton of Dr. McNaught, who adjudicated. Besides the choral classes there were classes for duettists and vocal quartets. An appreciative audience filled the large hall to its utmost capacity.

BLACKPOOL.

October 2, 3, 4 and 5.

This popular festival was in many respects unprecedentedly successful. Although it is held so early in the autumn, and therefore at a time theoretically inconvenient to choirs and others concerned, it persists in drawing thousands of competitors. The entries were 150 in excess of those of last year, and in all there were about 3,500 competitors, including 33 violinists, 92 pianists, 79 junior solo singers, 270 adult solo singers (some entered for two classes), 11 vocal quartets, 5 vocal quintets, 23 school choirs, 8 female voice, 9 male voice, and 23 mixed-voice choirs, 3 string, and 3 full orchestras. The adjudicators were Dr. McNaught, Mr. Granville Bantock, Mr. Ernest Newman, Mr. Lionel H. Benson, Mr. C. H. Fogg, Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Le Vallon and Mr. W. Granger (Kendal). In the junior solo classes the boys' section brought forward some of the finest voices and singing that even old-stagers had ever heard. The test was 'Angels, ever bright and fair.' Four boys greatly excelled, and each of them moved the audience to enthusiasm. Walter Brown, Sydney Collett and Leslie Battersby came, we understand, from Mr. Bates's London School for Choristers. They were slightly outclassed by Joseph Smith, of Stockport, a lad with an unusually fine voice and expressive style, who was awarded the first prize. The school-choir singing was of the usual high average, and in the chief class resulted in victory, for the fifth time in succession, of the Revoe Council school (Mr. J. R. Rigby). The children of this school sing with remarkable beauty of tone and expression. Another school choir, from Devonshire Road, Blackpool (Mr. J. J. Barlow), was very little inferior. The tests were two parts, 'The Nightingale' (Schumann); three parts, 'Night song' (Abt); three parts, 'A cradle song' (H. Walford Davies). Action songs are a wonderfully attractive feature of this festival. They draw immense audiences, that are moved to tears and laughter by the extraordinary skill brought to bear upon the little comedies acted and sung by the children. The costumes, the free, gay movement, the unity of action, the singing and the constant touches of child human-nature that makes the whole world kin provide a unique entertainment. A dramatised version of the beautiful air 'A Skye boat-song' by the 'Caledonia' class, trained by Miss Isobel Garner, gained the first place.

In the adult solo singing classes, which were divided into eight sections, there were many attractive performances. The eight winners afterwards competed against one another for a silver rose bowl, with the result that Miss A. N. Turner, of Ashton-under-Lyne, was awarded the first position for her excellent performance of 'Dove sono' (Mozart). Mr. Clifford Higgin's Orpheus Ladies gained a prize in one female-voice section, and the ladies of Mr. Whittaker's Glee and Madrigal Society the first place in another section. In a closely contested class for mixed choirs that have never won a prize in the chief class, the Preston Vocal Union, again under Mr. Whittaker, came out first. A mixed-voice sight-test class attracted seven choirs. The test was an unpublished part-song, 'My little pretty one,' by Healey Willan. The prize was won by the Stretford Society (Mr. Thomas Corlett). A notable class was that for vocal quintets, the test-piece in which was the formidable 'Die Vätergruft' ('The hero's rest'), by Cornelius. A thrilling performance given by the St. Helens Quintet fully earned the premier position. Their performance was repeated at the evening concert and was encored, a fact that was as creditable to the audience as it was to the performers. On the last day the classes were open. The male-voice choir class attracted only three choirs. The tests were as follows: 'A patriot's vow' (Cornelius), 'A war-song' (Granville Bantock), 'Sorrow's tears' (Cornelius), and 'The Crusaders' (E. A. MacDowell). They were exceptionally severe, and perhaps had the effect of deterring entries. The Manchester Orpheus Society (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt) were the victors. All four pieces were given by this choir with fine tone and great expression.

The challenge shield class for mixed-voice choirs excited very great interest. Eight choirs sang, and the following were selected for a second testing, with the final result as shown by the figures (maximum 320): Isle of Man Choir, 315 (Mr. J. D. Looney); Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society, 303 (Mr. H. Whittaker); Southport Choir, 300 (Mr. W. Tattersall); Dr. Ely's Choir, Scarborough, 298 (Dr. Thos. Ely); Burnley Co-operative Vocal Union, 300 (Mr. D. Duxbury). The tests were: Choral song, 'Footsteps of angels' (8 parts), J. Holbrooke; Motet, 'Fest und Gedenksprüche' (8 parts), Brahms; Madrigal, 'O fly not, love' (8 parts), Thomas Bateson; Motet, 'Throne of Mercy' (5 parts), Cornelius. Mr. Looney's choir gave a movingly emotional interpretation of Mr. Holbrooke's choral song, and they were almost equally effective in the other pieces. The choir now hold the two chief shields (the other being the Morecambe one) offered in this country. The Manxites have good reason to be proud of their achievements.

There were three bands in the string orchestra class. The test-piece was Elgar's Serenade in E minor. The Nelson Congregational Orchestral Society (Mr. Charles Townsley) gave a specially excellent performance and gained the first prize, the Colne Band (Mr. J. Lascelles Wildman) coming second. In the full orchestra class there were also three entries. The test-piece was Smetana's brilliant overture 'Die verkaufte Braut' ('The bartered bride'—or 'The sold bride,' as one foreign catalogue has it!). A really fine performance by the Huddersfield Permanent Orchestra (Mr. Ernest A. Lodge) secured the first place, Nelson and Colne Societies coming respectively second and third.

The attendance throughout was unprecedented, and the arrangements, under the superintendence of Mr. Lionel H. Franceys, the secretary, Councillor John Collins, and the stewards, gave great satisfaction.

BELLE VUE, MANCHESTER.

October 16.

This annual gathering, the sixth of its kind, continues to be popular. Ten parish church choirs appeared, with the result that St. Anne's, Newton Heath, was first, and St. John the Baptist, Hey, second. Ten mixed-voice choirs competed for the fifty-guinea challenge trophy, the test-pieces being Wilbye's madrigal 'The Lady Oriana' and Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a northern land.' Bradford Vocal Union (Mr. H. Ball) secured first place, and Talke and District Choir (Mr. J. Whewall) the third, Keighley Vocal Union (Mr. W. S. Wilkinson) being second. The judges were Dr. Roland Rogers, Mr. R. H. Wilson, Mr. Walter S. Nesbitt and Mr. Herbert Whittaker.

NOTTINGHAM.

October 18 and 19.

This was the fifth annual competitive festival held in this town. It is now worked by a strong committee and has a wide basis of membership. On the first day there were junior soloists (vocal and instrumental), adult solo vocalists and a class for children's choirs. Nottingham seems to enjoy the services of first-rate choral trainers of children and adults. Four children's choirs sang quite excellently. Mr. Woolley's Old Radford children gained a first place by one mark over the Queen's Walk girls (Miss F. Oswin). The choirs combined to give a very successful performance of Sir Frederick Bridge's cantata 'The lobster's garden party,' under Dr. McNaught, who adjudicated on both days. On the second day the choirs competed, and the first place fell to Eccleshill Baptist Choir (Mr. J. T. Wilcock). They gave highly-refined performances of 'The haven' (Barnby), and 'Shall we go dance?' (Stanford). The chief section, the challenge shield class, drew five first-rate choirs. The tests were 'Take heed, ye shepherd swains' (Pearsall), 'The Serenade' (Brahms), and 'Angel spirits' (Tchaikovsky). The Melton Mowbray choir (Mr. T. W. Warner), the holders of the shield, again retained the trophy. In the male-voice choir section the tests were 'Rataplan' (De Rillé), 'Feasting I watch' (Elgar), and A Franklyn's dogge' (Mackenzie). Ten choirs competed, and the first prize—another challenge shield—fell to the Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. W. Robinson), the Halton Adult Choir (Mr. T. Tollington) coming only one mark behind. Seventeen male-voice quartets competed, with the result that 'The Minster Glee Singers,' from Sheffield, gained the first place. The test-piece was 'Crabbed age and youth' (Stevens). A very successful feature of the festival was the combined singing of the test-pieces under the skilful conductorship of Mr. Charles E. Riley, whose late father founded the festival. The mass of tone and the fluency of the execution made a magnificent effect.

On October 18 a meeting was held at the People's Palace, East London, to discuss the arrangements for holding a competition festival at the Palace in May next. Sir Walter Parratt presided, and there was an influential attendance. A resolution in favour of the holding of a musical festival, to be known as the People's Palace Festival, next year, was unanimously agreed to. It was decided that the area of the festival should be the City of London, Stepney, Limehouse, Spitalfields, Shoreditch, Whitechapel, Poplar, and Bethnal Green. The secretary is Miss Edith Barran, 20, Queensberry Place, S.W.

LYTHAM.—May 28, 29 and 30. Mr. Allon Wilson, Festival Offices, Lytham.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Philharmonic Society's programme announces four subscription concerts and one with Madame Patti as the attraction. The works for the Subscription Concerts include the 'Dream of Gerontius' and a large selection from Wagner's 'Die Meistersinger.' This Society's first miscellaneous concert took place on October 11, and was interesting for at least one fact, viz., that all the artists but one were born in Ireland. The exception was the Russian tenor, Felix Senius, whose magnificent voice and refined singing enchanted the very large and enthusiastic audience. Madame Nora Dane-Valenti (a native of Belfast) was the only lady singer, and her fine soprano voice and tasteful management of it gave great satisfaction. Mr. Charles Manners is always a prime favourite here, and he was never in better voice. Mr. A. Rosenthal (pianoforte) and Miss N. Pedlow (violin) enriched the programme with their excellent selections.

Mr. Phillips has announced a series of subscription concerts, and on October 7 the first was given, with Madame Donalda as principal vocalist, assisted by several other artists. The Queen's College Society announces seven chamber concerts, at which the Edith Robinson, Brodsky and Verbrugghen Quartets will perform.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association, under Mr. Joseph H. Adams's conductorship, performed Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' in the Town Hall, on October 5. The honours fell to the chorus, the choral singing being rich in tone and evenly balanced. The soloists were Madame Laura Taylor, who sang the soprano solos in a clear and sweet voice and with commendable expression, Miss Eunice Fowles, Mr. Clarence Skelton and Mr. William Evans. Mr. C. W. Perkins rendered valuable assistance on the organ.

The Birmingham Choral Union inaugurated its season's concerts at the Town Hall, on October 12, by a praiseworthy performance of Haydn's 'Creation,' the occasion being of more than ordinary interest inasmuch as the present season is the coming of age of this Society. Mr. Thomas Facer, who has been the chorus-master and conductor of the Birmingham Choral Union since its foundation, again conducted with his customary tact and judgment. The chorus is now of large dimensions, special care having been taken to augment the tenors and basses in order to cope with the fine array of sopranos and contraltos. Compactness and fulness characterised the rendering of the choral numbers, and excellent service was rendered by the principals, Madame Annie Norledge, Mr. Ben Ivor and Mr. Peter Dawson. Mr. C. W. Perkins presided at the organ.

An enormous audience was present at the Town Hall on October 7, when Madame Adelina Patti bade 'Farewell' to local audiences, the concert being the first of the Harrison series organized for the current season. The enthusiasm of the audience reached its culminating point when Madame Patti for the last time sang 'Home, sweet home.' Her first appearance in Birmingham was at our Triennial Musical Festival in 1861, a few months after she had set foot on British soil, and ever since she has periodically visited this city and for the last thirty years under the Harrison régime.

The newly-formed Birmingham Orchestral Concerts, of which eight will be given this season, were successfully inaugurated by one of the finest 'Wagner' concerts ever heard here, given in the Town Hall on October 16, under Dr. Hans Richter's conductorship, with a band of 100 performers composed of the Hallé Orchestra and Birmingham musicians. The excerpts given comprised 'Entry of the gods into Walhalla,' Prelude 'Lohengrin,' a 'Faust' overture, introduction to Act 3, 'Die Meistersinger,' 'Ride of the Valkyries,' 'Waldweben' ('Siegfried'), Prelude 'Parsifal,' and 'Kaisermarsch.' The vocalist was Mr. Philip Brozel, who sang the prize song from 'Die Meistersinger,' 'Lohengrin's narration' and the 'Sword song' from 'Siegfried.'

Among the miscellaneous concerts worthy of note I may mention Mr. Max Mossel's drawing room concert given at the Grosvenor Room, Grand Hotel, on October 10, the executants being Mischa Elman (violin), Mrs. Landon Ronald (vocalist) and Mr. Landon Ronald (pianist), and the pianoforte recital given by Miss Annie Wakeman at the Temperance Hall on October 9. A pathetic incident was attached to this recital, inasmuch as the performer received a telegram just before the beginning of the concert, that her master, Herr Reisenauer, had suddenly died whilst touring in the Baltic.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the season by the Society of Instrumentalists was held at the Victoria Rooms on October 5, and there was a crowded attendance. Assisted by local professionals (Mr. Harold Bernard being leader) some favourite compositions were rendered. In consequence of the recent death of Grieg, several of his compositions were included in the scheme, among them the Concerto in A minor, with Miss Mildred Pritchard at the pianoforte. The vocalists were Miss Eveline Gerrish and Miss Gertrude Winchester. Mr. George Riseley directed the concert with his accustomed skill.

There was a crowded congregation at St. Thomas's Church on October 13, when Haydn's 'Creation' was given under the direction of Mr. E. H. Luton. The orchestra was led by Mr. Ernest Lane.

The first recital as a professional player given by Mr. Percy Lewis, violoncellist, on October 15 at the Victoria Rooms, was largely attended. He is a popular member of the Clifton Musical Club, and many members assembled upon the occasion, when he was assisted by Mr. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), the two artists being associated in Rachmaninoff's Sonata in G minor (Op 19). The principal solo performance of Mr. Lewis consisted of Edvard Lalo's Concerto in D minor.

Miss Marjorie Evans, the Bristol child violinist, gave her second recital at the Victoria Rooms on October 17, and afforded gratification to a large audience. Though only thirteen years old, this clever little lady executed some exacting compositions, the performance doing credit to herself and her teacher, Mr. Maurice Alexander. Among the compositions interpreted by Miss Evans were a suite by Tchaikovsky, the same composer's 'Sérénade Melancolique,' and Wieniawski's 'Souvenir de Moscou.' All were rendered with an ease and facility that were marvellous.

Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook (of Bristol), has commenced rehearsals for the season. The works to be performed are Parry's 'L' Allegro ed Il Pensieroso' and 'Pied Piper,' 'Tannhäuser' (selections), and the 'Messiah.'

The members of the Clevedon Philharmonic Society are rehearsing, under Mr. Edward Cook, Costa's 'Eli.'

The opening of the new organ in our cathedral is referred to on p. 722.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Feis-Ceoil (Irish Musical Festival) annual general meeting was held on October 14, in the Mansion House. Mr. Edward Martyn occupied the chair in the unavoidable absence of the Right Hon. The Lord Mayor of Dublin. There is a very small profit on the festival held in May last, which the committee's report states is due more to economical expenditure than to increased receipts.

The awards in the composers' competitions for the next Feis-Ceoil have been published. The prize for a work composed for chorus, solo and orchestra, to Mr. G. Molyneux Palmer, of South Woodford: for a part-song, to Mr. E. Norman Hay, Portstewart, Co. Londonderry, and for an original song to Mr. Carl G. Hardebeck, of Belfast. Sir Charles Stanford adjudicated. The lamented death of Dr. Culwick is referred to on p. 725.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The prospects of the Edinburgh musical season are of a highly promising nature. The twenty-first season of Messrs. Paterson & Sons' orchestral concerts begins on November 11. The services of the Scottish Orchestra, with Dr. Frederic Cowen as conductor, have again been engaged. On those occasions when Dr. Cowen is absent, Dr. Hans Richter, Messrs. Max Fielder, Henri Verbrugghen, or Felix Weingartner (whose second Symphony is to be played) will conduct. At the first of the two choral concerts (December 16) the Edinburgh Choral Union (Mr. T. H. Collinson, conductor) will celebrate its jubilee by a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor, to be given for the first time in Edinburgh, and at the second concert (January 27), Mr. Moonie's choir (conductor, Mr. J. A. Moonie) will give Act II. of 'Tannhäuser,' and scene 5, Act III., of 'Die Meistersinger,' its first concert-performance in Edinburgh.

Messrs. Methven & Simpson announce another series of classical concerts, with an exceptionally brilliant list of artists; and the Sunday Orchestral Concerts (conductor, Mr. Felix Gade) will also be continued, but in order to conform with the new licensing regulations, the proceeds of the concerts will be devoted to charity.

At the first of the University Historical Concerts (November 6) Sir Walter Parratt will give an organ recital. Mr. Kirkhope's choir (conductor, Mr. John Kirkhope) will give a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' and during the season the Edinburgh String Quartet (Messrs. Colin Mackenzie, J. H. Hartley, R. De La Haye and D. Millar Craig) are to give a series of concerts.

Amongst other concerts by local artists already announced are vocal recitals by Mr. Robert Burnett, Miss Marion Dalziel and Madame Sofia Neustadt; pianoforte and violoncello recital by Miss Margaret McLachlan and Mr. D. Millar Craig, and a pianoforte recital by Mr. Paul Della Torre.

Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' and Dr. A. Herbert Brewer's 'Sir Patrick Spens' will be performed by the Gloucester Choral Society at their first concert of the season, on December 17, under Dr. Brewer's direction.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Orchestral Society's prospectus for the present season includes an interesting selection of works to be given under Mr. Granville Bantock's able direction: Glazounow's Symphony No. 1; Vincent D'Indy's 'Max and Thecla,' from 'Wallenstein's Camp'; Havergal Brian's Overture 'For Valour'; and Rutland Boughton's fantasie 'Love and Spring.'

The Societa Armonica, founded in 1847, will give three concerts this season, when the Society will essay some interesting music, including Elgar's 'Froissart' overture, and Tchaikovsky's Fourth and Raff's 'Lenore' symphonies. Pianoforte concertos will be played by Miss Catharine Kips (Schumann's A minor), Miss Lillian Risque (Beethoven's C minor), and Miss D. Ravenscroft is announced to play Saint-Saëns's Violin concerto No. 3, in B minor.

The Philharmonic Society's concerts re-commenced on October 8, when Dr. Cowen conducted a fine performance of Beethoven's seventh Symphony, and M. Raoul Pugno played César Franck's 'Variations for pianoforte and orchestra' and Saint-Saëns's 'Africa.' The vocalist was the Russian tenor, Felix Senius. The choral works in rehearsal are Elgar's 'Apostles,' Schubert's Mass in E flat, and Parry's 'Judith.'

As regards 'The Apostles' special interest attaches to its forthcoming performance by the Welsh Choral Union, for under Mr. Harry Evans's inspiring direction this Society has become a real musical force here. Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch' has been selected for the first concert, and Handel's 'Samson' will subsequently be given. Mr. Harry Evans has also taken in hand the Birkenhead Choral Society. The works announced are 'Samson' and Elgar's 'King Olaf.'

The Methodist Choral Union, under Mr. Ingram, is reviving Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' and will also give the 'Messiah' and 'The Redemption.' The Post Office Choral Society is less enterprising in its choice of Romberg's 'Lay of the bell.' Under Mr. J. W. Appleyard, Sullivan's 'Prodigal Son' will be sung by three Societies, viz., the Rock Ferry Musical Society, the Claughton St. Cecilia and the Waterloo Choral Society. The latter two Societies have also in preparation 'Hymn to Dionysus' (Ernest Walker) and Cowen's Cardiff Festival work 'He giveth His beloved sleep.' Another Cheshire Society, the Wallasey Philharmonic, under Mr. Birkett Musgrove, has selected 'Judas Maccabæus' as well as the 'Messiah,' and the Ormskirk Musical Association is taking Cowen's 'Sleeping Beauty.'

At her annual concert in the Central Hall on October 10 the well-known local contralto, Miss Violet Simpson, was assisted by Madame Sobrino, Mr. Joseph O'Mara and Mr. Dalton Baker in Liza Lehmann's 'Daisy chain.' Her sister, Madame Ivy Simpson, recited, and Mr. Arthur Catterall played violin solos.

The great Pageant choir of 1,000 voices, which was quickly formed out of contingents from thirty-four local Societies, large and small, gave an impressive idea of the choral resources of this great centre, and the specially commissioned music by local composers was intended to be a notable feature of the Pageant proceedings. A performance of the music was given in St. George's Hall on October 19. Owing to exigencies of space only half of the original choir could take part. They had a familiar task in singing the various 'Odes' by local composers, who included Messrs. Burstall, Faulkes, Watson, Stammers, Driffield, Harry Evans, W. A. Roberts, Branscombe, and Rev. Father Burge. The Police Band, conducted by Mr. A. P. Crawley, in addition to the accompaniments, played the processional marches written by Dr. Lyon, Dr. Peace, Mr. England and Mr. Steinforth.

The Schiever Chamber Concerts re-commenced on October 19, when Mr. Schiever, Mr. Alfred Ross, Mr. C. Courvoisier and Mr. Hatton played a string quartet by Joseph Withol in G (Op. 27) for the first time here. It is a melodious and interesting work. Mr. Isidor Cohn co-operated in Brahms's Pianoforte quartet in A (Op. 26), and played Chopin's Fantasia in F minor with musicianly skill.

The concerts recently given by visiting artists on tour include those by Madame Blanche Marchesi, Mr. Busoni, Mr. Backhaus, Mischa Elman and the final farewell of Madame Adelina Patti at the Harrison Concert on October 14.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER AND PRESTON.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MANCHESTER.

The jubilee season of the Hallé concerts commenced on October 17 under brilliant auspices. The Free Trade Hall was crowded; the band, conducted by Dr. Richter, and led by Mr. Rawdon Briggs, played magnificently; and scene and circumstance were alike exhilarating. The programme contained Beethoven's first Symphony, the 'Flying Dutchman' overture, and 'The Ride of the Valkyries' (Wagner), the 'Ballet des Sylphes' and the Hungarian March from Berlioz's 'Faust,' and Richard Strauss's symphonic poem, 'Till Eulenspiegel.'

One outcome of the jubilee commemoration consists in a series of University Extension lectures given by Mr. F. Bonavia, a member of the orchestra, on 'Symphonic Music'; and Mr. T. Whitney Surette is engaged upon another series dealing with the Beethoven symphonies exclusively.

Interesting recitals have been given by the advanced students of Miss Lemmens-Sherrington; by Mr. James Richardson (violoncello); and by Miss Bertha Guthrie (contralto).

Dr. Kendrick Pyne has just completed a period of thirty years of organ recitals at the Manchester Town Hall; and his programme on October 5 contained appropriately a selection from the works of his own master, Dr. S. S. Wesley, as well as a composition by Dr. Pyne's father. The Lord Mayor attended the recital, and spoke in highly laudatory terms of our distinguished city organist.

The Gentlemen's Glee Club held the first meeting of the Club's seventy-seventh season on October 1, Dr. Henry Watson conducting.

The Manchester Vocal Society, also under the direction of Dr. Henry Watson, inaugurated its forty-first season on October 16 with an excellent performance, amongst other selections, of Coleridge-Taylor's 'The Death of Minnehaha.' The singing of the two soloists, Miss E. Shaw and Mr. A. Brown, was specially effective. On October 19 the first concert of the third season of the Promenade Smoking Concerts was given with great success. Grieg's first 'Peer Gynt' suite had a memorial place in the programme. Mr. Frank Sant-Angelo was the solo pianist and Mr. Alfred Heather the vocalist. Mr. Simon Speelman again conducted.

At the first of the Gentlemen's Concerts, on October 21, Dr. Richter conducting, Grieg's 'Aus Holberg's Zeit' was played to his own gracious memory. Faithful to old associations, the concert opened with Mozart—'The Magic Flute' overture; and closed with Haydn—'The Surprise' symphony. The prelude to the third act of 'Die Meistersinger' was exquisitely played. Miss Marie Stuart was the vocalist.

PRESTON.

An excellent performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius' was given in the Public Hall before a crowded audience on September 12. The band of sixty-seven performers was drawn from the Hallé and the Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestras, led by Mr. J. Nicholls. The soloists were Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Frederic Austin. The chorus (200 voices) was supplied by the Southport Festival Choir, which last year secured from Sir Edward Elgar high praise for its singing in the work. Mr. Arthur W. Speed, who shared in the praise, conducted also on this occasion.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The old-established Amateur Vocal Society and the younger Philharmonic Society have united forces this season and are rehearsing Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron,' under the conductor of the former Society, Mr. J. Jeffries. The Northumberland Orchestral Society is rehearsing Beethoven's eighth and Weingartner's second Symphony, in addition to smaller works by Weber, Wagner and Sibelius. The Armstrong College Choral Society has commenced to practise Bach's church cantata 'My spirit was in heaviness,' Schumann's 'Hymn to Night' and S. S. Wesley's 'Ascribe unto the Lord.' The South Shields Choral Society (Mr. M. Fairs) proposes to repeat Gounod's 'Faust' and afterwards introduce Elgar's 'Caractacus' to the town for the first time. Tynemouth Amateur Vocal Society, under the same conductor, will study Mendelssohn's 'Loreley,' Bridge's 'The Flag of England,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Minnehaha' and Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George.' At Darlington the Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. T. Henderson) will first produce 'The Creation' and afterwards Beethoven's fifth Symphony, Sibelius's 'Finlandia' and Elgar's 'The black knight.' At Stockton choral and orchestral forces are also combined in the one society, and will give Dvorák's 'Spectre's bride,' Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' Goring Thomas's 'Sun-worshippers' and Tchaikovsky's 'Capriccio Italien.'

Madame Patti sang her farewell at the first Harrison Concert of the season on October 18. Among other items of the concert should be noticed the charming vocal duets of the Misses Carbone, who selected excerpts from Mozart, Brahms, Tchaikovsky and Purcell.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The North Staffordshire District Choral Society gave a fine performance of Elgar's oratorio 'The Kingdom' in the Victoria Hall, Hanley, on October 15. If the interpretation was not quite without fault it was as near perfection as could be expected. The principals were excellent, the chorus (200 voices) superb, and the band (the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra) was a surprise to those who remembered that it came from a city which has not sufficient confidence in its own musicians to secure them engagements in the great midland festival. The soloists were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Grainger Kerr, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Frederic Austin. The prelude was admirably played, Sir Edward Elgar, who had been most warmly received as he advanced to the rostrum, securing a very satisfactory performance. A fine climax was secured in the section which suggests the denial of Peter and the loneliness of Christ, and at the close the composer-conductor was recalled three times to receive the applause of a delighted audience. The chorus would not leave their seats until the regular conductor of the Society, Mr. James Whewall, had received the ovation to which he was entitled for so admirably training the singers under his direction.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

THE COMING SEASON.

LEEDS.

Though the Leeds Festival (noticed on p. 737) may have a tendency to postpone the commencement of operations, there promises to be a season at least as busy as the average during the coming winter months. At Leeds the amalgamated concerts of the Philharmonic Society and the Subscription series will be six in number. At the two orchestral concerts the Hallé Orchestra, under Dr. Richter, will be heard in a variety of music, including Beethoven's fifth Symphony, Brahms's 'St. Anthony' variations, and a programme to be selected by the subscribers from an ample list given in the prospectus. At these concerts some short choral works will be heard, but the more important ones are to be included in the programmes of the three choral concerts. One of these is the customary Christmas 'Messiah,' but at the other two some less familiar things are promised. The interest excited by Berlioz's 'Requiem' last season has induced the committee to give it again, before the impression has worn out, together with the same composer's Symphonie Fantastique and the 'Benvenuto Cellini' overture. At the third concert Sir Charles Stanford's new 'Stabat Mater' will be given, together with Dr. Wood's 'Dirge for two veterans,' and a setting by Mr. E. B. Farrar of Rossetti's 'Blessed Damozel.' Sir Charles Stanford conducts these concerts.

The remaining concert will be of chamber music, with Miss Nora McKay as violinist, Mr. Percy Grainger as pianist, and Miss Antonia Dolores as vocalist. The Leeds Choral Union promises as its pièce de resistance, Bach's Mass in B minor, whilst at the opening concert Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is to conduct his 'Hiawatha' scenes. 'Elijah' is to supply another programme, and the remaining one will be of a miscellaneous character, consisting chiefly of part-songs. Dr. Coward will be the conductor.

The Municipal Orchestral concerts, under the direction of Mr. Fricker, will be of greatly enhanced interest. They will be ten in number, and the programmes include a great array of compositions by masters old and new, of whom Wagner and Tchaikovsky are the most conspicuous, since their drawing power has been manifested in the past; and it is desirable to make these Saturday evening concerts as popular as they can be without being inartistic. Among the living composers represented are Stanford, Elgar, German, Sibelius and Saint-Saëns. Considering that the subscription for the whole series of ten concerts is only 7*s.* 6*d.*, and that for the best seats, it is obvious that they afford a great opportunity for popularising orchestral music. In the way of chamber music the Leeds Bohemian and Rasch string quartets promise some excellent programmes.

BRADFORD.

The Bradford Subscription Concerts, established in 1865, announce for their forty-third season three orchestral concerts, with the help of Dr. Richter and the Hallé Orchestra, at which it is intended to give the Eroica Symphony, Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony and the 'Heldenleben' of Richard Strauss. There will this year be only one choral concert, at which Dr. Cowen will conduct a series of Wagner pieces, the chorus being supplied by the Festival Choral Society. This Society, of which Dr. Cowen is the conductor, proposes to give, on its own account, three concerts, at which Dr. Walford Davies's 'Everyman,' Sir Hubert Parry's 'Pied Piper,' Berlioz's 'Faust,' Strauss's 'Wanderer's Sturmlied' and a selection from 'Die Meistersinger' will be performed. The first and second of these works were given, with Miss de Angelis, Miss Bradley, Messrs. Lloyd Chandos and Frederic Austin as principals, on October 18, when Dr. Cowen secured a good all-round performance.

The Bradford Old Choral Society will be content to adhere to well-established lines this season, its programme consisting of 'Messiah,' 'Acis and Galatea,' Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Gounod's 'Faust.' Mr. E. J. Pickles is the conductor.

The Bradford Permanent Orchestra, under Mr. Allen Gill, is giving five concerts, the programmes of which include unfamiliar works by Sibelius, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Debussy, Rubinstein and York Bowen, while Mr. Arthur Catterall, the young Manchester violinist, is to play the first movement of Joachim's too-seldom heard Hungarian Concerto.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

The famous chorus of the Huddersfield Society is this season to be heard in two works of exceptional importance,—in addition to the usual performance of the 'Messiah' at Christmas: Bach's B minor Mass, and Elgar's 'The Kingdom,' under Dr. Coward's conductorship. The season began on October 18 with the latter work. The soloists were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Messrs. Coates and Dalton Baker, and some fine choral effects were obtained by Dr. Coward. The venerable Halifax Society is giving, under Mr. English's direction, 'Everyman' and Handel's 'Samson,' as well as the 'Messiah' and 'The Hymn of Praise.' The Halifax Orchestral Society, under Mr. Van Dyk, promises two concerts of the usual type.

The Hull Vocal Society is apparently exercising economy this season, for it is dispensing with an orchestra at two out of its three concerts, the third being a performance of 'Elijah.' The Hull Symphony Orchestra, which made a promising beginning last season, is continuing its work under Mr. Arthur Wallerstein, and intends to give a series of ten afternoon concerts, at which symphonies by Haydn, Schubert, Raff and Tchaikovsky will, with other smaller works, be heard for the first time in Hull.

At Scarborough the Philharmonic Society proposes to give 'The Dream of Gerontius' as well as Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' and Stanford's 'The Revenge.' Dr. Ely is the conductor. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' Brahms's 'German Requiem,' and Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' are the chief works to be given by the Keighley Musical Union, under Mr. J. B. Summerscales; and the Harrogate Choral Society intends to produce the 'Hiawatha' scenes, in addition to Goring Thomas's 'Swan and skylark' and a Christmas 'Messiah' performance. The name of the conductor is omitted from the prospectus, but presumably it will again be Mr. C. L. Naylor, to whose efforts the Society's present efficiency is so largely due.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

Puccini's 'Madama Butterfly' was performed in German, and for the first time at the Royal Opera House, on September 27, under the direction of Leo Blech, with Frl. Farrar in the title-rôle.

COLOGNE.

The first of the series of twelve Gürzenich concerts was devoted to the memory of Joseph Joachim, the programme consisting of the master's Hungarian Violin concerto, the Begräbnisgesang of Brahms, Schumann's D minor Symphony, in addition to Max Reger's Orchestral Variations. There will be a jubilee concert on November 17, on which occasion the programme will conclude—as at the first concert, November 17, 1857—with Beethoven's C minor Symphony. Ferdinand Hiller and Franz Wüllner, former Gürzenich conductors, are to be represented by the Pianoforte concerto in F sharp minor and the Te Deum respectively. At the fourth concert novelties by Sinigaglia, Knorr, Glazounow and Tchaikovsky will be given. On December 17, Beethoven's birthday, the Missa Solemnis and the Eroica Symphony will worthily celebrate the occasion. As Max Bruch, a native of Cologne, will celebrate the seventieth anniversary of his birth on January 6, the programme of the concert on the following day will include his three Mass movements for double choir, third Violin concerto and 'Schön Ellen.'

DRESDEN.

Grieg's Psalms for a cappella choir and baritone solo, Op. 74 (posthumous), were performed in the Kreuzkirche under the direction of music-director Otto Richter, at a concert given in memory of the composer. The Norwegian colony was largely represented on that commemorative occasion.

DÜSSELDORF.

For the winter series of concerts of the Municipal Music Society, Professor Julius Buths will make a new departure in the arrangement of his programmes. Except for the first, fifth and sixth, which are to be devoted to Beethoven (Missa Solemnis), to Strauss (vocal and instrumental works), and to Peter Cornelius's three-act opera 'Gunlöd,' the concerts will illustrate Italian, French and German music of modern composers. The second programme will include Enrico Bossi's lyric scena 'Il cieco,' a Pianoforte concerto by G. Sgambati, a fragment from E. Wolf-Ferrari's 'Vita nuova,' and a new Symphony by G. Martucci. The third is to consist of three new German works: Knorr's 'Marienlegende,' a Symphony by Hermann Bischoff, and a Pianoforte concerto by B. von Hochberg. French music in the fourth programme will be represented by Lalo (Violin concerto), D'Indy (prelude to 'Fervaal'), Debussy (L'Après-midi d'un faune), and Saint-Saëns's third Symphony.

EISENACH.

The Weimar painter Max Martin has made excellent copies of the picture—which is in private hands—containing portraits of Ambrosius, Sebastian and Friedmann Bach. The autograph of the continuo part of the cantata 'Christ unser Herr, zum Jordan kam,' mentioned in last month's issue, was purchased in England in 1889 for the sum of thirty guineas.

FRANKFORT-ON-ODER.

The well-known organ-building firm of W. Sauer recently celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its foundation. The firm has built during that period one thousand organs for various cities, among which may be mentioned Berlin (the Cathedral), Leipzig (the churches of St. Thomas and St. Peter), Cologne (Gurzenich), Wessel (Willibrordi), St. Petersburg, Mannheim and Magdeburg.

LEIPZIG.

During the forthcoming season of the twelve concerts of the Winderstein-Orchestra there will be performed, in addition to standard works, Pfitzner's Serenade 'Christelflein,' Sekles's Serenade for wind instruments, Moor's 'Improvisations on an original theme,' Chadwick's 'Sinfonietta,' and Bossi's 'Intermezzi Goldoniani.'——The season of the Gewandhaus Concerts commenced on October 10. The scheme includes:—Fantastic Symphony (Berlioz), 'Faust' (Liszt), 2nd and 8th Symphonies (Bruckner), Tragic Symphony (Draeseke), 'Istar' (Vincent d'Indy), Variations and Fugue (Reger), &c.

MEININGEN.

A concert was given on October 6 in memory of Josef Joachim and Richard Mühlfeld, under the direction of Prof. Wilhelm Berger.

MILAN.

A festival is to be held here next April to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the Conservatorio, and at the same time a congress of musicians will be held. A committee has been formed which includes among its members Giuseppe Gallignani, the present director of the Conservatorio, Arrigo Boito, Umberto Giordano, Giacomo Puccini, Giulio Ricordi and Edoardo Sonzogno. Concerts are also to be given by the Conservatorio, in conjunction with other musical institutions of the city, to illustrate the history of the institution from its foundation down to the present day.——'La Dorise,' an opera by Galeotti, will shortly be produced at La Scala. Is the composer, perchance, a descendant of the Stephano Galeotti whose violoncello sonatas were published by Walsh about the middle of the eighteenth century?

MUNICH.

An interesting programme has been announced for the season at the Court Theatre, which opened its doors on October 1. A performance is to be given of both parts of Berlioz's 'Les Troyens,' and as novelties here Beer-Walbrunn's 'Don Quixote,' Rezniček's 'Donna Diana,' Debussy's 'Pelléas and Mélisande,' and Schillings's 'Moloch.'

ST. PETERSBURG.

Kapellmeister Wetzler, of the Hamburg Municipal theatre, has been invited to conduct two concerts here in January next, with the orchestra of the Imperial Court Opera.

VIENNA.

The production of Carl Goldmark's new opera 'Das Wintermärchen' is expected to take place at the Hofoper some time in December.

Dvorák's 'Requiem' is announced to be performed on November 24 at Dresden by the Freiwillige Kirchenchor der Martin-Luther-gemeinde, under the direction of Königl. Musikdirektor A. Römhild.

'Set to music' is the title of an illustrated and attractive brochure by Miss Mary Neal, honorary secretary of the Espérance Girls' Club, which meets at 50, Cumberland Market, N.W. In these attractive pages Miss Neal, speaking from personal experience, sets forth the value of English folk-music in dance and song as 'a delightful development of our Club for working girls, boys and children.'

The following additional information concerning the activities of suburban musical societies supplements that given in the October issue.

Brondesbury Musical Society (conductor Mr. Thomas du Deney)—Sullivan's On shore and sea and Festival Te Deum, Macfarren's Christmas and Sterndale Bennett's May Queen.

St. Mary's Choral Society, Islington (conductor Mr. Harold Harold)—Coleridge-Taylor's The death of Minnehaha, Elgar's Light of Life and Spohr's 'God, Thou art great.'

South-West Choral Society (conductor Mr. A. Bond)—Elijah, The death of Minnehaha, Macfarren's May Day, and the Messiah.

East Finchley and Muswell Hill Musical Society (conductor Mr. G. R. Ceiley)—Mendelssohn's Walpurgis night, Coleridge-Taylor's Hiawatha's departure, and the Messiah.

Stroud Green Choral Association (conductor Mr. H. J. Timothy)—Elgar's Banner of St. George, and Elijah.

St. Peter's Choral Society, Brockley (conductor Dr. C. J. Frost)—Elgar's Caractacus, Elijah, Spohr's Last Judgment, Rossini's Stabat Mater and Cowen's Rose Maiden.

Lewisham Choral Society (conductor Mr. Frank Idle)—Elgar's King Olaf and Parry's Judith.

Ealing Choral and Orchestral Society (conductor Mr. J. Cliffe Forrester)—Schumann's Paradise and the Peri, Cowen's John Gilpin, Dvorák's Stabat Mater and Mozart's Requiem.

New Philharmonic Society of Richmond (conductor Mr. James Brown) — Hiawatha's Wedding-feast, Schumann's Gipsy life, Schubert's Rosamunde (selection), and Elgar's Dream of Gerontius and From the Bavarian Highlands.

Bromley Choral Society (conductor Mr. F. Fertel)—Elgar's Banner of St. George, Brahms's Song of Destiny, and the Messiah. The Society referred to under this title in our last issue should have been the Bromley Musical Society, conducted by Mr. F. Lewis Thomas.

The Choral Unions formed from the Evening Continuation School Singing Classes in London are now at work at their concert programmes for the season. The metropolitan area is mapped out into seven districts, each with its own independent organization and programme. Besides numerous choruses and part-songs, the following works are being rehearsed: 'The death of Minnehaha' (S. Coleridge-Taylor), in two centres; Festival Te Deum (Sullivan), 'St. Paul' (Mendelssohn), in two centres; 'Elijah,' second part (Mendelssohn), 'Ballad of the Clampherdown' (Bridge), 'The gate of life' (Leoni), 'The Banner of St. George' (Elgar) and 'The Inchcape Rock' (Bridge). The conductors are Mr. Allen Gill, Mr. G. Day Winter, Mr. George Lane, Mr. W. T. Oake, Mr. A. G. Gibbs, Mr. H. P. Dakin and Mr. Charles Metcalf.

The Norwich Philharmonic Society (conductor, Dr. F. Bates) will give four concerts (two afternoon and two evening) during the season, commencing on December 12. The programmes will include 'The death of Minnehaha,' a concert-recital of the 'Flying Dutchman,' Beethoven's Symphony, No. 7, in A, and Schumann's in B flat, Bizet's 'L'Arlesienne' suite, Dvorák's Slavonic dances, and Sibelius's symphonic poem 'Findlandia.'

The prospectus of the thirteenth season (1907-8) of symphony and classical concerts given by the Bournemouth Municipal Orchestra shows the same enterprise which characterizes these music-makings under the energetic direction of Mr. Dan Godfrey. In the comprehensive list of works to be performed it is gratifying to find that British composers, as heretofore, occupy no inconsiderable space.

The Leicester New Musical Society's arrangements for next season include 'Elijah,' 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and 'Death of Minnehaha' and Sir Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The conductor is Mr. Charles Hancock.

Graun's 'Passion' and Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' are announced for performance by the Cheltenham Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. C. J. Phillips.

Mr. James Friskin, one of the late Mr. Dannreuther's most gifted pupils at the Royal College of Music, has been giving pianoforte recitals with much acceptance at Glasgow and St. Leonards-on-Sea. His programmes have included compositions by Scarlatti, Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Brahms and Debussy, while the younger school of British composers has been represented by Mr. Frank Bridge, the late W. Y. Hurlstone and Mr. Friskin himself.

Mr. Percy Grainger took part in the Grieg Memorial Concert at Copenhagen. At this concert, conducted by Svendsen, Queen Alexandra, the King and Queen of Denmark, King George of Greece, the Empress Dagmar, and the grand Duke Michael of Russia were present, as was also Madame Grieg. There was a crowded audience, and Mr. Grainger had a very warm reception for his performance of Grieg's Pianoforte concerto.

Mr. John Francis Barnett's 'Musical reminiscences and impressions,' which appeared last year, will shortly be published in New York. Mr. Barnett is now engaged on a new cantata, the vocal score of which he has just completed.

Major W. R. J. McLean has been appointed conductor of the Fulham and District Choral Society.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

ABERDEEN.—The musical season opened auspiciously on October 15 with the initial concert of the Aberdeen Choral Union's subscription series. The artists were Madame Ada Crossley, Miss Evangeline Florence, Mr. John Harrison, Mr. Hamilton Earle and Mr. Santley; Mr. Leon Sametini, Mr. Percy Grainger and Mr. J. Liddle, accompanist. The choir sang the epilogue chorus 'Britons, alert' from Elgar's 'Caractacus,' and, with Mr. Harrison, Purcell's 'Come, if you dare,' under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Collingwood. In addition to the annual performance of the 'Messiah,' the scheme includes two concerts by the Scottish Orchestra and a first performance locally of Brahms's 'Requiem.' Mr. Percy Harrison's season also embraces four concerts, the first of which will be given on December 10. His chief attraction will be a visit of the London Symphony Orchestra in March. Mr. Julian Rosetti, a local professor of music, announces his annual series of chamber concerts, three in number.

CAPE TOWN.—The annual festival of the combined choral societies of Cape Town and suburbs took place early in September, when the chief compositions in the programme were Elgar's 'King Olaf,' Berlioz's 'Faust,' and Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' Both choir and orchestra did excellent service throughout the festival, reflecting great credit on the alert and skilful training of Dr. Barrow Dowling, who conducted. The principal solo vocalists were Miss Perceval Allen, Mrs. Griffith Vincent, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Albert Archdeacon.

CHRISTCHURCH (N.Z.).—The second subscription concert of the Musical Union took place at His Majesty's Theatre on August 28. The programme included Elgar's 'Mazurka,' Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Weber's Concertino for clarinet and orchestra (solo, Mr. D. Sinclair), Wieniawski's Violin concerto (solo, Mr. S. R. White) and German's Three Dances from the 'Henry VIII.' music. Dr. J. C. Bradshaw conducted.

GRAHAMSTOWN (S. AFRICA). — The Grahamstown musical festival, organized by Mr. W. Deane, organist of the cathedral, took place on July 31 and August 2 last, when excellent performances were given of the 'Messiah' and 'Elijah.' The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Lulie Allum, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Albert Archdeacon. The chorus and orchestra numbered 170. Mr. Deane conducted. It is hoped that a festival will take place annually. Arrangements are already being made for next year, when works by British composers will be included in the programme.

INVERCARGILL (N.Z.)—The Musical Union gave a concert at the Municipal Theatre on August 27, the feature of which was the unaccompanied singing by the choir under the direction of Mr. Charles Gray. The selection included Elgar's 'The swan' and 'Fly, singing bird' (ladies' voices), and 'As torrents in summer,' Cowen's 'Spring' and 'Rowing homeward,' Faning's 'Moonlight,' Pinsuti's 'Spring song' and 'Pearsall's 'Who shall win my lady fair?' Accompanied by the orchestra the choir also sang 'It comes from the misty ages' from Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' and the bridal chorus from 'Lohengrin.'

LEAMINGTON.—An Elgar Festival is announced to be given in the Winter Hall on November 21, when the following compositions by Sir Edward Elgar are to be performed: 'The Black Knight,' overture 'Froissart,' the 'Sea Pictures' and the 'Imperial March.' The conductor will be Mr. E. Roberts West.

ST. HELENS.—'The Martyrs,' a cantata for male voices and orchestra, by J. H. Maunder, was given by the St. Helens Glee Club, at the first of their concerts of the season, on October 15. The choir sang remarkably well, the tone being sonorous and the attack sure. Mr. Charles Tree, Master Joseph Green and Mr. J. E. Walmsley were the solo vocalists. In the second part of the concert the St. Helens Vocal Quintet, which did so well at the recent Blackpool festival, repeated the work they sang there—Cornelius's 'The hero's rest.' Dr. Siddall conducted.

Answers to Correspondents.

D. H.—Hans Seeling was born in 1828, at Prague, and died there May 26, 1862. On account of feeble health he went to Italy in 1852; four years later to Constantinople, Syria, and Greece. He returned to Italy in 1857; was at Paris in 1859, and then resided in Germany. An excellent pianist, Seeling possessed a masterly technique combined with sincere feeling and natural expression, to which were added great elegance and refinement. He composed Nocturnes, an Idyl, two poems, twelve concert studies and 'Memoirs of an artist,' Nos. 1 to 10 (Op. 13), all for pianoforte.

SIGNIA.—If, as you say, high-class music has in the past bewildered and fatigued you and that you have not had the time to make a study of it, the chances of adding to your equipment that of a musical critic would seem to be somewhat doubtful; but as you appear to have 'changed in this respect,' the outlook is more promising for qualifying as a musical critic. You would need, however, to enlarge your knowledge beyond knowing 'the greater part of Tannhäuser, Lohengrin, Faust, and one or two other operas,' as your operations would cover a wider field than that known as operatic.

F. A. F.—Anthems of moderate difficulty, for male voices (T.T.B.B.), are 'Jesu, our only hope of heaven' (Laurent de Rillé) and 'The Word went forth' (Mendelssohn) —these are published in both notations; also 'For ever blessed' and 'The righteous living' (Mendelssohn). 'As the hart pants' (Gounod), 'O Lord God of my salvation' (Ford), and 'Seek Him that maketh the seven stars' (Elgar)—these are obtainable in staff notation only.

R. T. H. B.—More than one correspondent has written stating that Pestal (not Pastol) is a Polish air said to have been written by a Polish nobleman when in prison—its bars written behind the bars which prevented his freedom. There were several arrangements, one being for concertina and pianoforte. The melody was adapted to words beginning 'Rest, thou troubled heart.'

INQUIRER.—The nom de plume 'Drinkwater Hard' is one of the comical designations adopted by the late Mr. J. W. Davison or one of his journalistic cronies. On one occasion it became 'Drinkwhisky Hard'! As there is 'many a slip between the cup and the lip,' so, as doubtless in this case, there may be a similar accident between the thought and the pen.

Sailor.—You seem to have a delicate and highly sensitive skin. The irritation and soreness are doubtless caused by the mouthpiece of your clarinet. If, as is probable, it is of cocus wood, an ebonite mouthpiece is recommended. Send your instrument to Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co., Berners Street, for the necessary alteration, if our surmise is correct.

Legato.—Liszt's Rhapsody No. 2, in D minor and G major may be played at about the following rates of speed: Andante ($\frac{4}{4}$), crotchet = 120; Andante maestoso ($\frac{2}{4}$), crotchet = 88; Vivace ($\frac{2}{4}$) crotchet = 144. Beethoven's 'Coriolan' overture, minim = 100. Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture, crotchet = 104.

I. A.—You are quite right, there are two English versions of the song 'All souls' day,' by Eduard Lassen. The earlier one beginning 'Lay by my side' was originally published by Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co. The music would be the same in both editions.

C. T.—By all means compete. We will endeavour to find out the date of the Eisteddfod and let you know. May all success attend your efforts.

F. B.—In all cases treat the small notes as if they were printed in the ordinary way; thereby the quaver will take half the crotchet that follows it, the semiquaver half its succeeding quaver. We are returning your manuscript marked as above.

Minim.—(1) The difference between an alto and a contralto is this: the former is a singer of the sterner, the latter of the gentler, sex. (2) There is not much scope for work as a copyist of music, but an advertisement might be efficacious in obtaining employment.

Organum.—Professor Niecks includes Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal' in his survey of 'Programme Music.' He says it deserves special notice because of the recitation element in the work. This, and its accompanying music, speaks for itself.

A. J. S.—(1) There is a 'Life' of Gounod by Marie Anne de Bovet, published by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. in 1891. (2) Gounod's 'Quand tu chantes,' in three different keys and with French and English words, can be obtained of Messrs. Novello.

H. M. M.—For 'some good marches to be played on the pianoforte while about 350 girls march out of a hall after a prize distribution,' see School Marches, Books 1 and 2, published by Messrs. Novello.

L. M. G.—(1) We cannot trace the march you inquire about. Have you noted it correctly? Sullivan's anthem 'Sing, O heavens' is published by Messrs. Boosey & Co.

S. E.—Read Sir Hubert Parry's 'Studies of great composers.' Stainer's 'Harmony' primer is a good book wherewith to commence the study of harmony.

T. D.—Yes, there is a 'fair demand for instrumentalists,' providing they are efficient. You might very well take up the oboe or clarinet.

W. H. W.—You can purchase dumb keyboards of limited compass for the purpose of finger exercises. The system you mention is favourably spoken of.

D. K. B.—In order to obtain information as to the acting rights in the nine operas you mention, you had better apply to the English publishers of each work.

A. W.—The original English publishers of Stephen Heller's Studies are Messrs. Ashdown. Henselt's Studies can be obtained of various publishers.

Anxious.—See Miss Oliveria Prescott's book entitled 'About music and what it is made of' (Methuen & Co.).

H. I. F.—Have you tried Wilhelmj and Brown's 'Modern School for the violin'?

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W., NOT LATER than Thursday, November 21.

THE TEN VIRGINS
A SACRED CANTATA
FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

NEWCASTLE JOURNAL.

Will be heartily welcomed by all who love the art of music.

LONDON DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen.

LIVERPOOL DAILY COURIER.

Must attain popularity wherever heard, and will assuredly be placed among the foremost compositions of this kind by present-day writers . . . treated in a thoroughly artistic manner . . . a perfect wealth of melody and striking individuality of style.

NEWCASTLE DAILY JOURNAL.

Works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers —the "Holy City," "Joan of Arc," and "The Ten Virgins."

LEAMINGTON CHRONICLE.

The choral writing in "The Ten Virgins" is alone something to be thankful for, and, as we have intimated, it is only one of the many musical virtues of the Cantata.

THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Bow and Bromley Institute Choir.—The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. If the verdict of a miscellaneous audience, that could have no possible reason for being favourably prejudiced, is of any account in estimating the merit of a new work, a career that will rival that of the same composer's "Holy City" may be predicted for "The Ten Virgins." That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole.

NEWCASTLE DAILY LEADER.

The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than "Joan of Arc." Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

That "The Ten Virgins" is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite "Holy City" we have no doubt whatever. Mr. Gaul has aimed at fine outline and telling colouring, and all that he has aimed at he has achieved.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; Cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, 5s. per 100.

STAFF EDITION. THIRTY-FIFTH THOUSAND.

OPINIONS OF THE LONDON AND PROVINCIAL PRESS
ON
A. R. GAUL'S CANTATA
"JOAN OF ARC"
PRODUCED WITH GREAT SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ATHENÆUM.
"An advance on the earlier work, 'The Holy City.' . . . The choruses are written with much knowledge of effect, and an 'Ave Maria' and the final chorus of the 'Spirit Voices' may be named as really charming."

LONDON FIGARO.
"Bound to be widely taken up, doubtless to attain which end the composer has employed but three soloists, and has given a more than usually large degree of importance to the choral work. . . . The 'Ave Maria' is singularly beautiful."

DAILY NEWS.
"Obviously written with a special view to the requirements of choral societies, and likely to become highly popular."

REFEREE.
"Calculated to delight performers and listeners, being full of melody and taking effects."

WESTERN TIMES.
"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"

THE SHIELDS DAILY NEWS.
"One of the most delightful concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."

LEAMINGTON SPA COURIER.
"St. Paul's Choral Society brought their season to a close with a performance in the Town Hall of 'Joan of Arc.' The cantata, both in verse and music, is essentially fascinating and contains all the elements necessary to make it one of the standard works for performance by musical societies, the choral writing and orchestration being simply charming."

TEWKESBURY REGISTER.
"The Conductor of the Philharmonic Society is to be congratulated on his selection of a Cantata possessing such attractive music as that which goes to make 'Joan of Arc' what it undoubtedly is—viz., the best work I remember having heard in Tewkesbury."

NORWICH DAILY PRESS.
"By the invitation of the Head Mistress of the High School, a large company assembled to hear a performance of 'Joan of Arc.' There is probably no living English composer who has obtained more popularity with provincial choral societies than Mr. A. R. Gaul. His sacred cantata, 'The Holy City,' is more extensively known than any other modern English composition of a similar character, and 'Joan of Arc' has already been successfully performed in London and many of the largest provincial towns. Mr. Gaul's writing is characterised by the most perfectly neat workmanship and spontaneity, combined with a never-failing resource of melodic invention."

CRYSTAL PALACE REPORTER.
"The music throughout is of a very high order, and full of beauty and interest, so much so that it is hardly possible to single out any numbers for special praise. The various movements are widely contrasted in style, in some considerable dramatic power being manifest, but all overflow with melody, and there is a happy absence of the restlessness of tonality which disfigures so many modern works. The vocal parts, whether for soli or chorus, are written within the range of average vocalists, and are therefore grateful alike to the singers and hearers. The cantata is a credit to English art, . . . one of the most interesting works yet given by the Anerley Society."

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.
"Will further enhance the reputation of the composer of 'The Holy City,' as a writer of bright, melodious, attractive, and musicianly Cantatas."

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON HERALD.
"In 'Joan of Arc,' particularly in the latter part, there are some exquisite passages—some charming descriptive pieces. The lovely 'Hark! thy spirit voices call,' carried one away in the spirit into veritable realms of dreamland, and the chorus, 'Fret not thyself to-day, is picturesquely beautiful, graceful, and effective."

THE WESTERN NEWS.
"Few cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall last evening."

THE WESTERN DAILY MERCURY.
"Proved an unqualified success. . . . the bulk of the Cantata is allotted to the chorus. In fact, the choir of this Association has seldom had such a good opportunity for giving their sterling worth a good display."

LEEDS MERCURY.
"Drew forth enthusiastic plaudits. . . . Of the Cantata, as interpreted last evening (in the Town Hall, Leeds, with a band and chorus of 250 performers), it is impossible to speak in terms of anything but praise. Solos and choruses alike are full of melody, while the orchestration is descriptive to a degree. For each of the principal vocalists there is one song that singles itself out, and each received an encore."

HERTS AND CAMBRIDGE REPORTER.
"The theme is one of the most romantic in the pages of history. In the earlier and poetic passages there is something of the charm of Sir Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The last chorus is set to music which would be not unworthy of the great masters."

LIVERPOOL COURIER.
"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."

HUDDERSFIELD EXAMINER.
"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE DAILY CHRONICLE.
"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."

BRADFORD OBSERVER.
"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY TIMES.
"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.
"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.
"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form. . . . A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.
"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."

THE TIMES.

That Sir Hubert Parry would come triumphantly through the various difficulties of so congenial a task was only to be expected: but even his most ardent admirers can hardly have expected to find such richness, spontaneity, and genius of invention, or so much interest in the disposal and treatment of the vocal and instrumental forces. The piece is not scored with that love of strange effects that we know so well in modern days, and the orchestration is even dull here and there; but the far higher points of thematic invention and development are here shown in perfection. . . . The chorus, "To us is the glory of beauty revealed," is one of those great joyful choral utterances of which the composer has the secret, and the imperial chorus that follows it is in strong and admirable contrast. . . . The soprano, after the decline of Rome has been referred to in a lovely chorus, has an exquisite meditative solo, "So near to perfect joy and peace," which leads into the ferocious priestly utterance, set to a familiar "intonation" of ecclesiastical music, developed into an extraordinarily effective little movement. The male chorus sing this and the disputing "This is mine! Out on thee!" which is appropriately treated in close imitation. From the Dreamer's perception of the wakening of the "certainties" until the end we have a noble series of choral and solo passages, which find a grand climax in the splendid theme, "We praise the men of the days long gone," which is in all ways worthy of Parry at his very best. . . . At the end the applause was loud and long, for the impression made by the beautiful composition was quite extraordinary.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The text it is which first arrests attention, not by anything special in the making of its irregular unrhymed verse, but by the force and vigour of its language, the propriety, without mistiness or extravagance, of its expression, and the bold manner in which great social issues are introduced as proper themes for musical treatment. Here, as it seems to me, the composer has entered upon a course untrodden alike by forerunners and contemporaries. . . . I can pay the music the highest compliment in my power by saying, as I now do with all absolute sincerity, that, following closely the course of the work with almost absorption in its great argument, I was not once conscious of any break in the absolute unity which should exist between words and music. It struck me as a case of the poet-musician whose double task is yet but one. Sir Hubert, as far as I could discern, never fell below the height of his lofty theme. Grave and dignified, solemn, when the great tragedy of humanity passed before us, glowing amid anticipations of better days, and triumphant in the faith of ultimate deliverance, the "Vision of Life" seemed as complete on its musical as on its poetic side, and it is a great work altogether, by the first production of which this festival has secured a claim upon the recollection.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

In this work the principal of the Royal College of Music comes before the public in the dual capacity of composer and poet, for he has written the poem that he has set to such impressive strains. The theme he has selected—that of the ceaseless march of humanity—is treated in a philosophical style in verses which are cleverly fashioned and neatly turned, and lead the casual reader to ponder over their sublime suggestiveness. . . . The music throughout possesses a fascinating attractiveness, and an interest which grips the attention of the earnest listener. Fine, bold, melodic phrases, picturesque and skilful orchestration, and robust and effective choruses form the backbone of this majestic composition, in which, by the way, there is not a single dull passage. "The Vision of Life" is a masterpiece, and as such it was regarded by this evening's audience, who at the close most enthusiastically congratulated the popular composer,

MORNING POST.

The extraordinary mastery and command of resource which Sir Hubert Parry has displayed so often have not deserted him, and the present work is well worthy of ranking by the side of many of his other compositions of similar character. . . . The work, which is a splendid example of contrapuntal writing, contains many passages of lofty inspiration, among which may be singled out the solo for the Spirit of the Vision, "So near to perfect joy and peace."

TRIBUNE.

Sir Hubert Parry's "The Vision of Life" proved to be so magnificent a poem in music, so splendid in beauty, strength, and stateliness, that I should not be surprised were it hereafter to be accounted the masterpiece among the many noble works to which the genius of our foremost British composer has given birth. Sir Hubert is the author of the words for which he has found this wonderfully expressive music, and his libretto, sombre and difficult as it may seem on first acquaintance, rises in several places to a high degree of eloquence. . . . The music seems to have been generated in the composer's heart and head simultaneously with the poetry to which it is wedded. It is quite different in kind from the music by which a composer tries to illustrate the thought of another. If when reading Sir Hubert's poem some of it seemed obscure, all difficulty vanished when the hard places were explained by the music. Such music is more than merely illustrative—it is illuminating; and it is this characteristic of "The Vision of Life" which seems to me to make it worthy of the superlative epithets which I have used. . . . It was finely sung, and the reward given to the composer by the delighted choir and the audience at its conclusion was a scene of enthusiasm such as festival halls have rarely known.

MORNING LEADER.

The reception of the work was wildly enthusiastic, and, indeed, applause frequently interrupted its course. . . . The modern spirit which pervades the whole is very remarkable, the scoring in particular—with an occasional richness of colouring—is surprising to those who know Parry's work best. The chief strength of this work is, of course, in the choric writing, and this, too, may be described as wholly modern in feeling. The strength of the part beginning "To us is the glory of beauty revealed," the dramatic force and picturesque power of those describing the rule of Pride and the madness of Greed respectively are highly effective; while Parry nearly approaches the massive grandeur of the "Blest Pair of Sirens" in the chorus, "Hearken, O Brother, to the music of the song of the world."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The idea is a fine one and eminently suitable for that peculiarly reflective style of musical composition which is one of Sir Hubert Parry's strong points. The text has been written by the composer, and is full of finely expressed phrases in a very free rhythm of language, which naturally makes for a corresponding freedom in the musical setting.... To this text Sir Hubert Parry has written some very fine music. The choruses especially are remarkable for their variety, freedom of treatment, and breadth of expression. . . . The work may be accepted, in fact, as one of the most powerful that have yet come from the composer's pen. A point worth mentioning is the splendid way in which the music grows in intensity of feeling as the idea of the text is developed.

ATHENÆUM.

To single out this or that number for praise would spoil the impression which we wish to give, viz., that the music as a whole reflects and intensifies the spirit of the words; the solo portions, however, particularly struck us by their freshness and romantic feeling.

HE GIVETH HIS BELOVED SLEEP

FOR

CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE POEM WRITTEN BY

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 6d.
Full Score and Wind parts, MS.; String parts, 2s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

The composer has exactly caught the quiet meditative style of the poet, and has written a work of great sincerity and beauty. His occasional departures from the fairy realm where he has reigned so long and so happily have seldom been so completely successful as on this occasion; the theme of the refrain is so cleverly worked that the reiteration is never once felt to be redundant.

TELEGRAPH.

The most touching and effective points of the little work are those in which the composer by varied treatment of his main theme, by impressive and often very beautiful harmonic changes, and by varying forms of accompaniment avoids monotony. The piece, as a whole, is one for feeling rather than analysis, and the feeling in it is strong, music and words being quite in accord. That the hymn, for so it might in a popular sense be called, will enjoy extensive favour seems more than likely.

STANDARD.

Dr. Cowen's thoroughly lyrical and poetical setting of Mrs. Browning's lines "He giveth His beloved sleep" stands out as thoroughly characteristic. Interpreted with consummate art by Madame Kirkby Lunn, its quiet, tasteful expression formed at least a welcome change to the storm and strife of the greater part of modern music, whether native or alien. The solo part is frankly a song, and as music it is an achievement simply because it keeps to one definite idea of vocal expression. Suitable variety is brought about by use of the chorus as a species of accompaniment, while modernity is satisfied by the cleverly constructed but invariably clear orchestral background, in which the "leading tune" process is quite legitimately employed. Simple and spontaneous, Dr. Cowen's straightforward work found ample favour.

MORNING POST.

The spirit of the poem has been most felicitously caught by the composer, whose work may be described as a veritable gem. Beautiful in its simplicity and inexpressibly touching, music such as this goes straight to the heart. No striving after effect mars its appeal. One welcomes with delight a work of such pure beauty, so tender and melodious.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

This work admirably reflects the spirit of the verses. Throughout it is dreamy, peaceful, delicate, and fanciful, and its melodies are haunting, as might be expected from a man who so many years ago won fame as a song composer. Specially pleasing is Dr. Cowen's treatment of the Psalmist's words, "He giveth His beloved sleep," which provided the title to his cantata, this refrain being singularly effective and felicitous. Dr. Cowen seldom writes difficult music, and hence the immense popularity of his compositions, large and small, with the numerous choral societies spread all over the kingdom. This latest production consequently is assured of similar success, and deservedly so.

MORNING LEADER.

It is a very melodious and grateful piece of vocal writing, and reflects the tender, devotional spirit of the poem very imaginatively. In the passages beginning "Sleep soft, beloved, we sometimes say," and "His dews drop mutely," there are particularly happy touches.

ATHENÆUM.

Dr. Cowen has here achieved the difficult task of being thoroughly simple without being commonplace. The delicate music, full of feeling, exactly reflects the spirit of the words.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Dr. Cowen's setting of "He giveth His beloved sleep," though not one of his most pretentious efforts, may assuredly be reckoned among his most charming works. The reason of its charm lies entirely in its simple sincerity. The tender spirit of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's poem, regretful, yet not with the sorrow of those who have no hope, is admirably caught. There is no sense of any striving for mere effectiveness, but the effects are secured by the simple directness with which the suggestions of the poem are translated into music. . . . Certainly it may be doubted if he has ever gone so deeply into the emotional possibilities of a poem as he has in this case, and I think this composition must for that reason rank very high among his works. The close is really touching in its quiet expressiveness.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The composer would be expected, as a matter of course, to match with his art the pathos of Mrs. Browning's lines. That he has succeeded in doing so is a matter for sincere congratulation. The new cantata—or poem, as it is called by its composer—was well given and well received.

SIR PATRICK SPENS

BALLAD

FOR

BARITONE SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.
Full Score and Wind parts, MS.; String parts, 6s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

It is broad and manly music, the pattern of which is fairly familiar by this time, but it is by no means conventional or wanting in originality. It made a good impression, and is sure to be in great request with competent choral societies.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Dr. Brewer has now given it all the advantage of modern resources, and lifted it into a higher sphere. It thus makes a capital piece for choral societies, and, I expect, will run at equal pace with Stanford's "Revenge," the prototype of its order.

STANDARD.

This fine old specimen of a folk-tale is treated by the composer in decidedly dramatic fashion, and his music, just sufficiently Scottish to be characteristic of the place and period, is sincere and spontaneous. Without being too heavily scored, the orchestral part is full of colour, and the chorus have some vivacious and sonorous passages, to which they gave most spirited effect.

MORNING POST.

Mr. Herbert Brewer's setting of the old Scotch ballad is a work of sterling merit. The music is virile and straightforward in character. The composer has something to say, and knows how to express his thoughts clearly and forcibly. His work possesses real interest. It is admirably written, and the success it achieved was fully justified.

TRIBUNE.

The other novelty of the evening was "Sir Patrick Spens," by Dr. Brewer, the accomplished organist of Gloucester Cathedral. This is admirable in its power of vivid descriptive writing. Dr. Brewer tells the tale with wholesome directness, and he may justly be congratulated on his successful treatment of the old song.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

In the evening, the second new cantata, Dr. Herbert Brewer's setting of the Scottish poem, "Sir Patrick Spens," received a cordial welcome. The story of the gallant mariner, "the best sailor that ever sailed the sea," who was sent to Norway to bring home a Royal lady, and whose ill-fated vessel foundered forty miles off Aberdeen, naturally lends itself to stirring descriptive music, and it must be acknowledged that Dr. Brewer has been very successful in catching the spirit of the old poem. There is a go and brightness, a snap about his music which is certain to be appreciated by that large public that enjoys cantatas.

DAILY MAIL.

This is a genuinely inspired piece of work, full of keenly humorous touches.

MORNING LEADER.

It is very sound, healthy music, that goes with a swing from start to finish. It has a very subtle fancy, but is not devoid of picturesqueness and, above all, it shows a good knowledge of the chorus, and choral societies should welcome it.

OBSERVER.

Dr. Herbert Brewer's "Sir Patrick Spens," a choral ballad of a natural and dramatic kind, contains some of the strongest and most individual music of this composer. It has the merit of being short and direct, and the choir sang it with delightful freshness and spirit. Although slight in form, it has a certain spontaneity and feeling for choral writing that will, in all probability keep it alive.

ATHENÆUM.

Dr. Brewer's setting of the old ballad of "Sir Patrick Spens" contains good workmanship, and is effectively written for the voices.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The composer has been very successful in telling the story clearly, and he has managed to give something of the simple ballad quality to his melodies, and to fit them into a picturesque and appropriate background. Local colour is not forgotten, and the storm that wrecks Sir Patrick's ship received a vigorous, but not unmusical, commentary. Altogether it is a work which, without revealing any marked individuality, is exceedingly effective and of well-sustained interest, showing a very considerable descriptive power, and in vigour it may be said to go farther than any of his previous works.

THE LOVE THAT CASTETH OUT FEAR

SINFONIA SACRA

FOR CONTRALTO AND BASS SOLI, SEMI-CHORUS, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

VOCAL SCORE, PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

Full Score and Wind Parts. MS. String Parts, 11s.

THE TIMES.

The composer is always happy in his choice of subjects, and the words, when not taken from the Bible, are always vigorous, straightforward, and marked by a literary sense and such individuality as make it inevitable to guess that the composer is his own librettist. . . . . "The Love that casteth out Fear" is styled a "sinfonia sacra," and may perhaps be described as a meditation on Divine love, as contrasted with the vanity of human life, and illustrated in the lives of Moses, David, and St. Peter. . . . The music set to this poem is of Sir Hubert Parry's very best; the themes which stand in the prelude for Fear and Love are finely contrasted, and developed with the utmost skill; the parts for the mystic semi-chorus are always solemn and simple in form, and both solo parts are grateful to the singers and pre-eminently expressive, while the composer's mastery of accentuation is as clear in this as in anything he has written. The full choruses are splendidly worked, and that which closes the first part, "He is full of compassion," &c., and the shorter numbers for full choir in the second part, are masterly in conception and design. . . . The work, conducted by the composer, made a profound impression.

It is like everything of the highest class—strong meat for the casual listener to music—for it can only be understood and enjoyed after more careful study than most amateurs desire to give to it. Never has Sir Hubert Parry used the chorus with nobler effect; and from beginning to end it is full of inspired moments, while the grandeur and depth of the whole conception make it unique in modern music.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Sir Hubert's previous compositions have been for the most part works of action, but in his new creation, "The Love that casteth out Fear," he is reflective and didactic. There is no dramatic character, and hardly a situation suggestive of drama here. Thus we have a great change—a change, as I think, for the better—resulting in a work which must be counted among the best from the composer's pen. . . . There is much of interest in the working out of the scheme, particularly in the employment of a semi-chorus, which, hidden from the view of the audience, takes, so to speak, the higher ground in the argument, now uttering the Divine words, and always enforcing the lesson suggested in the title of the work. The full chorus stands on a lower plane, representing the human side of the great question with its hopes and fears. . . . Without disparaging the value of the solos and the orchestral part, it may justly be said that Sir Hubert Parry has lavished the best of his skill upon the music of the unseen chorus, much of which is of rare beauty and charm. But all the concerted sections are in the composer's best manner. They are eminently sane in thought and expression; they are well developed and free from any form of exaggeration or forced effect, while by no means conventional. As a matter of fact, these choruses may be taken as a model for the oratorio of the immediate future, when the didactic rather than the dramatic form is employed. . . . "The Love that casteth out Fear" is a notable addition to the treasures of English music.

I have already had to speak of the work, and the hearing of yesterday was my third, if not my fourth, since the Sacred Symphony first challenged criticism. I fear, therefore, that all I have to say about it has already been said, and there remains only to put on record a genuinely fine performance, conducted by the composer and supported by all the resources of a great festival. Sir Hubert's music gained much in effect from the enlarged means at his command. The immense solidity and resonance of chorus and orchestra—never abused, let me say—brought out a force of thought not previously made obvious.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The most brilliant section is undoubtedly the musical picture illustrating, in subdued tonal effects, the betrayal of the Saviour by Peter. This held the undivided attention of the congregation yesterday, and, judging from comments subsequently heard, was the most attractive, as it was the most dramatic, portion of the work.

MORNING POST.

The special charm of the work does not lie, however, so much in any skill which is displayed as in the general outward simplicity of the music and its appropriateness to the words. . . . There is pathos and dignity in what may be termed the "Moses" solo, and very distinctive in style is the soft pastoral music in the accompaniment of the "David" solo; the composer in each case has found the right atmosphere. The second part is the more powerful. No one but an experienced composer could have treated the scene of Peter's denial in so unpretentious yet impressive a manner. The chorus, "There is none righteous," contains noble writing, while the pianissimo passage commencing at the words "There is no fear in love" is chaste and solemn.

The lesson of Divine love and trust the work is intended to teach—and does teach—will secure for it a welcome always, for the sincerity of the composer is made clear in every portion.

STANDARD.

Sir Hubert Parry has contributed many fine choral works to the Festival scheme of the Three Choirs, but nothing so uplifting, illuminating, and noble as the sinfonia sacra, entitled "The Love that casteth out Fear." . . . It need scarcely be added that the music is full of subtleties, and is elaborately scored. It is, indeed, a work of delicate and deep thought, dealing with the great unseen influence of life in a most masterly manner. Its chief characteristic, however, is its sustained loftiness and dignity, and by this it must be hailed as a masterpiece.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

The work, in spite of its austerity, improves vastly upon acquaintance, and as it becomes more familiar many beauties spring to light which at a first hearing passed unobserved. It is in its severe beauty a kind of protest against the elaborate artificiality of our decadent modern art, and as such we are perhaps inclined to value it more highly than its intrinsic merits would warrant, but, judged from any point of view, it is a noble work.

GUARDIAN.

Sir Hubert Parry has never risen more triumphantly to the height of his argument. The glory of the work lies rather in the perfect appropriateness of its style, in the austere and solemn reverence that pervades the whole, than in any individual passages of eminent beauty. . . . This is how the work opens; after a short instrumental prelude, the sorrowful Divine appeal, "O My people, what have I done to thee? Wherein have I wearied thee?" is softly breathed forth in solemn, sustained harmonies, and no one who heard it will forget the thrilling power of these simple chords, sounding, as it seemed, straight from heaven itself. . . . The most elaborate choral writing is reserved for the final number of the work, and it is marked by all the breadth and massive power and dignity which characterise Sir Hubert Parry at his best. . . . All music lovers will hope that this masterpiece will soon be brought to a second hearing.

OBSERVER.

The music by which the composer enhances this sublimely beautiful theme is of a sort that, in the estimation of all who realise the power of the art as an emotional language, must assuredly place him among the greatest masters. Here is music that purifies, elevates, and strengthens all who have ears to hear. It comes from the heart, and so goes to the heart. It is sincere and wonderfully simple, and its tenderness at times is such that appreciation is constrained to seek relief in tears. Furthermore the oratorio is technically the greatest thing Sir Hubert has yet done, for the reason that in it the "art that conceals art" is exhibited to the full. There is no display of contrapuntal skill for its own sake—everything is made subservient to the great central purpose of the work: praise of the "one thing that availeth—Love." Sir Hubert Parry is not only a great musician—he is a great poet and a great teacher.

IN SPRINGTIME

FOUR ENGLISH PASTORALS FOR TENOR (OR SOPRANO) SOLO AND MALE-VOICE CHORUS (ad lib.), AND ACCOMPANIMENT FOR PIANOFORTE OR ORCHESTRA.

1. Song on May Morning.
2. Welcome, sweet Pleasure.
3. The Power of Music.
4. A Shepherds' Dance.

COMPOSED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

Price, Two Shillings each, net.
The Chorus Part separately, complete, 6d.
Full Score and Wind Parts, MS. String Parts, 5s.

THE TIMES.

The second part began with a set of four "pastorals" by Dr. A. H. Brewer, set for tenor solo, male chorus, and orchestra. Milton's "Song on May Morning" is the first, and "Orpheus with his lute" the third, while the others may be taken from some book of madrigals. The second, with its merry refrain, "Fa la la," carries a suggestion of the grace of the Elizabethan period, and all are excellently effective and full of original ideas happily carried out. . . . The composer has done nothing better than these pastorals, and he well deserved the applause that greeted each as he conducted it.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

These, as laid out for tenor and orchestra, were generally successful, and specially so in measure of the simplicity which is their natural atmosphere. . . . In "Welcome, sweet Pleasure" the composer does not forget to show his musicianship; the effect of the piece is wholly in accord with the joyous spirit, all sport and play, which animates the words. This was sympathetically applauded. . . . "Springtime," last of the four songs, is, as it should be with such a theme, the most delicate and beautiful of all. As far as I can judge, there is not a flaw in it, while the orchestral theme which runs almost through the piece is a veritable inspiration. The composer, blemishes notwithstanding, is to be congratulated upon his "Pastorals."

STANDARD.

Beginning with Milton's "Song on May Morning," Dr. Brewer includes a new setting of Shakespeare's "Orpheus with his lute," and continues with two graceful little poems in the nature of madrigals. Melodious, thoroughly well scored, and with a nice feeling for vocal expression, they are a very pleasing example of tasteful, light music, and the composer is to be praised for his directness and simplicity. The last one of the set, a delightfully rhythmical and pleasing shepherds' dance, will, in all probability, be found the most immediately popular, but all of them show polished workmanship.

DAILY NEWS.

The brightness and animation of the music will be sure to win for the songs considerable popularity.

MORNING POST.

In a measure they form a sequence to the previous compositions with the same generic title which were first heard at the Hereford meeting last year, save that in this instance an added chorus for male voices increases the effect. One set of verses is taken from Shakspeare, another from Milton, while the other two are anonymous. In these new compositions Dr. Brewer shows the same happy faculty for catching the spirit of the verse and giving expression to it in terms both charming and fresh, displaying in the process individuality and marked originality. . . . The new pieces greatly charmed the audience.

TRIBUNE.

The second and fourth are bright and have a good deal of character. They are also effectively orchestrated.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

They are graceful and tender settings of four Elizabethan poems, fresh in melody and prettily orchestrated.

MORNING LEADER.

The first is Milton's "Song on May Morning," in which the chorus has but little to do: it is picturesquely scored; and the second, "Welcome, sweet Pleasure," has a catchy, characteristically English melody with a "Fa la la" refrain, and is merry and bustling. A melodious pastoral setting of "Orpheus with his lute" comes next, and "Hark, Jolly Shepherds" completes the set. They all go their way pleasantly.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

They are settings of words of Milton, Shakspeare, and anonymous writers for tenor solo and male-voice chorus, and are good examples of the composer's ready gift for expressing himself clearly and well.

THE YORKSHIRE POST.

Sequels are admittedly venturesome, but Dr. Brewer has certainly managed to keep up the interest and sustain the freshness which so pleased one in the earlier work. . . . Though the composer has employed a large orchestra, he has treated it with a lightness of touch that prevents it from ever going outside the picture, yet it is full of deft touches that give it piquancy. The first is a quiet, rather gentle exordium to the series, the second is lively and playful, the third, a setting of the well-known words, "Orpheus with his lute," alternates happily between playfulness and a tender emotion, and the fourth is jollity itself. The men's chorus supplies an effective refrain. . . . Dr. Brewer conducted, and the songs gave evident pleasure to the audience.

RELIEF FOR PIANISTS.

"Practice makes perfect" is a maxim which applies to few pianists, and keyboard practice succeeds only where there is a special natural gift. Has Piano practice destroyed your love of music and eaten the "soul" out of your playing? Delightful freedom from all drudgery is secured by adopting the well-known System of Touch and Technique, "From Brain to Keyboard." How this is imparted by post is fully explained in "Light on Pianoforte Playing," which Mr. M. Macdonald Smith, 19, Bloomsbury Square, W.C., the discoverer of the laws enabling players to dispense with technical exercises, will be pleased to send free to any pianist.

STUDENTS OF THE BECKER SYSTEM WRITE:

"It is with much pleasure I write to say I find your System of great value. It is the only system that has improved my touch and tone and rendered finger passages smooth and connected. I find old things I before thought difficult now easy to play."—M. G. H. (London, W.).

"I cannot describe the amount of good your System has done me. I only wish I had known of it years ago. Pieces I used to find difficult are now easy and a pleasure to play. My friends are astonished at the difference in my playing."—E. L. (Glam.).

"Your exercises and apparatus (Gauge) are splendid, and their use is greatly improving my technique. The control exercises are remarkably valuable."—L.R.A.M. (Devon).

"I hardly know how to begin to report progress made from first lesson, there is such decided improvement in my fingers, hands, and arms. I am surprised and delighted."—The Principal, School of Music, London.

Write for descriptive booklet (A), which will be sent free upon application.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM LIBRARY.

I.—Printed Music.

The British Museum is such an important part of the British Constitution that its comparative youth seems hardly credible. A century and a-half is a very short period in the life of a great nation, yet Great Britain's treasure-house at Bloomsbury is only one hundred and fifty years old. Moreover, this splendid institution owes its origin to a private source. By his will, dated July 20, 1749, Sir Hans Sloane, the eminent physician and naturalist, offered to the Government his extensive collection—natural history, works of art, books and manuscripts—for the sum of £20,000, being £30,000 less than the treasures had cost him. At the death of Sir Hans—on January 11, 1753, in the ninetieth year of his age—the Government accepted the offer contained in that important testamentary document, and in the same year (1753) Parliament passed 'An Act for the purchase of the Museum or Collection of Sir Hans Sloane, Bart. and of the Harleian Collection of MSS. and for providing one general repository for the better reception and more convenient use of the said Collection and of the Cottonian Library and of the additions thereto.' The Cottonian Library was formed by Sir Robert Bruce Cotton, a distinguished antiquary, who received a baronetcy from King James I., and whose fine library was presented to the nation by his great-grandson, Sir John Cotton, in 1700. The books were removed in 1730 to Ashburnham House, Westminster, where in the following year a fire broke out, whereby 114 out of the 958 volumes of manuscripts which the library contained were reported as 'lost, burned, or entirely spoiled, and 98 damaged so as to be defective.' The Harleian Collection of MSS. was formed by Robert Harley, first Earl of Oxford (1611 - 1724). These three private libraries therefore formed the nucleus of a collection which has become the pride of the nation.

The Government of the day—that is the year 1753—found 'one general repository for the better reception and more convenient use of the said Collection' in purchasing, from the Earl of Halifax, Montague House, situated in Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, the site of the present stately buildings now so well known as the British Museum. The mansion cost £10,250, and a further sum of £12,873 was expended upon the necessary repairs and alterations, in order to adapt the premises to their new use. (A 'garden view' of Montague House is given on p. 779.) The mansion stood in its own grounds, similar to other large London houses in the eighteenth century, of which Devonshire House, Piccadilly, remains as an interesting specimen. How was the Government to raise the necessary funds for starting the British Museum? At that time the income tax, earned or not earned, had no existence, and so the usual expedient of the State to raise money was resorted to, with the result that the sum of £300,000 was obtained by a Lottery! It was not until nearly six years after the British Museum Act had been passed that the 'Collections at Montague House' were opened to the public, the actual date being January 15, 1759. The building was only open for three hours a day. Tickets of admission had to be obtained, and small groups of visitors were personally conducted through the building. These stringent rules, which remained in force for nearly half-a-century, limited the number of visitors to sixty per diem! One of the original tickets of admission, cast in metal, has been kindly lent by Mr. G. F. Barwick for reproduction in facsimile.

BRITISH MUSEUM THREE LEAVE THIS TICKET

In course of time Montague House proved inadequate to store the rapidly increasing number of treasures. This was especially the case when, in 1821, King George IV. presented his father's splendid library to the nation. Sir Robert Smirke, the eminent architect, was then commissioned to design a receptacle for this royal library, and the magnificent apartment, 300 feet long, known as the King's Library, was erected and opened in 1823. This, the first of the new buildings, was gradually added to by Smirke, and in 1845 Montague House was finally demolished. The stately portico of the present building—finished April 19, 1847—completed the imposing columnar façade, 370 feet in length, and set its seal on Smirke's greatest achievement. In 1881 the Natural History Collections—Zoology, Geology, and Mineralogy — were removed to South Kensington, and in 1888 the White wing was added to the buildings at Bloomsbury.

One very important feature of the British Museum buildings has yet to be mentioned—the Reading Room. At the very beginning the Trustees had considered the value of their literary treasures from a research point of view. On December 8, 1758—a little more than a month before the opening day of the Museum—the Trustees ordered 'that the corner room in the base story be appropriated for the Reading Room, and that a proper wainscot table, covered with green bays, in the same manner as those in the libraries, be prepared for the same, with twenty chairs of the same kind with those already provided for the several departments of the house.' This furniture proved more than sufficient for the demands first made upon it. Let us see what a distinguished 'reader,' and one of the earliest, has to say on the subject. Writing to the Rev. William Mason on July 23, 1759, the poet Gray says:

> I am just settled in my new habitation in Southampton Row, and, though a solitary and dispirited creature, not unquiet nor wholly unpleasant to myself.
> The Museum will be my chief amusement. I this day passed through the jaws of a great leviathan that lay in my way into the belly of Dr. Templeman, Superintendent of the Reading Room, who congratulated himself on the sight of so much good company. We were—a man that writes for Lord Royston; a man that writes for Dr. Burton, of York; a third man that writes for the Emperor of Germany or Dr. Pocock, for he speaks the worst English I ever heard; Dr. Stukeley, who writes for himself, the very worst person he cd. write for; and I, who only read to know if there were anything worth writing, and that not without some difficulty. I find that they printed one thousand copies of the Harleian Catalogue, and sold fourscore; that they have £900 a-year income and spend £1,300, and that they are building apartments for the under-keepers, so I expect in winter to see the collection advertised and set to auction.

(Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons.)

With reference to Gray's remark anent 'the jaws of a great leviathan,' it was literally true that visitors to Montague House passed under the jawbone of a whale set up to form an arch in the entrance-hall!

The gradual and steady increase of 'readers' necessitated several changes in the location and size of the Reading Room. In the year 1838 the room which is now the music-room (see the view on p. 781) was set apart for 'readers,' among them being Carlyle and Macaulay. A young man named George Grove here copied music and became acquainted with the 'Museum Headache' and the 'Museum flea.' This room and the one adjoining soon proved inadequate to accommodate the rapidly increasing number of readers; to quote from official sources, 'complaints of overcrowding and foul air, and "Museum fleas" became more and more frequent, and the evil to a certain extent worked its own cure (if cure it can be called), by driving away those students who could not struggle against the physical inconveniences and annoyances to which they were exposed.' How was this difficulty to be met? The entire space formerly occupied by Montague House was now practically filled, leaving only the large central quadrangle free to be built upon. To quote further from the interesting little Guide to the Reading Room:

> At length, in April, 1852, a plan was suggested by Mr. (afterwards Sir Antonio) Panizzi, then Keeper of the Printed Books, for building a circular Reading Room in the vacant quadrangle and surrounding it with galleries for the reception of books; the plan was approved by the Trustees, reported upon favourably by Mr. Sydney Smirke [son of Sir Robert Smirke], the architect to the Museum, and adopted. It resulted in the erection of the present magnificent circular domed Reading Room, and the spacious galleries with which it is surrounded.

Begun in May, 1854, the present Reading Room was first opened to the public on Monday, May 18, 1857. No description of the building is necessary, for it is known and read of by all men; as a matter of record, however, it may be stated that this dome-crowned and spacious Room—one of the finest in the world—was re-opened on November 1 last, after having been closed for nearly seven months to undergo thorough renovation, the first since its completion fifty years ago. No account of the British Museum, however circumscribed or specialised, would be complete without reference to and acknowledgment of the courtesy and valued assistance 'readers' receive at the hands of the Superintendent of the Reading Room (Mr. George F. Barwick) and those associated with him in the discharge of arduous duties so pleasantly carried out.

When did the printed music section of the British Museum Library begin to be formed? If it is impossible definitely to answer the question, this interesting fact may be recalled: that, six and a-half years after Montague House had opened its doors, Master Wolfgang Mozart presented to the nation his Opus 3! This precious gift—carefully preserved as a 'case book'—bears the following title:

> Six Sonates pour le Clavecin qui peuvent se jouer avec L'accompagnement de Violon ou Flaute Traversiere.
> Très humblement dediées à sa majesté Charlotte, reine de la Grande Bretagne. Composées par I. G. WOLFGANG MOZART, Agé de huit Ans. Oeuvre III.
> London: Printed for the Author and sold at his Lodgings at Mr. Williamson, in Thrift Street, Soho.

The youthful composer—he was then nine years of age—not only visited the British Museum on that occasion (in July, 1765), but he composed, 'at the request of the authorities,' so it is said, a piece of music as a memento of his visit. This was a setting of the words 'God is our refuge and strength,' Mozart's only known composition to English words, the autograph of which is attached to the 'Six Sonates' mentioned above.*

These gifts of Master Mozart were acknowledged in the following official letter of thanks to the child's father:

> Sir,—I am ordered by the Standing Committee of the Trustees of the British Museum, to signify to You, that they have received the present of the Musical performances of Your very ingenious son, which You were pleased lately to make Them, and to return You their Thanks for the same.
>
> British Museum, M. Maty,
> July 19, 1765. Secretary.

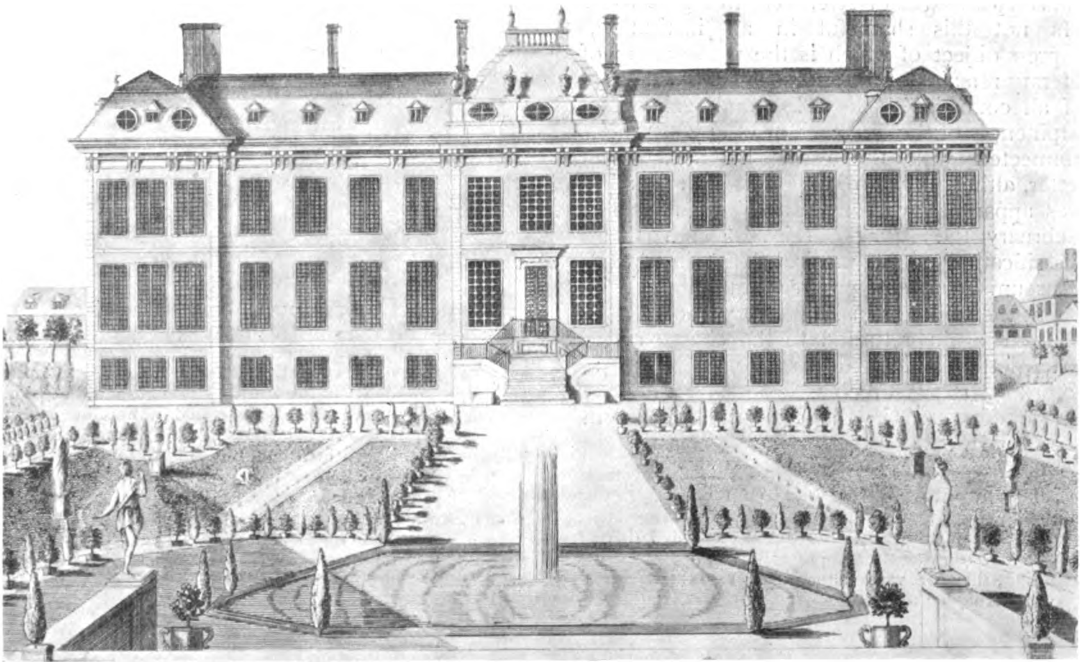
In 1778 'a number of books on music were presented by Sir John Hawkins' on the completion of his 'History of Music,' and in 1815 the 'fine collection of books on music,' comprising the Burney collection, were acquired by purchase. It would seem, however, that music was practically ignored for nearly a hundred years after the Museum was opened. In the 'thirties' of the last century public attention began to be called to the neglected state of this section in the Department of Printed Books (to which music officially belongs) in the national library. On February 9, 1838, a leading article appeared in the Musical World. After stating that the 'greatest attraction in this vast magazine of curiosities is its accumulated treasures of literature, which offer an inexhaustible supply to the utmost cravings of mental avarice,' the article went on to say:



MONTAGUE HOUSE: THE GARDEN FRONT.

(From an old print in the Crace collection, British Museum.)

> Notwithstanding the general order and regularity displayed in the arrangement of these immense repositories of learning, and the care, attention, and civility invariably experienced by the visitors from the servants of the establishment, the musician finds that his wants have still to be anticipated. In his department, there is still a 'hiatus maximè deflendus' in the catalogue. Treasures there are; but the individual in search of them is in the situation of Tantalus, hearing the gurgling of the ever-living spring, but doomed never to slake his thirst. Your attendant affirms, that there are piles, folios, sheets innumerable of music; but they are admitted to the bewildered enquirer to be in most admired confusion. You may discover, in your search, abstruse cogitations of the men of old—Morley, Butler, Holder, Playford or Simpson; although they appear not as yet naturalized to the place. You may meet with authors, who have been treated, perhaps, better than they deserve (but this by way of parenthesis)—Geminiani, Turner, Grassineau, Antonietto, Malcolm, Lampe and Holden. During your assiduous visits, your laborious investigations, you may come in contact with Kollman, Keeble, Shield, Jones, Burney, and Hawkins, with others who have occupied their days in cracking the shell, which encloses the sweet fruit; and these, with the names before enumerated, will nearly comprise all, perchance, that your industry may collect for your instruction, entertainment, or animadversion.
> The means, however, afforded to the student of musical science, in tracing the progress of the art, are very slight. There is no regular series in the works collected in this department; and of the present state of the art there are really no specimens. Of the oratorio, the anthem, the corale, the opera, the quartet, the symphony, the library affords but few examples; and on the construction of many of these no information. Handel's oratorios are to be found here; but where are the oratorios of our countrymen, since his day? Boyce's cathedral music is included; but where are the many noble anthem books since published, where the litanies, masses, Te Deums, requiems, oratorios, of the Bachs, Haydn,

---

* A facsimile of this autograph MS.—headed 'Chorus by Mr. Wolfgang Mozart'—formed one of the special supplements to The Musical Times of February, 1906.

Mozart, Beethoven, Spohr, Cherubini, Mendelssohn; where the operas, quartets, and symphonies, of the six last named? Now that England is producing her organ composers, operatic composers, and instrumental composers; now that a new era has arisen, is it not incumbent on us, to make its achievements a matter of record? Is not the national reputation for musical skill traduced in the theoretical works of our continental neighbours; the very names of our most celebrated writers omitted in their histories of the art; and no style, or school, assigned to us, simply because there exists no sufficient public avenue, through which the learned foreigner can readily obtain access to the necessary means of information? Surely no exertions should be spared to place sterling merit in the most conspicuous position.

We would suggest that what music is at present contained in the library of the British Museum, may be classified and indexed; that copies be made of the interesting MSS. in the libraries of the universities, and that all standard publications, be demanded, or purchased, as they successively appear.

This 'leader' does not seem to have had any effect, for later in the year Joseph Warren, a zealous antiquary, wrote a letter to the Musical World (September 6, 1838), deploring 'the want of a classed catalogue of reference' in regard to music. 'Is not this shameful in an institution, the express object of which is the preservation of the literary remains of art and science, of all ages, and of all countries?' he asks; and again, 'Is it the supineness of the Trustees, or of any of the officers connected with the establishment?' Warren's letter, although again supported by an 'editorial,' was apparently without result. In the following February the Musical World stated that 'the classification of the musical MSS. in the British Museum is now in progress,' but nothing is said about the printed music. Two years later, Joseph Warren again returned to the charge of neglect in a letter addressed to the Musical World (April 8, 1841), which is headed 'Neglect of the music deposited in the National Library in the British Museum.' He says:

Sir,—Some time has elapsed since I wrote to you respecting the state of the Museum Library: I had hopes that, ere this, something would have been done regarding classifying, and properly cataloguing, the music contained therein, but am sorry to say that the state of things is not any better; if anything, they are worse; for instance, on referring to the general catalogue to obtain a sight of several musical works, and having written out the respective tickets with the press marks, after the lapse of half-an-hour, the tickets were returned to me with this mark, "Moving," crossed in pencil. Upon enquiring the reason why I could not have the books, I was told, that 'unless I obtained the new press marks I could not have them, as the books were being removed from the old to the new presses.' Upon again referring to the catalogue, I found that the new press marks had not been put to the works I wanted, and that only here and there a book appeared with the new press marks. This has been the state of things at the British Museum for this last two years, and so often have I written for the same books, and have always the same answer returned, that I am tired of applying any more for them, and would sooner purchase the books I want, were they to be obtained, than trouble them any more. I beg to ask, if this is a proper state of things in the (what ought to be) principal library in England?

He then refers to some of the rare books by venerable masters—e.g., those printed by Petrucci, &c.—which, according to Dr. Burney, were in the Museum collection, and goes on to say:

To obtain a sight of the above noble compositions, by the early contrapuntists, I have frequently referred to the catalogues, and made enquiries, but in vain; no reference appears, and no one can give me any information respecting them; on the contrary, I have myself been referred to by the attendants on the readers, from other parties who also wished to see them, as if I alone knew anything about the books or had the reference. Such is the state of things in the department of printed books; the MSS. part I must reserve my strictures on, in another letter, and shall also point out several portions from private collections that ought to have been purchased for the library, that have been dispersed at public sales within these last hundred years.

I remain, dear Sir, yours truly,
Joseph Warren.

20, Conduit-street, Regent-street,
March 22, 1841.

Warren's letter is thus editorially endorsed:

[We are grateful to Mr. Warren, and so should the public be, for his zeal in detecting, and his endeavours to correct, the shameful neglect of much of the valuable stores of our National Library, and of the printed and MS. music in particular—a neglect that deserves to be considered wilful, after the repeated public and private remonstrances that have been made, which is daily hastening the destruction of the most precious documents, and which, as far as music is concerned, renders the collection utterly unuseful. We most earnestly invoke the attention of the House of Commons to the matter, when the annual grant for the support of the institution shall come to be voted; and we trust that such of our readers as possess any parliamentary influence will not fail to move their short memoried sitting friends towards some amelioration of the evil.—Ed. M. W.]

Warren had a warm supporter in William Chappell, who appears to have petitioned the Trustees that something should be done in regard to cataloguing the music. The Musical World again furnishes the desired information in the following extract from the issue of December 9, 1841, which speaks for itself:

Catalogue of the Music at the British Museum.—The memorial drawn up some time since by Mr. Chappell, and signed by a very large number of the musical profession, entreating that the great accumulation of music in the library of the British Museum should be properly arranged for reference, and catalogued in the same manner as are the literary works, the prints, &c., of the same collection, has been at length attended to, and T. Oliphant, Esq., is appointed musical librarian. Without questioning the musical pretensions of this gentleman, who is doubtless as much as any one qualified to the examination of title-pages and the criticism of book-covers, we must most earnestly censure the appointment of T. Oliphant, Esq., or of any other amateur, to one of the very few government offices, if it be not the only one, which it falls within the province of a musician to fill. T. Oliphant, Esq., interferes too much already with the interests and pursuits of the profession by his dabbling in Madrigalian resuscitations, textual new versifications, and vapid Germanic naturalization, without intercepting the very little easy and dignified bread and butter which it is in the power of government to rain into the mouth of a musician; and we anxiously inquire in what peculiarities consist the appointed librarian's qualifications for the office?

This paragraph prompted a letter, also editorially endorsed, which appeared in the following week:

MUSICAL LIBRARIAN TO THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

Sir,—Having been asked by many musical friends who were the candidates for the office of Librarian to the British Museum; and not obtaining the information, you, Sir, will confer a favour on myself, and other of your numerous readers, by furnishing their names. Yours, &c.

Brompton, Dec. 13 [1841.] C. O.

[The appointment of T. Oliphant, Esq., to the best of our knowledge, was not settled by election, but was entirely an affair of private interest. This gentleman is so completely an amateur, even in his antiquarian researches, that his qualifications are as questionable as we think his appointment unjust.—Ed. M. W.]

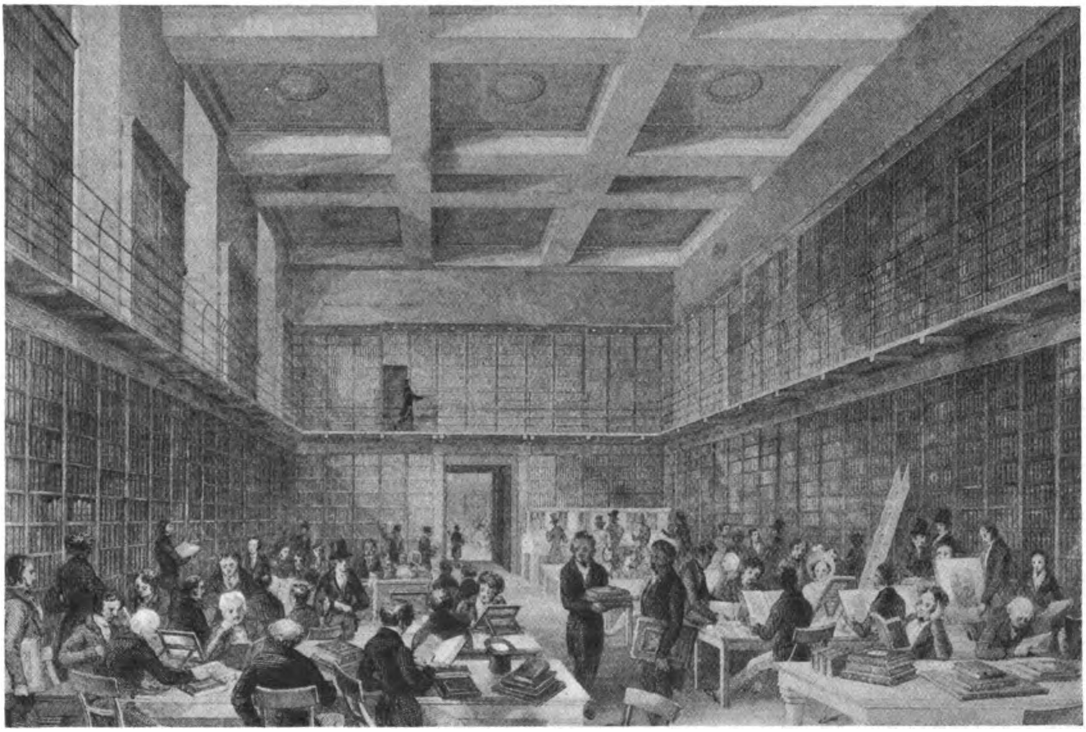
It is hardly necessary to say that in the present day the above trenchant quotations would be considered libellous.

Reference must now be made to the 'Annual Returns' of the British Museum. Previous to the year 1839 (that is, the Return dated 1840) this Blue Book had no reference whatever to the library in respect of the accessions, cataloguing, &c.; it was merely a statement of accounts and of no literary or artistic interest whatever. Two more years elapsed before music was mentioned, namely in the Return dated 1842 (for the year ending December 31, 1841), which contains the following information:

> Of the Musical Collection, 245 titles have been written between the 25th November and the 11th December.

Thus it may be inferred that Oliphant began his work of cataloguing on November 25, 1841. At the end of the year 1842, under Additions, the Return stated that:

> The musical works are 550, comprised in 750 volumes or parts; 724 of which have been received by copyright, and 26 purchased.



THE MUSIC ROOM, FORMERLY THE READING ROOM FREQUENTED BY CARLYLE AND MACAULAY.

(From an old print kindly lent by Mr. G. F. Barwick.)

We now pass on to an important link in the chain of historical information concerning the music at the British Museum and its catalogue. In the years 1847-48 a Royal Commission was appointed to inquire into the management of the Museum. The copious evidence given on that occasion is preserved in an interesting Blue Book, one of the most notable witnesses being, 'T. Carlyle, Esq.' On July 5, 1848, Mr. (afterwards Sir Antonio) Panizzi, then Keeper of the Printed Books, was under examination. The Earl of Ellesmere was in the chair, and his fellow Commissioners included the Bishop of Norwich (father of Dean Stanley) and 'Mr. Milnes,' afterwards Lord Houghton. Question 4040, put by the chairman, was to this effect: 'Have you a large collection of music in your charge?' To this Panizzi replied:

> Yes; that is again a collection which has recently been made. The Trustees asked whether it was right to have a collection of music. I thought it was, both because it is done in other countries, and because by the Copyright Act we have a right to the music, and we got it from Stationers' Hall under the old Act of Parliament, and now have it direct from the publishers; and therefore, as the Trustees took it in, I thought they ought to keep the collection up and good. There was a large quantity of this music which had come in by copyright, but which had never been catalogued, or a list made of it, since it came into the Museum. A gentleman of the name of Bean, I think, took care of it formerly; afterwards it was left to accumulate unarranged. The Trustees, at my request, appointed a gentleman to make a catalogue of this music; and when he came to catalogue the music that had come by copyright, he found that many of the works sent were imperfect; that in some cases the publishers had sent in only the title-page, for instance, or had sent in two or three leaves of proofs, and not the book itself. In some cases, when it has been considered worth while, though in very few cases, those volumes have been completed, but besides that, other music has been bought. For instance, there was not a collection of Handel's works here, and that is one of the articles I have bought myself for the Trustees. The Trustees asked for a plain and short way of cataloguing this music. I suggested, with the advice of a gentleman who understood the subject, a short way of cataloguing it. The Trustees passed a resolution that that should apply not only to the printed, but to the manuscript music. I said they had better try > whether this plan would answer for the manuscript music, because we had considered it only for the printed music; and I suggested that Mr. Oliphant, who is the gentleman that catalogues the music, should try how the rules, applied to the manuscript music, would do; and the Trustees ordered him to catalogue the manuscript music immediately, and he catalogued all the manuscript music at once, but I do not know on what plan. I did not understand that that music was to be at once catalogued, but that it was desirable first to try that system, to see how it worked for manuscript music.

The remaining questions and answers, covering the subject of music, speak for themselves:

> 4041.—Is there any catalogue printed?
>
> Yes, of the manuscript, not the printed music; and this is also ready, exactly like that of the maps, to be transcribed for the use of the public.
> 4042.—(The Lord Advocate.) Which is ready?
>
> The catalogue of the printed music; but the question whether it ought to be printed or not is a question which embraces the whole question of printing catalogues of increasing collections.
> 4043.—(Chairman.) Are you quite clear in your opinion that it is desirable to continue the collection of music by copyright?
> I think so now, because that collection is much better since the new Copyright Act is come into operation. The collection has much improved; the publishers do not send only title-pages, or two or three leaves with the title only of a work; they send the real works complete, such as they are.

The sting, 'such as they are,' at the end of Panizzi's evidence as to music, will not escape notice. At all events something was being done, if slowly. It was not, however, till the year of the Great Exhibition that a catalogue of the printed music seems to have been available. To quote from the excellent 'Handbook to the Library of the British Museum' (1854), compiled by Richard Sims, a former officer of the Museum and a most trustworthy authority:

> An excellent catalogue, formed by Mr. Oliphant, was placed in the Reading Room in January, 1851. It is in manuscript and bound in forty-five volumes, folio, together with an Index of 'Authors of Words,' in twelve volumes, folio.

The successors of Thomas Oliphant (who prepared a printed catalogue of the manuscript music in 1842) as officers in charge of the printed music were Messrs. E. A. Roy, Campbell Clarke and Charles Evans. It is in the recollection of Mr. R. E. Graves—a retired officer of the Museum who became an assistant librarian in 1854—that when Mr. Evans was appointed 'nothing had been done' and that the arrears consisted of 'enormous stacks of music' waiting to be catalogued!

Even as late as 1877 the state of the music library was anything but satisfactory. In the discussion following a paper read before the Musical Association on December 3, 1877, by Dr. W. H. Cummings, on 'The formation of a National Musical Library,' attention was called to the subject and a memorial was sent to the Trustees. The fifth volume of 'The Proceedings of the Musical Association,' under the Report of the year 1877-78, thus records the result of the memorial:

> At the close of the paper 'On the Formation of a National Musical Library,' read by W. H. Cummings, Esq., an important discussion and interchange of opinion among those present led to a resolution proposed by Major Crawford, seconded by Otto Goldschmidt, Esq., and carried unanimously,—
> That the Council be requested to prepare a Memorial to the Trustees of the British Museum calling their attention to the want of an index catalogue or other means of more ready reference than at present exists, and to the deficiencies and imperfections of the collection of manuscript and printed music and musical literature in the Museum; such Memorial to be submitted for signature to the various recognised Musical Institutions.
> In accordance with the above resolution your Council prepared the following Memorial, which was signed by a large number of leading professional and amateur musicians, and was forwarded to the Trustees of the British Museum:—
> To the Right Reverend and the Right Honourable the Trustees of the British Museum.
>
> We, the undersigned, desire respectfully to call the attention of the Trustees to the present condition of the musical collection in the Library of the British Museum.
>
> It is scarcely necessary to point out the importance of all that appertains to the art and science of music, and how enormously that art has risen in general estimation in recent years; but your memorialists feel that the national collection is not so complete and comprehensive as it might be; and that the arrangements in connection therewith, and the facilities for studying the same, have not kept pace with the constant advance and interest of the general public and the pressing necessities of students. Your memorialists venture respectfully to suggest that it would be a great convenience to students—
> (1.) If the collection of music and musical literature were made more complete than at present.
>
> (2.) If a special and separate catalogue of music and musical literature, both printed and in manuscript, were prepared.
>
> (3). If in addition this catalogue could be printed and sold, as was the case with that of the manuscript music prepared by Mr. Thomas Oliphant in 1842.
>
> The reply to this Memorial was by letter addressed to your Honorary Secretary:—
> Sir, June 24, 1878.
> I have had the honour to lay before the Trustees of the British Museum your letter of the 28th ult., and the memorial which you forwarded to me therewith from the Musical Association; also printed copies of a Paper read before the Musical Association in December last by Mr. W. H. Cummings. The Trustees have directed me to acquaint you for the information of the Musical Association, that for some years past great efforts have been made to improve and enlarge the collections of music and musical literature, both printed and manuscript, in the British Museum, and that very considerable additions have in fact been made to those collections; that there has been for many years past a separate catalogue of music which comprises 372 volumes, two cataloguers and two copyists being employed thereon, and at least two thousand new entries being made annually.
>
> I may add, all music received in the Museum is made available for readers within one week of its receipt; and that every assistance is afforded to students in their researches.
>
> In regard to the proposal of the memorialists that a catalogue of music and musical literature should be printed, I am to acquaint you that the Trustees feel that they must postpone the consideration of this subject.
>
> I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,
>
> (Signed) J. Winter Jones.
>
> James Higgs, Esq.,
> Hon. Sec., Musical Association.
> The Council of the Musical Association rejoice in being the medium for giving publicity to the official statement as to the present facilities enjoyed by musical students, as they feel that such facilities are far in advance of the personal experience of many at a not very remote period. The Council still hope, and recent public statements justify the hope, that the Trustees may be able to grant before long those further facilities for which the Memorial prayed.

This was before the music at the British Museum was placed under the wise and efficient administration of Mr. W. Barclay Squire.

BYRD'S FANTASIA IN C

AN EARLY STUDY IN THEMATIC DEVELOPMENT.

It has been the custom to speak of the Fancies of the late Tudor and early Stuart periods as the outcome only of wanderings upon bye-ways of art that led nowhere. The term 'bye-ways' was used in this connection by Sir Hubert Parry in his lectures at the Royal Institution in the spring of 1900, and in the main it fitted the Fancies as well as the other tentative forms which the lecturer included in his survey. The Fancies (or Fantasias) of the 17th century were to a large extent vague, formless, and indicative of an almost pathetic desire to speak in an unfamiliar tongue; but there were exceptions,—accidental successes, perhaps, amongst many dreary failures. Some examples for strings by Gibbons compel admiration, apart from their antiquarian interest; other specimens by William Byrd, Peter Phillips and Giles Farnaby show remarkable intuition for the true instrumental style in clavier-music. But, as far as my researches have gone, there seems to be no other single specimen with so many points of interest, both in its Form, in the broader sense of the term, and in the smaller details of thematic development, as Byrd's Fantasia in C, in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book.* Moreover, the work has dignity, breadth and brilliance far beyond most of its compeers, and claims no mere respect on account of age, though this also is due when we remember that its composer was laid to rest, at the venerable age of eighty-five, close upon a century before 'Das wohltemperirte Klavier' appeared.

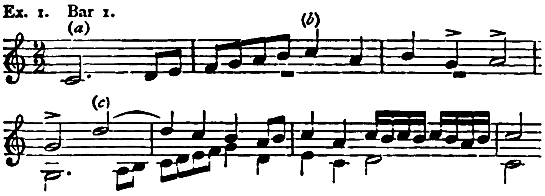
Byrd's Fantasia is in three main divisions:

I. Eighty-six bars, during which one subject and its derivatives receive varied contrapuntal treatment, with occasional bits of pure harmonic work.
II. Forty-six bars, a Free Fantasia, in the florid Toccata style.
III. Twenty-seven bars, a review of themes of Section I., with surprising new treatment.

In the original MS., the bars are of uneven lengths, but have been divided into regular bars of two minims in an edition for organ which will shortly be published,† and their numbers will correspond with this analysis.

The most remarkable features of the work are its persistent use of one subject (Ex. 1) and the derivation of practically all thematic material (excepting mere passage work in the middle section) from that subject:

Ex. 1. Bar 1.



After a double-bar, with repeat marks, comes Ex. 2. This seems to be new, but Ex. 2 (a) has an echo of the last three notes of Ex. 1 (b), just as, in a similar place after the first double-bar of a sonata movement, an echo of some small feature, preceding, is chosen by later composers to lead a new departure:

Ex. 2. Bar 26.

Ex. 2 (b) is also reminiscent of Ex. 1 (c), as also is Ex. 3 (b), while Ex. 3 (a) is a free cancrizans augmentation of Ex. 1 (b), accompanied in its third bar by part of Ex. 1 (a):

Ex. 3. Bar 45.

Ex. 4 is another derivative of Ex. 1 (c):

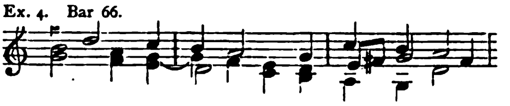
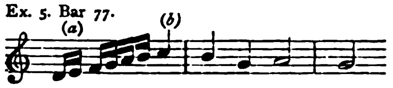
Ex. 4. Bar 66.



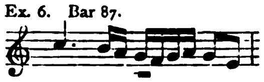
while Ex. 5 acknowledges on its face the parentage of Ex. 1 (a) and (b):

Ex. 5. Bar 77.



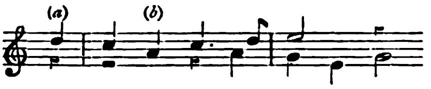
The Free Fantasia begins with Ex. 6:

Ex. 6. Bar 87.



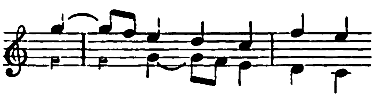
and, after running its due course, this florid section leads to what is in some ways the most interesting portion of the composition, because of its modernity of spirit, namely the third section, in which the materials of the first section again come into use. Ex. 7 (a) obviously grows out of Ex. 5 (b), and is first used in four-voiced counterpoint, in close stretto:

Ex. 7. Bar 132.



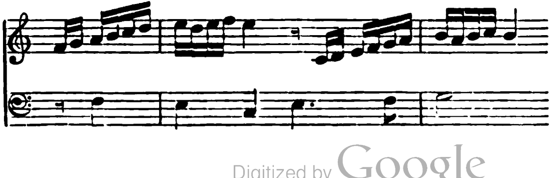
Ex. 8, a codetta to the four-part working of Ex. 7, again reminds us of Ex. 1 (c), 2 (b), 3 (b), and 4:

Ex. 8. Bar 138.



Ex. 9 shows us the theme of Ex. 7 in the bass, accompanied by the upward scale of Ex. 5 (a), which is itself a diminution of Ex. 1 (a), and to which is now added the quaint turn which appears at the third beat of Ex. 6:

Ex. 9. Bar 145.



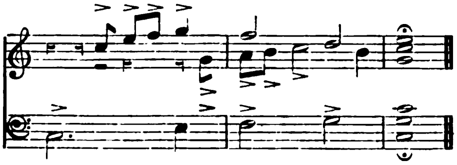
---

* Vol. i., p. 406. Edited by J. A. Fuller Maitland and W. Barclay Squire. Breitkopf & Haertel, 1895.

† By Messrs. Novello.

Ex. 10 brings the notable achievement to a close with a final echo of Ex. 7 (b), in simultaneous augmentation and diminution:

Ex. 10. Bar 157.



The foregoing analysis by no means exhausts even the artifice which abounds in this old masterpiece; but more than all the triumph of workmanship is the art that conceals art, by means of which this Fantasia can make its appeal as pure music, without apology for age, after three centuries of repose.

JOHN E. BORLAND.

Occasional Notes.

There's music in the sighing of a reed;
There's music in the gushing of a rill;
There's music in all things, if men had ears;
Their earth is but an echo of the spheres.
BYRON.

From THE MUSICAL TIMES of fifty years ago:

THE ST. JAMES'S HALL.—The Directors of the St. James's Hall Company (Limited) beg to inform the Public Musical, Scientific, and other Societies, that they are now prepared to receive proposals for the hire of the Great and Minor Halls. They would particularly claim attention to the unequalled position of the St. James's Hall, situated between the two great thoroughfares of the West-end of London, and with main entrances in Regent-street and Piccadilly.

The Directors are enabled to fix the opening of the Hall for Monday, the 1st of March, 1858. Applications to be made to the Secretary of the St. James's Hall Company (Limited), at the temporary offices, 25, Golden-square.

By order of the Board, GEORGE LESLIE, Secretary.

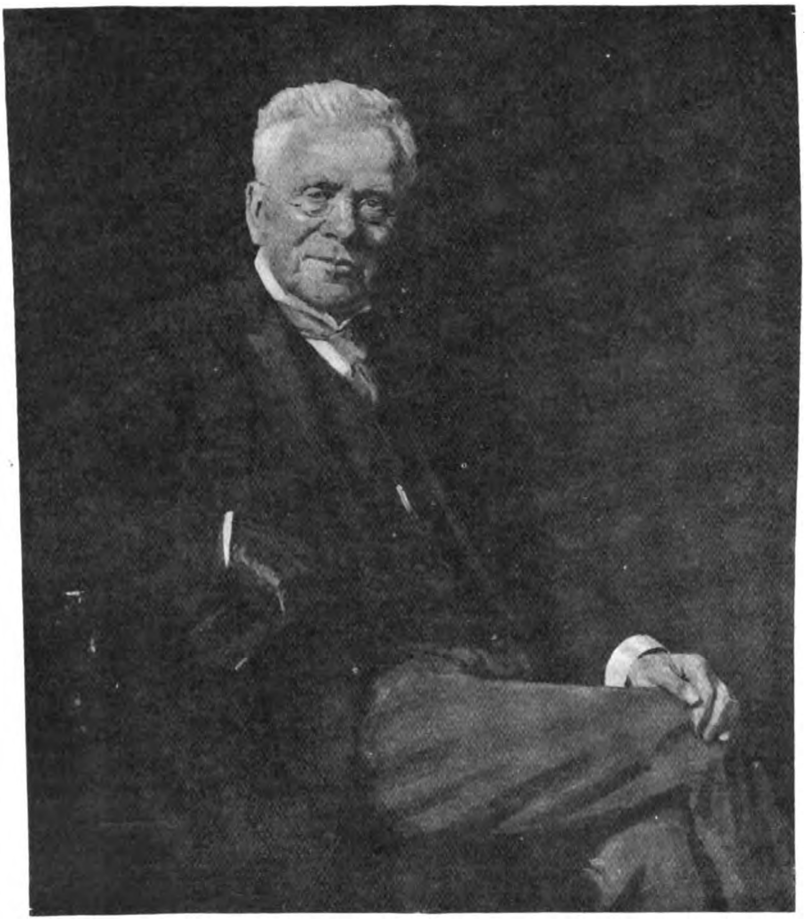
Sir Edward Elgar's First Suite for Orchestra is entitled 'The wand of youth,' and consists of seven movements severally named: Overture, Serenade, Minuet (old style), Sun dance, Fairy pipers, Slumber scene, and Fairies and giants. The pieces were originally written to a child's play for the entertainment of the composer's family in 1869, when Sir Edward was only twelve years of age, and they were played by his brothers and sisters on various instruments. Needless to say that the Suite, dedicated 'to my friend, C. Lee Williams,' has been entirely re-scored and revised for its first performance at the Queen's Hall Concert on December 14, an occasion which will be anticipated with interest. We understand that a second Suite is in preparation.

Dr. Saint-Saëns has been honoured at Dieppe, in the inauguration, on October 20, of M. Marqueste's statue of the French master, offered to the town by Madame Carnette. The composer thanked the lady and other friends who had given him so cordial a reception. Madame Suzanne Belda recited an Ode à Camille Saint-Saëns by M. G. Lebas, and a Saint-Saëns programme was performed.

Shelley's oft-set-to-music lines, 'I arise from dreams of thee,' first appeared anonymously in a magazine called The Liberal, in 1822. There the poem of the stanzas is headed 'Song, written for an Indian Air,' altered in the Posthumous Poems to 'Lines to an Indian Air.' In the Athenæum of November 2, Mr. H. Buxton Forman, the great authority on Shelley, with good reason suggests that the poem owes its origin to Sophia Stacey, whom the poet met during his sojourn at Florence in 1819, and to Mozart's duet 'Ah perdona' from the opera 'La Clemenza di Tito.' Professor Dowden says that Shelley 'was drawn towards the King's Theatre, and soon became an ardent lover of Mozart.' On July 12, 1817, 'La Clemenza di Tito' was performed at the King's Theatre, when Shelley became familiar with the beautiful duet, the words of which he wrote on the same sheet of paper as his own copy of 'I arise from dreams of thee,' the manuscript of which was sold by Messrs. Sotheby on July 27. For further details our readers are referred to the Athenæum of August 31 and November 2, containing two informing articles by Mr. H. Buxton Forman on this interesting subject, in which he says: 'It seems to me clear that, if we are to associate with the genesis of that delicately passionate poem any particular person and tune, the person must henceforth be Sophia Stacey, and the tune the main melodic trend of Mozart's "Ah perdona."'

The Metropolis is gradually coming to its own in the way of competition festivals. There always have been some minor events of the kind, but, except at Stratford in the far East, there has not been, until recently, any organization specially designed to promote this type of popular musical education on a permanent basis. We have now five strongly constituted societies formed for the purpose of stirring up different sections of the Metropolitan district. First, there is Stratford (secretary, Mr. J. Graham, 113, Station Road, Chingford), which for many years has dug and delved into the Essex end of the suburbs, and now has cast longing eyes to the districts nearer the Bank. Then there is the new festival which is being instituted mainly by the exertions of Miss Edith Barran (20, Queensberry Place, S.W.), which is specifically for what is generally meant when the East of London is referred to, viz., the teeming population of Whitechapel, Spitalfields, Shoreditch, Poplar and the E.C. City district itself. This project is influentially supported, and there is every prospect of great success. The festival will be held in the People's Palace, Mile End, on May 9, 14, 15, 16, 1908. South London is admirably catered for by the society brought into being by the remarkable exertions of Mr. T. Lester Jones (49, Terrace Road, Upton Manor, E.). This festival will be held in the Battersea Town Hall towards the end of March, 1908. The Herts and North Middlesex festival announces its second gathering to be held in the Alexandra Palace on February 28 and 29, 1908. Here the suburbs of North London as well as numerous rural districts are appealed to. Lastly, there is the Kensington competition, which, at first confined to ladies' choirs and next to orchestras and mixed-voice choirs, is now expanding its scheme to include schools, &c. No doubt some of these organizations will overlap in their districts, but this is not a matter of much moment. There should be ample room for a score or more festivals to meet the needs of London's five or six million inhabitants.

Mr. Albert Coates, the young English conductor of the Elberfeld Stadttheater, has been appointed Kapellmeister at the Dresden Royal Opera House, in succession to Hofkapellmeister Malata.



MR. FRED. R. SPARK, J.P.
HONORARY SECRETARY OF THE LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL FROM 1877 TO 1907.

'Honour to whom honour is due' was fully justified at Leeds Town Hall on November 8, when the Lord Mayor (Mr. Joseph Hepworth) presented Mr. Fred. R. Spark with his portrait, painted by Sir George Reid, R.S.A. The presentation was some acknowledgment of the splendid services rendered by Mr. Spark in connection with the Leeds Musical Festival, with which he has been connected for half-a-century, the last thirty years as honorary secretary and manager; and also of his interest in the Workpeople's Hospital Fund, which he founded in 1887 and whereby no less a sum than £150,000 has been raised, of which £130,000 has been devoted to the medical charities during the past twenty years. No wonder that the Lord Mayor of Leeds characterized this Fund as 'one of the grandest institutions' in that city. Mr. Spark, in acknowledging the gift, said that the honour was one which he little expected. He had never gone into any work with any idea of reward. The painting he would look upon for years as an embodiment of personal friendship. Mark Twain had said that 'Fame, riches, titles—they are all dust compared with affection.' It was this esteem and affection which was to him (Mr. Spark) most valuable. He had held some forty different positions in the city, but he had never shirked the work attaching to any one of them. So long as he lived he hoped he would retain the good and affectionate feeling which had been shown to him.

Dr. Edward Bunnett has been somewhat similarly honoured at Norwich, when, in the Guildhall of that city, he was presented by the Mayor (Mr. W. R. C. Howlett) with a testimonial which comprised a silver salver, a purse of one hundred guineas, and a bound volume containing the names of the subscribers. The salver, a beautiful piece of plate made from an 18th century model, bears the following inscription:

> Presented to Edward Bunnett, Esq., Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., by the Committee of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival and other friends on his retiring from the office of organist, which he held with distinction from 1872 to 1905.

In heartily thanking the donors for these gifts, Dr. Bunnett, who was very cordially received, said that as a cathedral chorister he sang at the Norwich Musical Festival in 1845. He had never been absent from any subsequent festival, and since 1872 he had acted as organist. He would still continue to discharge his duties as Corporation organist, and he had no intention of severing his connection with the musical life of Norwich with which he had been so intimately connected for the long period of sixty-four years, having entered the cathedral choir in the year 1843. A biographical sketch and portrait of Dr. Bunnett appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of June, 1907, page 381.

Enormous prices were realized at the auction sale of musical autographs held by Liepmannsohn at Berlin on November 4 and 5. The manuscripts, which came from the collections of Julius Stockhausen, Wilhelm Taubert and Maurice Schlesinger (of Paris) were of supreme interest. Subjoined are some of the 'Lots' and the amounts at which they were sold:

BEETHOVEN.	Pianoforte Sonata in E (Op. 109)	800
	String quartett in F (Op. 135)	735
	'Musik zu einem Ritterballet': an unpublished pianoforte score, written by Beethoven at about the age of twenty, being his first purely orchestral composition	250
	A 'conversation-book' of the year 1825, containing only four lines in his autograph	90
	Portrait, with autograph dedication	43
BERLIOZ.	The Marseillaise, arranged for full orchestra and chorus	55
BRAHMS.	His own arrangement for pianoforte duet of the Symphony in D (Op. 73)	85
	Orchestral arrangement of Schubert's song 'An Schwager Kronos,' unpublished	45
	Variations on a Hungarian melody (Op. 21, No. 2), composed at the age of twenty-one years (this is signed 'J. Brhms')	45
CHOPIN.	Waltz in E flat (Op. 18)	140
	Four Mazurkas	90
HALÉVY.	The opera 'La Juive' in full score	152
HAYDN.	An interesting letter to Artaria, of Vienna, his publisher	51
LISZT.	'Réminiscences des Huguenots' (Op. 11) composed at the age of twenty-seven years	25
MEYERBEER.	'Robert le Diable,' Act I., together with a hitherto unpublished scene	50
SCHUBERT.	Variations for pianoforte and flute (Op. 160)	229
	Dance, for pianoforte, unpublished	60
SCHUMANN.	Etudes symphoniques (Op. 13)	60
	'Des Sängers Fluch' (Op. 139), full score	35

Beethoven, it will be seen, is head and shoulders above the rest of the great men in the prices his autographs realized as he is in his creative achievements. But the above amounts, great as they are, pale into insignificance when compared with the sum of £2,100 which Mr. Karl W. Hiersemann, of Leipzig, asks for the autograph of Beethoven's 'Thirty-three variations on a waltz by Diabelli' (Op. 120).

At Messrs. Sotheby's sale of autographs on November 8, three letters written by Mendelssohn realized £3 10*s*., £2 5*s*., and £1 12*s*. respectively. The first of these communications was to Planché, criticizing the words of an opera he had submitted to the composer; the two other letters were in German. Two lines of music written by Mendelssohn and dated 'Birmingham, 26th August, 1846'—the day 'Elijah' was produced—were sold for £5 10*s*. A fine letter of Wagner's, dated February, 1847, with portrait, realized £5 12*s*. 6*d*., a Brahms letter, with two others (one written by Shield) were sold for £4 5*s*., while a Meyerbeer letter was knocked down at four shillings!

November 4 was the sixtieth anniversary of the death of Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, of which, at least, due notice was taken at Berlin. The composer's grave in the old cemetery close to the Hallethor was richly adorned with palms and evergreens, and a memorial concert was given by the Stern Choral Society, under the direction of Oscar Fried, when the programme included the 'Hymn of Praise,' 'Walpurgis Night,' and the Violin concerto, with Herr Burmester as soloist. The anniversary appears to have passed unnoticed in England.

Sir George Martin has been elected President of the Madrigal Society. An excellent choice.

Cape Town has reason to be proud of its musical achievements. The recent annual Cape Town Municipal Choral Festival—held in the City Hall during the first week in August—was even more successful than those previously held. The programme of the five concerts forming this enjoyable music-making included Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' Berlioz's 'Faust,' and Elgar's 'King Olaf.' The orchestra (80 players) and chorus (350 voices)—formed by the combined choral societies of Cape Town and suburbs —co-operated in giving some remarkably good performances to large and keenly-appreciative audiences, including the Governor of the Colony. In regard to the soloists, specially engaged from England, it is only necessary to mention their names to show that the thing is well done in Cape Town: Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Albert Archdeacon. Moreover, as the festival is under the auspices of the Corporation, the Municipality accepts full responsibility under this important head, though there is not much, if any, anxiety in this respect. These gratifying results are for the most part due to the energy and tact of Dr. Barrow Dowling, the able conductor of the festival and a much esteemed musician of Cape Town. For many years he had to fight an up-hill battle in order to realize his artistic ideals, but he has conquered in a manner which calls for sincere congratulation and good wishes for future efforts. Preparations are already being made for a similar festival to be held next year; and it is hoped that before long—say, in 1909—Dr. Barrow Dowling, his orchestra and chorus, and the soloists from England, will together make a concert tour through Cape Colony, whereby the inhabitants thereof will be enabled to listen to masterpieces of choral and orchestral music worthily performed.

How long should a concert last? We have a fairly extensive acquaintance with concert-goers, and our observation is that two hours are all-sufficient for the assimilation of good music finely performed, and much less if the interpretations are poor. This is particularly the case with regard to orchestral concerts, and in this connection we note with gratitude that Dr. Richter, in arranging the programmes of the London Symphony Orchestra concerts, seems to share our experience and opinion. The two concerts of this organization, noticed on p. 808, concluded at about ten o'clock. It would be interesting to know whether any complaints as to short measure have been received by the concert-givers, and, if so, whether they equal in intensity the many private protests constantly made at the excessive length of similar concerts given under other auspices. It may be said that it is easy to go away when one has had enough. But suppose, as is often the case, the later items in the programme are novelties or favourite works that one specially wants to hear? In this connection may we express the hope that the Philharmonic Society, whose enterprise in the coming season deserves the hearty support of Metropolitan musicians, will take steps to bring into the region of fact the announcement as to the time of conclusion that appears with commendable hardihood in the programmes? As it is, the much augmented interval, harmonious as it is, might with advantage be diminished.

Sir Charles Santley is the first instance of a vocal Knight. The veteran baritone is to be warmly congratulated on this distinction, one of the most popular of the 'birthday honours' bestowed by his Majesty the King.

Of musical discoveries there seems to be no end. Songs by Lortzing, pieces by Paganini, have recently turned up, but of more important names may be mentioned Mozart, to whose hitherto unknown Violin concerto reference is made on p. 808. In addition to the foregoing, Beethoven's 'Elf Wiener Tänze' have been not only recently published by Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel, but they were also performed at the third subscription concert given by the Hambourg Quartet on November 19, at Bechstein Hall. These dances are supposed to be identical with those mentioned by Schindler, in the earliest edition of his Biography of Beethoven, as having been written by the master for some musicians who played at an inn near Mödling, where they met the composer. They are preserved among the archives in the Thomasschule, Leipzig, and have long been known, but regarded as probably the compositions of Weber. Dr. Hugo Riemann, however, has examined them, and from internal evidence he has come to the conclusion that Beethoven wrote them, and his reasons he gives in the recent publication of which he is the editor. The dances consist of waltzes, minuets, and Ländler, or 'Länderer,' as they were named. The music is scored for strings and wind instruments. The music is interesting, though, as one might expect, it does not represent the great Beethoven of the 'Missa solemnis' period, a work upon which he was engaged in 1819, the year in which he is supposed to have written the dances in question.

The striking success of Madame Tetrazzini in La Traviata' and 'Lucia' at Covent Garden is a reminder that il bel canto is not as dead as many of the younger generation of opera-goers had supposed. Nothing in art that has ever been really alive—alive, that is, with true human feeling—can die; and the application of this truism to the present case is that the old and honourable art of il bel canto has been, and to all appearances will be again, the vitalising factor in opera. It has been charged with being a weakness and a snare; performances of the old Italian masterpieces have been sneered at as 'concerts in costume,' and such mistresses of agilita as Jenny Lind and Patti have been disparaged as mere vocal gymnasts; but their triumphs have demonstrated, as Madame Tetrazzini's are doing, that even fioriture are more than decorative—that they have an essential place in the dramatic scheme of which they are part.

'The Proceedings of the Musical Association' (33rd Session, 1906-7) have now been issued. The following is a list of papers read and the authors thereof:

The sackbut	Rev. F. W. Galpin.
Spanish music	Rev. Henry Cart de Lafontaine.
Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach	Miss Emily R. Daymond.
The Antient Concerts, 1776-1848	Mr. James E. Matthew.
The emotional appeal in instrumental music	Dr. T. H. Yorke Trotter.
The English organ of a hundred years ago	Dr. Charles W. Pearce.
French Opera before 1750	Dr. John E. Borland.
Some thoughts upon the position of Johannes Brahms among the masters of music	Dr. H. A. Harding.

America ought to be a musical country. In the year ending June last the entries in the Government Copyright Bureau at Washington were 120,000 in number. Of these, 'musical compositions' headed the list with 31,401, 'periodicals (numbers)' coming next with 23,078.

Dr. E. W. Taylor, a native and a much esteemed musician of Stafford, has been elected Mayor of that town. Congratulations to Dr. Taylor.

Mr. G. T. Smith, of Birmingham, is probably the oldest living member of the Birmingham Festival Chorus, for he took part in the meeting of 1843, when Crotch's 'Palestine' was performed and Dr. S. S. Wesley, as solo organist, gave a remarkable display of his powers in playing 'O ruddier than the cherry' as a pedal solo. Mr. Smith writes: 'I have the first number of THE MUSICAL TIMES, and although in my eighty-seventh year, I am thankful to say that I can both play and sing now.' Who can estimate the enjoyment our veteran correspondent has derived from music? May it ever be a solace and delight to him in the eventide of his long life!

Ninety-six competitors entered for the prize of twenty guineas offered by Mr. W. H. Ash on behalf of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, of which he is a Liveryman, for the words of a Marching Song. The prize has been awarded to Captain W. de Courcy Stretton, late of the Royal Artillery. Sir Edward Elgar has undertaken to compose the music of the song, which will be published early next year by Messrs. Novello.

A recently-published Pianoforte concerto in D minor by Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach was announced for performance in the Beethoven Hall, Berlin, by Bruno Hinze Rheinhold, on November 28. The work is said to have been composed in 1749 for Frederick the Great. C. H. Bitter, however, in his 'Life of C. P. E. Bach,' mentions a Concerto in D minor, of 1748, and against the date is written 'Potsdam'; therefore, notwithstanding the difference of date, this apparently refers to the same work.

Susanne Morvey, a child only twelve years old, recently appeared at a concert in Berlin and played two pianoforte concertos—Beethoven's in E flat and Tchaikovsky's in B flat minor! Early débuts are more or less harmful, and in almost every case unsatisfactory; but whoever selected those two stupendous works for the little girl's first appearance deserves strong censure, and the child herself all sympathy.

What a strange thing it is that no one seems to have written an ode to an organist. There are odes to music-makers of all sorts—nightingales, skylarks, and even organ-grinders:

> Grinder who serenely grindest
> At my door the hundredth psalm, as Calverly sings, but not a single ode to an organist. This is hardly fair. Organists are among the best known and sometimes the best beloved of the purveyors of music to the community. Why should they be overlooked? The subject seems a fascinating one. Might not the 'Ode to an organist' open in this manner?

> O thou! who, perched upon thine oaken seat
> Dost trample mighty Bach beneath thy feet—

The following information was contained in the programme-book of a recent London concert:

MOZART - - Symphony in C major (Koechel, 338).

> In 1780, when this symphony was written, Mozart was living in Salzburg, where he had been born twenty-four years previously. During the preceding two years he had spent much time in travelling, visiting, amongst other places, Mannheim, etc.

Now we know why Mozart was so precocious.

ERNST LENGYEL.

Dr. Hans Richter has again given proof of his wonderful intuition in the discovery of a very remarkable boy-pianist. Ernst Lengyel von Bagota is his full name, but he is to be professionally known as Ernst Lengyel. The son of a Hungarian father and German mother, this gifted boy was born at Vienna on August 28, 1893; he is therefore only fourteen years of age. As a tiny child his natural love for music was first indicated by the attention with which he listened to the lessons given by his mother to her pianoforte pupils, and his interest became so great that when he was only four years old she began to give him instruction in music. So rapid was his progress that at the age of five years he played before a select audience at Budapest a selection of pieces which included the Rondo from Beethoven's 'Sonata pathétique' and Chopin's first Impromptu. On that occasion the newspapers hailed him as the 'Hungarian Mozart.' Following upon this phenomenal success he won a municipal subvention for carrying on his musical education (To think of an English municipality subsidizing a child-pianist!). He was then placed under the tuition of Professor Szendy, of Budapest, with whom he studied for six years. Master Lengyel played in public at Vienna and Budapest, when his extraordinary performances created quite a sensation in those musical cities. Dr. Richter, who is no admirer of prodigies, on hearing the boy play, said: 'This is no mere prodigy; it is an artist.' Is Lengyel a second Liszt? He is certainly much devoted to the music of that greatest of pianists. 'I can play Liszt at any time and at all times: Liszt's B minor Sonata is the piece I am most fond of playing,' he is reported to have said; but it is satisfactory to know that he also likes Beethoven and Bach, 'particularly the Appassionata Sonata and the Chromatic Fantasia.' A notice of the boy's first appearance in London, under the genial guidance of his sponsor, Dr. Richter, will be found on p. 808.

CHURCH MUSIC IN NORTHERN ITALY.*

As in his previous valuable writings on cathedrals, English and foreign, Mr. T. Francis Bumpus, in this his latest volume, has made architecture his main theme, but he keeps his ears as well as his eyes wide open and, while graphically describing 'frozen music,' he, as heretofore, records his impressions of the music he heard during his pleasant peregrinations. His Italian journey included Trent, Verona, Venice, Ravenna, Milan, and cathedrals and churches in Lombardy.

The limited use to which the great organ, at the west end, is put in Italian churches is referred to under Trent Cathedral:

> The organ, situated in the stone gallery at the west end, already alluded to, now broke in with ravishing effect. It was, however, only used for the interlude which, as I subsequently found in all the Italian cathedrals I visited at the time of service, is played between every clause of the Gloria in Excelsis, Credo, etc., the plain chant being unaccompanied. But when the Offertorium, Emitte Spiritum tuum et creabuntur had been sung, the instrument was heard to great advantage in a short piece, but of so solemn and church-like a character, that music and architecture seemed on this occasion at least to be thoroughly in accord.

At Verona—where, it will be remembered, Sir John Stainer died—the two organs in the cathedral are enclosed. To quote further from this interesting book:

> At half-past nine Terce was sung by the canons in the apse and by a choir of men and boys in the garb of every-day life in the gallery, before the organ which, in accordance with almost universal usage in Italy, is placed above the stalls. At Verona, and indeed in many another great Italian church, there are two organs thus situated, the cases of which are truly magnificent, being flanked by two lofty Corinthian columns, while the pipes are protected by painted shutters, thrown back when the instrument is in use.

The singing of the psalms in this cathedral evidently impressed Mr. Bumpus. He says:

> The psalms were most interesting, the verses being sung alternately to the plain chant by the canons, and in concerted parts by the choir in the gallery, not however, I thought, with much feeling or delicacy. Such a rendering was quite a novelty, as I had never heard the psalms chanted in a Continental church except to the Gregorian tones, with, in France, the occasional addition of an embroidery in the shape of the faux bourdon.

MILAN CATHEDRAL: VIEW ACROSS THE CHOIR, SHOWING THE DIVIDED ORGAN.

(From 'The Cathedrals and Churches of Northern Italy,' by Mr. T. Francis Bumpus.)

The fullest account given of a church service is that of Modena Cathedral, a very beautiful building possessing one of 'the loveliest of North Italian campaniles':

> Solemn Vespers of the Corpus Domini were about to commence when I passed from all the glory of the afternoon sunshine into the cathedral. As I set foot within the nave, where the first thing that attracted my wandering gaze was a black poodle dog, shaved in the most approved fashion, and calmly seated on the steps of one of the side altars, the organ > struck up a solemn piece, and the officiants—three priests and two choir rulers, all in cloth of gold copes—came slowly forth from the sacristy.

> Advancing up the dusky northern aisle, I mounted the stately escalier at the end of it, and took my station close to the parclose screen of the choir, ready to assist at the service. A small one-manual organ—the only instrument the cathedral boasts—stood on the floor against the northern wall of the quasi-transept, and about it was stationed a choir of men who sang the psalms in concerted parts under the baton of an ecclesiastic, while the antiphons were chanted to the plain song by the clergy in the apse of the high choir. The latter got a trifle flat, causing the faces of the outside choir, who, by the way, were in the garb of every-day life, to exhibit tokens of risibility, while sundry winks and nudges which passed between them had anything but an ecclesiastical appearance. The Office hymn, the Lauda Sion Salvatorem, sung to its proper ancient melody, was very enjoyable, but at the conclusion of the Magnificat the individuals in plain clothes above mentioned decamped, leaving the inside choir to get on as best they might, and making a good deal of unnecessary clatter as they descended the steps and went out along the aisle, through whose open door the sunlight playing on the pavement of the piazza in front of the cathedral produced a most charming effect.

Organ-playing seems to be at a low ebb in Italian churches, judging by some of the voluntaries Mr. Bumpus heard. At Verona

> The procession did not at once enter the choir but passed across the Cathedral to a chapel in the South aisle, where the Bishop offered up some preliminary devotions, the organist playing meanwhile the slow movement from the overture to Zampa! But then one does not feel surprised at anything he may see or hear in an Italian place of worship. Mr. Street in his Brick and Marble alludes to the abominably light opera music he heard in many a church, and which sounded, as may readily be imagined, very discordant within their solemn walls, adding that he had even heard a polka played by the organist of St. Mark's, Venice; and a friend whose veracity is not to be impugned informs me that one of the organ pieces played during High Mass at Milan was the Largo al factotum from Rossini's Il Barbière di Siviglia!

The following summarises the opinion which our author formed of Italian church music during his travels:

> Many a student of ecclesiastical music starts for Italy under the impression that he will hear the sublime strains of Allegri and Palestrina, Orlando di Lasso, and Vittoria in the land of their birth, but when he arrives there he will find himself woefully deceived, Experto crede. Although my visit to the Land of Song extended over the whole of June, which last year embraced the great festivals of Pentecost, Trinity Sunday, Corpus Christi, the Sunday within its octave, the Nativity of St. John the Baptist and St. Peter, spent respectively at Verona, Bologna, Modena, Piacenza, Pavia, and Turin, each containing a cathedral of the first class, the music I heard in them was of the feeblest and most trivial description. Travel certainly expands the mind, but it destroys many a pleasant illusion.

In conclusion, the book is a most readable one from cover to cover. It is fully illustrated and beautifully got up. To anyone interested in church architecture or church music, no more suitable Christmas present or New Year's gift could be found than 'The Cathedrals and Churches of Northern Italy' by Mr. T. Francis Bumpus.

SCHUBERT'S (UNFINISHED) SYMPHONY IN B MINOR.

By Sir George Grove, C.B.

Allegro moderato. B minor.
Andante con moto. E major.

These two movements, and nine bars of a third, are all that exist of Schubert's Eighth Symphony.

They were composed in the year 1822, in company with the opera of 'Alfonso and Estrella' and the Mass in A flat. The autograph manuscript—now in the possession of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, Vienna—is on oblong paper, freely but very neatly written, with great grace in the writing, and with but rare corrections. The first page is dated 'Vienna, Oct. 30th, 1822.' This was no doubt the day on which Schubert began to write, and judging from the dates marked on his other Symphonies, the two movements probably occupied him no more than a week or ten days to put on paper. For the Scherzo he made considerable sketches, which are also preserved in the library of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, Vienna, but they do not seem to have satisfied the composer, and were never completed. The Unfinished Symphony remained in manuscript and concealed till the spring of 1867, when it was published by Spina, of Vienna, and it was first performed in this country at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concert of April 6, 1867.

Symphony No. 6, in C, was performed at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts of November 21, 1868, and March 12, 1881. No. 7 (in the key of E) is a sketch, or skeleton, of an unprecedented nature, the work being complete from beginning to end, as to the leading parts; but the score is not filled up after the middle of the first Allegro. [This Symphony, which bears the date 'August, 1821,' was given by Ferdinand Schubert to Felix Mendelssohn, who, it is said, intended to have completed it, an intention which his premature death prevented him from carrying out. The score then came into the possession of Paul Mendelssohn, the composer's brother, who presented it to Sir George Grove. The symphony was ultimately completed by Mr. John Francis Barnett, and performed at the Crystal Palace Concerts of May 5, 1883, and March 8, 1884. See a paper, by Mr. Barnett, on the subject, read before the Musical Association on June 9, 1891. Proceedings, vol. xvii., 1890-91, p. 177.—Ed. M.T.]

Four years and a-half had passed between the Symphony of 1818 (No. 6) and that under notice, and in the interval Schubert had become a man. If we wish to know what that interval did to him, we have only to listen to this B minor Symphony, and to bear No. 6 in mind, and we shall not be in doubt. That, though full of the fire and fusing power of real genius, was coloured by all sorts of antecedents. It reflected Haydn, it reflected Rossini, it was the work of a youth—a splendid youth—but still a youth open to all the influences and impressions around him. But, as in the case of a youth not less remarkable, it was the time for 'swallowing formulas,'* and here in his 'Unfinished' Symphony we see Schubert, after swallowing and digesting all the formulas that his predecessors had to administer, giving them out in his own truly original and independent forms and colours. While the Symphony of 1818 was continually recalling some obscure or half-obscure reminiscence, that in B minor never (except perhaps in one place) suggests a thought of anybody or any music but Schubert and his own most characteristic strain. In fact the gap between the work of 1818 and the work of 1822—between the ages of twenty and twenty-four—is both wide and deep.

---

* Carlyle on Mirabeau in his French Revolution, vol. i., Book IV., chap. iv.

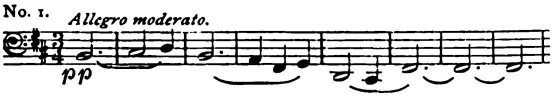
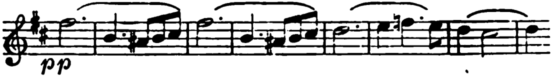
I. There is here no introductory movement as there is in the other Symphonies by this master; but the Allegro commences at once with the following mysterious passages in the violoncellos and double basses:

No. 1.



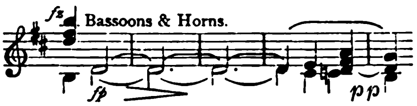
It is immediately followed by a melody of a wild gipsy character in the oboe and clarinet (notice the F natural in the sixth bar), accompanied by the violins in a semiquaver figure of appropriate vagueness:

No. 2. Oboe & Clarinet.



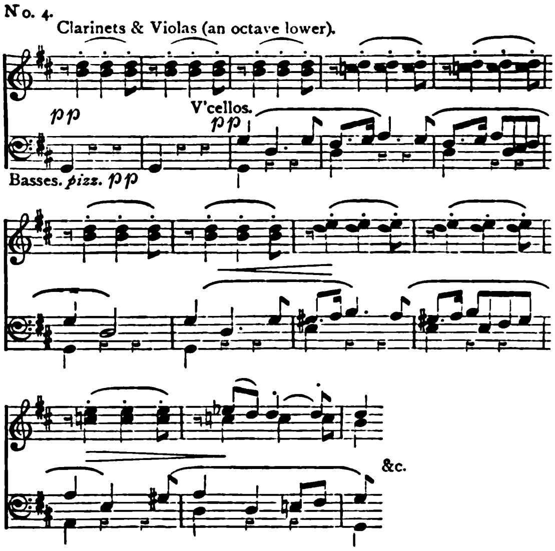
This—finished up by short blasts of the brass, at once effective and suggestive—is very soon succeeded by the 'second subject' of the movement, in everything but tenderness and beauty a complete contrast to the first—but in those qualities as complete a rival. The second subject is in G, and the transition from B minor to the new key is managed in the following simple manner, the long holding note imparting a peculiar suspense to the transition:

No. 3.



The new subject—not altogether unlike that in the first movement of the string quintet in C by the same composer—is first heard in the violoncellos, accompanied by the clarinets and violas in syncopated notes, and is then taken up by the violins in octaves:

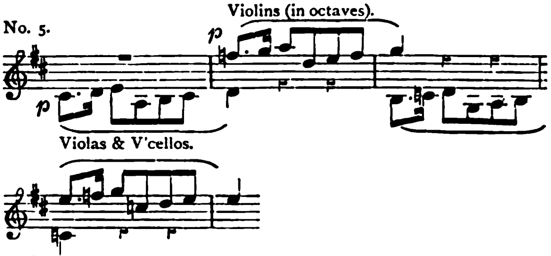
No. 4.



This artless and charming theme is played with and brought back again and again, and interrupted by bursts of wild savage modulation through which its simple familiar grace passes unscathed. If this Allegro be, as it must be, a true picture of the mind and heart of its composer, what a combination of simple gaiety with terrible gloom and distress must have reigned therein!

A phrase out of the last quotation gives rise to some imitative exchanges between the violas and violoncellos on the one hand, and the violins in octaves on the other, supported by sustained notes in the flutes and clarinets, and sounding like an echo of the beautiful theme:

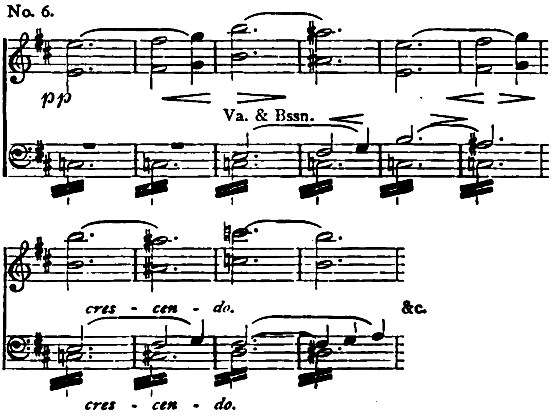
No. 5.



Then the theme itself returns once more, and closes the first section of the movement. This is then repeated, and we arrive at the 'working-out.'

The whole of this development section is full of personal feeling, of the history of cruel disappointments and broken hopes. It begins with a modified version of the original passage for the basses and a phrase borrowed therefrom—the violins in octaves, the violas and bassoons answering in imitation—so instrumented as to convey a curious cold, forlorn feeling, like that in the analogous place in the Finale of Schubert's Symphony in C:

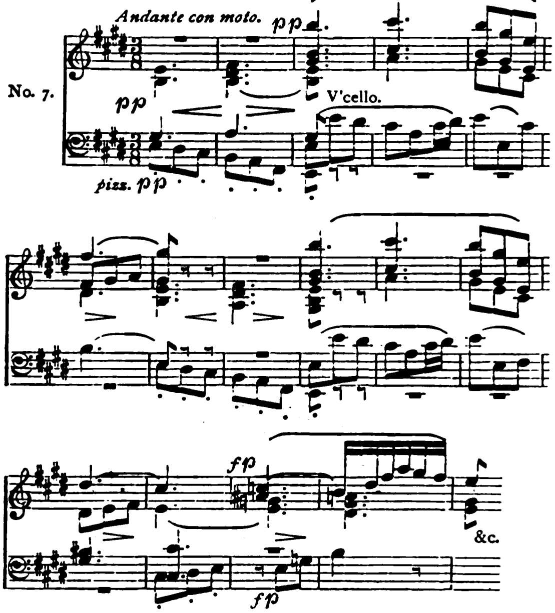
No. 6.



There are some passages where a long gradual ascent is succeeded by a sudden fall; others where the syncopated accompaniment proper to the lovely second theme is heard; and yet Schubert's depression is too great to enable him to utter the accents of hope and peace conveyed in the subject itself. In fact, this section exhibits the most unmistakable picture of keen expectations, indulged only to be disappointed. And who can wonder? Conceive oneself the possessor of gifts such as those which Schubert possessed; imagination in its grandest, wildest, and most delicate flights; tenderness to a degree which no poet or composer ever surpassed, and for proof of which we need turn to no other work than that now before us; melody such as few musicians have been gifted with; facility and power of expression which Mozart himself might have envied; and yet all these rich endowments not sufficing to give their possessor his proper place among his fellows, or even to lift him above the cares and miseries of the lowest station in life! Difficult as it is to believe, we are forced to accept the testimony of his associate Lachner, who told a friend of the writer's that Schubert looked just like a cabman—wie ein Fiaker. We also know from other equally trustworthy sources that he often had to go without his dinner! Conceive the distress of a man thus gifted and thus placed, and we shall no longer wonder at the tones alternately so touching, so wild, so artless, so gloomy, so furious, which appeal to us more or less from all Schubert's compositions, but from none so irresistibly as from this.

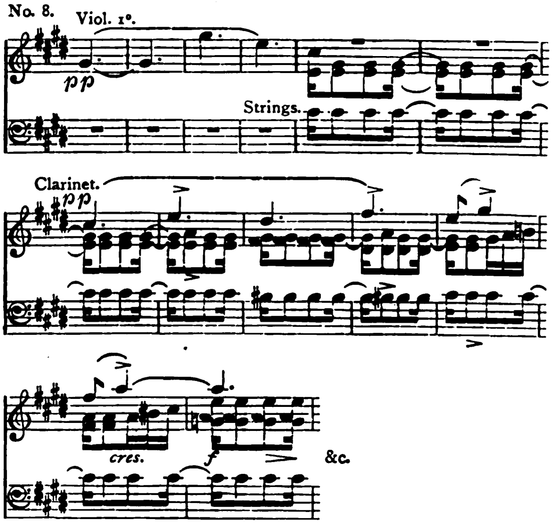
II. The second movement, Andante con moto, if less tragical in tone, is not less touching than the Allegro. It is throughout a miracle of wild, tender grace. It opens with a phrase in the horns accompanied by the basses in a descending scale pizzicato, which leads into the melody of the principal theme (in the violins) and serves to punctuate and divide the periods of the movements throughout:

No. 7.



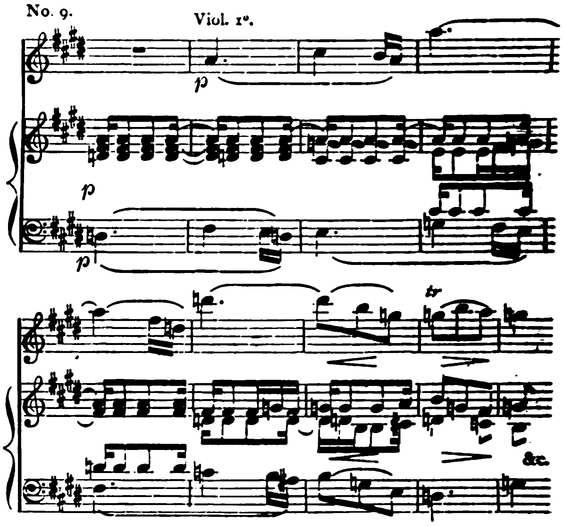
The second theme of the movement, heard first in the clarinet and then in the oboe, and accompanied by an agitated figure in the violins and violas, is indescribably touching in its character. It is heralded by a short passage in the first violin alone, calling attention, and, as it were, proclaiming silence for it, and gently leading into two bars of syncopated accompaniment:

No. 8.



This beautiful, speaking melody is continued for eleven bars longer, and is then taken up in the key of D flat by the oboe; but it soon goes off into imitations between oboe and flute, which show us what grace and beauty were at last to come out of the play of the wind instruments so frequent in the earlier Symphonies. In the latter portion of the movement the theme is used in the basses, with an imitation in the first violins at the distance of one bar:

No. 9.



After this the return to the first subject, pianissimo, by short phrases in the oboe, flute, clarinet and horns, is nothing short of magical.

So far the published movements. The commencement of the Scherzo is as follows:

No. 10. Allegro. Tutti. Unison.

So is left incomplete a work which for its nameless charm and its power over the listener is undoubtedly Schubert's finest and most characteristic orchestral composition. The treatment of the wind instruments throughout in any other composer would be called masterly. To Schubert it seems to have been simply native. So absolutely is the art concealed that the effect is everything and the means are nothing. In no other piece of music, perhaps, is the feeling so entirely produced that one has been in communication with the very person of the composer himself.

[As an interesting sequel to the above analysis, the following letter, written by Sir George Grove to Mrs. Wodehouse, may be quoted from Mr. C. L. Graves's 'The life and letters of Sir George Grove, C.B.' p. 368.—Ed. M.T.]

Lower Sydenham, S.E.,
April, 1891.

'. . . . How infinite are the gradations of feeling! so very near to each other and yet so different—I thought this when I listened to those two wonderful movements of Schubert's B minor Symphony. What miles they are above F.M.B., in some particulars even above ——. Please forgive me! you know my feeling for him (B.), and yet if one judges by the transport that is in it, one cannot doubt. It is not that it is greater. It is dearer, nearer. Isn't it strange how critics can hear those sweet, great things, and (I suppose) enter into them, and yet never show it by a word in their wretched accounts? Could you write down an account of the performance of the B minor and not by ten words just let the world know that it had fetched, transported you, tho' you had no room for more than ten lines?'

OLD-TIME CONCERTISINGS IN AMERICA.*

Newspapers, as sources of information, are invaluable to the historian of music. Concert-programmes are frequently thrown away or are treated as so much waste-paper, though in course of time they may become interesting. A case in point occurs at this very moment. On the desk of the present writer is the programme of the Gloucester Musical Festival of 1868, which contains the following item :

> Intermezzo Religioso (Orchestral) · Hubert Parry.

Here then is a record of the first appearance of the genial Director of the Royal College at a Festival, who made his début in such good company as Tietjens, Sims Reeves, and Santley, with Sainton as first violin and S. S. Wesley as conductor. Even in days when musical critics and impressionist writers on music were unknown, newspaper advertisements furnish valuable information, as those who dig in the field of research know full well. One such worker is the author of 'Early concert-life in America,' Mr. O. G. Sonneck. As chief of the Division of Music in the Library of Congress, at Washington—a post no less worthily held by Mr. W. Barclay Squire at our British Museum—Mr. Sonneck has had splendid opportunities of consulting the files of old newspapers in the National Library on the 'other side,' the result of his painstaking research being a most interesting book that is as readably attractive as it is historically valuable.

Mr. Sonneck divides his 338 closely but clearly printed pages (and they are large pages) into four sections : (1) Charlestown and the South ; (2) Philadelphia ; (3) New York ; (4) Boston and New England ; preluding and following these with an Introduction and Conclusion, to which succeeds a capital index. It is, of course, impossible to follow our author throughout his comprehensive survey of seventy years, covering four different centres of musical activity. Space will only permit of a few extracts here and there, samples such as should induce many readers to reap the rich harvest of information contained in this admirably-compiled record. And here it may be stated that Mr. Sonneck only touches very slightly on early opera in America, as he hopes soon to complete a comprehensive essay on this subject.

The earliest allusion to a public concert in America which Mr. Sonneck has found dates back to 1731, but he is quite prepared to hear of or to discover some earlier reference ; still, early in the 18th century is a good start for a young country like America. To begin with 'Charlestown and the South,' it is hardly necessary to say that some of the early concert announcements are of a very amusing description. For instance, one advertisement states 'The vocal part by a gentleman, who does it merely to oblige on this occasion.' How very good of him ! Fireworks were occasionally added as an extra source of attraction at open-air concerts and 'cold supper prepared at a moment's warning, with additional refreshment,' whatever that additional refreshment may have been. 'Young Misses to be admitted gratis,' so another advertisement states. One item in a programme reads : 'The Marseilles Hymn, in English—By Mrs. Pick' ; at another concert 'The Stabat from the music of the celebrated Italian composer Jacchiny [? Sacchini] will be sung in latin by three or four voices. To conclude with the Sacred Glee of ô Filii, ô Filiae ; & Hallelugha on the harp, bass, and violin, sung in latin by four voices.'

Under 'Philadelphia' we find an interesting echo of the Three Choirs Festival in a long advertisement which begins :

> College of Philadelphia, April 4, 1765.
>
> For the benefit of the Boys' and Girls' Charity School.
> On Wednesday evening next there will be a Performance of Solemn Music, vocal and instrumental, in the College Hall, under the Direction of Mr. Bremner. The vocal parts, chiefly by young gentlemen educated in the seminary, and the words suited to the place and occasion, being paraphrased from the Prophets and other places of Scripture, upon the plan of the musical performances in Cathedral's, etc., for public charities in England.

One settler at Philadelphia in 1769, 'John Gualdo—the wine merchant from Italy, but late from London'—was quite a character. He not only 'adapted and composed music for every kind of instrument' and sold instruments, but 'kept a servant boy, who at a moment's notice copied any desired fashionable piece of music, and taught ladies and gentlemen how to play on the violin, German flute, guitar and mandolin, etc.' Choral music in Philadelphia received an impetus through the energies of Andrew Adgate who, in 1784, founded by subscription 'The Institution for the encouragement of Church Music,' also called 'Institution for promoting the knowledge of psalmody.' In 1786 Adgate organized a musical festival, entitled 'A grand concert of sacred music for the benefit of the Pennsylvania Hospital, Pennsylvania Dispensary, and the Poor, for whom there has hitherto been no regular provision.' At this festival, held in the Reformed German Church, the performers numbered 280—band 50, chorus 230—a large executive force for the city of Philadelphia in the year 1786 ; moreover, 1,000 tickets were sold at 'two-thirds of a dollar each.' The programme included 'An anthem, taken from 2d. of Solomon's Song, by Mr. Billings, "I am the Rose of Sharon, and the lily of the vallies,"' while the performance concluded with Handel's Hallelujah chorus. An account of the festival appeared in the Pennsylvania Packet, of which the following extract may serve as a model of style for present-day musical criticism :

> At 11 o'clock the doors were shut, and after a dead silence of about 5 minutes, this feast of harmony began with Martini's famous overture, which was performed with such a propriety of expression that could the author himself have been present, he would not have thought his composition disgraced, or, the ideas he intended to convey, misunderstood.

Mr. Adgate had charge of a curious entertainment thus described :

> On Saturday, the 5th of April [1788], in the Hall of the University, Mr. Ely's school will have a public exhibition, consisting of vocal music. Introductory address. A variety of declamatory pieces and dialogues. The Messiah, a sacred poem, to be spoken by twenty boys, in white robes, who will all speak in unison. The whole will be interspersed with vocal music, suitable to the occasion, and close with the favourite anthem, the Rose of Sharon [by Billings].

That score of boys clad in white robes implies a surpliced choir. Some curious announcements appear from time to time, e.g., 'a concerto de riots for the violin,' and at the Opera House, Southwark (Penn.) :

> On Monday the 23rd of June [1788] will be presented a Concert, between the parts of which will be delivered (gratis), a Comic Lecture in five parts, on the disadvantage of Improper Education exemplified in the History of Tony Lulmkin.

---

* Early Concert-life in America. (1731-1800.) By O. G. Sonneck, Leipzig : Breitkopf & Härtel. 1907.

In regard to the Philadelphian section of the book, Mr. Sonneck is probably unaware that the 'Musical Directory' of 1794—a rare book—contains the names of no fewer than thirteen professional musicians, vocal and instrumental, whose addresses are given as 'Philadelphia.' Why they should have been included in an English directory, published in London, it is not easy to explain.

One of the earliest musicians mentioned under 'New York' is William Tuckey (died 1781), a former lay-clerk of Bristol Cathedral, who did much to raise the standard of church music in the city of his adoption. He appears to have arrived in New York in or about January, 1753. In the New York Mercury of March 11, 1754, a long advertisement appeared which begins thus :

William Tuckey, Singing Master, desires to inform all lovers of Psalmody that in order to encourage and amend the singing in publick congregations in this city, all persons may be taught by him on reasonable terms. As a great expectation of encouragement in this way, was the only motive which induced him to leave the cathedral of Bristol, whereof he was for several years a vicar choral, and clerk of a parish also in the said city, places of considerable profit and on an establishment both for life ; and not meeting with the encouragement he expected, is resolved to teach here no longer than one year more, which may be depended on.

Mr. Tuckey then went on to state his teaching and other qualifications :

Not only in church musick, in all its branches, viz. Services, Anthems, Chaunts, Responses and Psalms, according to the English, Dutch, French or Italian method ; but also in the knowledge of a thorough base, and composing music in parts both vocal and instrumental ; management of musick for concerts, etc.

He also undertook :

To compose or set to musick any piece on any subject, divine or moral, either in prose or verse, and adapt the musick according to the sense of the subject, for either a single voice, two, three, four or more voices, and for any sort of instruments, with or without a thorough base, for the organ, harpsichord, or spinet, on application to him, and a moderate satisfaction. Specimens of his composing may be seen at any time, by any gentlemen or ladies, who desire it, and understand musick, he having several pieces for three, four or more voices, accompanied with almost all sorts of instruments, and his own composition.

It would seem that our National Anthem was first sung in America at Tuckey's benefit, April 21, 1769, as 'by particular desire the concert [was] to end with God save the king.' Moreover, at Tuckey's benefit in the following year, given at 'Mr. Burns's Room,' New York, January 16, 1770, Handel's 'Messiah,' or rather a portion of the oratorio, was first performed in America. The announcement must be quoted in full :

CONCERT OF CHURCH MUSIC.

First Part. Some select instrumental pieces, chosen by the gentlemen who are performers : Particularly a Concerto on the French Horn by a gentleman just arrived from Dublin [? Mr. Stotherd].

Second Part. A Sacred Oratorio on the prophecies concerning Christ and his coming ; being an extract from the late Mr. Handel's grand oratorio, called the Messiah, consisting of the overture, and sixteen other pieces, viz. air, recitatives, and choruses. Never performed in America.

The words of the oratorio will be delivered gratis (to the ladies and gentlemen) who are pleased to patronize and encourage this Concert, or may be purchased of Mr. Tuckey, or by others for six Pence.

As it is impossible that a performance of this sort can be carried on without the kind assistance of gentlemen, who are lovers of music and performers on instruments ; Mr. Tuckey will always gratefully acknowledge the favour of the gentlemen who assist him.

Tickets to be had of Mr. Tuckey at eight shillings each. To begin precisely at 6 o'clock.

While on the subject of the 'Messiah,' reference must be made to an early, if not the earliest, analytical programme—of a kind—in America. At the First Uranian Concert, on April 12, 1787, the 'Syllabus' (programme) of the concert contained some curious annotations called 'Remarks'; those on Handel's Hallelujah Chorus are transcribed literatim et verbatim :

The HALLELUJAH CHORUS from the Messiah. By Handel.

(Introduced by three bars of Instrumental Music)

	Remarks
Hallelujah :	(Repeated often)
For the Lord God omnipotent reigneth :	[Here the voices unite]
Hallelujah : (several times) For the Lord God, etc.	[By the Counter, Tenor and Bass]
Hallelujah : (several times) For the Lord God, etc.	[1st, by the treble ; 2d by the tenor and bass, and then by the counter and tenor, whilst the other parts, through the whole of this passage, are repeating Hall. in every variety.
The kingdom of this world, is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ	[Chorus]
And he shall reign for ever, etc.	[A beautiful fugue]
King of king, and Lord of lords :	[By the Treble and Counter in long notes ; whilst the tenor and Bass repeat 'for ever and ever, Hal.' in quick notes with intervals.]
King of king, and Lord of lords :	[Two or three times in very low notes ; by the Treble : whilst the Counter, Tenor and Bass are repeating, 'for ever and ever, Hal.' often, in quick notes, with intervals : The effect is wonderful.]
And he shall reign for ever and ever (often)
King of King, and Lord of lords :	[Several times : the harmony very full]
And he shall reign, for ever and ever, Hal.	[often : the last Hal. very slow]

Our space is exhausted, but enough has been said to induce many readers on this side of the Atlantic to peruse Mr. Sonneck's instructive and entertaining pages. In a future edition of the book a slight error on page 19, due to the confusion of initials, should be corrected. Mr. W. H. Husk, and not Mr. W. H. Hadow, was the author of the article on 'Vauxhall Gardens' in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians.' Finally, while on the subject of names, Mr. Sonneck records an organist named De Villers, which a printer turned into 'Devillers.'

Church and Organ Music.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

As nine years have elapsed since the issue of the last Report to the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral, it began to be thought that no more of these interesting documents would be issued, but the publication of 'Musical services in St. Paul's Cathedral' has dispelled that idea. This quarto book, containing upwards of one hundred pages and prefaced by the Succentor, the Rev. S. J. Childs Clarke, contains much information on 'Music and other matters connected with the choir and choral services chiefly from Easter, 1890, to Easter, 1907.' The 'Report' section of the volume refers to the selection of music, the choir library, daily services, special services, changes in the choir, &c.

In regard to the selection of music, the Succentor says:

> St. Paul's, least of any of the great churches, can ever afford to overlook the claims of the later composers in favour of 'old masters,' considering the debt which we owe to the devotion and genius of her modern musicians. The name of Sir John Stainer will ever be associated with the great revival in the beauty and devotion of her services, and the work which he inaugurated has been faithfully carried on, as every one knows, by Sir George Martin and his able assistant, Mr. Charles Macpherson.

The Musicians' Company finds a place in the Report in the following paragraph:

> Not the least interesting event of recent date, was the coming of the Worshipful Company of Musicians to Evensong on November 22nd (St. Cecilia's Day). The members of the Company came in their robes and were given seats in the Choir. It was a happy inspiration that this Ancient City Company should associate itself with the music of St. Paul's in so marked a manner, and it is hoped that this may be the first of a long series of such annual visits.

Half the book is taken up with the Forms of Special Services which have been held in the Cathedral since 1898—those Services 'which may be considered of National importance, or of peculiar interest in the history of the Cathedral.' The collecting together of these Forms of Special Services under one cover will prove useful for purposes of reference.

For the first time the Report is procurable by purchase: it is published by Messrs. R. E. Thomas & Co., 24, White Street, E.C., at the price of 2*s*. 6*d*.

By the sudden death of Mr. Sidney Barnby on October 31, St. Paul's Cathedral has lost an old and faithful member of its choir. His connection with St. Paul's covered the long period of thirty-three years, he having been appointed to the office of assistant vicar-choral at the age of twenty. The vacancy in the Corporation of Vicars Choral caused by Mr. Barnby's death has been filled by the appointment of Mr. Henry J. Dutton, who became an assistant vicar-choral at St. Paul's in 1878, after having been in the choirs of St. John's College, Oxford, Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, and Ripon Cathedral. Mr. Dutton's musical career began when, as a boy, he entered the choir of St. John's College, Oxford, in 1863. He sang there for nearly six years.

At St. Paul's Cathedral, on the evening of November 14, the thirty-fourth annual festival of the London Church Choir Association was held under the skilful direction of Dr. Walford Davies. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to settings in B flat by Mr. W. H. Harris, the anthems being Wesley's 'Ascribe unto the Lord' and Handel's 'Worthy is the Lamb.' Dr. Walford Davies's fine tune to Bishop Walsham How's hymn 'To Thee our God we fly' was sung as a processional, as was Mr. Charles Macpherson's effective music to 'O thou holy, heavenly wisdom.' Two of the hymns sung were prize-tunes by Mr. Gerald Bullivant and Mr. Sydney W. Toms. Mr. F. B. Kiddle, organist of Marylebone Parish Church, rendered efficient service at the organ.

DR. TURPIN'S FUNERAL.

The funeral of Dr. E. H. Turpin took place on October 30 amid every manifestation of the respect in which he was held. The first part of the service was held at St. Bride's Church, Fleet Street, of which he had been organist for nineteen years, the congregation including a large number of London and country organists. Simplicity characterized the service, the music sung being Psalm xc., to Felton's single chant, and two hymns—'Brief life is here our portion,' to Gauntlett's tune, and the Rev. Baring-Gould's fine Easter hymn, 'On the resurrection morning,' sung to Dr. Turpin's devotional 'Mansfield.' Sir George Martin, who presided at the organ throughout, gave a deeply impressive rendering of the Dead March in 'Saul' as the remains were removed from the church on their way to Highgate Cemetery for interment. The year of Dr. Turpin's appointment to St. Bride's Church was 1888, not 1889 as stated in the obituary notice on p. 722 of our last issue.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Dr. F. J. Sawyer has been elected honorary secretary of the Royal College of Organists in succession to the late Dr. E. H. Turpin. At the first Council Meeting held after the death of Dr. Turpin, the following testimony to his life and work in regard to the College was placed on the minutes of the proceedings:

> The Council desires to place on record its deep sense of the very great loss this College has sustained through the death of its Hon. Secretary, the late Dr. E. H. Turpin. Joining the College in its earliest years, he was in 1875 elected to the important office of Hon. Secretary, and retaining that office until his death in October, 1907, for a period of over thirty-two years, he devoted his great gifts to the service of the College. By his wise counsel and high artistic ideals he was very largely instrumental in guiding this College towards the attainment of that proud and unique position which it now holds, while his affectionate and generous nature endeared him to every individual member of the College. The Council feels that his life will always be remembered as a noble example of unselfish work dedicated to the service of the Art he loved so well, and to the furtherance of the highest interests of the profession of which for many years he was so distinguished an ornament.

HANDEL'S ORGAN AT THE FOUNDLING HOSPITAL.

Dr. C. W. Pearce, in the paper he read (April 16, 1907) before the Musical Association on 'The English organ of a hundred years ago,' states that in 1759 the organ said to have been presented by Handel to the Foundling Hospital had two further additional tones in each octave, viz., D flat and A sharp.' Now, what are the facts? Handel's presentation organ, contracted for in 1749, but not completed till 1751, was built by an amateur artificer, a Dr. Morse, of Barnet. It soon wore out, and in 1769, ten years after Handel's death, Thomas Parker built an entirely new instrument which contained additional notes in each octave. Detailed particulars of both these organs, derived from authentic sources, will be found in the article on 'The Foundling Hospital and its music,' which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of May and June, 1902.

Elgar's oratorio 'The Kingdom' (excepting parts 4 and 5) was devotionally sung at Lincoln's Inn Chapel on Sunday afternoon, November 17, in the presence of a crowded congregation. Mr. T. Powell conducted, and Mr. Reginald Steggall, organist of the Chapel, ably accompanied the work on the organ.

MR. ALFRED HOLLINS.

The Scottish Review of October 31 gives an interesting account of the recent tour of Mr. Alfred Hollins in South Africa. He gave recitals at Cape Town, Worcester, Port Elizabeth, Pretoria, Johannesburg, Germiston, Maritzburg, and Durban—in each place with the success which always attends his performances at 'home.' The article is illustrated by a photograph of Mr. Hollins, 'seated one day at the organ' in the City Hall, Cape Town, which depicts him as anything but 'weary and ill at ease,' for does he not manipulate every keyboard with consummate ease? Mr. Hollins literally 'took the cake.' It appears that about once a week two newspapers at Cape Town are in the habit of sending a round cake to anyone who has become 'the man of the moment.' So greatly in popular favour was the gifted organist from Edinburgh that both newspapers gave him the award; thus Mr. Hollins received two cakes. How sweet and pleasant must have been his current thoughts!

A VETERAN ORGANIST.

Mr. J. A. Matthews has severed his connection with the Parish and St. Matthew's Churches, Cheltenham, where he has held the offices of organist for upwards of forty-one years. Mr. Matthews's dismissal by the new rector called forth many manifestations of sympathy, one of which took the form of a cheque, presented to him, on behalf of the subscribers, by the Mayor (Alderman W. N. Skillicorne). The presentation took place during the interval of the first of two testimonial concerts given to Mr. Matthews on October 22, to celebrate the thirty-eighth season of his conductorship of the Cheltenham Festival Society. In acknowledging the gift Mr. Matthews, in alluding to the severance of his connection with St. Matthew's Church, said he did not know why it had happened; all he could say was that he had retired from an appointment he had tried to fulfil faithfully and honourably, and perhaps not unsuccessfully for forty-two years.

YORK MINSTER CHOIR OLD BOYS' ASSOCIATION.

Last summer the above Association was formed under the presidency of the Dean of York, with Mr. T. Tertius Noble, organist of the Minster, as one of the vice-presidents and honorary conductor of the male-voice choir. The operations of this commendable organization — how it would have rejoiced the heart of Miss Maria Hackett!—includes an Old Choir Boys' Magazine (York Minster), under the editorship of Mr. G. Arthur Scaife, master of the Choir School. The first number of this quarterly publication is a very interesting one. Prefaced by a portrait of the Dean, it includes a capital 'Foreword' from his pen, and articles on 'A plea for old music books,' by Mr. Barclay Squire; 'Choirmasters and choristers,' by Dr. Varley Roberts; 'Monuments and monumental inscriptions,' by Mr. Arthur Henry Brown, in addition to other readable matter. We wish the magazine and the Association all success.

The organ in St. Mary's Church, Lichfield, has been rebuilt and enlarged by Messrs. Nicholson & Lord, of Walsall. At the opening services the Mayor, Sheriff, and City Council attended in state, and the special preachers included the Dean of Lichfield, the Rev. Dr. Briggs, of Oxford (a former chorister of the church), and the Rev. C. E. McCreery. Special recitals were given by Mr. John B. Lott, organist of Lichfield Cathedral, and Dr. Arthur B. Plant, of Burton-on-Trent. Mr. Alfred D. Parker is the organist and choirmaster of the church.

PRESENTATIONS.

Mr. R. B. Woodward, late organist and choirmaster of the Parish Church, St. Helen's, Lancashire, has been presented with a cheque for £300 by the wardens on behalf of themselves, the vicar, congregation and friends in recognition of his valuable services to the church for nearly forty-seven years.

Mr. Felix Corbett has been the happy recipient of a gold English-made watch of the value of £50, upon which is inscribed: 'Presented to Felix Corbett, Esq., by the members of St. Hilda's Parish Church, Middlesbrough, in recognition of twenty-five years' faithful service as organist and choirmaster. 1882-1907.' He was also handed an album containing the photographs and names of the subscribers. In acknowledging these gifts—made at the annual tea (at which 800 sat down) and entertainment in connection with the Parish Church—Mr. Corbett said that during the twenty-five years of his organistship he had held over 1,000 choir practices, played some 4,000 voluntaries, and listened to 2,000 sermons! The choir of the church had previously presented him with a music cabinet and all Bach's organ works.

THE CHURCH ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

The Church Orchestral Society held its annual meeting on November 5, at Rayleigh House, Chelsea Embankment, the residence of the honorary secretary, the Hon. Richard Strutt. In moving the adoption of the report, the chairman (the Bishop of Stepney) lamented the extinction of 'the simple village orchestras that used to exist, and that 'ought never to have been allowed to die out.' The Bishop referred to 'a type of ludicrously complicated and most painfully and selfconsciously clever music' that was coming into use in churches—a type with which he, like many others, was evidently not in sympathy. The report recorded the good work the Society is doing in a quiet yet efficient manner under the able conductorship of Dr. G. F. Huntley. During the year under review the Orchestra has taken part in eleven festival services, including two oratorio performances at Winchester Cathedral.

Canon Walpole's 'People's Psalter' has now been issued with the same pointing as that of the 'Cathedral Psalter.' The editor claims it to be 'a plain book for those who wish to use the Psalms in Church with intelligence and devotion.' At the head of each Psalm information is given as to its 'occasion' (authorship, origin, &c.), 'application,' and 'use'; these, and the descriptive headings interspersed in the text, help to bring out the meaning of those matchless poems in Holy Writ which form the Psalter. The book includes the Canticles, the Athanasian Creed (with notes thereupon by the Bishop of Bristol), and the Litany, all similarly treated in a scholarly yet perfectly simple manner. Mr. Elliot Stock is the publisher.

Mr. Frank Osborn, Wilmslow Parish Church.

Mr. Percy O. Pedler, Highbury Wesleyan Church, Drayton Park, N.

Good news comes to hand from over the seas concerning the Adelaide Orpheus Society. Formed in 1888 for the practice and performance of part-music composed for male voices, the Society meets once a week throughout the year, except for about a month during the holiday season. The membership is at present about a hundred singing members. The subscribing members (also about a hundred in number) and the singing members pay one guinea per annum, which entitles them to three tickets for each of the four annual concerts. The amount thus raised enables the Society to give its concerts independently of the public, and a good and appreciative audience is thereby secured. The last most important work that has been performed is Mendelssohn's 'Antigone,' and the programmes that have been forwarded to us testify to the high standard of music that engages the attention of and forms enjoyment for the members. The conductor of the Adelaide Orpheus Society is Mr. C. J. Stevens, formerly of Birmingham, to whose efforts much of the success that has been attained is due. May all prosperity continue to attend its artistic endeavours.

WESLEY IN E.

Those critics who award such warm, and it must be added such indiscriminate, praise to cathedral music, and who, in some instances, give a substantial proof that they write conscientiously, by printing and publishing for sale no inconsiderable a portion of the same, can scarcely be aware how small is the amount of really excellent music in existence that can be considered strictly to belong to the school in remark. Their panegyrics of the school may be sufficiently accurate. All may agree that its best specimens are admirable, and display the most charming features of a devotional style. But, have they done all which might be expected of them when expressing themselves in a strain thus happily accordant both with their inclination and their interest? a strain of unmitigated eulogy? It is, after all, but a poor compliment which is so often advanced in our honor, and diffused so generally by the more serious portion of the press, that, namely, which results from a comparison of the best specimens of the English, with the worst of the Italian, schools of modern Church music; for, it is with the worst of the latter, that comparisons are on such occasions invariably made. However unsuited to our English Cathedral Service, the light flimsy Masses of Mozart and Haydn may be, they are at least the productions of great men, if their worst. Mozart, it is well known, thought as little well of them as any others could do; but 'little' as there may be 'in a name,' the Kings, the Scrogginses, Joneses, Porters, and Smiths, of Cathedrals!—what have they been known to do well? Truly, the present position of cathedral music in public estimation, is not such as to warrant our regarding that species of charity which 'thinketh no evil,' as, a friend. What said my lord Henley? * And it may be enquired, are there not choral establishments belonging to the royal palaces, the performances of which are believed to be objects of positive indifference to the sovereign? Inferior as the performance of cathedral service too commonly is, the inexpressive, unartistical composition performed, is by no means less palpable, or deserving of censure. Surely then, critics do but half their work when they expatiate on the qualities of the school, and omit to inform themselves of the real quantity of unexceptionable specimens in existence. As regards 'services,' the sensation resulting from well-directed enquiries might be painful indeed; that is, if the writer may presume to anticipate what he conceives to be a just judgment at their hands. But some little fear may, perhaps, be entertained that the judgment would not be always of the most healthy kind. Many of those who write with enthusiastic praise on the merits of the early vocal school, are known to be incapable of appreciating the beauties of more modern growth; can they truly appreciate the one, and be insensible to the other? if their love for the 'light of other days' were honest, could admiration fail them when its best reflections occur, as they frequently do, in, even the most capricious developments of, modern symphony? The true merits of all good composition will be apparent to the well-informed professor in the solitude of his study: nor can the feeble, meritricious creations of early times derive any importance in his mind either from appearing in square notes, or from being sung with their 'linked sweetness long drawn out' amongst the reverberating aisles of a cathedral.

But to return.—Of the authors in remark, it may perhaps, be allowed that the epigrammatic was within their reach: they could fill a page, without disobeying the claims of contrast, keeping, analogy, or losing sight of the general effect: but not so the Epic: their Te Deums were failures.—A volume was beyond their powers.

The adoption, the continued use, of these, the few attempts that have been made to improve upon them, the comparative want of success when the experiment has been tried, may all be urged, (and, it is presumed, with much plausibility) to invalidate the writer's impeachment of their unqualified excellence.

---

* 'One of the most desirable of these reforms would be in the present system of Church Music: in taking away such reliques of Popery as chanting, and all anthems, soloes, duets, voluntaries, &c., and endeavouring to make our psalmody simple, easy, and, above all, universal and congregational, a practice to be adopted and encouraged wherever, in the beautiful language of Mr. Montgomery, "there is a Church on earth training up candidates for the Church in Heaven.'" A Plan of Church reform, p. 35.

That there is no lack of 'appliances' at the present day, he has already shewn. Why these have not been put under requisition, to the extent to which they may, opens a wide field for enquiry: the nature of the present publication forbids any lengthened discussion on the present state of church music. It is, however, no easy task for the musician wholly to abstain where the subject is so interesting to him, and while it calls loudly for investigation. The importance of placing before the eye of the public just views upon this subject, cannot be unperceived by the Church musician. Not only is the welfare and advancement of a portion of his very numerous profession concerned,* but certain it is that the decencies and interests of religion itself suffer from the general dearth of good musical principles, and their corresponding development in practice; for, there are numberless instances in which a few, slight but judicious, efforts in the cause of improvement, would relieve the choral service from a condition which is absolutely unbearable to well-cultivated ears.

Among other well acknowledged authorities, there is one who, in such a cause, might take the lead with the happiest effect,—the talents, and position, of the truly estimable Professor of Music in the University of Oxford,† alike befit him for so honourable a post. Few are there to whose opinion equal deference should be paid; but he, alas! has 'an invincible objection to saying anything on the subject'—these are his words. A key to which, those who have been 'behind the scenes' in matters of church music, and who know how irregular and unsystematic,—how unbusiness like are its workings, how unpalatable is the tale which the musical profession are unanimous in telling about it,—will not require. Dr. Crotch was once the organist of Christ Church, Oxford; and as his secession from that office, some few years since, seemed scarcely regarded as a matter of any moment, he may naturally have concluded that public opinion was not sufficiently advanced on the subject of his art to appreciate anything he might say respecting it.

That reform can come without an appeal to some high standard, that it can proceed from any choral establishment which is deficient in competent musical authority, is impossible. Though fully aware of the use which may be made of the following observation, the writer unhesitatingly avers, that until some other qualification, than merely to have behaved respectably in an inferior office, to have been a choir-boy, deputy organist, or organist's apprentice, shall be required of the person who seeks the situation of cathedral organist, until something more is known by, and required of him in the higher departments of musical science than of late days has been the case, the result will be, what it is. The comparative immunity from the calls of a more active life, which the seclusion of the cloister is supposed to confer on those favoured members of our church establishment who compose cathedral bodies,—enabling them to devote themselves to that more recondite and valuable learning which 'cometh by opportunity of leisure,'—would, if it were extended, as perhaps it well might be, to the organist,—in all probability, not only induce the services of a higher rank of the profession than is commonly found at our cathedrals, but might enable such professors themselves to give their attention more immediately to the higher departments of the art, and to that pure and elevated branch of it, in particular, known as the 'Church School': new specimens of which are as loudly called for by the circumstances of the times, as by the smallness of the amount of any unexceptionable ones in general use.

But another mischief is, that, from the absence of good information in those quarters where it should exist,—from the deficiency of all accurate knowledge of the habits and feelings of the musical profession on the part of those in whom the right of election to musical offices in the church is vested,—and from the absence of every species of information concerning the just requirements of the art in its connection with public worship, in the same quarter—it is more than probable that when a professor of better standing does join a cathedral in this capacity, after the efforts of a few years, he will feel himself compelled to choose between his interest and his duty; and, either to relinquish such connections as he may have there formed, and leave it again, or, incur the disrespect of his profession by remaining in a position from whence nothing is seen to proceed for the advancement of his art, nothing deserving public approbation; without reference to higher motives.

It is a fact beyond dispute, that, while in its secular departments the art has been making the most rapid progress towards perfection, as regards the church it has remained almost stationary, or worse, for centuries. An idea obtains, in some quarters, that things should ever remain thus; that improvement is unnecessary. But if public opinion advances, the result of this is too clear.

The discipline of choirs, or rather the want of it, is another obstacle to improvement. Although as respects composition, the time may be gone by in which the musical composer could be expected to indulge a predilection for his art at the expense of his domestic comforts, by giving his time to the subject; still, something might be done in this respect wherever clever men were engaged in cathedral duties, were choirs in a state of efficiency and order: had choirs their fixed times for study and rehearsal, a great difficulty would be removed. But it is a fact, that, from the description of tenure on which, in many instances, lay choristers hold their appointments, there are no means of compelling such persons to give the necessary attention to self-culture; and that, absolutely,‡ a new Act of Parliament must be passed before they can be compelled to practise! At the late discussion on church affairs, in Parliament, a few strokes of the pen would have remedied this evil; but, alas! who there represents the interests of music and musicians? Church music has many sworn, but no true guardians; or this favourable opportunity for infusing new life into our choral service would not have been neglected.

Surely the musical affairs of the church should be rendered more conformable to the highly intellectual standard of present times. Could not the musical professorships of our Universities be made to aid in this object? the operations of these offices be greatly enlarged? Frequent lectures, with good practical examples, in the University towns, would inoculate the minds of those studying for the clerical office, with the principles of good taste, and a just view of the true position of the art and its professors, as connected with the church. Might not the University professors be allowed a voice in the election of cathedral organists? and the organists in those of the singers? Beyond all doubt, a very considerable improvement in the performance of Cathedral Service would soon, by this means, be effected; presuming, of course, that to these said professorships, appointments were made, both unexceptionable, and worthy the approval of the musical profession at large. It may be conceded that much zeal has appeared during the last year or two, in behalf of the art, amongst capitular bodies; and that some of that zeal has, perhaps, been 'according to knowledge.' No disrespect is meant, however, when it is suggested, that not every member of a chapter who is pronounced, in a cathedral town, to be 'very musical,' is competent to act with absolute wisdom in the affairs of music: and surely, no one can be impressed with a keen appreciation of truth in matters of art, keeping in mind the object of church music, who will ever rest satisfied where, in what is done, any but the highest standard is appealed to.

For thus digressing from the immediate object of a Preface, and for the discursive nature of the foregoing observations, the writer would urge, in apology, how difficult it is to touch on any portion of the musical discipline of the Church without discovering that great principles are involved even in minute details, and that on points of much importance, little or no real information exists at the present moment: and he feels that an apology might well be added for that which remains unsaid. Glad would he be if the hints thus thrown out, were deemed worthy the notice of those, who possess both the literary talent and the power, in connection with the public press, to do justice to this great subject. To suggest remedies, for the errors alluded to, may not be difficult, but the task of so doing, might better become a higher power than belongs to any individual member of the musical profession; but he would add, that as far as his own experience goes, it must be a very high and a very strong power that can succeed in effecting a general and systematic remedy. In particular instances, it may charitably be hoped that individuals exist who would do any reasonable thing for the improvement of the music of their church. But truly, at the present day, it is not too much to hope and expect that some general and systematic arrangement, might be effected, which would render the position of musical art and its professors, in connection with cathedrals, more consistent with the present state of things; a position which might be a guarantee to the public, that our choral worship was endowed with every propriety within the present reach of art. But so far from this being the case, the musical profession, as a body, can scarcely be said to have any voice in the matter, and its management is as completely in the hands of others, as it was at the period when the clergy knew and practised all the little which was known, and a musical profession was not in existence.

* But it is not on this ground that he presumes to plead the cause of improvement in Church Music. In this point of view it can only be interesting to his own profession; if one is excepted to whom the prosperity of all classes is known to be an object of kind, benevolent solicitude—THE SOVEREIGN.

† [Dr. Crotch.—ED. M.T.]

‡ There are many persons of this description employed at country cathedrals who have never had what the metropolitan professor would call a single lesson in music. [The 'metropolitan professor' here referred to is evidently Edward Taylor, Gresham Professor of Music from 1837 to 1863.—ED. M.T.]

For the appearance in print of certain portions of the following composition he would also offer a few words of apology. The Creed and Kyrie Eleeson (No. 2) were written for treble voices only, to meet an emergency which occasionally arose at one of the cathedrals with which he was connected, and were never intended for public inspection. Their performance, however, was the origin of the present composition, as a gentleman, Mr. Martin Cawood, of Leeds, on hearing the Creed performed, proposed to the author the completion of the entire service, undertaking to remunerate him for his work, and incur the sole risk and responsibility of its publication: the following is the result of this kind offer; and, however unworthy it may be, the good intentions of Mr. Cawood surely deserve notice, in times when an act of so much liberality is entirely without parallel; and when it is remembered that cathedral bodies rarely encourage (even by the purchasing of a few copies for the use of their choirs) such undertakings. Indeed, such parties seldom even condescend to notice any applications made to them of the kind. A fact which may astonish those who remember the nature of our choral service, and how largely the musician's art is, twice a day, called into requisition, throughout the entire year, in every cathedral and college chapel in the kingdom.*

So inconsiderate, so ungenerous has been the policy in which a church aristocracy, of late years, has conducted itself towards the professional musician! who cannot in any instance or point of view whatever, perceive the degree of encouragement and patronage bestowed on those high branches of his art of which the church, from its constitution and its daily usages, appears so much in need; and in behalf of which, one might naturally suppose, the best efforts of a civilized people would be perseveringly directed. The sculptor, the painter, the architect, have no complaints to urge against society on such a score; nor, in all probability, will the musician again; for the attention of the better class of professors is now, of necessity, directed to the secular departments of music; the successful cultivation of which not only reveals to the mind the highest beauties, the finest examples for study and practice, but, also, affords a degree of pecuniary recompense which, to the dependent, it must in common prudence, be an object of much importance to attain.

The Creed, thus alluded to, would not have been published by the author's desire. It was a youthful effort, is without merit, and was intended for private use. This will, it is hoped, be a sufficient defence against criticism in respect to this piece, as well as that of Kyrie Eleeson, No. 2, both of which belong to one date, and contain a well-known modulation, which is, it is believed, strictly the property of Sebastian Bach, (it occurs in a Credo) but is also met with in a chorus of that noble production of the pure and beautiful Spohr, 'Die Letzten Dinge,' where it is made the feature of a sequence.

And, in conclusion, he would express his fear that, from the nature of the precedent remarks, it may be supposed he considers he is presenting to public notice a work possessing all the merits, and none of the defects, to which allusion has been made. But, this is by no means the case, or the reference also made to the difficulties which beset such an undertaking would be needless. He would, however, guard against the degree of success which may attend its performance by provincial quires being considered a fair criterion of its merits; as on the publication of, perhaps, the most perfect work of a similar nature (a 'Service,' by the late Samuel Wesley,) it was so ill performed that a gentleman who holds a canonry in the cathedrals of both Oxford and Exeter, unable to distinguish between the defects of performance and those of composition, desired that it might never be used again: a judgment, however, which has since been superseded, and the work's great merits allowed: but if such was the temporary fate of a work of unquestionable genius, from its happening to be somewhat dissimilar to the 'Services' which had been sung by the choir of the cathedral in remark, (that of Exeter,) 'from their youth upwards,' a still less favourable one may be anticipated for the present, which, in fact, is a still further departure from common usages.

There is a simplicity, which, when allied with other great qualities in composition, it should ever be the student's utmost effort to attain; their union is perfection: but this, under the present disastrous circumstances of cathedral music, should hardly be expected of any one. Assuredly, in the present work, the writer aspires to nothing of the kind: still, he would hope that no difficulties occur in the following pages which a body of singers possessing average ability may not easily surmount.

The present Service occupies two or three minutes more in performance (calculating the entire Service) than the longest now in general use. A defect, which with others, of which the composer is already sufficiently sensible, he hopes, on again adapting music to these subjects, to rectify.

LEEDS, February, 1845.

* In London, a lady annually awards a gold medal, value five pounds, for the encouragement of the true Church School. This donation, which is called 'The Gresham Prize,' has existed some years; and, even now, it is believed, competition has not fallen into such perfect disrepute, but that some few among the earliest beginners in musical composition are observed to make their first essay, with a view towards publication, in this direction. [The lady donor of the Gresham Prize was Miss Maria Hackett, the choristers' friend.—ED. M.T.]

What painters, architects, and sculptors, might think were such an award held out for the encouragement of the higher departments of their respective arts, it is not difficult to imagine. But a Lawrence, a Barry, or a Chantrey, will allow, that in the course of history, periods may be instanced when the public mind has been as little advanced in respect to their high, and now thoroughly appreciated callings, as it appears to be at present on the subject of the great school of church music: when a heap of unhewn stone was a church, when the painter's work was valued at the cost of the material employed in its composition, and when sculpture did not exist; and then possibly, a donation of five pounds, might be viewed otherwise than as a mockery of the arts and their professors. True merit in their arts is now, happily, the straight path to honour, fame, and fortune; and our Prime Minister is so well satisfied that such should be the case, that he points to the fact, with pride, as an instance of the greatness and prosperity of the nation. But musical art, notwithstanding its various claims on the gratitude of society, especially as regards its connection with the worship of the church, this art, with reference to the higher branches of composition, has not a single instance of liberal encouragement to point to, not one of any kind whatever! A consideration of this circumstance should, perhaps, deter the the veriest tyro from again entering into competition for the 'Gresham Prize.' The few who have already done so, especially those who have gained the 'Prize,' are sufficiently punished by the fact of one of the two umpires employed to select the best candidate having declared that the awards hitherto made have ever been in opposition to his judgment; for that his colleague would always have his own way, and so, he would have nothing more to do with the matter.

Mr. Frank Kidson delivered an interesting lecture, with musical illustrations, on 'English Folk-song' at the Town Hall, Retford, on October 26. In the course of the peroration of his excellent discourse, this acknowledged authority on the subject said: 'The folk-songs which have already been gathered in at least show that even in the fragments we have a wealth of national melody second to none. If our folk-lore, as relics of old customs and superstitions, is to be sought for (as undoubtedly it should be), if anything that bears upon our past history is to be recorded, so certainly should our folk-song be collected; and I strongly urge all to bear a hand in the work.'

Obituary.

MR. H. R. GADSBY.

The death of Henry Robert Gadsby is recorded with sincere regret. The sad event took place, after a brief illness, at his residence, 53, Clarendon Road, Putney, on November 11. Born at Hackney, December 15, 1842, he was a fellow chorister of Sir John Stainer at St. Paul's Cathedral. In the early part of his career he was organist successively of St. Ann's Church, Blackfriars, Camden Church, Camberwell, and St. Peter's Church, Brockley. In 1884 Mr. Gadsby succeeded John Hullah as professor of harmony at Queen's College, London, and on the death of Sir W. G. Cusins, in 1893, he became professor of the pianoforte and director of musical studies at the same institution. He was one of the most respected professors at the Guildhall School of Music, having been appointed at the opening of the School in 1880, a member of the Philharmonic Society, and an honorary Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

(Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry).

Except for a few lessons in harmony which he received from William Bayley, master of the choristers of St. Paul's Cathedral, Mr. Gadsby was a self-taught musician. His compositions, always cast in a thoughtful and sane mould, covered a wide range of subjects, from the symphony to the simple anthem. For many years his creative gifts were recognized by Sir August Manns and Sir George Grove at the Crystal Palace, his first appearance there having been his overture to the cantata 'The Golden Legend,' on December 18, 1869. In addition to the above-mentioned overture, the list of Mr. Gadsby's compositions includes the following instrumental works: three Symphonies in C, A and D (the last-named, the 'Festal' symphony, in honour of Queen Victoria's Jubilee, produced at the Crystal Palace, November 3, 1888); Overtures 'Andromeda,' and 'The witches' frolic'; 'Intermezzo and Scherzo' (British Orchestral Society, April 21, 1875); Suite, 'The Forest of Arden' (Philharmonic concert, March 4, 1886); Organ Concerto (played by Stainer at the Crystal Palace, January 24, 1874); String Quartet in C (1875); Rondo piacevole, for pianoforte and flute (1875), &c.

His vocal works include Psalm xxx. (Henry Leslie's Choir, May 5, 1864); Cantatas 'Alice Brand' (1870), 'Lord of the Isles' (Brighton Festival, February 13, 1879), 'Columbus,' tenor solo and male voices (Crystal Palace, March 19, 1881), and 'The Cyclops' (Queen's College, Oxford, May 30, 1890); music to 'Alcestis' (composed specially for the first stage performance of the play, under the management of Mr. Charles Wyndham, Crystal Palace, December 12, 1876), 'Andromache,' Queen's College, London (1893), and Tasso's 'Aminta' (Queen's College, London, July 5, 1897); songs, part-songs, &c.

Under the heading 'Church Music' there can be placed to Mr. Gadsby's credit ten anthems, and some services, including two settings specially composed for the Festival of the Sons of the Clergy—a Cantate Domino and Deus Misereatur in D (1871) and a Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C, with orchestral accompaniment (1875), &c. He also wrote treatises on harmony and sight-singing.

Mr. Gadsby, whose interests included sketching and water-colour painting, was a much-esteemed musician, and his loss will be deeply deplored by a large circle of friends and pupils. His remains were laid to rest in Putney Vale Cemetery on November 14, amid many manifestations of respect. It may be interesting to record that a private performance of his 'Alcestis' music was given at the residence of the late Dr. W. A. Barrett, Denmark Road, Camberwell, on June 2, 1876. On that occasion the music was rendered by the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral, and the composer's father, Mr. W. Gadsby, read the passages of the play necessary to the elucidation of the story. Mr. H. R. Gadsby kindly contributed some pleasant recollections of his chorister days at St. Paul's Cathedral to the biographical sketch of Sir John Stainer which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of May, 1901.

CHIMES AND CHIME TUNES.

At the opening meeting of the thirty-fourth session of the Musical Association—held at Messrs. Broadwood's, Conduit Street, on November 19—a paper on 'Chimes and chime tunes' was read by Mr. W. W. Starmer, who for many years has given special attention to this subject; nothing that he has previously done, however, is of greater value or interest than this lecture.

Mr. Starmer began by saying that the origin of the word 'chime,' although somewhat obscure, is undoubtedly connected with the Latin 'cymbalum,' old German 'zimbel,' 'a small bell struck by a hammer.' The definitions are: (1) a set of bells in a tower, (2) a series of musical sounds, or tune, played mechanically, or otherwise, on such a set of bells. Very little information is available as to when chimes were first used, the only records being found in ancient church accounts and similar documents, which however show that they were common in the middle of the 15th and in general use during the 16th century. Chimes in the first instance were doubtless played by hand. Mechanical figures for striking the quarters and hours on bells were in use some time before the introduction of clock dials. Before 1298 there was a clock at St. Paul's Cathedral with such figures, described by Decker as 'Paul's Jacks,' the word 'Jack' being derived from 'jaccomarchiadus,' i.e., a man in a suit of armour, the figures being always so represented. One of the earliest records of chimes is of the year 1432, when 'Richard Roper was paid 20*d.* for mending the chymes' in Norwich Cathedral.

Chime mechanism, as distinct from clock mechanism, was invented soon after the introduction of weight clocks. Of the latter, Peter Lightfoot, Abbot of Glastonbury (1335), was one of the earliest, if not the earliest maker. In all probability quarters were first indicated by a jack striking a single bell, and later by two jacks striking two bells, the notes of which were a 2nd, 3rd, 4th or 5th apart. Such quarters, undoubtedly the most ancient, are now known as ding-dong or ting-tang quarters, and from their introduction up to the present time they have been more extensively used than any others in this country. Detailed information was next given of the chimes known respectively as Whittington, Cambridge (commonly called Westminster), and Tennyson (Carfax), the particulars of which were of exceptional interest; after which the chimes at Magdalen College, Oxford; Guildford, Holy Trinity Church; Norwich Cathedral; Beverley Minster; Canterbury Cathedral; the Benedictine Abbey, Fort Augustus; and the Roman Catholic Church, Cambridge, were fully dealt with.

A description was next given of ancient chime machinery, showing the simplicity of its construction and its limited capabilities. Correct time in the rendering of the music was impossible, because the chime barrel varied in speed according to the demands made upon it. All this inequality of movement has now been overcome by modern improvements, firstly by Messrs. Lund & Blockley, later by Messrs. Gillett, of Croydon, and more recently by Messrs. Smith & Sons, of Derby. These developments are principally in connection with the subdivision of the mechanical operations and the driving power.

As with quarter-chimes, it is absolutely impossible to fix any approximate date when chime tunes were first introduced. They must, of course, have been posterior to the time when bells were first re-cast and tuned according to the notes of the major scale. There are also very few tunes that can be played on less than six bells, so that this condition would bring us to the 15th century. In church accounts of the 16th century particulars are frequently found with respect to sums of money paid for the repair of the chimes. For instance, in 1586, at Loughborough: 'Pd. to Robert Claye for makinge the barrell for the chyme v*s*. iij*d*.' 'Pd. for greace for the chyme a pynte, iij*d*.' The Wellingborough church accounts of 1600 record: 'Also we appoynte for the newe chymes in the church (& other charges about the church) so that the same be sett in notes after the best manner of a tune, discreetly to be considered upon and amended from the foolish tune now in use—£4 in regard to the same chymes, &c.' At Market Harborough, in 1602, John Lea, of Lutterworth, clockmaker, in consideration of a yearly payment of 6*s*. 8*d*., bound himself to keep the chimes 'in as good, sweet, solemn and perfect tune of musick as ever the same was at the sight and judgment of a skilful man of musick to be chosen by the townsmen of Harborough.' But perhaps the earliest records in connection with chime tunes are those of Gloucester Cathedral in 1527 and 1553, detailed particulars of which will be read with interest when the entire paper is printed in the Proceedings of the Association.

Chime tunes gradually increased in popularity until, in the 18th century, every church of importance possessed a clock with quarter-chimes and chime tunes. Many of these old tunes are of the greatest interest. The lecturer played the following examples:

On three bells, North Coates (Lincolnshire), by the Rev. T. R. Matthews.

On four bells, Tinwell (Rutland), by W. S. Haddon.

On five bells, Hallaton (near Uppingham), Ancient.

On six bells, Wellingborough, a tune called 'Henrietta.'

On eight bells, Holsworthy, two tunes, by Dr. S. S. Wesley.

St. Bartholomew's Chimes, Dublin, by H. W. Vipond Barry.

On nine bells (eight diatonic), at Gloucester Cathedral, by Dr. John Stephens and Dr. W. Hayes respectively.

Mr. Starmer remarked that in selecting tunes for chimes many repeated notes, long successions of quick notes, or very long note values should be avoided. He emphasised the statement that no tune should ever be attempted on a smaller number of bells than it properly requires. The mutilation of well-known melodies was much to be deprecated. In this respect perhaps the National Anthem was sinned against more than any other tune. Words fail to describe such caricatures as:

In Dorset.

In Cambridgeshire.

The lecturer strongly protested against the absurd duplication of the so-called Westminster Quarters, particularly when attempted on six or eight bells—no fewer than sixty per cent. of the total number of chiming clocks made during the past thirty years play these quarters. He also urged that no tunes should be used for the purpose of chimes unless bells were available for every note required for the exact rendering of them without any alteration whatever.

Dr. W. H. Cummings was in the chair, and subsequently presided at the annual dinner of the Musical Association, held the same evening at the Criterion Restaurant.

THE OPERA.

Two notable events stand out prominently in the autumn season at Covent Garden. The first performance in England of Alberto Franchetti's 'Germania,' on November 13, and the début here of Madame Tetrazzini on November 2. 'Germania' was originally produced at La Scala, Milan, in 1902, and is its composer's fifth dramatic work, having been preceded by 'Asrael' in 1888; 'Cristoforo Colombo,' 1897; 'Fior d'Alpe' two years later; and 'Signor di Pourceaugnac' in 1897. The Italian libretto of 'Germania' is by Luigi Illica, an excellent prose translation of which was prepared by Mr. Claude Aveling for the Covent Garden performance. The period of the book is the German patriotic conspiracies to throw off the yoke of the French, terminating in the defeat of Napoleon I. on the plains of Leipzig in 1813. Interwoven with the doings of the conspirators is a love story in which three characters are concerned. Thus the libretto lends itself to emotional treatment, but the composer avoids the extravagant and hysterical, and the melodious music possesses a sincerity and manliness that excite esteem, and if it rarely increases the impressiveness of the situations it always adequately illustrates them. The performance reflected great credit on all concerned. Madame Giachetti, as the heroine Ricke, sang with great earnestness, and in the plaintive portions with sympathetic charm; Mr. Sammarco had many opportunities of showing his great abilities in the part of Worms, and Mr. Bassi gave a manly reading of Frederick Loewe. The Queen's song was beautifully rendered by Madame Edna Thornton, and Miss Ada Davies evinced considerable dramatic and vocal ability in the double parts of Ricke's sister and the drummer-boy. Mention should also be made of Mr. Wigley, who showed a lively sense of humour as a cynical minded bachelor, Crisogono. Mr. Panizza conducted, and secured an excellent ensemble. The opera was repeated on November 19.

Madame Tetrazzini, who made her first appearance in England at Covent Garden as Violetta in 'Traviata,' on November 2, is one of those rarely-gifted artists who combine a soprano voice of rare quality and exceptional compass with a keen dramatic intuition and an artistic and sensitive temperament that endow her singing and gestures with fascinating significance. The gifted lady, who is a native of Florence, has had eleven years' operatic experience, the last four of which have been spent in the Argentine. She therefore came to us a matured artist, and her success was immediate and so great that the house was completely sold out for her second appearance in the same opera on November 7. A still greater success was achieved by her impersonation of the heroine of Donizetti's 'Lucia di Lammermoor,' on November 15, her rendering of the 'mad scene' calling forth an extraordinary demonstration of enthusiastic appreciation. In both these operas it was her command of tone-colour quite as much as the perfection of her vocalization which so distinguished her performances, and one must go back to the time when Madame Adelina Patti was in her prime to find such perfect renderings of old Italian opera numbers. It should be added that the hero in each opera was personated by Mr. Carpi.

Next in public attraction has been the embodiment of Carmen by Madame Marie Gay, and a memorable performance of Bizet's opera took place on November 16, at which the King and Queen of Spain were present. Don José on this occasion was personated by Mr. Vignas, who was also associated with Madame Gay in a fine performance of 'Aïda' on October 24, when the Spanish artist sang as Radames, Madame Gay as the Princess Amneris, and Madame Litvinne as the slave girl. The last-named lady sustained the name part of Ponchielli's 'La Gioconda,' revived on October 29 with a cast that included the Norwegian artist, Miss Bryhn, as Laura, Madame Edna Thornton as Gioconda's blind mother, and Messrs. Luppi, de Luca and Vignas respectively as the melodramatic Badoero, the arch plotter Barnaba, and the hero Enzo Grimaldo.

Another artist who has been very prominent is Mr. Sammarco. He embodied Don Giovanni for the first time on any stage in the performance of Mozart's opera on November 6, when he was supported by Mesdames Litvinne, Lejeune and Lalla Miranda, who severally personated Anna, Elvira and Zerlina, and Messrs. Luppi, Wigley and John McCormack, respectively as Leporello, Mazetto and Don Ottavio, the cast being completed by Mr. Frank Arthur as the Commendatore. The opera was conducted by Mr. Percy Pitt. On October 26 Miss de Lis appeared as Nedda in 'I Pagliacci,' supported by Messrs. Bassi, Sammarco, Bada, and Albert Garcia, the last named making his first appearance as Silvio. Madame Giachetti, who has given several impersonations of Madama Butterfly, appeared for the first time as Mimi in 'La Bohème' on October 30, but the part seemed scarcely dramatic enough to give full scope to her abilities.

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The thirty-seventh season opened on November 7, according to time-honoured custom, with a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' Criticism on such occasions is principally directed to the quality of the choir, for this Society recruits its forces every year. The tenors are certainly the finest body of voices that have been collected for this section, and the tone-quality of the sopranos is equally rich and brilliant. The basses are somewhat lacking in resonance, a common fault of metropolitan choirs, but the contraltos are all that could be desired. The choral numbers of the ever-popular oratorio were delivered under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge with magnificent precision, and although in some numbers the dramatic intentions of the composer were not always realised, in many instances most impressive results were produced. The principal soloists were Madame Agnes Nicholls, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. John McCormack and Mr. Dalton Baker, the last-named showing notable advance in his interpretation of the rôle of the Prophet. The second quartet comprised Miss Clara Evelyn, Miss Maude Wright, Mr. Herbert Thompson and Mr. Graham Smart, while Mr. H. L. Balfour was at his usual place at the organ.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.—A MOZART (?) CONCERTO.

The first concert of the season—on November 2, at Queen's Hall—does not call for extended notice, as the programme was a more or less familiar one. Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony—not very often played now—was its chief feature, other orchestral pieces which bore it company being Berlioz's 'Carnaval Romain' overture, the 'Tristan' Prelude and Liebstod, and Lalo's ballet suite 'Namouna.' The last-named work, somewhat of a novelty, proved a very attractive feature of the afternoon's music, to which the charm of Miss Julia Culp's beautiful singing added further enjoyment.

To the original programme of the second concert, on November 16, was added a (so-called) 'newly discovered' Violin concerto (No. 7) by Mozart. What is its history? Seventy years ago the autograph, so it is said, was in the possession of Habeneck, the distinguished conductor of the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire, Paris, but since then it cannot be traced. A copy of this autograph is said to have been made by Eugène Sauzay, the son-in-law of Baillot, which afterwards came into the possession of his son, Julien Sauzay. This gentleman 'deemed it a filial duty to screen this copy from profane eyes'! Why? And then Professor Dr. Albert Kopfermann, chief of the music department at the Royal Library, Berlin, discovered a second copy from which the present score has been made. It is obvious that there are several weak links in this chain of evidence as to the authenticity of the concerto which are by no means strengthened after having heard it performed. One ceases to wonder why the work has so long laid in oblivion, for if the music is Mozart's, then it falls short of the greatness associated with that master. Miss May Harrison, who played the solo portion, was more successful in her interpretation of the Concerto by Brahms, which she played with remarkable intuitiveness for so young a performer, her interpretation giving evidence of gifts which doubtless will ripen by experience. The remainder of the programme—too long for an afternoon concert—consisted of Beethoven's 'Coriolan' overture, Tchaikovsky's Symphony in F minor (No. 4), and the 'Finlandia' symphonic poem by Sibelius. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted both concerts with his wonted alacrity.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A large audience was naturally attracted to Queen's Hall on November 4, the occasion being the first of six concerts given by the London Symphony Orchestra. The programme consisted of two symphonies both in the key of D—the 'Prague' by Mozart and No. 2 of Brahms, in addition to Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll' and Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' overture. It is hardly necessary to say that with such a body of players and Dr. Hans Richter as conductor, perfection was attained, but such was the fact which it is pleasant to record. The use of adjectives in describing the interpretations would be in the nature of an impertinence.

At the second concert, on November 18, the programme opened with an exceptionally fine performance of Elgar's overture 'In the South (Alassio).' As no new work was offered, the interest of the concert centred chiefly in the first appearance in England of the boy pianist, Ernst Lengyel, or to give his full name, Lengyel von Bagota. Dr. Richter is not reputed to be enthusiastic about the exploits of juvenile prodigies and, therefore, the introduction by him of Lengyel, who is only fourteen years of age, was of itself an exceptional testimony to the boy's extraordinary powers. The two pieces selected for the début were Liszt's Concerto in E flat and Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue. Lengyel's performance of these exacting compositions displayed a marvellous technique and, for his age, a masterful power to interpret. It is true that one occasionally felt conscious of making allowance for age, but nevertheless it was obvious that the boy bids fair to become one of the world's great pianists. A portrait and brief biographical sketch of Master Lengyel will be found on p. 788.

Grieg's 'Holberg' suite for string orchestra was performed, but it cannot be said to have made a special effect; for magnificence of playing and impressiveness of interpretation the performance of Beethoven's C minor Symphony must be described as the great achievement of the concert.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

One of the most memorable performances at the chamber concert on November 18, at Queen's Hall, was that of the Lento and Allegro giusto from a Pianoforte quintet (MS.) by Miss Katharine Eggar. In the slow movement is shewn ability to invent and develop melody, in the Allegro is apparent a lively sense of contrast, and both sections are full of promise of greater achievement. The composer took part in a praiseworthy rendering. Another student work included in the programme was an 'Andante-scherzo; for two pianofortes, by Miss Ethel Shepard. Encouragement is due to the pianists, Miss Gladys Vandamm and Miss Dorothy Gough; the flautist, Miss Edith Penville, and the violinist, Mr. Henry O. Parsons; and to the vocalists, Miss May Horton, Miss Alice Baxter and Mr. Leslie Mackay, all of whom gave proof, in more or less degree, of having profited by careful training. Mention is also merited of Mr. Sascha Davidoff and Miss Valentine Orde, who played a Serenata for two violoncellos by Piatti; of neatly executed excerpts from Glazounow's Novelletten (Op. 15) for string quartet, and of the Allegro vivace from Mendelssohn's String quintet in B flat.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

The first concert of the fifth season of this Society was given at the Queen's Hall on October 30. Berlioz's 'Faust' was the work presented. The choir displayed considerable fluency, and the tone was always musical if not conspicuously resonant. The playing of the orchestra lacked the unity of rhythmic attack so often called for in this remarkable work. This deficiency was most felt in the performance of the 'Hungarian march,' which failed to make its customary exciting effect. Madame Mary Conly was excellent as Margherita and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies was unusually realistic in his interpretation of Mephistopheles. Mr. Wilson Pembroke took the part of Faust, and Mr. Reginald Goord that of Brander. Mr. Henry Lewis was at his usual post as leader of the band, Mr. C. H. Kempling was organist, and Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted.

MR. VIVIAN HAMILTON'S CONCERTS.

Two orchestral concerts, given respectively on November 5 and 12 at Queen's Hall by Mr. Vivian Hamilton, call for record. The concert-giver is a pianist who studied under the late Mr. Dannreuther, and possesses considerable executive ability, but scarcely sufficient command of his instrument to justify his electing to be heard in Beethoven's Concerto in E flat. The orchestra was conducted by Mr. Emil von Reznicék, director of the Warsaw Philharmonic Society and Imperial Opera, but who did not show any special ability as a wielder of the baton. At both concerts he also came forward as a composer: on the first occasion with a Symphony in B flat named 'Ironic,' and at the second with the Overture to his comic opera 'Donna Diana,' which has enjoyed considerable popularity on the Continent. The symphony has the merit of being scored for a comparatively small orchestra, no trombones and only two horns being used. The writing is essentially modern in style, and the work possesses a certain suggestion of burlesque which, having regard to the title of the work, probably is intended The Overture to 'Donna Diana' follows the model of that to Smetana's 'Verkaufte Braut,' and is full of spirit and merriment. On November 12 was performed for the first time two 'orchestral impressions' severally named 'Harnham Down' and 'Boldre Wood,' by Mr. Vaughan Williams. They form part of a series of musical impressions of English scenery. The first is an Adagio of poetical but vague character, and a feature of the second, which is a kind of Scherzo, is a suggestion of the supernatural element permeating Meredith's lines:

'Enter these enchanted woods
You who dare,'

which are written at the head of the score. Mr. Hamilton also appeared as a composer with two songs for contralto and orchestra, which were chiefly remarkable for vagueness of tonality. They were admirably sung by Madame Edna Thornton. Three songs by Miss Ethel Smyth for contralto, and the unusual accompaniment of flute, harp, string trio, triangle and tambourine, were sung by Mrs. George Swinton at the second concert, but they proved more curious and ambitious than convincing. This concert concluded with the first performance of a 'Suite de ballet' composed by Mr. Hamilton.

MR. CHARLES WOOD'S SYMPHONIC VARIATIONS.

Miss Myra Hess, with the assistance of the New Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Thomas Beecham, gave a most artistic concert on November 14, at Queen's Hall. The talented pianist was heard in Beethoven's Concerto in G and in the Concerto in C minor by Saint-Saëns, playing in each with a womanly charm and engaging vivacity that elicited the heartiest manifestations of appreciation from her numerous audience. The concert opened with Mozart's Symphony in C (K. 338)—a little-known but charmingly graceful and vivacious work—and included the first performance of 'Symphonic variations on an Irish air' by Mr. Charles Wood. The melody taken is that known as 'Patrick Sarsfield,' and the variations thereon are thirty-one in number, arranged in four groups, having kinship respectively with the four movements of a symphony. Mr. Wood has written a work that is both clever and interesting, the sections being well contrasted, the part-writing resourceful, and the scoring rich and well balanced.

TWO FRENCH ARTISTS.

A series of six recitals given by two French artists, Mlle. Blanche Selva and Madame Jeanne Diot, the one a pianist, the other a violinist, commenced at Steinway Hall on November 18, but we can only speak of the first four. Mlle. Selva has given a Bach, a Beethoven, and a Schumann recital, and although the works of these composers which she interpreted were more or less familiar, the pianist's readings were of special interest. Her Bach playing was most satisfactory, while her rendering of Beethoven's Sonatas, Opera 106, 110, and 111, showed not only understanding of the music, but genuine feeling. Well-trained fingers also enable her to carry out her conception of the works. Mlle. Selva's readings of Schumann's 'Davidsbündler' and 'Kreisleriana' reminded us much of Madame Schumann, in the evidence she gave of being entirely occupied not with herself as pianist, but with the composer. Of Madame Diot we cannot yet offer a definite opinion. She has given only one violin recital, and two of her pieces were concertos with pianoforte accompaniment. For the present we will only say that she is an accomplished artist, and that her tone and technique are excellent.

MR. DELIUS'S 'APPALACHIA.'

The concert held at the Queen's Hall on November 22, with the New Symphony Orchestra, under the able direction of Herr Fritz Cassirer, was one of considerable interest. The programme consisted of four numbers, two of which were novelties, so far, at any rate, as London is concerned. Mr. Frederick Delius gave a concert of his own music here some years ago, which provoked considerable discussion. Since then several of his works, including an opera, have been produced in Germany. At the concert in question his 'Appalachia,' was given. It consists of variations on an old slave song for full orchestra and chorus, but the latter plays but a small part in it. There is power and character in the music, but at first hearing some of the harmonic progressions sound extravagant and at times harsh. Although the new orchestra played well, an extra rehearsal might have made some of the rough places plain. At the close the composer was twice called to the platform. The other novelty was the Dance from Strauss's 'Salome,' which is most characteristic as regards rhythm and colour. It was well performed, the conductor being both able and energetic. The concert opened with the 'Meistersinger' Overture and ended with Strauss's 'Heldenleben'; in the latter work the violin solo was admirably played by Mr. John Saunders, the leader of the Orchestra.

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

The principal feature of the 'Broadwood' concert on October 26, at Æolian Hall, was a new Pianoforte quintet in C minor by Mr. James Friskin, a gifted young composer trained at the Royal College of Music. The work comprises four movements pleasantly distinguished by clearness of form, melodious themes and directness of treatment. The most attractive portions are the second and third, the former partaking of the character of a Scherzo and the latter an Adagio sostenuto of grave but not lugubrious expression. With the composer at the keyboard and efficient string players in Messrs. T. Morris, H. Kinge, F. Bridge and T. James the work was admirably rendered and much applauded.

The Kruse Quartet party attracted appreciative audiences at Bechstein Hall on October 26, November 9 and 23. The Brussels Quartet made its reappearance at Bechstein Hall on November 13 and 18. The volume of tone was remarkable for richness and resonance, and the precision of attack, shades of tonal force and delicacy in pianissimo passages were enthralling. No finer quartet playing has been heard in London.

The Sevcík Quartet reappeared at Æolian Hall on November 15, and gave the first performance in London of a new Pianoforte quintet of typical Bohemian character by Mr. Novak. This work consists of three numbers, the finest of which is the second, consisting of variations on an old Bohemian 15th century folk-tune of wistful character.

The annual concert given by Mr. E. H. Thorne took place at Queen's (small) Hall on October 26, when the programme included the following compositions by Mr. Algernon Ashton; three pianoforte solos (Op. 125), played by Miss Beatrice Thorne; three songs sung by Mr. James Horncastle; and the Sonata in A minor for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 115), performed by Mr. E. H. Thorne and Miss Gertrude Ess. The two last-named artists also co-operated in Beethoven's G minor Sonata (Op. 5) and Chopin's Introduction and Polonaise (Op. 3). Dr. A. Herbert Brewer's 'Three Elizabethan Pastorals,' sung by Mr. James Horncastle, were included in the programme.

At the concert jointly given by Miss Ada Thomas, Mr. T. F. Morris, and Herr E. Krall, at the Æolian Hall on November 14, Miss Rosie Budd, the possessor of a sweet soprano voice, gave great pleasure by her tasteful and expressive renderings of songs by Purcell, Arne, and Mackenzie.

A very interesting concert of old music was given by the Chaplin Trio at Æolian Hall on November 4, and the Wessely Quartet furnished much enjoyment to their numerous patrons on October 30 at Bechstein Hall.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Much interest attached to the concert given by Miss Maude Gay at Steinway Hall, on November 6. As a former student at the Royal College of Music, she studied under the late Mr. Edward Dannreuther. In Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 101), Miss Gay showed a command of her instrument and power of expression that invested her interpretation with special interest. She also played, for the first time in London and with engaging vivacity a Capriccioso in B minor by the late W. Y. Hurlstone. Three songs by Edward Dannreuther, which included a charming setting of Tennyson's 'Sweet and low,' were admirably sung by Mr. Thomson, who also introduced two attractive new ditties respectively entitled 'Amaryllis' and 'Song of the three mariners,' by Mr. Hamilton Harty. Violin and violoncello solos were contributed by Madame Nettie Carpenter and Mr. Rubio.

Mr. Godowsky, at his recital at Bechstein Hall on October 29, gave more attention than he had formerly done to the æsthetic than to the technical side of his interpretations, with the result that his most recent renderings have certainly improved his artistic position in the opinion of connoisseurs.

Amongst other numerous pianoforte recitals recently given, record is due of Miss Norah Drewett's at Bechstein Hall on November 11, when this clever lady played with notable intelligence. Mr. Ossip Gabrilowitsch gave the first of two recitals at Æolian Hall on November 12, displaying a finished technique and great conscientiousness in his readings. On the same day, at Bechstein Hall, Mr. Howard Jones gave a recital of Brahms's music, which he interpreted in a manner that increased esteem for this accomplished artist.

Vocalists depend greatly on the weather, and the 'black' days experienced last month will easily account for the request for indulgence on the part of Miss Dorothy Purser, who made her first appearance at Æolian Hall on November 15. Unhackneyed selections of songs by Leonardo Leo and Legrenzi call for praise, and, so far as one could judge, her voice is good, while her style of singing showed careful training. Miss Maude Scruby played various solos with taste and skill.

Mention is due of the violin and pianoforte recital given by Messrs. Spalding and Cortot. The young violinist played in a more matured style than previously, and Mr. Cortot—an esteemed Parisian musician who made his first appearance in England on this occasion—proved himself to be a pianist of great technical facility and keen dramatic perception.

Musical Competition Festivals.

KEIGHLEY.

October 19 and 26.

This festival, which is called the Summerscales competition, in memory of the conductor of the Keighley Musical Union, who died in 1890, held its sixteenth annual gathering with success, from the musical point of view, although we regret to hear the financial result was not satisfactory. On the first day Dr. H. Walford Davies and Miss Edith Robinson (violinist) adjudicated. Miss Mary H. Wood, of Castleford, was an undoubted first in the senior violin class. The Skipton mixed-voice choir (Mr. N. Smith) gained a prize, and in a men's-voice choir section the Wyke Glee Union (Mr. T. Sykes) was successful. The combined choirs sang their pieces under Dr. Davies. In his adjudication he attributed some failures of intonation to carelessness.

On the second day Dr. McNaught adjudicated. Fifteen boy soloists sang two songs, and Stanley Townend, of Bradford, was awarded the prize. The tests for tenors were rather severe. They were 'Love's philosophy' (Pointer) and 'Onaway! awake, beloved' (Coleridge-Taylor). Mr. R. W. Hobbleshaw, of Bramley, gained the prize. The Craven Quartet was successful in the mixed-voice quartet class, and the Padiham Apollo Quartet, which displayed great ability, was first in the male-voice quartet class. A ladies'-voice choir section did not attract any entries. The chief mixed-voice choir section brought no fewer than eight choirs, some of which were remarkably well equipped for the tests, which were 'Let me the canakin clink' (McEwen) and 'The hunting song' (Benedict). The Bradford Vocal Union and the Harrogate Vocal Union, both under the experienced guidance of Mr. Hiram Ball, and the Saltaire Choir, under Mr. W. Lloyd Ashton, did remarkably well, but the Keighley Vocal Union, under Mr. W. S. Wilkinson, managed to get one mark ahead of the Bradford choir and was awarded first-prize. A still higher level of excellence was recorded in the male-voice choir section, although only three choirs appeared. The tests were Hegar's now famous choral ballad 'The phantom host' and a chorus, 'Song of freedom,' by Mr. Frank Davidson, a local composer of high aims. The Habergham Glee Union, under Mr. Ernest Hitchon, gave a thrilling performance of Hegar's piece. Often as this piece has been performed during recent years by the best male-voice choirs in the country, it may be doubted whether ever before it had been so magnificently presented as it was on this occasion.

The arrangements for the festival worked with great smoothness owing to the experience and businesslike organizing power of the honorary secretary, Mr. Allan Bradley.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS.

November 7, 8 and 9.

This competition continues to grow in importance. The entries this year constituted a record in the history of the festival. There were 191 vocal and instrumental soloists, and many choirs of various kinds. Some of the pianoforte playing was very promising, and the solo-singing classes attracted many highly competent vocalists. The second day was devoted to the children. The girls' solo section, in which the test-piece was Mendelssohn's 'Slumber song,' was especially successful. Four school choirs had as tests the whole of the nine folk and national songs comprised in 'A garland of songs, Set 2.' The victors, by a small margin, were St. James's girls (Mrs. Ashburner). At the evening concert the children combined to sing the whole cycle under the direction of Dr. McNaught who, with Mr. W. Griffith, adjudicated. On the third day the competition was open. The winning tenor soloist, Mr. Ernest E. Neale, came from Nottingham, and the winning bass, Mr. George Veevers, from Blackpool. The Alexandria mixed-voice quartet, from Bradford, sang remarkably well and was awarded a premier place, and a beautiful performance by the Lancaster Centenary Quartet gained the prize in the male-voice quartet section. Four female-voice choirs, all of first-rate capacity, sang the four-part song (unaccompanied), 'Some strain that once thou heardest' (Marie Wurm), with the result that the first prize fell to Mrs. Bourne's St. James's ladies' choir. The Lancaster male-voice choir (Mr. R. T. Grosse) gained a prize, and the Preston Vocal Union (Mr. H. Whittaker) was successful in the madrigal class. Interest centred in the chief class for mixed-voice choirs. Six choirs entered, but only five choirs sang. The test-pieces were 'Soul star,' by Havergal Brian, and 'The song of the pedlar,' by C. Lee Williams. Mr. Brian's piece is intricate and 'modern' in its idiom and texture, and demands considerable technical and interpretative ability to bring out its undoubted beauty and originality. It is pleasant to record that these demands were splendidly met by the excellent choirs that appeared. The Barrow Madrigal Society (Mrs. Bourne) has a great reputation, which on this occasion it fully maintained, and it had the satisfaction of adding one more to its plethora of laurels by winning the first place.

At one of the evening concerts Mr. Charles Tree gave a vocal recital in which he showed great versatility. Miss Winifred Wright, L.R.A.M., was the highly competent official accompanist, and Mr. T. J. Symons was the active and highly efficient secretary. The audiences were generally large and always greatly interested.

THE WORCESTER COUNTY (MASSACHUSETTS) JUBILEE FESTIVAL.

This important music-making, whereby the Worcester County (Mass.) Musical Association celebrated the completion of a half century of annual musical festivals, was held during the first week of October. The principal works performed were Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius' (Part I.), Horatio Parker's 'Hora Novissima,' and a new 'dramatic poem,' entitled 'Job,' composed by Mr. Frederick S. Converse.

In The New Music Review Mr. H. E. Krehbiel thus refers to the two native compositions, Professor Parker's 'Hora Novissima' and Mr. Converse's 'Job':

'The performance of "Hora Novissima" was the fourth that the oratorio has received at a Worcester Festival, the first being in 1897. I doubt whether the strong, noble, joyful work, so equable in its excellence, truly a gem in America's musical crown, has ever been sung better by the choir than it was on this occasion. I have heard it often in the course of the fifteen years since it had its first performance in New York. Meanwhile works have come and gone,—works by foreign as well as native composers;—they have been heard with honest and sympathetic interest and parted with without a pang. Yet, after all the years and all the experiences, Prof. Parker's work sounded to me as fresh and lovely as ever it did when first it awakened a sense of pride in the achievement by an American composer, the influence of which we all felt was to be more than fleeting and local. In view of the doings since of American composers (including Prof. Parker himself), it was a delight to listen to the outpourings of one who knew so well the compelling powers of genuine melody properly clothed in harmonic and instrumental garb that he had no dread of the obvious, and never checked the flow of his thoughts even if occasionally they ran into familiar channels. "Hora Novissima" is a genuine creation, because it is a spontaneous, unconstrained, natural utterance, and not a striving after things which are supposed to be the voice of the times. It has lived a decade and a half and has lost none of its vitality; it will continue to live because those who have heard it once, twice or many times will rejoice to hear it again, and still again, as did the audience at Worcester at this festival.

'Mr. Converse's new composition is a serious work, most admirably planned, and for the greater part carried out in a manner which must challenge the admiration of all judicious music lovers. The features in which it disappointed me were those in which it ran counter to my artistic convictions, my tastes, and my attitude toward a large part of what is called latter-day progress. Mr. Converse has with a fine fancy sought to differentiate between the personal utterances of Job and his comforters (whom he rolls into one to suit his poetic scheme) and the impersonal utterances of his chorus, to whom he gives a celestial mission as the hymners of the grandeur, beauty and unalterableness of the works of nature's God. For the latter he has found a beautiful and puissant voice in music which in melody and harmony is churchly—diatonic and modal. For the dialogue he adopts chromatic melodies, chromatic harmonies and the devices of modern orchestration. Unfortunately, Jehovah is also brought into this mêlée of passion, and since He speaks "out of the whirlwind" we have the modern storm-producing apparatus brought into play down to the silly wind-machine, which was borrowed from the property-room of the theatrical melodrama by Richard Strauss. Consciously, or unconsciously, Mr. Converse has brought into conflict idealism and realism, and it is the latter which fails to maintain itself, to uphold the dramatic principle for whose sake it is introduced. . . . Mr. Converse's "Job" is conceived in a spirit of dignity and sincere endeavour. So long as it remains in the realm of the ideal (as, for instance, in the first chorus with its Gregorian echo, the concerted number in which the psalm "Beati omnes" furnishes the textual substratum, and the opening and closing "Laudate dominum"), it is beautiful and uplifting; when it adopts the idiom of the modern Italian operatic veritists it falls fluttering to the earth.

The festival was conducted by Mr. Kneisel and Mr. Goodrich. The latter, who ably conducted all the choral works, appeared for the last time as the Festival Association's choral conductor, but not without being made to feel by the singers, the public, and the officers of the Association that his excellent work during many years had met with cordial appreciation.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, November 15.

The season opened with a surprising novelty. In the course of the summer a Society was founded for the spread of musical knowledge. The Society organized an orchestra of its own and named it the Viennese 'Tonkünstler-Orchester.' Symphony concerts have been arranged, and the first has already been successfully given. Together with the orchestras of the Philharmonic and of the Concert Society, it forms the third factor in the cultivation of symphonic music here. For the first year, Nedbal (formerly viola player in the Bohemian Quartet), Stavenhagen and Pfitzner have been engaged as symphony conductors, and Karbach, Wallner, Lehar and others as conductors of the popular concerts. Nedbal, whether of classical or modern works, gives a plastic, highly expressive and generally intelligible rendering; he displays temperament and 'go.' The tone of the orchestra is so excellent that one is apt to forget that the organization has only been recently established.

Ferdinand Loewe, at the Concert Society, has given admirable performances of Brahms's third, Beethoven's fifth, and Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphonies. At these concerts, too, was heard Mozart's 'recently discovered' Violin concerto. However interesting the music, one could not but wonder whether Mozart really wrote it: it is the work of a clever, well-trained, rather than a gifted composer; and even the violin technique does not appear to be Mozart's. In addition to this Concerto, Professor Petri played Joachim's Orchestral variations, in memory of the departed master, who only six months ago, together with his world-famed associates, performed all Beethoven's Quartets to enthusiastic audiences. Special performances were recently given in memory of the composers Edvard Grieg and Ignaz Brüll; of the works performed may be named Grieg's Pianoforte concerto and Brüll's Rhapsody for pianoforte and orchestra, Frl. Vera Schapira playing the solo parts.

Beethoven's ninth Symphony was performed at the Philharmonic Society under the direction of Schalk; it went well, especially the choral section. At another concert were played the same composer's C minor, and a seldom-heard but very original and engaging Symphony in B minor by Haydn. Schalk also conducted an extremely fine and impressive performance of Bach's B minor Mass at a concert of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde. Of the soloists the best were Frau Cahnbley (soprano) and Herr Senius (tenor). Specially effective were the difficult trumpet parts performed, according to Bach's original notation, by the long instruments constructed for that very purpose.

At the Opera House an excellent rendering of Puccini's new work 'Madama Butterfly' was given here for the first time, and in the composer's presence. Selma Kurz in the title-rôle was admirable. A change has taken place in the management of the Opera House. Gustav Mahler retires from the post of artistic director, and Felix Weingartner takes his place. In the branch of musical literature I would call attention to 'Das Handbuch der Clavierliteratur,' 1830-1905, by Adolf Prosniz, the former learned professor at the Vienna Conservatorium. The volume is small, but the outcome of long study and experience; it is a trustworthy book of reference. The author expresses his opinions freely, but he has thoroughly mastered the subjects of which he treats.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Philharmonic Society's second subscription concert was given on November 22, the principal part of the programme consisting of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius.' The solo parts were taken by Miss Phyllis Lett and Messrs. Gervase Elwes and William Higley. This work has been performed only once before in Belfast, and as a proof of the advance of musical culture in this city there has since been a general desire for a repetition of it. Both chorus and orchestra found the preparation for the performance most interesting and instructive, and the result was an excellent production.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In the Town Hall, on October 24, the Birmingham Festival Choral Society inaugurated its season's concerts with Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyam' (Part I.). The work had not been heard in Birmingham since its production at last year's Festival, and considerable interest was attached to this its second performance. Dr. Sinclair secured a remarkably fine rendering of the work, but the enormous difficulties of the orchestral score, wherein the composer reveals his extraordinary gifts as an orchestral colourist, were surmounted only to a certain degree, and we have yet to wait for a consummate rendering of this remarkable composition. The principals, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Frederic Austin, sang with enthusiasm and earnestness.

The Midland Musical Society gave its first concert of the season on October 26 before a large audience that completely filled our Town Hall, when Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed. The amateur portion of the orchestra was considerably augmented by a large contingent of professional musicians from the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, whereby quite an artistic and efficient reading of the overture and the accompaniments was obtained. The chorus formed a well-balanced body of singers, whose efforts were characterized by fine tone-quality and gradation of light and shade. Excellent work was done by the principals, Miss Hilda de Angelis, Miss May Seiber, Mr. Ernest R. Ludlow and Mr. William Bennett. Valuable aid was rendered at the organ by Mr. C. W. Perkins, and Mr. A. J. Cotton conducted.

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association's second concert of the season, given in the Town Hall on November 9, under Mr. Joseph H. Adams's conductorship, was of a miscellaneous character, the work of the choir being restricted to Gade's delightful little cantata 'Spring's message,' Webbe's part-song 'When winds breathe soft,' and the choral march 'Hail to thee' from Gounod's 'La Reine de Saba.' The singing of the chorus was bright and telling and excellent in well-balanced ensemble. The orchestra of the Association, supplemented by professional instrumentalists, did its work artistically. Among the purely orchestral items were Weber's 'Oberon' overture, Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite and Gounod's 'Funeral march of a marionette.' A feature of the concert was Mr. Arthur Cooke's masterly performance of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor, well accompanied by the orchestra. The vocalist was Miss Mary Lund, a London soprano gifted with a bright and well-schooled voice.

The famous Sheffield Choir paid its first visit to Birmingham, and gave in the Town Hall on November 7 a performance of 'Elijah' under Dr. Coward's conductorship. The voices numbered 300, and the orchestra was that of our local Symphony Band. The singing of the choir was quite remarkable for tone-power and exquisite gradation of light and shade, and above all on account of the almost overwhelming precision of attack. The performance created quite a sensation, and Dr. Coward and his choir were the recipients of an ovation at the close. The principals were Miss Lilian Adams, Miss Carry James, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Joseph Lycett. The Birmingham Concerts Society gave two orchestral concerts in the Town Hall, one on October 29, under Mr. George Halford's conductorship, the other on November 12, under the conductorship of Mr. Thomas Beecham, the founder of the London New Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Beecham—who made his first appearance here on this occasion and submitted a programme of pieces practically unknown to local audiences—has also been appointed conductor of the Birmingham City Choral Society.

The musical matinées given in connection with the Royal Society of Artists' autumn exhibition of pictures, have proved the best attended and most interesting since Mr. Oscar Pollack became director sixteen years ago.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The second concert for the season of the Society of Instrumentalists was held at the Victoria Rooms on November 2, and with the assistance of some local professionals several interesting compositions were creditably rendered. Mr. George Riseley conducted the first, and Mr. Harold Bernard the second part of the programme. Among the works performed were Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, Weber's 'Oberon' Overture, German's 'Nell Gwyn' dances, a Fantasie Caprice by Vieuxtemps (Mr. J. Duys, solo violin), and a selection from Offenbach's 'Contes d'Hoffmann.' The Apollo Glee Singers contributed at intervals some favourite part-pieces, the solo vocalist being Miss Teresa Blamy. There was a large audience, and the concert proved a great success.

At Colston Hall, on November 6, the Bristol Harmonic Male-voice Choir gave its annual concert, under the direction of Mr. Jenkins. In addition to the glees, Signor Natale Morro gave operatic solos, and there were songs by Miss Gertie Somerton and Mr. W. Morgan. Mr. George Riseley played with his accustomed ability on the organ.

The Clifton Quintet opened its season with a concert at the Victoria Rooms, on November 7. The executants were Messrs. Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), Percy Lewis (violoncello), and Herbert Parsons (pianoforte). Grieg's Quartet in G minor (Op. 27), and Beethoven's Quartet in C (Op. 59) were skilfully played. Mr. Lewis executed a Ballade and Serenade by Joseph Suk, and Mr. Herbert Parsons played two compositions by Chopin, and two Impromptus in B flat and C by Mr. R. O. Beachcroft, organist of St. Paul's Church, Clifton, which were well received.

The second ladies' night of the Weston-super-Mare Orpheus Society drew together a large number of persons at Knightstone Pavilion on October 29. Mr. Edward Cook (of Bristol) was the conductor, and the choir, numbering forty-three voices, was heard with pleasure in a carefully arranged programme. The balance of tone was good, and the interpretations of the different pieces testified to pains taken in the preparation.

At the first concert of the season, on November 16, Bristol Choral Society performed Gounod's 'Romeo and Juliet' at Colston Hall before a large audience. The choir and band numbered upwards of 500 performers, and Mr. George Riseley conducted. The music of the different characters was allotted as follows: Juliet, Madame Esta d'Argo; Stephano, Miss Eveline Gerrish; Gertrude, Madame Vickers; Friar Lawrence, Mr. R. Radford; Capulet, Mr. Frank Halpin; Romeo and Tybalt, Mr. H. Turnpenney; Mercutio, Mr. Montague Worlock. The unfamiliar work was excellently rendered, and the audience appeared highly gratified with the performance of the opera.

The Bristol Symphony Orchestra, formed in February last, made its first public appearance on November 20 at the Victoria Rooms, and under the direction of Mr. F. S. Gardner played effectively the overtures to 'Der Freischütz,' 'Die Zauberflöte' and 'Hansel und Gretel,' Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, and the Ballet music from Gounod's 'Faust.' The vocalist was Mr. Arthur Walenn, who sang with animation. There was a large and appreciative audience.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the first of Messrs. Paterson's Orchestral concerts, on November 11, Dr. Cowen conducted fine performances of Beethoven's 'Leonora' overture No. 3, Schumann's D minor Symphony, Tchaikovsky's 'Capriccio Italien' (Op. 45), a bourrée and hornpipe from Handel's 'Water music,' and a new march, 'Pomp and Circumstance,' by Elgar. Madame Blanche Marchesi was the vocalist, her contributions including Senta's ballad from 'The flying Dutchman,' a valse song by Johann Strauss, and four charming 'Bird songs' by Liza Lehmann, written for Madame Marchesi and sung at this concert for the first time in public. At the second concert, on November 18, Herr Max Fiedler, of Hamburg, conducted and created a highly favourable impression on this his first appearance in Edinburgh. The purely orchestral programme comprised 'Der Freischütz' and 'Tannhäuser' overtures, Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, the Prelude and Liebestod from 'Tristan,' and the Waldweben from 'Siegfried.'

A large and appreciative audience greeted M. Eugene Ysaye, the famous Belgian violinist, who was accompanied by his brother, M. Theo. Ysaye, pianist, on the occasion of his recital at Messrs. Methven & Simpson's first classical concert, on November 2. At the second concert, on November 12, M. Victor Maurel, the eminent French baritone, made a welcome reappearance, and quite captivated his listeners by a truly wonderful exhibition of dramatic vocalization. At the same concert, the 'New' Trio (Messrs. Ludwig Zimmermann, violin, Paul Ludwig, violoncello, and Richard Epstein, pianoforte, made its début in Scotland, and in trios by Haydn and Saint-Saëns revealed qualities of nuance which too seldom are heard in this branch of ensemble playing. At the third concert, on November 19, M. Thibaud, violinist, and M. Cortot, pianist, gave fine interpretations of César Franck's Sonata in A major and the 'Kreutzer' Sonata. M. Thibaud played Saint-Saëns's 'Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso,' and M. Cortot gave a transcription of an organ concerto by Friedmann Bach. Mrs. Henry J. Wood, accompanied by Mr. Wood, was the vocalist.

On October 29 the Edinburgh String Quartet (Messrs. Colin Mackenzie, J. H. Hartley, R. de la Haye and D. Millar Craig) performed quartets by Mozart (in A), Beethoven (in E flat, Op. 74), and Dvorák (in F, Op. 96).

Mr. Robert Burnett, whose fame as a baritone vocalist is now more than local, gave his annual recital on October 30. The programme contained no fewer than twenty-five songs, a considerable number of which were indicated as given for the first time in Scotland.

The annual recital of Mr. Paul Della Torre took place on November 4, at which his fine rendering of various pieces gave further proof of his interpretative powers.

Miss Marion Dalziel, assisted by Mr. D. Millar Craig, violoncellist, gave a vocal recital on November 8. Her voice is a mezzo-soprano of pleasing quality, and she was most successful in winning the appreciation of her audience. The violoncello solos of Mr. Millar Craig were an enjoyable feature of the concert, and Mr. R. W. Pentland accompanied.

The first of the group of Historical Concerts of the season, given in the University Music Class Room on November 6, took the form of an organ recital by Sir Walter Parratt. The programme ranged from Girolamo Frescobaldi to Max Reger, and Sir Walter's masterly exposition of his art gave unbounded pleasure to a crowded audience.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Just before the beginning of the regular concert season some minor events took place, among them being pianoforte recitals by Messrs. Frisken, Lowson and Hyllested, and vocal recitals by Mr. Thorpe Davie and Mr. George Martin. On November 4 the opera class of the Athenæum School of Music began a week's performances of Bizet's 'Carmen.' Both chorus and principals interpreted their parts quite creditably, but the outstanding feature of the performances was the splendid orchestral accompaniment. Mr. Henri Verbrugghen acted as conductor.

The annual concert of the Glasgow Select Choir took place on November 9. This was the first public appearance of the Choir under its new conductor, Dr. Davidson Arnott, whose choral ballad 'Young Lochinvar' formed an attractive item on the programme. The Glasgow Bach Choir, conducted by Mr. J. M. Diack, gave a good rendering of Bach's Magnificat in D and some miscellaneous pieces in the Bute Hall at the University on November 13. The organ accompaniments were skilfully played by Messrs. Herbert Walton and A. M. Henderson.

The Choral and Orchestral Union auspiciously opened its season's work on November 12, when Dr. Cowen and the Scottish Orchestra were warmly greeted by a large audience. The personnel of the orchestra is practically the same as last year, and a successful season is anticipated. The programme of the opening concert was on familiar lines, and included Beethoven's overture to 'Fidelio,' No. 4, and the third Pianoforte concerto, Schumann's Symphony in D minor, and the first performance here of Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' March, No. 4. The solo part in the Concerto was brilliantly played by Signor Busoni, and Dr. Cowen obtained the best from his band in the symphony. Elgar's new march proved a very popular number.

At the first Saturday Popular Concert on November 16, Dr. Cowen submitted a highly attractive programme, the more popular numbers being Beethoven's overture 'Leonora' No. 3, and Mozart's Symphony in E flat. Sibelius's march from the suite 'Karelia,' and Nos. 2 and 4 from Holbrooke's 'Scenes from Dreamland' were played for the first time here, the former being especially well received. An additional attraction was the fine singing of Madame Blanche Marchesi.

Associated with the Scottish Orchestra, the Choral Union gave a most successful performance of Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah' on November 19. The choruses were sung with all the verve and precision we have come to expect from Mr. Bradley's choristers in music of this type. Of the solo vocalists Miss Doris Woodall bore the honours in the part of Delilah, but excellent work was done in the other parts by Messrs. Lloyd Chandos, Frederic Austin and Montague Borwell. The accompaniments of the Scottish Orchestra left little to be desired, and Mr. Joseph Bradley conducted the performance with distinction.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the annual meeting of the Gloucester Orpheus Society, the committee's report showed a satisfactory financial result. Sir Hubert Parry was re-elected president, and Dr. A. H. Brewer, conductor. Several new members have joined the Society, and the attendance at the first weekly practice was one of the largest on record.

The Gloucestershire Orchestral Society decided at its annual meeting to undertake the following works for performance next season: Dvorák's 'From the New World' symphony, Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overture, Bach's Suite and Gavotte (for strings) and Saint-Saëns's 'Suite Algérienne.' The report for the sixth season of the Society stated that there was a balance to be carried forward of £36 2*s.* 7*d.*

The Gloucester Choral Society has decided to give at its first concert of the season Dvorák's 'Spectre's bride,' to be followed at the second concert by Haydn's 'Spring,' and Dr. Brewer's 'Sir Patrick Spens.' The testimonial concerts to Mr. J. A. Matthews, of Cheltenham, are referred to under 'Church and Organ Music' on p. 796.

Miss Marie Hall, with the Birmingham Orchestra, the Black Dike Band, Messrs. Dalton Baker, Busoni, Backhaus and Miss Ada Crossley are among those who have visited Cheltenham during the past month.

By kind invitation of the Duchess of Beaufort, a recital was given at Badminton House during the month by Mr. Haydn Gunter, a promising young Welsh violinist.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert given by the Orchestral Society on October 26 was entirely devoted to Wagner, and proved to be both financially and musically successful. Notably well played was the Vorspiel and Liebestod ('Tristan') and the Prelude and Finale of Act 3 ('Parsifal'). Mr. Granville Bantock was especially successful in conducting this congenial music, and Mr. Plunket Greene was the vocalist. At the Orchestral Society's first gentlemen's concert, held in the Myrtle Street Gymnasium on November 9, Bach's Suite in D, Mozart's ballet-music 'Les petits riens' and Dvorák's Suite in D (Op. 39) were performed, and the programme was completed by Elgar's Serenade for strings (Op. 20), a beautiful work well played. Mr. Bantock conducted, and Mr. Hamilton Harris, the possessor of a resonant bass voice, sang Purcell's 'Ye twice ten hundred Deities' with considerable effect.

At the second Philharmonic concert, on October 22, Mr. Granville Bantock's prelude 'Sappho' was heard with appreciation, and M. Ysaye played two violin concertos—Mozart's No. 3, in G, and Beethoven's in D. The vocalist was Madame Kirkby Lunn. The principal feature of the third concert, on November 5, was a fine performance of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor, in which Miss Fanny Davies brilliantly played the solo part. In addition to Rubinstein's Staccato Etude, Miss Davies also played one of Mendelssohn's 'Songs without words.' Next in importance was Strauss's 'Tod und Verklarung.' Interesting also was the first performance here of Mozart's 'Serenata-Notturna,' No. 6, composed at Salzburg in 1776, and scored for a string quartet and an orchestra of strings and drums. Mr. Herbert Witherspoon made a favourable impression by his singing, especially in Ambroise Thomas's 'Air du Tambour Major.'

The progressive policy of the Societa Armonica was evidenced at the opening concert on November 2, when Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony and Elgar's 'Froissart' overture were played. Schumann's Pianoforte concerto also found a place in the programme, but the unwisdom of presenting this beautiful classic without a rehearsal with the band was shown by the performance, although the soloist, Mr. Josef Greene, a young local pianist, played the pianoforte part exceedingly well. The vocalist was Mr. Ashbridge Miller. The assistance of Dr. Lierhammer gave vocal distinction to the concert given on October 25 by Miss Mary Turner, whose pure if not powerful soprano voice has been well trained. A word of appreciation is due to the violin solos of Miss Dorothy Bridson, who played with artistic finish and beauty of tone. Among other miscellaneous concerts was that given by Madame Ada Crossley on November 2, at which Mr. Percy Grainger played his arrangement of Stanford's 'Irish Reel' and Liszt's 'Twelfth Rhapsody' with skill and animation. A recital by Miss May Currie on October 23 served to agreeably display her contralto voice in a range of songs which included Hatton's 'Enchantress.' At his concert on October 23 Mr. Frederick C. Nicholls submitted a programme of original compositions of merit and interest comprising songs, pianoforte pieces, a violin suite and a pianoforte quartet. He was assisted by Miss Grainger Kerr (vocalist) and Mr. John Lawson (violin).

The concert given on November 4 by Miss Lizzie Stocks (pianoforte) and Miss Mabel Stocks (violin) proved that these young ladies are taking their art in earnest. The songs contributed by Mr. Frederic Austin were highly interesting, especially 'Too late' and 'Thou art come,' by Mr. Ivor Atkins, and a fanciful, if fragmentary, setting of 'Hark, hark the lark' by Ernest Austin, the singer's brother. Mr. Eric Chapman accompanied.

The first of a series of Chamber concerts which have been initiated by Mr. Lawrence Atkinson for residents in Birkenhead was given in the Town Hall there on November 4, when the Brodsky Quartet, with Miss Lillie Wormald as vocalist, provided an enjoyable programme, which included two quartets—Haydn's in D (Op. 64, No. 1) and Beethoven's in C (Op. 59, No. 3).

A noteworthy pianoforte and violin recital was given in the Claughton Music Hall, Birkenhead, on November 16, by Dr. Stanley Dale and Mr. J. E. Matthews, when the programme contained Strauss's Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Op. 18) and Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto. Dr. Dale, who is an excellent pianist as well as an organist, played Grieg's Ballade for pianoforte (Op. 24), and Miss Annie Worsley contributed songs by Wolf, Brahms and Stanford.

The performance of Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch' given by the Welsh Choral Union on November 16 upheld the high reputation of this fine choral body, which Mr. Harry Evans directs with conspicuous ability. The choir fully realized the choral opportunities which the work affords, especially in the beautiful unaccompanied Funeral Anthem. The vocal principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Dalton Baker. The programme also included Handel's 'Hailstone' chorus, which was sung with astonishing verve and realism. The orchestra played Cowen's 'Butterfly's Ball' Overture and Elgar's new 'Pomp and Circumstance' March No. 4.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the second of the Hallé concerts, on October 24, Miss Marie Hall played Max Bruch's Violin concerto, and Saint-Saëns's Rondo capriccioso. The band excelled itself in performances of Beethoven's Symphony in D, Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture, the 'Lohengrin' Prelude, and the 'Meistersinger' overture. Mr. Godowsky appeared at the following concert on October 31, and played Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in G and the solo in César Franck's Symphonic Variations. The orchestral numbers were Brahms's first Symphony, the 'Leonora' overture No. 3, and the Good Friday music from 'Parsifal.' At the fourth concert, on November 7, Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' was given—for the sixth time at these concerts. The principals were Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Herbert Brown. The programme on November 14 contained Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphony, Strauss's 'Ein Heldenleben,' and Berlioz's 'Benvenuto Cellini' overture, with songs by Elgar (two of the 'Sea Pictures') and Granville Bantock ('Evening song' and 'Bridal song,' from the 'Sappho' cycle), sung by Miss Marie Stuart.

Lady Hallé was most enthusiastically greeted at the sixth concert of her Jubilee year, when she played Viotti's Violin concerto in A minor (No. 22), and Joachim's Notturno (Op. 12). The orchestral selections were Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, Liszt's 'Hungarian' Rhapsody (No. 2), and Grieg's 'Old Norwegian Romance' with variations. The last-named piece formed a very appropriate 'In Memoriam' performance, inasmuch as we believe this orchestral arrangement of Grieg's (Op. 51) for two pianofortes was the last work of importance upon which the composer's genius was exercised.

In the absence of Dr. Richter during part of January and February—when he is to conduct the performances in English of the 'Nibelungen Ring' at Covent Garden—the concerts will be conducted by Herr Beidler, some time conductor of the Imperial Theatre, Moscow. At the meeting of the guarantors at which the arrangement with Dr. Richter was sanctioned, the rumour was amply contradicted that Dr. Richter had a permanent engagement in America in contemplation.

The second of the Gentlemen's Concerts, held November 4, took the form of a pianoforte and vocal recital. Mr. Godowsky played Chopin's B flat minor sonata; Liszt's transcriptions of Schubert's 'Gretchen am Spinnrade,' and 'Das Wandern'; Nos. 2 and 8 of Schumann's Novellettes; of Liszt, further, the 'Hohe Liebe' Nocturne in A flat, one of the Petrarch Sonnets (in E major), and the Transcendental Studies, 'Feux Follets' and 'Mazeppa'; and finally Glazounow's 'Valse de Concert' (Op. 47), arranged for pianoforte by Blumenfeld. Mr. Victor Maurel sang some songs, which included the old English duologue 'The keys of heaven.'

The first of the Brodsky Quartet Concerts was given on November 12, when the programme was appropriately dedicated exclusively to the works of Grieg, Dr. Brodsky's great friend. The programme consisted of the Sonata in A minor (Op. 36), for pianoforte and violoncello, played by Mr. Edward Isaacs and Mr. Carl Fuchs; the Sonata in G (Op. 13), for pianoforte and violin, played by Mr. Isaacs and Dr. Brodsky, and the String quartet in G minor (Op. 27), in an excellent interpretation of which Mr. Rawdon Briggs and Mr. S. Speelman took part. At the first of the Schiller-Anstalt concerts, given on November 16, under the direction of Mr. Carl Fuchs, the Sevcík Quartet from Prague (Messrs. Lhotsky, Prochazka, Moravec and Vaska) appeared, and created a fine impression in the performance of the following string quartets—Brahms in B flat (Op. 67); Dvorák in F (Op. 96) and Beethoven in F minor (Op. 95). At the viola and pianoforte recital given on November 15, by Mr. S. Speelman and Mr. R. J. Forbes, the programme consisted of the two sonatas by Brahms (Op. 120), written originally for the clarinet and pianoforte, and the four 'Märchenbilder' of Schumann (Op. 113). The fine tone of Mr. Speelman and the sympathetic playing of his colleague provided the audience with a genuine musical pleasure. Miss Sylvia Loring sang two sets of songs very pleasantly.

At the first of Mr. Brand Lane's subscription concerts the choir of the Manchester Philharmonic Choral Society admirably sang its various selections. The soloists were Mr. Kubelik, Mr. Leonard Borwick, Madame Louise Dale, Miss Marie Stuart and Mr. Charles Tree. At the second concert 'Elijah' was performed. The principals were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. John Bardsley and Sir Charles Santley. The choir and orchestra and the great audience quite broke through the etiquette of the situation in their reception of the veteran singer whose knighthood had that day been announced. Sir Charles delivered 'Is not His word like a fire' with wonderful vigour, and the demonstration that followed his effort redoubled that which had preceded it.

At the second of the Promenade Concerts, on November 2, Mr. Carl Fuchs played Robert Volkmann's Violoncello concerto. Madame Effie Thomas was the vocalist. At the concert on November 16 Mr. Hamish MacCunn's overture, 'Land of the mountain and the flood,' found a place in the programme. Madame Nettie Carpenter was the solo violinist, and Mr. Bridge Peters (bass) the vocalist.

The first of Mr. Max Mayer's Chamber concerts of the season, given on November 18, was chiefly dedicated to Brahms. The programme contained the three Sonatas for pianoforte and violin—in which the violin part was played by Madame Soldat. The gayer Sonata, Op. 78, with its reminders of two of Brahms's songs, was wisely allowed its place between its more severe companions. Grieg was remembered in two of his songs; and two of Mr. Max Mayer's own interesting lyrics were also in the programme. The vocalist, Mr. Horatio Connell (baritone), made a very favourable impression.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company has fulfilled a successful engagement here, with Verdi's 'Othello' in its répertory; and the Moody-Manners Company has given a Matinée performance of Puccini's 'Madama Butterfly' to a crowded audience.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union opened its twentieth season on November 22, with a highly interesting programme which included Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' and a new cantata by a gifted professor here, Mr. Edgar L. Bainton. This was a setting of Rossetti's remarkable poem 'The Blessed Damozel,' in which the composer has revealed much poetic fancy. A feature of the work is the symphonic development of certain leading themes, the treatment of the orchestration displaying considerable variety and skill. The solo parts (mezzo-soprano and baritone) were sung by Miss Katharine Vincent and Mr. Frederic Austin, the last-named being joined in Elgar's oratorio by Miss Gertrude Lonsdale and Mr. Henry Brearley. Dr. Coward was as usual a masterful conductor.

A performance of Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' by an augmented choir was given at Elswick Road Wesleyan Church on November 11, under the able direction of Mr. George Dodds. The soloists were Misses Ella Wilson, Jennie Gibson, S. Johnson and Mr. J. Kellett. On November 6, at the first of two chamber concerts, Brahms's fine Horn trio was performed by Frau Roger-Soldat (violin), Mr. A. Borsdorf (horn) and Mr. Leonard Borwick (pianoforte). At the second concert, November 14, the Sevcík String Quartet made its first appearance here and created a deep impression by its playing of quartets by Beethoven, Dvorák and Grieg. Mr. Dalton Baker was the vocalist. On November 1, Herr Backhaus, Madame Ella Russell, Miss Irene Ainsley, Mr. Plunket Greene and Herr Adolph Rebner (violinist) provided a well varied programme.

The Sunderland Philharmonic Society gave the first concert of its forty-seventh season on November 13, under the direction of Mr. N. Kilburn. Elgar's 'Scenes from the Bavarian Highlands' was the choral item, Miss Marie Stuart was the vocalist, and the Hallé Orchestra played several pieces.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The season opened on October 29 with the first of the Nottingham Subscription Concerts, when the Richter Orchestra performed Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony, Brahms's Variations on Haydn's chorale, Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel,' Wagner's Good Friday music, and Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite; and Miss Evelyn Suart performed the solo part of Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte concerto.

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society commenced its fifty-second season with 'Elijah,' on November 14. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Charles Knowles. .The choruses were ably sung. Mr. Allen Gill conducted, and Mr. Lyell Tayler led the orchestra. Valuable assistance was rendered at the organ by Mr. Wyatt, and a crowded house received the work with enthusiasm.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Sheffield Musical Union gave an interesting and successful concert on November 12, performing in brilliant fashion Sir Hubert Parry's oratorio 'King Saul.' The work had previously been heard in Sheffield at the festival eight years ago, and it was a happy idea to revive it, more especially as the imposing choral writing in the work is admirably suited to the particular qualifications of Dr. Coward's expert choristers. The choir sang the composer's grateful music with amazing zest, the sonority of the fortissimo passages excelling even their own phenomenal achievements in the past. The men won a veritable triumph in their rendering of the effective battle march. The orchestra was less satisfactory, there being lapses here and there, mainly in respect of intonation and precision. The soloists were Miss Ada Forrest, Miss Maria Yelland, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. James Davis, Mr. Robert Charlesworth and Mr. Herbert Brown, an entirely capable sextet. Mr. J. H. Parkes was principal first violin, Mr. W. S. Jessop did yeoman service at the organ, and Dr. Coward conducted with his wonted enthusiasm.

The suburban choral societies are beginning to submit the fruits of their autumn rehearsals. Among excellent concerts given during the month have been those of the Burngreave Congregational Society in Gade's 'The Holy City' (conductor, Mr. T. W. Tow), the Hillsborough Choral Society, Handel's 'Samson,' conducted by Mr. Frank Shimeld, and a 'part-song' concert by the Penistone Choral Society, directed by Mr. Joseph Cooper.

Lady Hallé took her farewell of Sheffield at the second Subscription Concert on November 19. Late in the month the Grand Opera Society gave a concert in the Albert Hall, under the direction of Mr. J. Duffell, singing selections from 'Lohengrin,' 'Tannhäuser' and 'Aida.'

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

LEEDS.

That Leeds is not suffering any severe reaction after the excitement of the festival is indicated by the fact that some eight or nine concerts of artistic distinction have to be recorded during the past month. The concerts of the Municipal Orchestra began their fifth season, under Mr. Fricker's conductorship, on October 26, with a typical Wagner programme, which was followed on November 9 by a concert of which Beethoven's fourth Symphony was the most prominent feature, Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' suite and 'Capriccio Italien' being included. The thorough efficiency of the band of sixty performers was demonstrated on both occasions, and it is very satisfactory to find that the attendance shows a distinct improvement, especially in respect of the serial tickets, for this indicates that the public are not frightened by a series of programmes of purely orchestral music, without the miscellaneous 'relief' of former seasons. On October 30 the first of the joint 'Philharmonic and Subscription' concerts took place. Dr. Richter conducted the Hallé Orchestra in a performance of 'the' C minor Symphony that was notable even for him. Brahms's 'St. Antony' variations and the Parisian version of the 'Tannhäuser' Venusberg scene were among the more striking things in the programme, which included also two choral works, sung by the Philharmonic chorus, Verdi's 'Stabat Mater' (conducted by Mr. Fricker) and Brahms's 'Gesang der Parzen.' On November 6 the Leeds Choral Union gave an exceedingly fine performance of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's three 'Hiawatha' Scenes, under the composer's direction. The force and volume of tone in the great ensembles had a very fine effect, and only a little more delicacy in the pianissimos was wanting to perfection. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Ivor Foster, the last-named being especially happy in his sympathetic reading of Hiawatha's part. On October 23 the Rasch Quartet resumed its chamber concerts, quartets by Beethoven (Op. 59, No. 2), Brahms (Op. 67) and Dvorák (Op. 96) being exceedingly well played. Another series of chamber concerts, the Leeds Bohemian Concerts, which has now attracted quite a following, began a fresh season on November 13, when Beethoven again opened the proceedings with the so-called 'Harp' quartet (Op. 74), a novelty being introduced in the shape of the Quartet in G (Op. 22) by Novak, a contemporary Bohemian composer, which made a good impression, and the concert ended with a delightful 'Kleine Nachtmusik' by Mozart. Two of the Leeds musical evenings have to be recorded briefly: a violin recital by Zacharewitsch on October 29, and a vocal recital by Madame Blanche Marchesi on November 19. On the following evening Mr. Henry Brearley, the principal tenor of the Leeds Parish Church, gave a recital which testified to his artistic taste and versatility, including as it did a series of songs ancient and modern, among them five of Dr. Brewer's very pleasing 'Pastorals,' four of which were produced at the recent Leeds Festival. Miss Nora McKay was the solo violinist and Miss Evelyn Buckmaster the solo pianist.

BRADFORD.

Bradford not being preoccupied with festival matters, its two principal choral societies have been able to give their opening concerts at an early date. On October 18 the Festival Choral Society, under Dr. Cowen, gave performances of 'Everyman' and 'The Pied Piper,' as has already been recorded in The Musical Times; and on October 22 the Old Choral Society followed with a more conventional programme, consisting of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Handel's 'Acis and Galatea.' Mr. Pickles conducted a generally creditable performance, in which the solo parts were taken by Miss Esta D'Argo, Miss V. Fancourt, Messrs. Wilfrid Hudson and Robert Burnett. On October 25 the Subscription series began with a concert of violin and pianoforte music, most artistically interpreted by Miss Marie Hall and Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus, with songs by Miss Louise Dale. The Bradford Permanent Orchestra, which under Mr. Allen Gill flourishes artistically, even though its financial position may not be as brilliant as one could wish, gave its first concert on November 2. By way of a tribute to Joachim's memory, the first movement to his 'Hungarian' Concerto was given, and the solo part was played with such fine technique and perfect understanding by that gifted young Manchester violinist, Mr. Arthur Catterall, that one regretted the entire work had not been ventured upon. The 'Peer Gynt' suite was another memorial performance, and the 'Finlandia' of Sibelius renewed the strong impression it made at these concerts a year ago.

OTHER TOWNS.

At its concert on October 26 the Halifax Madrigal Society gave Stanford's 'Phaudrig Crohoore,' under Mr. Shepley's conductorship, and on October 31 the Orchestral Society, under Mr. H. van Dyk, gave a performance of Dvorák's 'From the New World' Symphony that was highly creditable for a body of amateurs. The Symphony had been chosen by a vote which also included the 'Don Giovanni,' 'Ruy Blas' and 'Lohengrin' overtures, and Mr. German's 'Henry VIII.' dances. On November 14 the Halifax Choral Society gave Handel's 'Samson' under Mr. English's direction. Miss Esta d'Argo, Miss Phyllis Lett and Messrs. Alfred Heather and James Lycett formed an exceptionally good quartet of principals, and Miss Lett's highly sympathetic reading of 'Return, O God of Hosts' was one of the most striking features in a performance which, as a whole, was worthy of the Society.

At Huddersfield the Philharmonic Society gave an orchestral concert on October 19, the chief feature of the programme being Schumann's D minor Symphony, creditably performed under Mr. Arthur Pearson's conductorship. Mr. Hemingway's refined violoncello playing was a feature of the concert deserving mention.

Gounod's 'Redemption' formed the subject of a special service in Wakefield Cathedral on November 6, the choir being augmented to about a hundred voices, and conducted by Mr. J. N. Hardy, the cathedral organist. There was no orchestra, but Mr. F. E. Naylor was an efficient organist, and the devotional character of much of the work was emphasized by its performance under these conditions. On the following evening the first of the Wakefield Chamber Concerts took place, assuming the form of a very enjoyable recital for violin and pianoforte by Madame Soldat and Mr. Leonard Borwick, who co-operated in sonatas by Beethoven—not the 'Kreutzer,' for once, but the early Sonata in F (Op. 24)—and Schumann (in A minor).

The Hull Symphony Orchestra is this season very active, and three of its interesting afternoon concerts have already to be reviewed: those on October 24, November 7 and 21. Under Mr. Wallerstein's inspiring direction smart performances have been given of Haydn's Symphony in C, No. 7 of the Salomon set, of Schubert's seldom-heard 'Tragic' Symphony, and of Mozart's lovely work in G minor. In these concerts there may be the nucleus of a recognized municipal orchestra, and the increased attention they are receiving is very satisfactory. On November 15, the Hull Harmonic Society gave Berlioz's version of the Faust legend, under Mr. Walter Porter's direction, the principals being Miss Jenny Taggart, Mr. Anderson Nicol, Mr. Robert Burnett (Mephistopheles) and Mr. C. Ratcliffe (Brander). The performance was well-intentioned, but suggested a lack of sufficient preparation, and hardly did justice to the subtler details of the work. On November 19 the Keighley Musical Union essayed Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' scenes, under Mr. Summerscales' conductorship. The choir sang brightly, but the performance was not conspicuous for emotional charm, save in the dramatic singing of the soprano, Miss Esta D'Argo, and the baritone, Mr. Ivor Foster. Mr. A. Greenwood was acceptable in the tenor solos.

At York the Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. T. Tertius Noble, gave a concert on November 18, of which the 'Eroica' Symphony was the centre piece. Considering that the orchestra is largely amateur, and that two-thirds of the violinists are young ladies, the efficiency which Mr. Noble has obtained is remarkable, and the worst fault to be found with the performance of the symphony was lack of fullness and variety of tone and colour. The programme also included the 'Figaro' and 'Cockaigne' overtures, and Miss Mabel Dalby, a young soprano with an exceptionally fine voice, was the vocalist.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

The official commemoration for the late Director Dr. Joseph Joachim was given at the Kgl. Akademische Hochschule für Musik on November 3. Bach's Chorale 'Was mein Gott will, das g'scheh allzeit' was sung and followed by a performance of the 'Eroica' symphony, after which Prof. Max Bruch delivered a memorial tribute to the great violinist. The ceremony ended with Brahms's 'Nänie.' The Kaiser was represented by the Crown Prince.——On November 20, the day of prayer and repentance (Busstag), the programme of the concert in the Opera House included Mozart's 'Kyrie' for five sopranos (canon ad unisonum), Strauss's 'Hymn,' a cappella in sixteen parts (first time in this city), and the Prelude, Good Friday Music, and closing scene from 'Parsifal.'

Herr Eugen d'Albert, says a German paper, was recently able to celebrate the 'silver jubilee' of his first appearance on the concert platform, viz., at the Stadttheater, Cologne, in October, 1887. While this is perfectly true of Germany, Mr. d'Albert appeared at a concert, given by the students of the National Training School of Music, at St. James's Hall, June 23, 1879, and at two concerts in London in the year 1880, particulars of which are given in the biographical sketch of him which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of November, 1904.

CARLSRUHE.

In memory of the Grand Duke, a concert was given in the Court Theatre on November 1. The programme included Handel's Funeral Anthem and Brahms's 'German Requiem,' in which the solos were sung by Fraulein Warmersperger and Herr Büttner. The performances were under the sympathetic direction of Dr. Göhler.

COLOGNE.

Last month Felix Weingartner, at the invitation of Director Martersteig, conducted his 'Genesius' at the Opera House, when he was received with great enthusiasm. The work was originally produced at Berlin in 1893.

DÜSSELDORF.

A concert performance of 'Günlod' will be given here in concert form next February under the direction of Prof. Julius Buths. A month later the work is to be performed at the Municipal Theatre at Dortmund. 'Günlod,' a third opera by Peter Cornelius, was left unfinished at the time of his death; it was, however, completed by C. Hoffbauer and Eduard Lassen and performed at Weimar in 1891; there is also another version of the work by Max Hasse.

MILAN.

Alberto Franchetti, whose 'Germania' was produced last month at Covent Garden, and Umberto Giordano, are said to be working jointly at a comic opera entitled 'Jupiter in Pompeii,' which is to be produced at the Teatro dal Verme. In former days it was by no means uncommon for two or more composers thus to combine.

MOSCOW.

M. Edouard Colonne, who came here to give two symphony concerts, was requested by the directors of the Opera House to conduct a performance of Saint-Saëns's masterpiece 'Samson et Dalila.'

PALESTRINA.

Giovanni Pierluigi—who was named after his birthplace, Palestrina—died in 1594, and Cardinal Vannutelli is taking steps for a monument to be erected here to his memory. A French paper thus comments on this item of news: 'At the present day one scarcely waits until the death of an artist more or less esteemed to erect a statue to him; the illustrious author of the "Lamentations" and of the "Missa papae Marcelli" will have waited for over three centuries for this testimony of his imperishable glory.' One can indeed say: 'All 's well that ends well.'

PARIS.

The French may be a light-hearted people, but they are beginning to develop a taste for Bach. The Société J. S. Bach commenced a series of six concerts on November 27, when the programme was devoted to the 'St. John Passion.' At the other concerts will be given 'Phœbus and Pan,' the 'Magnificat,' the 'Funeral Ode,' several church cantatas, some of the Brandenburg concertos, the Concerto for two pianofortes in C minor, and the one for four pianofortes; also the Violin concerto in E major and the Concerto in A minor. Again, of the series of six Schola Cantorum concerts, which commenced on November 29, one half will be devoted to the Leipzig master. Further, at the Sunday concerts of the Société musicale de la Sorbonne, under the direction of M. Paul de Saunières, will be given Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' and the 'Magnificat.'

VENICE.

Jacopo Calasione, the distinguished conductor of the municipal orchestra of this city, while conducting a concert died suddenly of apoplexy. He had held his post for thirty-two years, and was the first in Italy to perform Wagner's music.

An excellent performance of Elgar's 'The Kingdom' was given by the Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society under the inspiriting conductorship of Mr. Allen Gill, whose interpretation of the same was instinct with the true devotional feeling of the work. The solo vocalists were Madame Emily Squire, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale (who most ably replaced Miss Ada Forrest), Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. William Higley.

The Exhibitions offered annually by the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and Royal College of Music, which entitle their holders to free tuition at those Institutions for two or three years, have been awarded to the following candidates: Vera K. Waring, Eastbourne (pianoforte), Ada Woodford, Cardiff (violin), Phyllis G. Boulton, Richmond, Surrey (violoncello), at the R.A.M.; and Golda L. Ginsburg, London (pianoforte), Elsie M. Avril, London (violin), Olive Glanfield, Gravesend (organ), at the R.C.M. The Exhibitions previously held by the Misses Phyllis A. N. Parker (Reading), Margaret M. Thom (Dundee), Kathleen T. Platt (Leek), and Ethel H. Chote (Cambridge), have been renewed for a further period of one year.

A Musical Society has recently been formed among the employées of Messrs. Peek, Frean & Co., the well-known firm of biscuit manufacturers. The object of the Society is 'the cultivation and practice of vocal and instrumental music, with a view of promoting social intercourse among the members.' It is a matter for congratulation that another large business house is ready to give active support and encouragement to such a movement, and we heartily wish the young Society every success in its efforts to provide musical enjoyment for the many hundreds of busy workers associated with an important industry in Bermondsey.

Mr. D. Rahter, the well-known music publisher of Leipzig, gave an interesting invitation-concert at the Salle Erard on November 23. The programme consisted of modern compositions, among the most noteworthy being a Sonata for pianoforte and violin by Hermann Wolf-Ferrari and songs by Alexander von Fielitz and Hugo Kaun. Mr. Rahter proposes to give similar concerts next spring, both in London and Paris.

The Society of British Composers (309, Oxford Street) has issued its Year-Book for 1907-08. This useful book of reference contains the work of the year, rules of the Society, lists of members, council and officers, lists of compositions by members, and classified lists of compositions.

The London Sunday School Choir will hold its Spring Festival at the Royal Albert Hall on February 22, and its next Crystal Palace Festival on June 17, 1908. Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Charles Saunders have been engaged to sing on the former occasion.

Mr. William Higley having completely recovered from his recent illness, is now able to resume his professional engagements.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

Aberdeen.—The Choral Union gave its second subscription concert in the Music Hall on November 13. The chief features of the programme were Max Bruch's G minor Violin concerto (soloist, Mr. G. Sutherland Mackay), Mozart's Adagio and Rondo (in which the pianoforte part was played by Dr. Cowen), Schumann's Symphony in D minor, Elgar's new 'Pomp and Circumstance' march and Mozart's motet 'Splendente Te, Deus,' in which the Choral Union joined forces with the Scottish Orchestra. Dr. Cowen conducted.

Bournemouth.—Two performances of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' were given at the Winter Gardens on November 19, under the able conductorship of Mr. Dan Godfrey. The choral portions were excellently sung by Madame Newling's choir of 200 voices, which of course received effective support from the Municipal Orchestra, Mr. Mark Quinton presiding at the organ. The solo vocalists were Madame Emily Squire, Madame Cecile Vicars, Mr. Henry Turnpenney, Mr. Tom Brown and Mr. Charles Tree.

Bury.—The first concert this season by the Musical Society was given in the Athenæum Hall on November 11, when a miscellaneous programme was performed. The choral music included the part-songs 'To daffodils,' Darke; 'Bold Turpin,' Bridge; 'Poor or rich,' Berger; and the chorus 'Britons, alert,' from Elgar's 'Caractacus.' These were sung with precision and spirit by the choir. The orchestra was heard in the overtures 'Di Ballo' and 'Zampa,' and the ballet music from Delibes's 'Sylvia.' The solo vocalists were Madame Annie Walker and Mr. James Davis. Mr. F. Royle conducted.

Christchurch (N.Z.).—The third subscription concert of the Musical Union took place in His Majesty's Theatre on September 26, when the programme included the part-songs 'Corydon, arise,' Stanford, and 'Good-night, beloved,' Pinsuti, by the choir, and the quartets 'Hail, smiling morn,' Spofforth, and 'By Celia's arbour,' Horsley, sung by Messrs. Cookson, Vincent, March and Millar. The soloists were Madame Linay and Mr. A. Millar (vocalists), Mr. Gladstone Bell (violoncello), Mr. Ernest Jamieson (flute), and Miss Katie Young (pianoforte). Dr. J. C. Bradshaw was the conductor.

Clonmel.—At a concert given by the Clonmel Choral Society on November 6, Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' was performed. The soloists were Miss Margaret O'Neill, Miss Magner, Mr. L. G. Garrett and Mr. J. A. Davis. Mr. W. Minchin was at the pianoforte and the Earl of Donoughmore at the organ, while Mr. C. S. Craddock conducted a performance which was much appreciated, chorus and orchestra doing exceedingly well.

Hobart (Tasmania).—The Madrigal and Ballad Society formed about two years ago, under the conductorship of Mr. Allan McIntyre, choirmaster of Hobart Cathedral, gave a concert in the Masonic Hall on August 20, which was attended by His Excellency the Governor. The part-music performed included the madrigals 'The silver swan,' Orlando Gibbons, 'Come, gentle swains,' Michael Cavendish, 'Awake, sweet love,' Dowland, and 'Down in a flow'ry vale,' Festa; the part-songs 'A sunny shaft,' C. H. Lloyd, 'Sweet content,' Walford Davies, 'Now is the month of maying,' Morley, 'In these delightful, pleasant groves,' Purcell, and 'You stole my love,' W. Macfarren. These were interspersed with vocal solos and instrumental trios—Gade's in F major and Mendelssohn's in D minor. The performance of such excellent specimens of part-music deserves every encouragement.

Leamington.—An Elgar Festival was held at the Winter Hall on November 21 by the Leamington Madrigal Society, under the conductorship of Mr. E. Roberts West. The chief feature of the programme was the cantata 'The Black Knight.' Both in this work and the chorus 'It comes from the misty ages' ('Banner of St. George'), the choir sang with much spirit and received able support from the orchestra, the latter also being heard with good effect in the 'Pomp and Circumstance' March No. 1 and 'Salut d'amour.' The solo vocalist was Miss May Eaves. The concert opened with Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' overture played as a mark of respect to the Society's late president, Dr. E. H. Turpin.

Leicester.—The Philharmonic Society opened its season in the Temperance Hall on November 7 with a concert performance of 'Cavalleria Rusticana' and Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' the choir being specially good in the latter work. There was an efficient orchestra, and the solo vocalists were Madame Blanche Marchesi, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Joseph O'Mara and Mr. Thorpe Bates. Mr. H. B. Ellis conducted.

Loughborough.—Arrangements are being made by the Loughborough Choral Society to hold a musical festival in the Town Hall on February 26, 1908. Several musical Societies in North Leicestershire have been invited to combine, so as to form a band and chorus of about 250. The afternoon will be devoted chiefly to orchestral works, with possibly a short choral work by a British composer. 'Elijah' will be given in the evening. The conductor will be Mr. Frank Storer.

Newport (Mon.)—The Musical Society gave a complimentary concert to its conductor, Mr. E. G. R. Richards, in the Central Hall on November 7. The programme consisted of Gounod's 'Faust,' the solo parts being undertaken by Miss Ada Forrest, Miss Marie Stiven, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. W. Anderson, and there was a full band and chorus. Mr. Richards, who conducted, was presented during the interval with a silver-mounted ebony baton by the Mayor.

Northampton.—The choir of Doddridge Congregational Church gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' and Barnby's 'Rebekah' on November 7. The choral numbers were exceedingly well rendered, reflecting great credit upon the conductor. The accompaniment was supplied by an orchestra (twenty performers) and pianoforte, and the conductor was Mr. Handel Hall, organist and director of the choir at the church. The vocalists were Miss Grace Hewitt, Mr. Herbert Kimbell and Mr. A. E. Hodge.

Swansea.—The Swansea Orpheus Choral Society gave an interesting concert of part-music in the Albert Hall on November 7. The programme comprised the following madrigals: 'Ye that do live in pleasures plenty' (Wilbye); 'Sweet floweres' (Walmisley); 'Woodmen, shepherds, come away' (John E. West); 'Swift the shades of evening' (D. W. Lott); 'Breathe softly, flutes' (Luard-Selby). Part-songs: 'Corydon, arise' (Stanford); 'Lullaby of life' (Leslie); 'There rolls the deep' (C. Hubert Parry); 'The surrender of the soul' (Cornelius); 'My love dwelt in a northern land' (Elgar); 'Song of the pedlar' (C. Lee Williams); and 'Good-night' (Schumann). We have given the above details in full as the programme was a novelty in Wales, and it was highly appreciated. Songs were contributed by Mr. John Roberts, recitations by Miss Ellen Bowick, and violoncello solos by Mr. Maurice Goodman. Mr. Donald Lott conducted.

Toronto.—The annual concert given by the students of the Toronto College of Music took place in the Massey Hall on October 24, under the able conductorship of Dr. F. H. Torrington. Pianoforte music was represented by compositions of Chopin, Hiller (Concerto, Op. 69), Mendelssohn (Capriccio Brillant), Beethoven (a movement from the Concerto in C minor), Tchaikovsky (Concerto, Op. 23) and Moszkowski (Concerto, Op. 59), and vocal music by excerpts from Donizetti, Mercadante, Verdi and Handel. There was a large audience, by whom the efforts of the students were highly appreciated.

Walsall.—The first concert this season by the Philharmonic Union was given in the Town Hall on November 14, when the chief features of the programme were Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' Mendelssohn's 'Loreley' and Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to music,' the choir singing with excellent effect, especially in the last-named work. There was an efficient orchestra, and the solo vocalists were Madame Sobrino and Mr. Harry Dearth. Mr. Amos Keay conducted.

Answers to Correspondents.

P. G. G.—(1) The chord you send should be written thus:  (2) We believe that, while attempts have been made, no quite satisfactory type-writer for music has yet been invented. (3) You can obtain founts of music type from Messrs. Shanks & Co., Red Lion Square, Holborn. (4) Any reliable treatise on the theory of music will explain the matter of the correct notation of accidentals. (5) Your question concerning electric organs is rather too vague to answer satisfactorily.

F. V. E.—Stops on harmoniums and American organs differ so much that it is difficult to suggest the best combinations, even with the aid of such a diagram as you have drawn. As the stops are almost sure to be divided (treble and bass), the best way is to experiment with the various stops, lending an attentive ear to each. The couplers and the forte knobs speak for themselves, the sub-bass can soon be settled, and this will leave you only a few stops to manipulate to the best advantage. The 'vacuum violia' is new to us, but doubtless it will not stop you from obtaining the charm of variety from your instrument.

H. W. K.—Although you have not been trained, if you have a good (tenor) voice, can read music, and sing in tune, there is no reason why you should not have every prospect of 'entering a city church choir.' Mr. Edward Lloyd is a splendid example of the untrained tenor in the sense of so-called voice-training, as he never had a lesson in his life, except the class teaching he received as a chorister of Westminster Abbey. This should encourage you. Watch the advertisements in the musical journals for vacant appointments.

F. W. T.—Tone-colour, imagination, poetic fervour, &c., are valuable choral assets in intensifying the histrionic potentialities of a dramatic cantata when sung on the concert-platform. Like all good things they may be overdone, with results that are disastrous. To say where the line should be drawn is to advise naturalness in the rendering of the music, and to avoid the mere making of points which are apt to become pointless by ludicrous attempts to be ultra-dramatic.

ENQUIRER.—It would seem as if Schumann's 'Humoreske' should not be taken too seriously as a title. In two letters written during the year (1839) of the composition of these pianoforte pieces, Schumann says: 'The titles of all my compositions never occur to me until I have finished composing'; and 'a Humoreske, which is certainly more melancholy than humorous.' This is as paradoxical as it is enigmatical, and the best explanation is in the music itself.

J. D. R.—The following anthems are suggested as being suitable for funeral and In memoriam use: The souls of the righteous (Woodward, and also by Elvey); Brother, thou art gone before us, and If we believe that Jesus died (Goss); God shall wipe away all tears (Field); In the sight of the unwise (Ouseley); As we have borne the image of the earth earthy (Barnby); How blest are they (Tchaikovsky).

STUDENT.—Why not study singing at one of the principal schools in England? If you feel that you must go to Italy to be vocally trained, Milan, Bologna, or Naples, in the order named, would be the best Conservatories. It is an open question whether, in regard to the Continent, Paris, Berlin, Dresden, and Vienna do not take higher rank than Italy as schools for singing.

P. S.—For duets composed for tenor and bass voices, see: The Magicians (Pinsuti), Go, baffled coward, go (Handel's Samson), Now we are ambassadors (Mendelssohn's St. Paul), I wish to tune my quivering lyre (Watson), Tenor and Baritone (Wilson), Golden Hours (Goring Thomas), and The moon has raised her lamp above (Benedict).

W. T.—The subjects for the literary examination preliminary to that for the degree of Bachelor of Music differ at the various Universities. You will find a summary of the regulations in 'The Roll of the Union of Graduates in Music,' pp. 224-237.

W. B.—The bars in Gurlitt's 'Mignon' (Op. 189, No. 3) marked '8va. bassa' are to be played an octave lower. They are evidently so indicated in order to avoid the use of the bass clef at those passages.

AURORA.—One of the two gentlemen you name has been approached as a subject for a biographical sketch in THE MUSICAL TIMES, and we hope he will consent to appear in these columns.

M. C. Y.—Brahms's 'Intermezzo,' Op. 117, No. 2, may be played at quaver = 104. At bar 70 the right-hand chord (small notes) should be played with the left-hand chord.

QUERIBUS.—It would not be easy for an Englishman, even if he were very gifted, to obtain an appointment on the Continent or in America as a conductor of grand opera.

IGNARA.—We regret that we cannot give 'the address of some one who purchases lyrical poems.' Are you averse to sending your own address?

VIOLA.—The Overture to 'Zampa' (Hérold) was last played at a Philharmonic Society's concert on June 11, 1866.

H. S. C.—Pianoforte Studies by Philip, Rosenthal, Tausig and Liszt can be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

I. X.—Chopin's Third Impromptu (Op. 51) may be played at about dotted crotchet = 108.

G. W.—Play Arensky's Intermezzo in E (Op. 5, No. 2) at about dotted minim = 72.

M. A. S.—Heller's Impromptu, Op. 16, No. 8, may be played at about dotted crotchet = 116.

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE)

Of the Royal Choral Society, Queen's Hall Symphony and Promenade Concerts, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace Concerts, Glasgow Choral Union, Belfast Philharmonic Society, &c.

"ELIJAH." Dublin, November 20, 1907.

"The way to read a part was shown by Mr. Montague Borwell, the baritone. He varied his tone and methods admirably; the many fine points he exhibited without intruding are far too numerous to detail. The most notable was the degree of derision he conveyed in the phrase "Call him louder"—as fine a vocal touch as it is possible to obtain. Two other very striking bits of declamation were the passages beginning "I never troubled Israel's peace" and "O Thou Who madest Thine angels spirits." Then what a picture he called up by the way he sang the one word "Jezebel."

Mr. Borwell was encored for "It is enough," but his singing was on the same high level throughout, and was a remarkably illuminating study of the part."—Dublin Mail, November 21, 1907.

THE LIFE OF WILLIAM STERNDALE BENNETT

BY HIS SON,

J. R. STERNDALE BENNETT, M.A.,

of St. John's College, Cambridge.

When the writer of this biography began to collect his materials, many who had known his father from youth still survived and were readily accessible. Early friends such as Davison and Macfarren recounted their reminiscences of Bennett's student days; and the extent of their aid and of that of others who have long since passed away, is manifest in the work now published. By the permission and with the assistance of the Mendelssohn-Bartholdy family, the letters which passed between Bennett and Mendelssohn have also been available.

A DETAILED PROSPECTUS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION.

INDISPENSABLE FOR A LIBRARY OR AS A REFERENCE BOOK.

NOVELLO'S COLLECTION OF WORDS OF ANTHEMS

Crown 8vo, 822 pp., cloth, red edges, 5s. Red Basil and red edges, 7s. 6d. Appendix only, paper cover, 1s.

This Book, which now contains the words of about 2000 Anthems, besides being admirably adapted for the use of Choirs and Congregations, for which purpose it was originally compiled, will be found most valuable to Organists, Choirmasters, and the Clergy as a Book of Reference for the Selection of Anthems suitable for special days, seasons, or occasions, the Indexes having been considerably enlarged. It also contains a list of Anthems suitable for Men's Voices, and Anthems with Latin words.

The newly incorporated Anthems (Nos. 1590 to 1952) have been added to the former edition by means of an Appendix, which is published separately from the complete work. Consequently Choirs and Congregations which are still using the older edition are enabled to supplement their books, and make them complete, by purchasing the Appendix at the price of One Shilling.

CONTENTS.

- Biographical Notices of Composers, with List of their Anthems.
- Anthems Suitable for Certain Days and Seasons.
- Anthems Suitable to be Sung Without Accompaniment.
- Anthems for Men's Voices.
- Anthems with Latin Words.
- Index of Passages of Scripture, &c.
- Index of Collects, Prayers, &c.
- General Index.

THE PARISH CHURCH ANTHEM BOOK

Crown 8vo., 250 pp., and 80 pp. of Indexes, cloth, red edges.

This Anthem Book is the outcome of a desire on the part of many parish churches for a Collection of Words of convenient size, permanent in character, representative as to selection, and moderate in price It contains the Words of printed in extenso; and many more are incorporated by means of reference letters. The Selection is prepared alphabetically, according to the names of the chief composers, and is so arranged that various settings by other composers of the same words, or of portions of them, may be used.

Messrs. Novello's collection of "Words of Anthems" has been used as a basis in the compilation of this work, but many anthems have been added, both ancient and modern, which have not been previously published in a Standard Form.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Musical Opinion, 1/2/98: "A fine Church composition."

Musical News, 15/1/98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5/3/98: "Deserves considerable popularity."

Organist and Choirmaster, 15/2/98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5/3/98: "The music is of a high artistic value."

Liverpool Courier, 2/8/98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9/3/98: "It will doubtless be used in many 'quires and places where they sing.'"

Newcastle Leader, 23/2/98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25/3/98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16/4/98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4/2/98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."

ANTHEM FOR CHRISTMAS.

BLESSED BE THE LORD GOD

Price Fourpence.

EXTREMELY SUITABLE for the SEASON OF CHRISTMAS.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment."—Pontypool Free Press.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

THE APPRECIATION OF MUSIC

A COURSE OF STUDY FOR SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, AND GENERAL READERS

BY

THOMAS WHITNEY SURETTE

AND

DANIEL GREGORY MASON.

Price, Cloth, Seven Shillings.

EXTRACT FROM PREFATORY NOTE.

This book has been prepared in order to provide readers who wish to listen to music intelligently, yet without going into technicalities, with a simple and practical guide to musical appreciation written from the listener's rather than from the professional musician's standpoint.

The authors believe that there is at the present moment a genuine need for such a book.

An effort has been made, first, to present to the reader in clear and untechnical language an account of the evolution of musical art from the primitive folk-song up to the symphony of Beethoven; second, to illustrate all the steps of this evolution by carefully chosen musical examples, in the form of short quotations in the text and of complete pieces printed in a supplement; third, to facilitate the study of these examples by means of detailed analysis, measure by measure, in many cases put into the shape of tabular views; and fourth, to mark out the lines of further study by suggesting collateral reading.

THE VISION OF LIFE

A SYMPHONIC POEM

BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

THE TIMES.

That Sir Hubert Parry would come triumphantly through the various difficulties of so congenial a task was only to be expected: but even his most ardent admirers can hardly have expected to find such richness, spontaneity, and genius of invention, or so much interest in the disposal and treatment of the vocal and instrumental forces. The piece is not scored with that love of strange effects that we know so well in modern days, and the orchestration is even dull here and there; but the far higher points of thematic invention and development are here shown in perfection. . . . The chorus, "To us is the glory of beauty revealed," is one of those great joyful choral utterances of which the composer has the secret, and the imperial chorus that follows it is in strong and admirable contrast. . . . The soprano, after the decline of Rome has been referred to in a lovely chorus, has an exquisite meditative solo, "So near to perfect joy and peace," which leads into the ferocious priestly utterance, set to a familiar "intonation" of ecclesiastical music, developed into an extraordinarily effective little movement. The male chorus sing this and the disputing "This is mine! Out on thee!" which is appropriately treated in close imitation. From the Dreamer's perception of the wakening of the "certainties" until the end we have a noble series of choral and solo passages, which find a grand climax in the splendid theme, "We praise the men of the days long gone," which is in all ways worthy of Parry at his very best. . . . At the end the applause was loud and long, for the impression made by the beautiful composition was quite extraordinary.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The text it is which first arrests attention, not by anything special in the making of its irregular unrhymed verse, but by the force and vigour of its language, the propriety, without mistiness or extravagance, of its expression, and the bold manner in which great social issues are introduced as proper themes for musical treatment. Here, as it seems to me, the composer has entered upon a course untrodden alike by forerunners and contemporaries. . . . I can pay the music the highest compliment in my power by saying, as I now do with all absolute sincerity, that, following closely the course of the work with almost absorption in its great argument, I was not once conscious of any break in the absolute unity which should exist between words and music. It struck me as a case of the poet-musician whose double task is yet but one. Sir Hubert, as far as I could discern, never fell below the height of his lofty theme. Grave and dignified, solemn, when the great tragedy of humanity passed before us, glowing amid anticipations of better days, and triumphant in the faith of ultimate deliverance, the "Vision of Life" seemed as complete on its musical as on its poetic side, and it is a great work altogether, by the first production of which this festival has secured a claim upon the recollection.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

In this work the principal of the Royal College of Music comes before the public in the dual capacity of composer and poet, for he has written the poem that he has set to such impressive strains. The theme he has selected—that of the ceaseless march of humanity—is treated in a philosophical style in verses which are cleverly fashioned and neatly turned, and lead the casual reader to ponder over their sublime suggestiveness. . . . The music throughout possesses a fascinating attractiveness, and an interest which grips the attention of the earnest listener. Fine, bold, melodic phrases, picturesque and skilful orchestration, and robust and effective choruses form the backbone of this majestic composition, in which, by the way, there is not a single dull passage. "The Vision of Life" is a masterpiece, and as such it was regarded by this evening's audience, who at the close most enthusiastically congratulated the popular composer.

MORNING POST.

The extraordinary mastery and command of resource which Sir Hubert Parry has displayed so often have not deserted him, and the present work is well worthy of ranking by the side of many of his other compositions of similar character. . . . The work, which is a splendid example of contrapuntal writing, contains many passages of lofty inspiration, among which may be singled out the solo for the Spirit of the Vision, "So near to perfect joy and peace."

TRIBUNE.

Sir Hubert Parry's "The Vision of Life" proved to be so magnificent a poem in music, so splendid in beauty, strength, and stateliness, that I should not be surprised were it hereafter to be accounted the masterpiece among the many noble works to which the genius of our foremost British composer has given birth. Sir Hubert is the author of the words for which he has found this wonderfully expressive music, and his libretto, sombre and difficult as it may seem on first acquaintance, rises in several places to a high degree of eloquence. . . . The music seems to have been generated in the composer's heart and head simultaneously with the poetry to which it is wedded. It is quite different in kind from the music by which a composer tries to illustrate the thought of another. If when reading Sir Hubert's poem some of it seemed obscure, all difficulty vanished when the hard places were explained by the music. Such music is more than merely illustrative—it is illuminating; and it is this characteristic of "The Vision of Life" which seems to me to make it worthy of the superlative epithets which I have used. . . . It was finely sung, and the reward given to the composer by the delighted choir and the audience at its conclusion was a scene of enthusiasm such as festival halls have rarely known.

MORNING LEADER.

The reception of the work was wildly enthusiastic, and, indeed, applause frequently interrupted its course. . . . The modern spirit which pervades the whole is very remarkable, the scoring in particular—with an occasional richness of colouring—is surprising to those who know Parry's work best. The chief strength of this work is, of course, in the choric writing, and this, too, may be described as wholly modern in feeling. The strength of the part beginning "To us is the glory of beauty revealed," the dramatic force and picturesque power of those describing the rule of Pride and the madness of Greed respectively are highly effective; while Parry nearly approaches the massive grandeur of the "Blest Pair of Sirens" in the chorus, "Hearken, O Brother, to the music of the song of the world."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The idea is a fine one and eminently suitable for that peculiarly reflective style of musical composition which is one of Sir Hubert Parry's strong points. The text has been written by the composer, and is full of finely expressed phrases in a very free rhythm of language, which naturally makes for a corresponding freedom in the musical setting. . . . To this text Sir Hubert Parry has written some very fine music. The choruses especially are remarkable for their variety, freedom of treatment, and breadth of expression. . . . The work may be accepted, in fact, as one of the most powerful that have yet come from the composer's pen. A point worth mentioning is the splendid way in which the music grows in intensity of feeling as the idea of the text is developed.

ATHENÆUM.

To single out this or that number for praise would spoil the impression which we wish to give, viz., that the music as a whole reflects and intensifies the spirit of the words; the solo portions, however, particularly struck us by their freshness and romantic feeling.

HE GIVETH
HIS BELOVED SLEEP

FOR

CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE POEM WRITTEN BY

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 6d.
Full Score and Wind parts, MS.; String parts, 2s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

The composer has exactly caught the quiet meditative style of the poet, and has written a work of great sincerity and beauty. His occasional departures from the fairy realm where he has reigned so long and so happily have seldom been so completely successful as on this occasion; the theme of the refrain is so cleverly worked that the reiteration is never once felt to be redundant.

TELEGRAPH.

The most touching and effective points of the little work are those in which the composer by varied treatment of his main theme, by impressive and often very beautiful harmonic changes, and by varying forms of accompaniment avoids monotony. The piece, as a whole, is one for feeling rather than analysis, and the feeling in it is strong, music and words being quite in accord. That the hymn, for so it might in a popular sense be called, will enjoy extensive favour seems more than likely.

STANDARD.

Dr. Cowen's thoroughly lyrical and poetical setting of Mrs. Browning's lines "He giveth His beloved sleep" stands out as thoroughly characteristic. Interpreted with consummate art by Madame Kirkby Lunn, its quiet, tasteful expression formed at least a welcome change to the storm and strife of the greater part of modern music, whether native or alien. The solo part is frankly a song, and as music it is an achievement simply because it keeps to one definite idea of vocal expression. Suitable variety is brought about by use of the chorus as a species of accompaniment, while modernity is satisfied by the cleverly constructed but invariably clear orchestral background, in which the "leading tune" process is quite legitimately employed. Simple and spontaneous, Dr. Cowen's straightforward work found ample favour.

MORNING POST.

The spirit of the poem has been most felicitously caught by the composer, whose work may be described as a veritable gem. Beautiful in its simplicity and inexpressibly touching, music such as this goes straight to the heart. No striving after effect mars its appeal. One welcomes with delight a work of such pure beauty, so tender and melodious.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

This work admirably reflects the spirit of the verses. Throughout it is dreamy, peaceful, delicate, and fanciful, and its melodies are haunting, as might be expected from a man who so many years ago won fame as a song composer. Specially pleasing is Dr. Cowen's treatment of the Psalmist's words, "He giveth His beloved sleep," which provided the title to his cantata, this refrain being singularly effective and felicitous. Dr. Cowen seldom writes difficult music, and hence the immense popularity of his compositions, large and small, with the numerous choral societies spread all over the kingdom. This latest production consequently is assured of similar success, and deservedly so.

MORNING LEADER.

It is a very melodious and grateful piece of vocal writing, and reflects the tender, devotional spirit of the poem very imaginatively. In the passages beginning "Sleep soft, beloved, we sometimes say," and "His dews drop mutely," there are particularly happy touches.

ATHENÆUM.

Dr. Cowen has here achieved the difficult task of being thoroughly simple without being commonplace. The delicate music, full of feeling, exactly reflects the spirit of the words.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Dr. Cowen's setting of "He giveth His beloved sleep," though not one of his most pretentious efforts, may assuredly be reckoned among his most charming works. The reason of its charm lies entirely in its simple sincerity. The tender spirit of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's poem, regretful, yet not with the sorrow of those who have no hope, is admirably caught. There is no sense of any striving for mere effectiveness, but the effects are secured by the simple directness with which the suggestions of the poem are translated into music. . . . Certainly it may be doubted if he has ever gone so deeply into the emotional possibilities of a poem as he has in this case, and I think this composition must for that reason rank very high among his works. The close is really touching in its quiet expressiveness.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The composer would be expected, as a matter of course, to match with his art the pathos of Mrs. Browning's lines. That he has succeeded in doing so is a matter for sincere congratulation. The new cantata—or poem, as it is called by its composer—was well given and well received.

SIR PATRICK SPENS

BALLAD

FOR

BARITONE SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.
Full Score and Wind parts, MS.; String parts, 6s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

It is broad and manly music, the pattern of which is fairly familiar by this time, but it is by no means conventional or wanting in originality. It made a good impression, and is sure to be in great request with competent choral societies.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Dr. Brewer has now given it all the advantage of modern resources, and lifted it into a higher sphere. It thus makes a capital piece for choral societies, and, I expect, will run at equal pace with Stanford's "Revenge," the prototype of its order.

STANDARD.

This fine old specimen of a folk-tale is treated by the composer in decidedly dramatic fashion, and his music, just sufficiently Scottish to be characteristic of the place and period, is sincere and spontaneous. Without being too heavily scored, the orchestral part is full of colour, and the chorus have some vivacious and sonorous passages, to which they gave most spirited effect.

MORNING POST.

Mr. Herbert Brewer's setting of the old Scotch ballad is a work of sterling merit. The music is virile and straightforward in character. The composer has something to say, and knows how to express his thoughts clearly and forcibly. His work possesses real interest. It is admirably written, and the success it achieved was fully justified.

TRIBUNE.

The other novelty of the evening was "Sir Patrick Spens," by Dr. Brewer, the accomplished organist of Gloucester Cathedral. This is admirable in its power of vivid descriptive writing. Dr. Brewer tells the tale with wholesome directness, and he may justly be congratulated on his successful treatment of the old song.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

In the evening, the second new cantata, Dr. Herbert Brewer's setting of the Scottish poem, "Sir Patrick Spens," received a cordial welcome. The story of the gallant mariner, "the best sailor that ever sailed the sea," who was sent to Norway to bring home a Royal lady, and whose ill-fated vessel foundered forty miles off Aberdeen, naturally lends itself to stirring descriptive music, and it must be acknowledged that Dr. Brewer has been very successful in catching the spirit of the old poem. There is a go and brightness, a snap about his music which is certain to be appreciated by that large public that enjoys cantatas.

DAILY MAIL.

This is a genuinely inspired piece of work, full of keenly humorous touches.

MORNING LEADER.

It is very sound, healthy music, that goes with a swing from start to finish. It has a very subtle fancy, but is not devoid of picturesqueness and, above all, it shows a good knowledge of the chorus, and choral societies should welcome it.

OBSERVER.

Dr. Herbert Brewer's "Sir Patrick Spens," a choral ballad of a natural and dramatic kind, contains some of the strongest and most individual music of this composer. It has the merit of being short and direct, and the choir sang it with delightful freshness and spirit. Although slight in form, it has a certain spontaneity and feeling for choral writing that will, in all probability keep it alive.

ATHENÆUM.

Dr. Brewer's setting of the old ballad of "Sir Patrick Spens" contains good workmanship, and is effectively written for the voices.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The composer has been very successful in telling the story clearly, and he has managed to give something of the simple ballad quality to his melodies, and to fit them into a picturesque and appropriate background. Local colour is not forgotten, and the storm that wrecks Sir Patrick's ship received a vigorous, but not unmusical, commentary. Altogether it is a work which, without revealing any marked individuality, is exceedingly effective and of well-sustained interest, showing a very considerable descriptive power, and in vigour it may be said to go farther than any of his previous works.

IN SPRINGTIME

FOUR ENGLISH PASTORALS FOR TENOR (OR SOPRANO) SOLO AND MALE-VOICE CHORUS (ad lib.), AND ACCOMPANIMENT FOR PIANOFORTE OR ORCHESTRA.

1. Song on May Morning.
2. Welcome, sweet Pleasure.
3. The Power of Music.
4. A Shepherds' Dance.

COMPOSED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

Price, Two Shillings each, net.
The Chorus Part separately, complete, 6d.
Full Score and Wind Parts, MS. String Parts, 5s.

THE TIMES.

The second part began with a set of four "pastorals" by Dr. A. H. Brewer, set for tenor solo, male chorus, and orchestra. Milton's "Song on May Morning" is the first, and "Orpheus with his lute" the third, while the others may be taken from some book of madrigals. The second, with its merry refrain, "Fa la la," carries a suggestion of the grace of the Elizabethan period, and all are excellently effective and full of original ideas happily carried out. . . . The composer has done nothing better than these pastorals, and he well deserved the applause that greeted each as he conducted it.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

These, as laid out for tenor and orchestra, were generally successful, and specially so in measure of the simplicity which is their natural atmosphere. . . . In "Welcome, sweet Pleasure" the composer does not forget to show his musicianship; the effect of the piece is wholly in accord with the joyous spirit, all sport and play, which animates the words. This was sympathetically applauded. . . . "Springtime," last of the four songs, is, as it should be with such a theme, the most delicate and beautiful of all. As far as I can judge, there is not a flaw in it, while the orchestral theme which runs almost through the piece is a veritable inspiration. The composer, blemishes notwithstanding, is to be congratulated upon his "Pastorals."

STANDARD.

Beginning with Milton's "Song on May Morning," Dr. Brewer includes a new setting of Shakespeare's "Orpheus with his lute," and continues with two graceful little poems in the nature of madrigals. Melodious, thoroughly well scored, and with a nice feeling for vocal expression, they are a very pleasing example of tasteful, light music, and the composer is to be praised for his directness and simplicity. The last one of the set, a delightfully rhythmical and pleasing shepherds' dance, will, in all probability, be found the most immediately popular, but all of them show polished workmanship.

DAILY NEWS.

The brightness and animation of the music will be sure to win for the songs considerable popularity.

MORNING POST.

In a measure they form a sequence to the previous compositions with the same generic title which were first heard at the Hereford meeting last year, save that in this instance an added chorus for male voices increases the effect. One set of verses is taken from Shakspeare, another from Milton, while the other two are anonymous. In these new compositions Dr. Brewer shows the same happy faculty for catching the spirit of the verse and giving expression to it in terms both charming and fresh, displaying in the process individuality and marked originality. . . . The new pieces greatly charmed the audience.

TRIBUNE.

The second and fourth are bright and have a good deal of character. They are also effectively orchestrated.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

They are graceful and tender settings of four Elizabethan poems, fresh in melody and prettily orchestrated.

MORNING LEADER.

The first is Milton's "Song on May Morning," in which the chorus has but little to do: it is picturesquely scored; and the second, "Welcome, sweet Pleasure," has a catchy, characteristically English melody with a "Fa la la" refrain, and is merry and bustling. A melodious pastoral setting of "Orpheus with his lute" comes next, and "Hark, Jolly Shepherds" completes the set. They all go their way pleasantly.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

They are settings of words of Milton, Shakspeare, and anonymous writers for tenor solo and male-voice chorus, and are good examples of the composer's ready gift for expressing himself clearly and well.

THE YORKSHIRE POST.

Sequels are admittedly venturesome, but Dr. Brewer has certainly managed to keep up the interest and sustain the freshness which so pleased one in the earlier work. . . . Though the composer has employed a large orchestra, he has treated it with a lightness of touch that prevents it from ever going outside the picture, yet it is full of deft touches that give it piquancy. The first is a quiet, rather gentle exordium to the series, the second is lively and playful, the third, a setting of the well-known words, "Orpheus with his lute," alternates happily between playfulness and a tender emotion, and the fourth is jollity itself. The men's chorus supplies an effective refrain. . . . Dr. Brewer conducted, and the songs gave evident pleasure to the audience.

These Pianoforte Studies have been highly praised by M. Vladimir de Pachmann, who has expressed his intention of playing some of them during his Recital Tour in the United States. His testimonial is published with the Work, which consists of Twelve Numbers, specially designed to develop power and skill in the fourth and fifth fingers. The importance of trying to equalize these weaker fingers with the stronger ones is unquestionable, as defective execution is more often traceable to this inequality of the fingers than to any other cause.

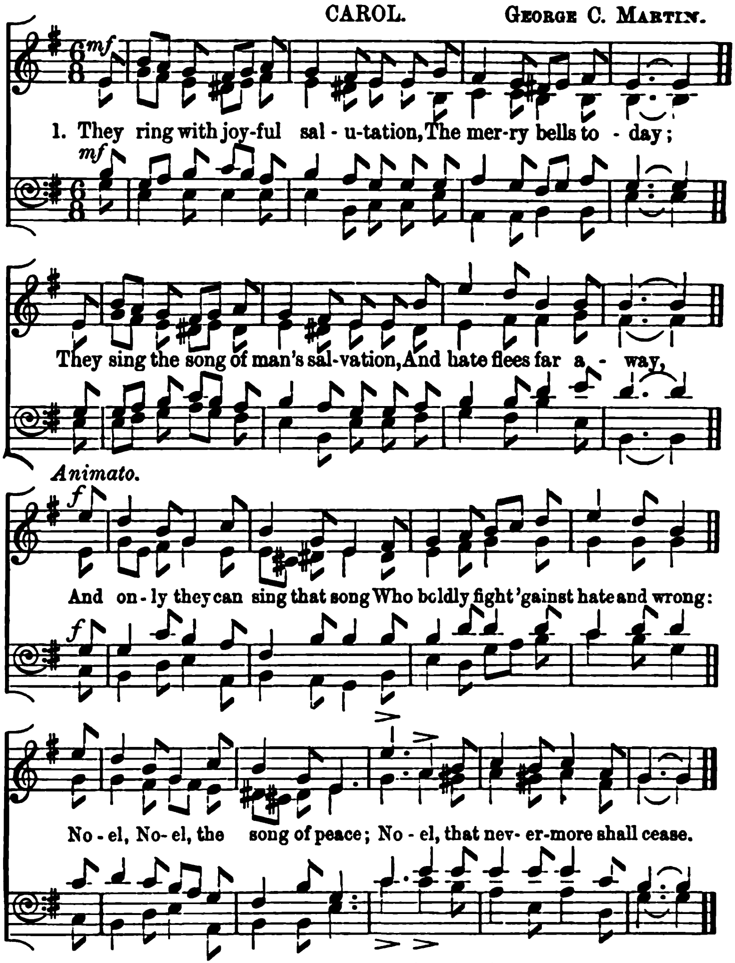
They ring with joyful salutation.

CAROL.

George C. Martin.



mf
1. They ring with joy-ful sal - u-tation, The mer-ry bells to - day;
They sing the song of man's sal-vation, And hate flees far a - way, Animato.
f
And on - ly they can sing that song Who boldly fight 'gainst hate and wrong:
No - el, No - el, the song of peace; No - el, that nev- er-more shall cease.

2 The first to hear the angels singing,
Were lowly shepherd men;
And Christmas bells to-day are ringing
To such as they again.
For only they can sing that song
Who boldly fight 'gainst hate and wrong.
Noel, Noel, the song of peace;
Noel, that nevermore shall cease.

Also published in Novello's Tonic Sol-fa Series, No. 1634, price 1*d.*

3 Then hush the sounds of hate and malice,
And drive away the bad;
The good wine fills the golden chalice,
The wine that maketh glad.
And only they that cup shall drink
Who cleanly act and cleanly think:
Noel, shall sing the pure in heart;
Noel, who choose the better part.

4 The world is sick of strife and sorrow
And yearns with watchful eye
To greet the long-delayed to-morrow,
When rage and pain shall die.
When all at last shall sing that song,
Triumphant over hate and wrong:
Noel, Noel, the song of peace;
Noel, that nevermore shall cease.

5 Once more we hear the Christmas greeting,
And hand is clasping hand,
The angels still their song repeating,
With joy float o'er the land:
And all who will, may sing their song,
Who boldly fight 'gainst hate and wrong:
Noel, Noel, the song of peace;
Noel, that nevermore shall cease.

6 Then rise at length, O troublèd brothers,
And act as well as sing:
The work is yours and not another's,
Then gather round your King;
Nor be content to sing that song,
But boldly fight 'gainst hate and wrong:
Noel, Noel, the song of peace;
Noel, that nevermore shall cease.

7 For best of all the gifts He prizeth
A heart that loveth all;
That stills the hate that proudly riseth,
And helpeth those that fall.
Then may'st thou sing the angel's song,
With faith that lives, and purpose strong:
Noel, Noel, the song of peace;
Noel, that nevermore shall cease.

2 Peace and goodwill,
The earth did fill,
The wond'ring shepherds sped;
And Mary-Maid,
Her Baby laid
Within a lowly shed.

3 In lands afar
Shone forth a star,
And Sages hailed the sign;
Across the waste,
They soon did haste
To seek the Child Divine!

4 On manger-throne,
Did reign alone
God's sole-begotten Son;
On earth He bore
Our sins full sore,
For our salvation won.

5 Shall we not raise,
In joyful praise,
Our carols far and wide?
To that sweet Child
Of Mary mild,
This happy Christmas-tide.

2 Bells are pealing,
Christ revealing,
To our wond'ring eyes;
In a Manger,
Lo! a stranger,
God Incarnate lies.

Kneel before Him,
Cast all fear aside;
Love so Holy,
Meek and lowly,
Will not be denied.

While earth is crown'd with plenty, man with love.
Light flows from Light, yet in its Fount resides,
So Christ from God, yet God in Christ abides.

Dear Sirs,—I feel it both a duty and pleasure to thank you for your two magnificent Concert Grand Pianofortes used by me during my first tour in Great Britain. I cannot speak too highly of the brilliant and sympathetic tone and responsive touch possessed by them. I can confidently say you need fear no rival.

Yours faithfully,

Dear Sirs,—It affords me the greatest pleasure to state that the Concert Grand Pianos of your manufacture used by me at my Concerts at Queen's Hall and St. James's Hall, London, met with my entire approval.

I consider the tone of a remarkably sweet and sympathetic quality, and of unusual sustaining power, the touch very responsive and light. Having always been used to Pianos of German make, it was a great and agreeable surprise to me to find such a perfect instrument of English manufacture.

Yours faithfully,
(Dr.) RICHARD STRAUSS.

THE
ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

TENTERDEN STREET, HANOVER SQUARE.

INSTITUTED, 1822. INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

Patron: HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

Principal—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, Mus.D., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials L.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter. Last day for entry for the September Examination, June 30; for the Christmas Examination, October 31.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

F. W. RENAUT, Secretary.
